THE PREFACE.

THE Public may be ſurprized at finding a Ninth and Tenth Volume of STATE TRIALS publiſh'd, after ſo voluminous a Collection already ſet forth; yet, if they conſider, it is above thirty Years ſince the Seventh and Eighth Volumes were printed, and the great Number of Trials for Treaſon, Murder, Perjury, Forgery, &c. which have happened ſince that time, likewiſe a Rebellion within that Period (always productive of many Trials) their Admiration muſt ceaſe.

Beſides, Gentlemen muſt have obſerved, in the Courſe of their Reading, a great many Trials have happened for different Crimes and Offences, which have never yet appeared in Print, but have been locked up in the Studies of thoſe who either took them, or had them taken in Short hand: Thoſe falling into other Hands, by Deaths or otherways, have either been purchaſed, procured, or generouſly ſent in towards compleating this uſeful Work;———ſuch as Matthews's Trial for High Treaſon, in printing Vox Populi, Vox Dei, in 1719, which has lain dormant near fifty Years;——Hales and Kinnerſley's Trials in 1728, for forging promiſſory Notes, in the Names of Robert Gibſon and Samuel Edwards, Eſquires (both Members of Parliament), and publiſhing them as true ones, for large Sums of Money, wrote on frank'd Covers given them to ſend into the Country;—Huggins and Bambridge's Trials, who were Wardens of the Fleet, with Corbett the Tipſtaff, and Acton the Keeper of the Marſhalſea Priſon, who were all proſecuted in 1729, for Murder, by Order of his Majeſty, on an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons for that Purpoſe;—Mr. Franklin's Trial, in 1730, for printing and publiſhing a Libel entitled, A Letter from the Hague; with ſeveral other Trials which were taken at large, with the Speeches of the Court and Counſel, are now firſt printed from Manuſcripts, and inſerted in this Collection.

All the printed Trials, at full length, that we could hear of (and we have frequently advertiſed to procure them) publiſhed ſince the Seventh and Eighth Volumes, are brought into this Work, with great Additions to moſt of them, either by Arguments on the ſpecial Verdicts, Counſel's Opinion on ſome of the Caſes, or Accounts of the Priſoners Behaviour and dying Speeches, &c. and though ſeveral ſmall Trials, or Parts of Trials and Proceedings, have been printed or procured in Manuſcript, and were too minute to be inſerted in the Body of it; yet, in order to preſerve even them from being buried in Oblivion, we have given them a Place in the Appendix; for theſe ſcarce Pieces are of Value, and not to be collected but with great Difficulty and Expence; and it is hoped ſome Gentlemen of the Law, on reading them, will furniſh ſome Speeches or Arguments towards compleating them, in caſe this Work comes to another Edition.—In this Appendix are likewiſe inſerted two Trials in Corporation Cauſes, now firſt printed from Manuſcript, viz. New-Romney and the Port of Haſtings, which were argued by ſome of the moſt eminent Counſel then at the Bar; the firſt before the Lord Chief-Juſtice Eyre, and the latter before Lord Hardwicke; which were not procured time enough to be inſerted in the Body of the Work.

Some Trials in this Collection cannot (properly ſpeaking) be called State Trials, yet may be deemed good Precedents, and determine many Points of Law; therefore have their Uſe, and were thought too material to be omitted; and it would be confining the Collection in too narrow a Compaſs, to inſert only STATE TRIALS. But as the former Collection, in Six Volumes, publiſhed by Sollom Emlyn, Eſq. (who wrote that admirable Preface prefixed to the firſt Volume, and publiſhed Hale's Pleas of the Crown in Folio) met with general Approbation, we have endeavoured to follow his Steps, and take in ſuch Trials, for Murder, Perjury, Forgery, &c. as have been publiſhed at large; for all Trials (even in theſe Caſes) are Helps to Hiſtory, ſetting forth the true State of the Caſe on both Sides, and are uſeful to the Gentlemen of the Law as well as Hiſtorians, as they give the Opinions of the greateſt Lawyers on the different Points brought before them.

This Work will receive conſiderable Addition from that upright Judge Mr. Juſtice Foſter, who, in his Caſes on the Crown Law, has given the Public ſeveral Reſolutions and Determinations of the Court on ſome of the Trials of the Rebels, which are added after each of their Trials; but the greateſt Uſe made of that judicious Author, is his Speech on pronouncing the Judgment of the Court, in the Caſe of the King and Macdaniel, and his Gang of Thief-takers (which is inſerted after the Arguments of Mr. Hume and others on their ſpecial Verdict, which Arguments were never before printed); and alſo on the Queſtion put to the Judges, by the Houſe of Lords in Earl Ferrers's Caſe,

" 1. Whether a Peer, indicted of Felony and Murder, and tried and convicted thereof before the Lords in Parliament, ought to " receive Judgment for the ſame, according to the Proviſions of the Act of Parliament of the Twenty-fifth Year of his Majeſty's " Reign, intituled, An Act for better preventing the horrid Crime of Murder?"

" 2. Suppoſing a Peer, ſo indicted and convicted, ought by Law to receive ſuch Judgment as aforeſaid, and the Day appointed " by the Judgment for Execution ſhould lapſe before ſuch Execution done, whether a new Time may be appointed for the Exe- " cution, and by whom?"

As the Affair of Mr. Anneſley and Lord Angleſea made a great Noiſe, ſome Years ago, and occaſioned four Trials, carried on at a vaſt Expence, we have inſerted them here. Firſt, Mr. Anneſley's for the Murder of Mr. Eggleſtone at Staines in Middleſex; Second, that of Lord Angleſea, and others, tried in Ireland, for an Aſſault on Mr. Anneſley, Mr. Mac Kercher, and others; Third, ſo much of the Trial in Ejectment, in Ireland, between Mr. Anneſley and Lord Angleſea (which Trial at large is in almoſt every Hand) as will make the Reader entire Maſter of the whole Affair; with the Speeches and Opinions of the Lord Chief Baron Bowes, and the other Judges, at full Length, in that remarkable Cauſe; which will ſerve for an Introduction to the Trial of Mrs. Mary Heath (Lady Altham's Woman) who was tried for Perjury, for the Evidence ſhe gave on that Trial in Ejectment. The Acquittal of this Woman ſeems to have put a ſtop to the further Proceedings at that time; and ſince Mr. Anneſley's Death, we do not hear they are as yet revived.—The Trial of Elizabeth Canning, for Perjury, is here printed, though in a much fuller and larger Manner than it ever appeared in before this Publication.

As Scotland is Part of the united Kingdoms, and their Trials are conducted in a very ſenſible Manner, though their Method of Proceedings are different from ours, (in not bringing their Witneſſes into Court to be examined, only reading their Depoſitions taken in Writing on Oath) yet we ſhall inſert three or four of the moſt principal of them, to ſhew their Method of proceeding, and the Reaſoning and Learning of their Advocates.

Some People may wonder we have not obtained ſome of the modern Trials, as Dr. Henzie for High Treaſon; the Cock-Lane Ghoſt, &c. Our Anſwer is, we ſhould have been very glad to have obtained them; they would have been a great Addition to the Work, from the great Learning of the Judge that tried them; but we never could hear they were ever printed or taken in Short-hand; and as to the former, he made no Defence or called any Evidences; ſo it could not be a Trial of any Conſequence; but if any one has a mind to peruſe the Law Proceedings againſt him, in the Court of King's Bench, he may find them in Mr. Burrow's Reports, Vol. I. part iv. p. 642.

We hope the candid Reader will excuſe ſuch Errors as he may find in this Work occaſioned by the Editor's Diſtance from the Preſs, and judge favourably of this Collection (made more for Amuſement than Profit), which, in all Probability, had never ſeen the Light, if the Editor had not, at great Trouble and Expence, undertaken it.

A COMPLETE

COLLECTION

OF

TRIALS, &c.

I.

The Trial of RICHARD NOBLE *, Gent. for the Murder of JOHN SAYER †, Esq. and of Mrs. MARY SAYER, for Petty Treason, and Mrs. MARY SALISBURY, for aiding and abetting the said Murder; at the Assizes held at Kingston upon Thames, in Surry, before the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice Parker, March 12, 13, 1712-13.

ON Thursday Evening, March 12, Richard Noble, Mary Sayer, and Mary Salisbury, were arraigned for the Murder of John Sayer, Esq. upon their several Indictments; and pleaded Not Guilty; and were told by the Court, to prepare for their Trials next Morning at six o'Clock.

On Friday Morning at Six, the Court sat, and the Prisoners were set to the Bar; when Mr. Noble moved to put off their Trials, for that Mr. Bull, a very material Evidence for them, was not come down.

Court. That must be proved by the Oath of somebody, and that he was served with a Subpœna to attend here. Upon which Mr. Lindsey, one of the Attornies, concerned for the Prisoners (for they had many) deposed, That he filled up a Subpœna for serving Mr. Bull, but did not serve it himself; that a Messenger was sent at twelve o'Clock, Yesterday, to London, to serve it, but was not returned. Mr. Noble also alledged, That Mr. Page, the Counsel, another material Witness, was not come, and that he was served with a Subpœna, and they looked for him every Hour; and called Mr. Lindsey to prove this.

Mr. Lindsey deposed, He served Mr. Page with a Subpœna last Sunday, and that he thought he would have been down at the Trial.

The Court told Lindsey he should have taken care to have had his Witnesses ready, and that there was no Affidavit made of their being material Witnesses; and reprimanded Lindsey for his Neglect, and ordered the Trial to go on.

The Queen's Counsel, Mr. Serj. Commyns, with Mr. Nott, set forth how heinous the Crimes of the Prisoners would appear to be, but what aggravated their Crimes, was their endeavouring to procure Witnesses to perjure themselves; and called ‡

Daniel Reeves, who being sworn, proved, That one James Hannon, an Irishman, (who stands committed for this Offence) on Thursday before the Trial, came to him, and shewed him Copies of the Examinations taken before the Coroner, of Samuel Derham, Thomas Gardner, and John Cox, three of the most material Witnesses, to prove the Murder. Hannon then gave him Half-a-Crown, and desired him to procure, or hire two other Men to swear with him, against those Examinations, and promised him two Guineas for himself; and the other two Men were to have what Reeves could agree with them for, and that Mr. Noble would give Reeves a larger Satisfaction than what he thought he would, or could expect.

Friday Evening following, Hannon came to him again, and gave him another Half Crown, to spend upon Derham, Gardner, and Cox, and ordered him to make what Agreement he could with them, to stifle and buy off their Evidence; and the next Day, Saturday, Hannon came to Reeves again, to know what Progress he had made, and invited him to Dinner on Monday, and to bring the other two Men he was to hire with him; Hannon gave him a Note, of his own Hand-writing, where he lived, which was at Number 10. in College-street, Westminster. On Monday Morning Hannon came to Reeves again, and gave him a Writing in the Nature of an Affidavit, drawn up on Stamp Paper (by the Prisoners he said), which he, and the two Men he pretended he had hired, were to swear before a Judge, and gave him nine Shillings more in Money; whilst Hannon was thus tampering with this Witness (Reeves), he intimates it to the Prosecutor's Attorney, and after having got this Affidavit from Hannon, he shuffles off from dining with him, but promises to meet him in the Afternoon; and carries the Affidavit to the Prosecutor's Attorney; when it was settled between them, that when Hannon came again, Reeves should appear steady and zealous in the Affair, and a Warrant should be procured to apprehend him. Accordingly Hannon came, and a Warrant having been procured from Justice Hartley, instead of the two Persons, Reeves was to procure to forswear themselves, two Constables appeared; and Reeves said to Hannon, These are my two Friends. Hannon embraced them very civilly. When a third Constable entered, Reeves seized Hannon's Sword, and asked the other Constables, if they charged him with Hannon? They replying, Yes, he was seized, and carried directly before Justice Lade in Southwark; where, upon his Examination, he denied the Fact, and prevaricated greatly; was kept in Custody that Night, and next Morning committed to the Marshalsea for want of Bail.

The Words of the pretended Affidavit were as followeth:

"George Smith and Samuel Shipman, both of the Parish of St. Buttolphs, "House-keepers, and Daniel Reeves, of the Parish of St. George's, South-"wark, maketh Oath, That on or about the 29th Day of January last, "these Deponents saw Mr. Cox, and Mr. Hill, the Constables, with se-"veral other Persons in Company with Mr. Sayer, the deceased, to go "from Mr. Sherlock's House in the Mint, a Brandy-Shop, to one Mr. "Twyford's House, wherein they entered; and on their being asked, What "their Business was? Refused to tell; and these Deponents heard the de-"ceased Mr. Sayer, as he went into the said Twyford's House, threaten, "or say, that he would be revenged on that Villain Noble, and on his "Wife, and that he would kill them, or be killed; and these Deponents saw "the Deceased go up Stairs, and come down again, leaving both the Con-"stables above Stairs; and on his coming to the Parlour-Door, where "Mr. Noble was, drew his Sword partly out, and said, Damn you, you "Villain, now I ave found you out; and instantly pulled at the Door, "and broke off the Bolt that was within side the Door, and thereupon the "deceased after his Sword was almost wholly drawn out, stept backwards, "and, in about a Minute, went to go down the two Steps into the Par-"lour, and seemed to be pushed down; and then some said, he was in a "Fit, fetch him some Water; but these Deponents say, that they stood "very near the Deceased, yet could not see, nor could they believe, that "any other Person, considering the Situation of the Place, and the little "Door being but part open, could see who gave the said Wound: And "these Deponents farther say, they know Mr. Derham to be a poor, ne-"cessitous Taylor in the Mint, of a most infamous Character, and are "certain he was not in the House till after the Deceased was wounded; "and the Sword which James Terry, the Deceased's Footman, and others "there, said gave the said Wound, was taken up in the Kitchen; and "further say, That before the Deceased broke open the said Door, they "saw the said Terry, with a Cane in one Hand, and a Brass-hilted Sword, "undrawn, in the other Hand.

"And lastly, These Deponents heard the said James Terry abuse the "said Mrs. Sayer, giving her very bad Words; he also told her, That "rather than fail, he would offer his Service to the Sheriff to hang her, "and that he would soon see the End of her; and she answered, Sirrah! "It is hard to be abused by the Master and the Man too; and these De-"ponents being in the Room when the Deceased fell down, heard Mrs. "Sayer say no other Words; but believe they should, if she had said any."

Jeremiah Barnard deposed, That he was summoned to Kingston Assizes, on the Jury on Life and Death; and that one Luke Jones, a Waterman, carrying Mr. Stagg, an Attorney, by Water, on Friday the 6th of March, and telling him, Jerry Barnard was summoned on the Jury; Mr. Stagg ordered him to tell Barnard, if he was not got off the Jury, Stagg could help him to 20*l*. Jones asked Stagg on what Account? Stagg answered, If he would bring in the Gentleman who killed the Man in the Mint, Not Guilty; all which Jones told this Witness by Stagg's Order; Stagg farther said,

* This Mr. Noble was the Son of Mr. Noble, who kept a well-frequented Coffee-House at Bath, and had an Estate of about 60*l*. per Ann. gave his Son a liberal Education, and put him Clerk to an Attorney at the Devizes, in Wilts; when Noble was out of his Clerkship, he took Chambers in New-Inn, London, and there practised as an Attorney; he was introduced by a Gentleman of Honour, to transact Mr. and Mrs. Sayer's Affairs, (for they had various Disputes) the Gentleman little thinking he would have made so ill an Use of his Recommendation: But Mr. Noble was a gay, amorous, young Fellow, about twenty-eight Years of Age, and what any Woman would have liked, and he soon found out Mrs. Sayer's Disposition, went off with her, and lived with her in various Lodgings in a scandalous Way.

† This John Sayer, Esq. was Lord of the Manor of Biddlesden, in Bucks, a Gentleman of about 1000*l*. per Ann. Married in 1699 Mary, Daughter and Co-heir to Admiral Nevil, (whose Relict married Col. Salisbury) and had 3000*l*. to her Fortune. Mr. Sayer, on the Receipt of 1000*l*. was to settle 50*l*. per Ann. Pin-Money, and for every 1000*l*. was to settle 100*l*. per Ann. in Trustees. She was a very agreeable, sensible Woman, had some Wit, but too much Spirit; they had not been married long, before she quarrelled with him, and parted Beds; then by Intercession of Friends came together, and parted again. In short, she carried on a Criminal Conversation with two or three others, before she came acquainted with Mr. Noble.—Though Mrs. Sayer will appear so vicious and wicked in the ensuing Trial, yet some few Years after the Murder of her Husband, and the Execution of her Gallant, she married again an eminent Physician in London.

‡ This Trial is printed from what was published at that Time, (1713) and though not so perfect as it would have been, if it had been taken in Short-hand, yet it will receive considerable Additions from the Case of Mr. Noble, By a Barrister at Law, and Mr. Noble's Speeches; printed afterwards.

they having a £ 1000 and upwards, and would ſpend it all on the Jury to ſave his Life; for it lay in the Breaſt of the Jury only; becauſe they had been with the Queen to get a Pardon, and they could not get one. This Evidence was objected to by Noble, as being only hear-ſay Evidence.

Luke Jones being ſworn, proved Mr. Stagg's talking to him, as above, and his telling Barnard what Stagg offered him, &c. Upon this the Tipſtaff was ſent for Mr. Stagg, but he was not to be found, ſo a Summons was ordered to be taken out againſt him, to attend the Lord Chief-Juſtice, at his Chambers in London.

Theſe bad Practices being diſcovered, the Court ordered the Jury, ſummoned on this Trial, to be all ſet aſide; and a Jury ſent for from the Niſi prius Bar; when each Perſon called over was ſworn, and aſked, Whether they had been wrote to, or in any manner applied to, on behalf of the Priſoners at the Bar, or either of them? When they all declared in the Negative; and on calling over the Jury, the Priſoners challenged peremptorily to the Number of Seventy-five, viz. Mr. Noble, 20; Mrs. Saliſbury, 20; and Mrs. Sayer, 35. Mr. Noble, and the other Priſoners, declared they knew nothing of Hannon, and that he was not employed by them; and that they deteſted ſuch vile Practices, and hoped it would make no Impreſſion on the Court to their Prejudice.

The Jury being ſworn, were

James Comber, Eſq.	Jonathan Wiltſhire,	Philip Becham,
Edward Chalkhill,	Edward Exall,	John Hind,
Henry Wakeford,	Thomas Fox,	Robert Wood,
Edward Parkhurſt,	John Bandford,	John Potterton.

Mr. Noble moved the Court, that he might be tried ſeparately and a-part from the Ladies, for that his Crime, and theirs, were diſtinct Things; but the ſame was over-ruled. Then their Indictments were read, Richard Noble, Gent. Mary Saliſbury, and Mary Sayer, Widow, were indicted; He, for the Murder of John Sayer, Eſq. on the Twenty-ninth Day of January, Anno 12, Annæ; Mary Saliſbury as preſent, aiding, aſſiſting, and abetting the ſame; and Mary Sayer, Widow of the Deceaſed, for Petty Treaſon, as being preſent, aiding, aſſiſting, and abetting the Murder of her ſaid Huſband; and the ſaid Richard Noble was alſo indicted on the Coroner's Inqueſt for the ſaid Murder of John Sayer, Eſq. and alſo on the Statute of Stabbing; and being ſeverally arraign'd, pleaded Not Guilty, and the Jury charged with them all jointly.——Then the Witneſſes were called.

John Farrington ſwore, That he was an Officer to the Sheriff of Middleſex, and had a Warrant delivered to him at the Suit of the Deceaſed, againſt the Priſoner at the Bar; that he arreſted Mr. Noble, at his Chambers in New-Inn, and when he was arreſted, Noble declared, and ſaid, God damn him, if he had Mr. Sayer the Plaintiff there, he would ſtick his Sword through his Body; and he would do ſo, whenever he ſaw him again. When he arreſted the Priſoner, he was ill, and the Deceaſed (the Plaintiff) ordered him not to take him out of his Chambers, but to treat him civilly; that whilſt he had him under Arreſt, Noble ſaid, He would ſend Sayer out of the World the firſt Opportunity; and the Witneſs could not help ſaying, You have had much of his Goods, and lain with his Wife, and why would you do ſo? And Noble anſwered, Damn him, he would.

Mr. Noble objected to Farrington's Evidence, for that he ſwore againſt him out of Malice; becauſe when he had him under Arreſt, he extorted Ten Guineas from him, under pretence of Civility-Money, for which the next Term after, he moved the Court of King's-Bench againſt him, who made him refund the Money.

The Court ſaid, It muſt be left to the Jury, what Credit they would give to his Evidence.

Juſtice Peters ſwore, that in 1709, a Duel was ſtirred up by the Contrivance of Mrs. Saliſbury and Mrs. Sayer, between their two Huſbands, the Deceaſed and Colonel Saliſbury, and the Challenge wrote by Mrs. Sayer (though ſent by Mr. Sayer). But when they met, the Colonel told his Son-in-Law (Sayer), as they were going in a Coach behind Montague Houſe to fight, Jack Sayer, I ſhould get no Honour by killing of you; but thou ſhouldſt know, what all the World knows; Thy Wife and my Wife are two damn'd Whores, and they want to get rid of us both. The Colonel, being a good Swordſman, might kill Sayer, and afterwards be hanged for it: This Colonel Saliſbury told me ſoon after. Mr. Noble objected to this Evidence, as being only Hear-ſay, and therefore could not affect either of them.

Joanna Manly (Servant to Mr. Sayer), That in Auguſt 1709, after Mr. Noble's Acquaintance with Mrs. Sayer, the Deceaſed went to Holland, and returned about Lady-day, during which time, Mrs. Sayer was big with Child, and her Mother, and her Siſter Mrs. Nevil, were privy to it; and during Mr. Sayer's Abſence; that Mrs. Sayer carried off her Maſter's Effects and Money, to a great Value, and that this Witneſs, ſeveral times ſaw the two Priſoners, Mr. Noble and Mrs. Sayer, in Bed together; and after her Maſter's Return, her Miſtreſs, Mrs. Sayer, deſired her to give her Maſter ſome Poiſon, and ſaid, that if this Witneſs would not get it, ſhe would get it herſelf.

Penelope Howell, another Servant, ſwore, That ſhe was ſent, by the Priſoners, for Two-penny worth of Laudanum, to make the Deceaſed ſleep, and bringing word, that the Apothecary ſaid, that Quantity was enough to make any-body ſleep their laſt Sleep, the Priſoners bid her hold her Tongue, a Slut, and give it as directed.

Anne Sceffin, the Midwife, ſwore, That on the 5th of March 1711-12, Mrs. Sayer was delivered of a Male Child by Dr. Douglaſs; that ſhe paſſed for a Widow, and that Noble and ſhe were Brother and Siſter: This Child was nurſed at Hoxton, died and was buried there. Mrs. Sayer was delivered in a Court in Brooke-ſtreet, Holborn; that there was great Familiarity between Mr. Noble and Mrs. Sayer, and that the Child was like Mr. Noble, and ſhe believed him to be the Father of it.

Mr. Martin ſwore, That he knew the Priſoners Mr. Noble and Mrs. Sayer; Mr. Noble deſired him to take a convenient Lodging for her to lie in at; which he did, and ſhe was delivered of a Male Child, about the 5th of March 1711-12, by Dr. Douglaſs, in the Preſence of Mrs. Sceffin the Midwife, at a Houſe in a Court in Brooke-ſtreet Holborn.

Francis Cox, That he is one of the Conſtables of the Pariſh of St. George the Martyr, in the Borough of Southwark; that on the 29th of January laſt, the Deceaſed, John Sayer, Eſq. with two other Gentlemen, came to his Houſe with a Warrant from Sir Charles Cox, for taking into Cuſtody he Body of Mary Sayer his Wife, who, Mr. Sayer ſaid, was gone from him without his Conſent, and lived in a looſe, ſcandalous Manner. That as he went to execute the Warrant, he called on Thomas Hill, another Conſtable, to aſſiſt him, after which they both went into the Mint; and this Witneſs being informed by Mr. Sayer, that he believed his Wife was at Twyford's Houſe, in George-ſtreet, in the Mint; this Witneſs, having found out Twyford's Houſe, he knocked at the Door, and Twyford refuſed opening the Door at firſt, till he ſaid, he was a Conſtable, and had a Warrant to ſearch for a ſuſpected Perſon in his Houſe, and that he would not hurt a Hair of his Head; then Twyford opened the Door to the Conſtables, and they beckoned to their Aſſiſtants, and all went in, Mr. Sayer running in after the two Conſtables; when Mr. Sayer went up Stairs, and there the Deceaſed ſaid, he ſaw ſome of his Wife's Cloaths, and that he believed ſhe was in the Houſe; and whilſt this Witneſs went into another little Room, Mr. Sayer, and the other Conſtable and Aſſiſtants went down Stairs; and before this Witneſs got down, he heard a great Noiſe and Screaming out, in a Room below, whereupon he made great Haſte down, when the other Conſtable and others, cried out to him, Mr. Sayer is dead, and the Gentleman that killed him was breaking out backwards to make his Eſcape; whereupon this Witneſs went round the Houſe into the Garden to ſecure him, where he found a naked Sword in the Hand of Mr. Sayer's Footman, eight or nine Inches bloody, and Mr. Noble, Mrs. Sayer, and Mrs. Saliſbury, being in the Room together, he apprehended them all, and carried them before Ralph Hartley, Eſq. Juſtice of the Peace, who committed them to the Marſhalſea.

Thomas Hill, the other Conſtable, ſwore much to the ſame Purpoſe; That he went with Cox the other Conſtable, with a Warrant to Twyford's Houſe; that Mr. Sayer went up Stairs firſt, and then came down, and he followed him; and at the Foot of the Stairs, there being a Door leading into the Back-Room, Mr. Sayer laid hold of the Door, and pulled it open, and immediately the Deceaſed fell a little back, and laid his Hand on his own Sword, but did not draw it above a Foot, for want of Strength. This Witneſs then puſhing into the Room before Mr. Sayer, Mrs. Saliſbury faſtened on his Collar, and endeavoured with all her Might, to keep him out of the Room; and as ſoon as he got in, Mr. Sayer endeavoured to follow him immediately, but could not, fell down, and never ſpoke more. There was only Mr. Noble, Mrs. Sayer, and Mrs. Saliſbury in the Room; and Noble was breaking open the Glaſs-Door to make his Eſcape: The Deceaſed being on the Ground, this Witneſs at firſt thought him in a Fit only, and Mrs. Sayer ſaid, It was only a Sham, and he was not hurt; but he preſently ſaw the Wound on Mr. Sayer's Left-ſide, whereof he immediately died, and believes Noble gave the Wound with his own Sword, which was bloody, and no other Sword drawn at that Time; that Mrs. Sayer deſired him to be civil to Mr. Noble, whom he had then apprehended; but ſhe took no Care of her Huſband.

James Terry (Servant to the Deceaſed about eight Years) ſwore, That ſtaying below in the Kitchen, he ſaw Mr. Sayer come down firſt, and laid his Hands on the Top of the Door at the Stairs-Foot, going into the Parlour, and endeavoured to pull it open; but as ſoon as it was a little Way open, he ſaw a naked Sword come through againſt his Maſter's Body, and he ran to his Maſter, and his Maſter fell back into this Witneſs's Arms, and clapping his Hand on this Left-ſide, ſaid, I am dead, or killed, or ſuch like Words. The Sword was left in his Maſter's Body, and fell out on the Ground, and verily believes his Maſter received a Wound on the Left-ſide of his Body from Mr. Noble, at the Time his Maſter opened the Door a little Way, of which he inſtantly died. This Witneſs took up the Sword, which had a mourning Hilt; and ſeeing Twyford go round the Houſe into the Garden, followed him, when he heard the Glaſs Windows break, and ſaw the back Door open, Mrs. Sayer in the Garden, Mrs. Saliſbury ſtanding on the Door Step, and his Maſter lying on the Ground; he then ſaid to his Miſtreſs, Lord Madam, What have you done to my Maſter? He's dead; and you have killed him. His Miſtreſs ſaid, O you Rogue, I'll be reveng'd on you too. Afterwards, he ſaw the Wound on his Maſter's Left Pap, which he ſaw probed, and was four or five Inches deep. This Witneſs farther depoſed, That his Maſter had no Sword drawn, at the Time he received the Wound, nor afterwards; and that no Words paſſed between him and the Party who gave the Wound.

Thomas Gardner, the Conſtable's Aſſiſtant, ſwore, That there being a Door at the Foot of the Stairs in Twyford's Houſe, he ſaw Mr. Sayer lay his Hand on the Door, and endeavour to pull it open; and as the Door was a little open, he ſaw Mr. Noble in grey Cloaths within the Room, and with a naked Sword in his Hand thruſt at the Deceaſed, through the Part of the Door that was open, and gave him a Wound on the Left-ſide of his Body; and that Mr. Sayer had no Sword drawn, neither did any Words paſs between the Deceaſed and Mr. Noble, that gave the Wound; but the Deceaſed afterwards endeavoured to draw his own Sword, then by his Side in the Scabbard, but could not pull it above half Way out, for want of Strength, and immediately fell down; and as he was falling, the Witneſs heard Mrs. Sayer ſay, that the Deceaſed had a great many ſham Fits, and that this was one of them, or ſuch like Words; and when the Conſtables were taking the Priſoners away, Mrs. Sayer aſked Noble, My Dear, have you got my Watch? He anſwered, My Dear, I have it in my Pocket.

Thomas Derham depoſed much to the ſame Purpoſe; and ſeveral other Witneſſes ſwore to the ſame Effect, particularly Captain Alkern, and Mr. Anthony Sherlock; who likewiſe ſwore, that Twyford ſhould tell them, that he told the Priſoner, the Conſtables were come either for him (Noble) or himſelf; and that he told Noble, he might go away if he pleaſed.

The Coroner appeared, and produced the bloody Sword, which was ſtained with Blood about five Inches, and appeared to be Mr. Noble's Sword, with which he killed the Deceaſed. A Surgeon alſo ſwore, that the Wound was the Occaſion of his Death, and gave a Deſcription of it to the Jury; and the Coroner's Inqueſt found it Wilful Murder againſt all three.

The Evidence for the Crown being all examined, the Priſoners were called upon to make their Defence.

Mrs. Sayer ſaid, She was parted from her Huſband, on account of his Ill-uſage of her; that he gave her the foul Diſeaſe, and that they parted by mutual Conſent, and ſhe had a ſeparate Allowance, and Articles of Separation were drawn and ſigned by each of them; that ſhe knew nothing of any Conſtables coming to Twyford's Houſe, or that there was any Warrant againſt her; that Mr. Noble being there was merely accidental, and that he came to her about her own private Buſineſs, being her Attorney; and that the Wound giving the Deceaſed, was done in an Inſtant, and ſhe knew knew nothing of it, till Mr. Sayer fell down; that ſeveral of the People had ſworn againſt her out of Malice and Spite; but utterly denied her telling the Maid to get Poiſon to give to her Huſband; and ſo far from aiding or abetting Mr. Noble, if ſhe had ſeen his Sword drawn, or known his Intentions, ſhe would have done her utmoſt to have prevented his killing Mr. Sayer.

Mrs. Saliſbury ſaid, She attended her Daughter, in the Mint, which ſhe thought a private Place, from the Reſentment of Mr. Sayer, who threatened her Daughter's Life; That ſhe had no Malice or Ill-will againſt Mr. Sayer, and wiſhed they would have lived happily together; but he uſed her exceſſive ill, and gave her the foul Diſeaſe, which obliged her Daughter to go from him; that ſhe knew nothing of any Conſtables being in the Houſe, or any Warrant out againſt her Daughter; that Mr. Noble came there that Day to dine with them, and to endeavour a Reconciliation between Mr. Sayer and his Wife; that ſhe knew nothing of the Wound being given, ſhe being at the Window; that it was done in an Inſtant, and ſhe did not know it, till ſhe heard Mr. Sayer fall.

Mr. Noble declared, He had no Ill-will or Malice againſt the Deceaſed; that Mr. Sayer had uſed his Wife barbarouſly, had beat her, and gave her the foul Diſeaſe; and aggravated the Deceaſed's Carriage towards his Wife. He ſet forth the Deed of Separation, and the Marriage Articles, arguing, That upon that Deed, he did not queſtion Mrs. Sayer would be thought a Perſon ſole and apart from her Huſband at the time of his Death; that Mr. Sayer could not, with any Juſtice, pretend his Wife had robbed him, or run away with his Jewels, &c. ſhe having a Right to them, they being reſerved to her by the Marriage Articles, and that the Deceaſed could have no Pretence to retake either them, or his Wife; as to her, ſhe was forced to go from him, on account of his Ill-uſage of her, and was lawfully ſeparated from him; he juſtified his being in Mrs. Sayer's Company, as being her Attorney, and Truſtee; that he was with her at the Time of the fatal Accident in private, about Buſineſs with her and Mrs. Saliſbury; that he then heard an extraordinary Noiſe in the Houſe, and there ſeemed a Confuſion, and Crowd of People aſſembled together in the Houſe, but he could not tell for what; he owned, he knew Mr. Sayer was in the Houſe, for he heard his Voice before the Door was broke open; the Deceaſed breaking open the Door by pulling off the Bolt, and one Hinge, ſurprized him, and the Priſoners; that they all retired to the Back-Door thinking to eſcape, but were not able to get it open; and hearing ſuch a Clamour and Noiſe without, he was flung into a Terror and Confuſion, ariſing from ſuch a deſperate Place as the Mint; that he then drew his Sword, and ſtabbed the Deceaſed as he was entering the Door of the Room; where he, Mrs. Sayer, and Mrs. Saliſbury were; that he did not doubt juſtifying what he had done, notwithſtanding the aggravating Circumſtances alledged by the Counſel, for that the Deceaſed came with an illegal and ill-grounded Warrant, and that Twyford the Landlord never told him Conſtables were at the Door; that he knew the Deceaſed ſought his Life, he having before drawn his ſword on him, and once brought a Piſtol to his Chambers, on purpoſe to ſhoot him. He ſet forth, That he was recommended to do Mrs. Sayer's Buſineſs by a Gentleman of Honour, and that he had often endeavoured and ſollicited an Accommodation between Mr. Sayer and his Wife; that the Articles of Separation were drawn and executed before he was employed as Mrs. Sayer's Attorney; and that Mrs. Saliſbury had engaged him to come over that very Day, to ſollicit a Reconciliation; and that he never declared, he would ſtick Mr. Sayer whenever he ſaw him; and that Farrington, the Officer, ſwore out of Malice againſt him.

The Priſoners then called ſome Witneſſes, proving the Marriage Articles, and Deed of Separation.

Then Mr. Noble called a Witneſs, who depoſed, That the Deceaſed, ſome time ago, broke open the Door upon the Priſoner, Mrs. Sayer, to kill her with his Penknife; that this Witneſs was well acquainted with Mrs. Sayer, during Noble's Converſation and Acquaintance with her, and never knew her to be with Child, or that ſhe was bigger than uſual; that the Priſoner, Mrs. Sayer, before her Acquaintance with Mr. Noble, was endeavouring for a Divorce, in Doctors-Commons; and that the Deceaſed ſeveral times beat his Wife, and ſome time ſince went to Mr. Noble's Chambers, with a Piſtol in his Hand, to kill him; and that this Witneſs met the Deceaſed upon the Stairs, going up to Mr. Noble's Chambers, which Paſſage he had told to ſeveral others; and he proved Noble's wreſting the Deceaſed's naked Sword from him, when he offered to ſtab him, or run him through the Back; and that the Deceaſed was cured of the foul Diſeaſe.

Eliz. Saunders, Servant at the Red-Lyon, in George Street, in the Mint, ſwore, ſhe was in the Backſide of her Maſter's Houſe a-waſhing, when the two Conſtables came to Twyford's Houſe; that they knocked at the Door, and refuſed to tell their Buſineſs, or whom or what they wanted; that ſhe went in with the Conſtables, and Mr. Sayer, to Mr. Twyford's Houſe, and nobody elſe with them; that the Deceaſed came into the Houſe, with his Sword drawn about three Inches out, went up Stairs with the Conſtable, and came down again by himſelf, had his Sword then drawn, ſwore he would make an end of the Priſoner, Mr. Noble, broke open the Door and went into the Room, and fell down dead; all which ſhe ſaw, ſhe being in the Kitchen; but did not know how he died.

Two Men ſwore, That Mr. Sayer ran into the Houſe, with his Sword drawn about four Inches, ſwearing he would kill the Priſoner, Noble; and in other Points, agreeing with thoſe Particulars mentioned in the Affidavit which Mr. James Hannon endeavoured to ſuborn Reeves to ſwear to.

Others were called to invalidate the Evidence given by Farrington, of the Priſoner Noble's ſwearing to ſtick the Deceaſed whenever he met him.

Others ſwore, they were frequently in Company with the Priſoner Noble, and Mrs. Sayer, and never knew any diſorderly, or unbecoming Behaviour between them, but thought the Priſoner Noble attended her only as her Attorney.

Several were called to the Character of Mr. Noble, and gave him a very good one, and that they never heard any Ill of him.

Others were called to the Characters of Mrs. Saliſbury, and Mrs. Sayer, who ſaid, they never knew any Ill of them, particularly a Lady, a Neighbour to Mrs. Sayer, in Liſle-ſtreet, who ſaid, ſhe thought her a decent, well-behaved Woman.

The Evidence on both Sides being gone thro', Mr. Noble, the Priſoner at the Bar, deſired he might have Counſel as to a Point of Law; Whether the Warrant to apprehend Mrs. Sayer was not illegal; and whether by that Warrant, they could enter and break open the Door upon the Priſoners in another's Houſe; and whether what he did was not in his own Defence? Counſel being granted him, they inſiſted, "That this War-
"rant was illegal, though from a Juſtice of the Peace; that it was ill-
"grounded, and made without legal Authority; that without any legal "Authority, a Multitude came into the Houſe; that the Priſoners had
"no Notice they were Conſtables, or had any legal Warrant to apprehend
"Mrs. Sayer; that the Deceaſed broke open the Door upon the Priſoners,
"which was an Aſſault upon them; and the Priſoner, Noble, hearing ſuch
"a Tumult and Noiſe, and Numbers breaking in upon him, he drew his
"Sword in his own Defence, and unfortunately ſtabbed the Deceaſed."

Therefore hoped his Lordſhip would direct the Jury to find a Special Verdict.

There were ſome Debates between the Counſel, whether the Priſoners knew the Conſtables were at Twyford's Houſe? Upon which the Queen's Counſel called up again other Witneſſes, ſome of which were examined before; one proved that Twyford, the Man of the Houſe where the Priſoners were, told him ſome Days after the Murder, That immediately upon the coming in of the Conſtables, he ran through his Garden round the Houſe to the Back-Door, and told Mr. Noble, the Conſtables were come, and wanted either him, or himſelf; that he opened the Back-Door to the Priſoner, Noble, and ſaid to him, Sir, you may go your way if you pleaſe.

Upon this, Twyford's Examination taken before John Lade Eſq. a Juſtice of the Peace, was read; "That he told Mr. Noble the Conſtables were at "the Door, and wanted either him (Mr. Noble) or himſelf; and that he "opened the back Door to him, and ſaid, (loud enough for him to hear)
"Sir, you may go out, or go your way, if you pleaſe, or Words to that "Effect."

Others ſwore, they heard Twyford ſay the ſame thing, when he was before the Juſtice.

John Janeway, of Suffolk-Place in the Mint, Thomas Auſten, Francis Cox, and John Wadſworth, all of St. George's Pariſh, all ſwore, they heard Twyford ſay the ſame, before the Coroner.

The Evidence being finiſhed, the Court ſaid, that the Warrant being ill-grounded was not material, illegal it could not be, for it was granted by a Juſtice of the Peace, on the Oath of a Perſon, that Mr. Sayer had been robbed of Goods, &c. to a conſiderable Value, and Mr. Sayer could juſtify ſearching for and taking his Goods, and apprehending his Wife, wherever he could find them; that it is plain by the Evidence, that the Landlord, Twyford, told the Priſoner, Noble, the Conſtables * were come either for him (Noble) or himſelf, and told

* As to the Legality of the Warrant, or whether proper Notice was given by the Conſtables, ſeems determined in Curtis's Caſe, taken from Mr. Juſtice Foſter's Reports, Page 135, which is cited at large, as being applicable (in part) to this Caſe of Noble's.

The Caſe of Richard Curtis.

'HE was indicted at the Summer Aſſizes 1756, for the Town and County of Newcaſtle upon Tyne, for the Murder of William Atkinſon.

'Upon the Trial the Caſe appeared to be, that a Proceſs in the Nature of a Capias ad Satisfaciendum iſſued againſt one Charles Cowling out of the Town Court, 'directed to Joſeph Dixon, a Serjeant at Mace belonging to the Court; who got John Suretees, another Serjeant at Mace, to go and execute it for him. Suretees accordingly 'went to Cowling's Work-ſhop adjoining to his Houſe, and taking hold of him told him that he had an Execution againſt him. Cowling demanded a ſight of the Proceſs; 'which being refuſed, Cowling, with the aſſiſtance of the Priſoner, by force and violence reſcued himſelf.

'Suretees immediately acquainted Dixon with what had happened; and thereupon Dixon prevailed upon the Mayor's Officer to inſert the Name of Suretees in the Proceſs: 'and Suretees then went before a Juſtice of the Peace for the Town and County, and made Information on Oath, that he did by virtue of the ſaid Proceſs to him and Joſeph 'Dixon directed, apprehend the ſaid Cowling, who by Wreſtling and Strokes got out of his Hands and made his Eſcape.

'The Juſtice thereupon granted a Warrant, directed to all Serjeants at Mace, Conſtables, and other Officers within the ſaid Town and County, reciting the Proceſs 'already mentioned; that Suretees had that Day arreſted Cowling by virtue thereof, and that Cowling had by Wreſtling and Strokes reſcued himſelf, and commanding all 'Officers, &c. to apprehend the ſaid Cowling, and to bring him before the Juſtice who granted the Warrant, or any other Juſtice of the Peace of the Town and County, 'to be dealt with in the Primiſes as the Law directeth.

'Upon the receipt of this Warrant, Dixon and Suretees (who were both Serjeants at Mace) went back to Cowling's Work-ſhop, taking with them the Deceaſed and 'one Coulſon as their Aſſiſtants. They found the Shop Doors ſhut; and calling to Cowling, who was there with the Priſoner, informed him that they had an Eſcape War-'rant againſt him, and required him to ſurrender; otherwiſe they ſaid they would break open the Door.

'Cowling refuſed to ſurrender; and the Priſoner looking out at the Window with an Ax in his Hand, ſwore that the firſt Man that entered ſhould be a dead Man. Dixon, 'however, with Coulſon and the Deceaſed, broke open the Shop Door; and the Deceaſed, being foremoſt in entering the Shop, the Priſoner at one Blow with the Ax, on the 'left ſide of the Head, killed him on the Spot.

'Upon this Evidence the Priſoner was found Guilty of Wilful Murder. But ſome Gentlemen of the Profeſſion, expreſſing their Doubts to the Judge who tried him, he 'reſpited Execution 'till the Opinion of the other Judges could be had on the Caſe.

'In Trinity Term 1757, Eleven of the Judges had a Conference on the Caſe, and Nine of them, with whom Juſtice Wilmot, who was abſent, concurred, were clearly of 'Opinion that the Defendant is Guilty of Murder. Two of the Judges held it to be Manſlaughter. All the Judges preſent at the Conference agreed that the Juſtice's War-'rant, though obtained by very unwarrantable Practice on the part of Dixon, and by Perjury on the part of Suretees, was a legal Warrant for the Arreſting Cowling for a 'Breach of the Peace. For in Caſes wherein the Juſtice of the Peace hath Juriſdiction, and in this he undoubtedly had, the Legality of his Warrant will never depend on 'the Truth of the Information whereon it is grounded.

'They likewiſe agreed, that Peace-Officers, having a legal Warrant to arreſt for a Breach of the Peace, may break open Doors after having demanded Admittance, and 'given due Notice of their Warrant.

'The Point on which they divided was, Whether in this Caſe ſuch due Notice had been given?

'The Nine Judges were of Opinion, that no preciſe Form of Words is required in a Caſe of this kind. It is ſufficient that the Party hath Notice that the Officer cometh 'not as a mere Treſpaſſor, but claiming to act under a proper Authority. And if after this notice, he be reſiſted, and he or any of his Aſſiſtants killed in conſequence 'of ſuch Reſiſtance, it will be Murder; provided it cometh out in Evidence that the Officer had a Legal Warrant.

'The

told him he might go away if he pleaſed; therefore he might pretty well tell what they came about, conſidering how ſcandalouſly he had lived for ſome Time paſt with the Deceaſed's Wife.—If he had been there innocently, or with a good Intention, as he pretends, why did not he voluntarily ſurrender himſelf to the Conſtables; but the many Declarations the Priſoner had made againſt the Deceaſed, ſeemed to carry Rancour and Malice againſt him; that it was certain the Priſoner, Noble, knew Sayer was in the Houſe, for he has owned he heard his Voice before the Door was broke open; therefore it ſeemed a determined Thing in him to deſtroy Mr. Sayer, who was killed, and if you believe the Evidence, by the Priſoner, Noble's own Hand.

The Chief-Juſtice ſummed up the Evidence with great Clearneſs and Impartiality, and ſeemed to direct the Jury to find Noble Guilty; and there being not ſufficient Evidence to convict the other Priſoners, for the Shortneſs of Time would not allow of any conſulting or confederating together to deſtroy the Deceaſed, directed them to be acquitted. The Judge behaved with great Patience and Temper during this whole Trial, which laſted from ſix o'Clock in the Morning, until one next Morning; when the Jury were admitted to have ſome Refreſhment at the Bar, while the Court was ſitting; then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, who went out between One and Two on Saturday Morning, but did not agree on their Verdict till the ſame Morning about Ten o'Clock; which was, that Richard Noble was Guilty on all three Indictments; Mary Sayer, and Mary Saliſbury, Not Guilty.

On the Acquittal of the two Ladies, they behaved ſo overjoyed, as to be taken Notice of by the Court, who reprimanded them for their indecent Behaviour.

Counſel then moved that Mrs. Saliſbury and Mrs. Sayer might not be diſcharged, without giving ſufficient Bail to appear at any Time within Twelve Months, to anſwer to any other Indictment, or an Appeal. The Court ordered they ſhould give ſufficient Bail for their Appearance, themſelves in £1000 a-piece, and their Sureties in £500 each, who were Mr. Stephen Hodges, Mr. Joſeph Stocker, Mr. Thomas Arne, and Mr. John Hodges. Upon their being diſcharged, the two Ladies returned to London in a Coach, taking with them the Turnkey, to prevent any Inſult from the Mob, which was pretty numerous. Whilſt in the Coach, the Ladies ſeemed overjoyed at their Deliverance, and told the Turnkey, That the Affair turned out juſt as they would have had it.

Monday, March 16th, the Priſoner Noble was brought to the Bar, and aſked what he had to ſay why Judgment ſhould not be given, and Execution awarded? On which he moved in Arreſt of Judgment,

'My Lord, I humbly move in Arreſt of Judgment, for that I apprehend I have had a Miſ-trial, and that my Trial has been contrary to the Law of England, in that we were ſevered in our Challenges, and yet were tried together by the ſame Jury;' and ſaid, that in Charnock, King, and Keys's Trial, [Vide State Trials, Vol. IV.] Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt ſaid, 'You may challenge Thirty-five peremptorily, without Cauſe; but if you do not all agree in the ſame Challenge, ye cannot be tried together by the ſame Jury, but the Court muſt ſeparate you, and try you every one ſingly.' And quoted other Parts of the Trial, and deſired that his Counſel might ſpeak to it.

But the Court over-ruled the Motion, alledging, that the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt's Reaſon, in the Caſe of Charnock, King, and Keys, was, that in caſe each of them ſeverally challenged Thirty five, three Times thirty-five would amount to One Hundred and Five, and then they muſt be obliged to ſever them, (as the Court were near obliged to have done in the preſent Caſe) for default of Jurors.

Then Mr. Noble made the following Speech to the Court.

My Lord,

'I AM ſoon to appear, and render an Account of my Sins to God Almighty; If your Lordſhip ſhould think me guilty of thoſe Crimes I have been accuſed, and convicted by my Jury, I am ſure, then, your Lordſhip will think that I ſtand in need of ſuch a Preparation, ſuch a Humiliation for my great Offences, ſuch an Abhorrence of my paſt Life, to give me Hopes of a future one; that I am not without Hopes that it will be a Motive to your Lordſhip's Goodneſs, that after you have judged and ſentenced my Body to Execution, you will charitably aſſiſt me with a little Time for the Preſervation of my Soul.

'If I had nothing to anſwer for, but killing Mr. Sayer with precedent Malice, I ſhould have no Need to addreſs myſelf to your Lordſhip in this Manner. It is now too late to take Advantage by denying it to your Lordſhip, and too near my End to diſſemble it before God. I know, my Lord, the Danger, the Hell, that I ſhould plunge myſelf headlong into; I know I ſhall ſoon anſwer for the Truth I am now about to ſay, before a higher Tribunal, and a more diſcerning Judge than your Lordſhip, which is only in Heaven; that I did not take that Advantage to kill Mr. Sayer, by a Thought or Apprehenſion, that I could do it under Umbrage of the Law, or with Impunity; and nothing was more diſtant from my Thoughts, than to remove him out of the World to enjoy his Wife (as was ſuggeſted) without Moleſtation: Nor could any one have greater Reluctance, or Remorſe, from the Time of the Fact to the Hour of my Trial, than I have had, though the Proſecutors reported to the contrary; for which I heartily forgive them.

'My Counſel obliged me to ſay on my Trial, That I heard Mr. Sayer's Voice before he broke open the Door; I told them, as I now tell your Lordſhip, That I did not know it was him, 'till he was breaking in at the Door, and then, and not before, was my Sword drawn, and the Wound given, which Wound, as Dr. Garth informed me, was ſo very ſlight, that it was a thouſand to one he died of it.

'When I gave the Wound, I inſenſibly quitted the Sword; by which Means I left myſelf open for him to have done what was proved, and was ſo likely for him to have effected, viz. to have ſtabbed me, which are Circumſtances that manifeſt the Greatneſs of my Surprize.

'When I heard the Company run up Stairs, I was alarmed, and in fear; the Landlord telling me, inſtantly thereupon, that the Houſe was beſet either for me or himſelf, added to my Confuſion: I then never thought or intended to do miſchief; but firſt bolted the Fore-Door, and then bolted and padlocked the Back-Door, (which was half glazed) and began to faſten the Shutters belonging to it, deſigning only to ſcreen myſelf from the Violence of the Tumult. When he broke open the Door, and not till then, I perceived and knew he was preſent: And his former Threats and Attempts, which I ſo fully proved on my Trial (and could have proved much fuller, had not Madam Saliſbury's Evidence been taken from me), made my Fear ſo great, and the Apprehenſion of my Danger ſo near, that what I did was the natural Motion of Self-Defence, and was too ſudden to be the Reſult of precedent Malice; and I ſolemnly declare, that I did not hear or know from Twyford the Landlord, or otherwiſe, that any Conſtable was attending the Deceaſed, till after the Misfortune happened.

'It was my Misfortune, that what I ſaid, as to hearing the Deceaſed's Voice, was turned to my Diſadvantage by the Counſel againſt me; and that I was not intitled to any Aſſiſtance of Counſel to enforce the Evidence given for me, or to remark upon the Evidence given againſt me, which, I do not doubt, would have fully ſatisfied your Lordſhip and the Jury, that what happened was more my Misfortune than my Deſign or Intention.

'If I had been able, under that Concern, to remark upon the Evidence againſt me, that Mr. Sayer was but the tenth Part of a Minute in breaking open the Door, it could not then be well ſuppoſed by the Jury, that I was preparing myſelf, or putting myſelf in Order to do Miſchief, which are Acts of Fore-thought and Conſideration, which require much more Time than is pretended I could have had, from the Time I diſcovered Mr. Sayer; for even from his Entry into the Houſe, to the Time of the Accident, did not amount, as I am informed, to more than the Space of three Minutes. But I did not diſcover him before the Door gave Way.

'I wiſh it had been my good Fortune, that the Jury had applied that to me, which your Lordſhip remarked in Favour of the Ladies, That the Matter was ſo very ſudden, ſo very accidental, and unexpected, that it was impoſſible to be a Contrivance and Confederacy, and unlikely that they could come to a Reſolution in ſo ſhort a Time: I do not remember your Lordſhip diſtinguiſhed my Caſe, as to that Particular, to be different from theirs, nor was there Room left for it; for it is impoſſible for your Lordſhip to believe, that I dreamt of Mr. Sayer's coming there at that Time; but, on the contrary, I fully proved to your Lordſhip, that I went there upon another Occaſion, that was lawful and beneficial for the Deceaſed; and I had no more Time to think or contrive, than the Ladies had to agree, or conſent.

'If any Thing could be conſtrued favourably on the Behalf of ſuch an unfortunate Wretch as myſelf, I think the Deſign I had ſome Time before begun, and was about finiſhing that Day, might have taken away all Suſpicion of Malice againſt Mr. Sayer.

'Muſt it be thought, my Lord, that I only am ſuch a Sinner that I cannot repent, and make Reparation to the Perſons I have injured? It was not denied, but I ſtrongly ſolicited a Reconciliation between Mr. Sayer and his Lady; and if this had tended to procure me an eaſier Acceſs to Mrs. Sayer, it would have been ſuch a Matter of Aggravation againſt me, that it could not have eſcaped the Remark of the Counſel againſt me, nor the Sharpneſs of the Proſecutors preſent in Court; with both I tranſacted, and to both I appealed, particularly to Mr. Nott, to whom, but the Day before the Accident, I manifeſted my Deſire of having them live together again: And therefore, my Lord, it ſhould be preſumed I laboured to be reconciled, and not to revenge myſelf on Mr. Sayer.

'Your Lordſhip, I hope, will obſerve ſo much in my Favour, that it was ſo far from being a clear Fact in the Opinion of the Jury, that they ſate up all Night, and, believing there was no Malice at that Time, told your Lordſhip, they intended, and were inclinable to find it Manſlaughter; and doubting the Legality of the Warrant to find it Special.

'I hope this will touch your Lordſhip's Heart ſo far, as not to think me ſo ill a Man, as to deſerve what the beſt of Chriſtians are taught to pray againſt, a ſudden Death.

'I confeſs I am unprepared; the Hopes of my being able to make a legal Defence, and my Endeavours therein, having taken up my Time, which I wiſh I had better employed, I beg Leave to aſſure your Lordſhip, upon the Words of a dying Man, that as none of the indirect Practices to get or ſuppreſs Evidence were proved upon me, ſo they never ſprang from me; and I can ſafely ſay, that my Blood, in a great meaſure,

'The Perſon making ſuch Reſiſtance after ſuch Notice, doth it at his own Peril. He acteth avowedly and deliberately in Defiance of the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice. And therefore it will be no Excuſe on his Part to ſay, that he did not know or believe that the Officer came armed with a proper Authority. This Rule is founded on the Policy of the Law, and upon every Principle of Government.

'The Judges who differed thought that the Officers ought to have declared in an explicit Manner what Sort of Warrant they had.

'They ſaid that an Eſcape doth not ex Vi termini, nor in the Notion of Law, imply any Degree of Force or Breach of the Peace; and conſequently the Priſoner had not due Notice that they came under the Authority of a Warrant grounded on a Breach of the Peace. And for Want of this due Notice the Officers are not to be conſidered as acting in Diſcharge of their Duty, but as mere Treſpaſſors.

'On this Queſtion alone the Caſe turned.

'But a few of the Judges who conceived the Fact to be Murder, were of Opinion that it would have been ſo, even admitting that the Officers could not have juſtified the breaking open the Door. Here was no Arreſt actually made; the Officers, even admitting that due Notice had not been given, had committed a bare Treſpaſs in the Houſe of Cowling, where the Priſoner happened to be; no Treſpaſs done to the Property of the Priſoner, no Attempt on his Perſon.

'But admitting that a Treſpaſs in the Houſe with an Intent to make an unjuſtifiable Arreſt on the Owner, could be conſidered as ſome Provocation to a Stander-by; yet ſurely the knocking a Man's Brains out, or cleaving him down with an Ax on ſo ſlight a Provocation, ſavoureth rather of brutal Rage, or, to ſpeak more properly, of Diabolical Miſchief, than of Human Frailty. And it ought always to be remembered, that, in all Caſes of Homicide and ſudden Provocation, the Law indulgeth to Human Frailty, and to that alone.

'Beſides the Circumſtance of the Priſoner's ſtanding with the Axe in his Hand, declaring before any Attempt to enter the Shop, "That the firſt Man that did enter ſhould be a dead Man,"—ſheweth it to be an Act of Deliberation as well as Cruelty.

'And where the Circumſtances of Deliberation and Cruelty concur, as they do in this Caſe, the Fact is undoubtedly Murder; as flowing from a wicked Heart, and Mind grievouſly depraved, and acting from Motives highly Criminal. Which is the genuine Notion of Malice in our Law.'

'will lye at their Door that did it; becauſe it drew me under an ill Im-
'putation of defending myſelf by Subornation of Perjury.

'I would be willing to do my Duty towards my Neighbours, as well
'as God, before I die.

'I have many Papers and Concerns (by reaſon of my Profeſſion) of my 'Clients in my Hands, who will ſuffer if they are not put into ſome Or'der. And nothing but theſe two Conſiderations could make Life de-
'ſirable under this heavy Load of Irons, and reſtleſs Remorſe of Con-
'ſcience for my Sins.

'A ſhort Reprieve for theſe Purpoſes, I hope will be agreeable to your 'Lordſhip's Humanity and Chriſtian Virtue; whereupon your Lordſhip's
'Name ſhall be bleſſed with my laſt Breath, for giving me an Opportu-
'nity to make Peace with my Conſcience and God Almighty.'

Then the Court paſſed Sentence on him, and told him he ſhould be allowed a reaſonable Time for the Purpoſes he mentioned, which they hoped he would make a good uſe of; and ordered his Execution for Saturday, March 28. When the Gaoler came (with a Barbarity natural to thoſe Fellows) to load Mr. Noble with Irons, he was very much confounded; for though he had given, he ſaid, near 200*l.* to all the Crew about him to have ſome Favour, they loaded him with the heavieſt Irons, and curſed him as they were putting them on. Thus the Ladies left the dear Partner of their Pleaſures and Perils bound with harder Chains than thoſe of Love, his Hands manacled, his Legs fetter'd, his Friends abandoning him, his very Counſel and Solicitors declaring, they would not have been concerned for him had they known of the Adultery; yet all this he bore with uncommon Patience, but ſhewed great Concern for being ſo baſely deſerted by the very Women, who brought upon him all his Misfortunes.

He behaved very decently, whilſt under Sentence of Death; and would often ſay, he did not think his Crime Murder in the Eye of the Law, and continually exclaimed againſt Farrington, the Bailiff's Evidence. One Thing was very particular, Mrs. Sayer came to Kingſton, the Day before he was executed, in the Diſguiſe of a Servant-Maid, and ſent a Letter to him, giving him Notice ſhe was come, and ſo diſguiſed, that if he would ſee her, ſhe could come eaſily to him, notwithſtanding the Orders the Gaoler had not to admit her. Noble, on reading the Letter, did not ſeem averſe to ſeeing her; but the Divines who attended him, perſuaded him from it; and he ſent her word, That he was a Man ſtill, and liable to Paſſions; ſhe had Time, and might repent; but he had but a very ſhort Time, and that muſt be employed about the Concerns of his Soul. It is certain, he ſaw neither of the Women after his Conviction, though they were ſoliciting a Reprieve for him all the Time.

Accordingly, Saturday, March 28, 1713, he was executed at Gallows-Hill, near Kingſton; when he delivered the following Account to the three Clergymen that attended him.

The true Copy of the original Paper ſigned by Mr. Richard Noble, which he deſigned for his Laſt Speech, delivered, to Mr. Cooke, Curate of Kingſton, and Ordinary of Surrey; another to Mr. Broughton, Vicar of Kingſton; and a third to the Rev. Mr. L'Herondell: With a particular Account of his Behaviour ſome Days before his Execution, by all the aforeſaid Clergymen.

An Account writ by Richard Noble, the Afternoon before his Execution.

'I HAVE, ſince my Confinement (under Sentence of Death) to this very 'Hour, been under the greateſt Expectation of a ſhort Reprieve;
'eſpecially, for that I was credibly aſſured the Lord Chief Juſtice Parker
'had promiſed to grant it for my Clients Sake, in caſe they would make
'Affidavit before him, of their having Papers and Writings in my Hands;
'which Condition (I am told) was perform'd on their Part.

'If ſuch Promiſe was made, I heartily forgive him in not performing it.

'This Diſappointment I aſſign as the true Reaſon of my being very 'brief in the Account, which otherwiſe might have been incumbent on,
'or at leaſt have been expected from me to have enlarged upon.

'I have been often told, that it hath been reported I have acted crimi-
'nal Indecencies with Mrs. Saliſbury and Mrs. Elizabeth Nevil (the Mo'ther and Siſter of Mrs. Mary Sayer), and that both or one of them were,
'or was privy to, or countenancing of ſuch unlawful Acts of mine with
'the ſaid Mrs. Sayer. I think it my Duty to declare, as I do, that ſuch
'Report is falſe.

'As to the murdering Mr. Sayer, I do declare, that Mrs. Salisbury, or
'Mrs. Sayer, did not draw the Sword with which I unfortunately killed
'him: Nor was either of them aiding, directing, or adviſing of ſuch
'Murder: Nor did either of them open the Door whereat I killed him;
'tho' the contrary hath been ſuggeſted to me by one of the Siſters of
'the Deceaſed.

'I am told, that it is reported I was married to Mrs. Sayer whilſt we 'were in the Marſhalſea, and that ſhe hath been with me ſince my Con-
'demnation. I do declare, that ſuch Reports are falſe, and that I never 'was married to the ſaid Mrs. Sayer.

'As to what relates chiefly to myſelf, Time will not permit my ſaying
'ſo much as I intended. I hope that my Dying Words may make a deep
'and ſenſible Impreſſion on the Minds of ſuch Perſons as may read this 'Paper, that ſuch as are going on in a Courſe of Sin, may be awakened
'from their Lethargy, and deterred from the Continuance in, or Com-
'miſſion of any known Sin againſt the Living God; but more eſpecially
'thoſe who have been Partners with me in my Sins.

'I would not extenuate or palliate the Crime of Murder which I com'mitted: Therefore muſt ſay, that though the Fact was committed under
'the greateſt Surprize, and without any premeditated Malice, or Deſign,
'by removing him out of the World to have the freer Acceſs to his Wife,
'(which gave me reaſonable Hopes of my eſcaping the Juſtice of human 'Laws); yet I muſt own, that the Judgment of God, in bringing me to
'this deſerved and ſhameful Death is very juſt; and I do declare, that I ne-
'ver had, nor ever knew that Mrs. Saliſbury, Mrs. Sayer, and Mrs. Nevil, or 'any of them, had any Deſign to kill Mr. Sayer by Poiſon, or otherwiſe.

'I have ſecretly and wilfully committed many great and moſt heinous
'Sins againſt God, beſides that for which I am now to die. God ſuf-
'fered me to act thoſe Sins for ſeveral Years, without puniſhing me him-
'ſelf, or ſuffering me to fall under the Hand of human Laws. I had fre'quent Checks of Conſcience to recal and reſtrain me from committing
'further Sins; but I ſtifled or diverted thoſe good Thoughts, and con-
'tinued the Practice of my beloved Sins with Pleaſure.

'I indeed have made many Reſolutions to God of Repentance and
'Converſion, but ſoon broke through them, which is a great Aggrava-
'tion of my Offences; and thoſe Sins, and thoſe Aggravations undoubt-
'edly juſtly provoked God to ſuffer me to act that horrid Crime, for
'which I am now to die.

'I heartily beg Pardon of the Relations of the Deceaſed, for the Injury
'done them by the Murder of Mr. Sayer.

'I heartily beg Pardon of all others that I have injured by any ſecret
'or open Means.

'I heartily forgive every Perſon that has done me any Injury; eſpe-
'cially thoſe who ſtrained their Conſciences to affect me on my Trial. I
'pray God give them Grace to repent of thoſe and all other Sins; leſt
'by ſuch and other Provocations againſt God, they deſtroy both their Bo-
'dies and Souls.

'I have had very good Help and Inſtructions from ſome worthy *Di-
'vines*, and other good Chriſtians that have attended me ſince my Con-
'demnation; who have (I believe) done my Soul much Good, for 'which I am very thankful; and may God have the Glory by it, and
'they their due Reward.

'I have (ſince my Condemnation) occaſionally been under the utmoſt
'Diſorder and Perplexity, for having ſo many and ſuch great Sins to re-
'pent of in ſo ſhort a time; but as my Endeavours for a longer Time
'have proved ineffectual, ſo I hope that God Almighty will accept, in
'his great Mercy, that ſmall Space which he, in his wiſe Providence,
'hath thought fit to allow me.

'And whereas I have been told, that I was thought to be one of the
'Sect of the Free-Thinkers, I do utterly deny the ſame, and that I ever
'ſo much as read any Book publiſhed by the Free-Thinkers.

'Perhaps it may be obſerved, that this my Dying Speech is not ſo pa-
'thetical as that which I ſpoke when I received Sentence of Death.
'Then I was in hopes of preſerving my Life; but now, being ſatisfied
'to the contrary, my Thoughts are turned another way (to wit) to make
'my Peace with my Conſcience and my God.

'But as to the Truth of this my Dying Speech, I call God Almighty to
'witneſs, that I know not of the leaſt Falſity therein, as I hope for eter-
'nal Salvation.

March 27. 'RICHARD NOBLE.'

BEING under the Obligations uſual on thoſe, that receive Papers from Dying Perſons to be publiſhed, and having faithfully diſcharged our Truſt therein, we have found ſome other Reaſons to ſubjoin to it a further brief Relation of Mr. Noble's Behaviour and Conduct during the laſt Week of his Life, wherein we all frequently viſited him.

'So far as any or all of us could poſſibly diſcern, or collect from his
'many Anſwers and Declarations from his whole Diſcourſe, and the Te-
'nor of his conſtant Devotion, he repented from the Bottom of his Heart
'of the manifold and heinous Sins of his Life; that Crying Sin eſpecially
'for which he died.

'He profeſſed an unſhaken Belief of the Truth and Importance of the 'Chriſtian Religion, and a ſtedfaſt Faith in, and Reliance on the only
'atoning Merits of his Redeemer.

'He was deſirous, and reſolute to die in the Communion of the Church
'of England, and in perfect Charity with all the World; he appeared
'under a calm Reſignation to the Sovereign Will of God, and not with'out increaſing Hopes of Pardon, as his Death approached nearer; to the 'very Article of which his Diſpoſition was ſuch as himſelf had often 'prayed for.

'We pray to God, that theſe laſt Sentiments of his (who is cut off by the 'juſt Judgment both of God and Man, in the 28th Year of his Age) may 'have that happy and peculiar Effect, which (next to his own Salvation)
'he conſtantly had in view; the reclaiming thoſe in particular (we mean)
'who have at any time, or in any manner, been Partners or Aſſociates
'with him in Wickedneſs. We find this briefly hinted in his Paper;
'but we know, he thought on it frequently, and laboured much
'about it. We could produce Inſtances and Proofs of all we ſay: But 'we hope this general Account will ſuffice to anſwer the Importunity of
'ſome; and perhaps to ſilence the importunate Clamours of others, who 'have added very falſe, as well as needleſs Aggravations to his Guilt.'

March 30, 1713.

Thomas Cooke, Ordinary of Surrey and Curate of Kingſton.
John Broughton, M. A. Vicar of Kingſton.
F. Alex. L'Herondell, Chaplain to one of Her Majeſty's Regiments.

The following Caſe being reckoned curious, and a proper Addition to Mr. Noble's Motion in Arreſt of Judgment, is here inſerted.

The Caſe of Mr. Richard Noble impartially conſidered: Abſtractly from the Man, or Crime, but merely as to the Law, in relation to the Motion by him made, on Monday the 16*th Day of* March, 1712, at Kingſton Aſſizes, in Arreſt of Judgment: And the Reaſon given for over-ruling the ſame confuted. By a Student of the Inner-Temple.

RICHARD NOBLE, Gentleman, Mary Saliſbury, and Mary Sayer, Widow, were indicted; he, for the Murder of John Sayer, Eſq. on the 29th Day of January, Anno 11° Annæ Reginæ; Saliſbury, as preſent, aiding, aſſiſting, and abetting the ſame; and Mary Sayer, Widow of the Deceaſed, for Petty-Treaſon, as being preſent, aiding, aſſiſting, and abetting the Murder of her ſaid Huſband; and the ſaid Noble, on the Coroner's Inqueſt for the Murder of the ſaid John Sayer, and for Manſlaughter on the Statute of Stabbing: And on Thurſday the 12th Day of March, 1712, were ſe-verally arraigned, and ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and put themſelves on Trial, to which they were brought the next Morning; and on their Trial they ſeverally challenged of thoſe returned to ſerve upon the Jury, viz. Richard Noble 20, Mary Saliſbury 20, and Mary Sayer 35, peremptorily; after which a Jury was ſworn, and charged with them all jointly; and on a long Hearing found Richard Noble Guilty of the Facts in the Indictments, and alſo on the Coroner's Inqueſt; and found Mary Saliſbury and Mary Sayer Not Guilty.

Whereupon, on Monday following, the 19th of March, Richard Noble was ſet to the Bar, and demanded what he could ſay, why Judgment ſhould not be given, and Execution awarded? Upon which he moved in Arreſt of Judgment in theſe or the like Words:

My Lord, I humbly move in Arreſt of Judgment, for that I apprehend I have had a Miſ-Trial, and that my Trial has been contrary to the Law of England, in that we ſevered in our Challenges, and yet were tried together by the ſame Jury: And, to warrant this Opinion, I have in my Hand the Trial of Mr. Charnock, King, and Keys. There were, my Lord, then upon the Bench, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, the Lord Chief Juſtice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Juſtice Nevill, Mr. Juſtice Powell, and Mr. Juſtice Rokeby; and there the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, directing himſelf to the Priſoners, ſaid thus: "Look ye, you that are the Priſoners, every one of you has the Li- "berty to challenge Thirty-five of thoſe that are returned to ſerve upon "the Jury that is to try you, without ſhewing any Cauſe: Now, if you will "all join in the ſame Challenge, then we can try you all together as you "are altogether jointly in the ſame Indictment, and ſave the Time and "Trouble that will otherwiſe be unavoidable; but if you will not join in "the ſame Challenge, but every Man challenge for himſelf, as by Law he "has Liberty to do, we muſt be forced to try you ſingle; and therefore "we would know of you, whether you deſign to join in your Challenges "or not." State Trials, Vol. IV. p. 566.

And in the ſame Page, "I tell you, what the Law is in ſuch Caſes; "you may, every Man of you, challenge Thirty-five peremptorily, with- "out Cauſe; but if you do not all agree in the ſame Challenges, ye can- "not be tried together by the ſame Jury, but the Court muſt ſeparate "you, and try you every one ſingle."

And again, "Do you underſtand what is ſaid to you, Mr. King and "Mr. Keys? Every one of you may, without ſhewing any Cauſe, except "againſt Thirty-five of thoſe that are returned of the Jury, which are to "try you, if you have no mind that thoſe ſhould be ſworn; but then, "if each of you do ſeverally challenge Thirty-five, ye cannot be tried by "the ſame Jury."

And there is a Caſe to the ſame purpoſe in one of the Year-Books, I think it is in 9 E. IV. fol. 27, but deſire that my Counſel may ſpeak to it.

This is the Subſtance of what Mr. Noble then ſaid; upon which, being aſked who were his Counſel? He anſwered, Mr. Darnall and Mr. Bonwick, who were by the Court readily aſſigned to be his Counſel; but (for what reaſon I cannot well apprehend) could neither of them be prevailed on to ſpeak to it.

So that although it was agreed and allowed, that the Words were as full and clear as they could be penned, the Court ſoon over-ruled the Motion, alledging, That the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's Reaſon in the Caſe of Charnock, King, and Keys, was, that in caſe each of them ſeverally challenged Thirty-five, three times Thirty-five would amount to One Hundred and Five, and then they muſt have been obliged to ſever them (as the Court were near obliged to have done in the preſent Caſe) for Default of Jurors; And Mr. Noble, after a Speech by him, tending to obtain a ſhort Reprieve, had Judgment given againſt him.

I have, as carefully as I could, fairly and indifferently ſtated the Caſe, and ſhall now proceed to conſider it as briefly as poſſible.

Challenge of a Juror is an undoubted Right of the Subject, and was at the Common Law; and therefore, it is to be preſumed, to have been as ancient as Trial by Juror, and was unqueſtionably at firſt allowed in favorem Vitæ, and to give the Priſoner an Opportunity, as it were, to chuſe his Jury, ſo as he exceed not the Number preſcribed by the Law: And, conſequently, I take it, at the Common Law, every Man, of right, might and ſtill may, the ſame having been altered by no Statute that I can find, as to a Commoner, demand to be tried ſingle, although jointly indicted in the ſame Indictment with others; and that for theſe Reaſons, among others:

Firſt, For that in caſe an innocent Perſon ſhould unhappily be indicted with a Criminal, it might be a means to prevent the Jury, from the Evidence given againſt the Criminal, to be inveigled or drawn aſide, to give too hard a Verdict on the Guiltleſs.

Secondly, For that when a Pannel is returned, the Priſoner (who, as was ſaid before, may in a manner chuſe his Jury) will otherwiſe be deprived of that Right: As if two or three are indicted, and the firſt perceive that in the Beginning of the Pannel there are ſuch returned, as he has great reaſon to ſuſpect are partial, but by challenging has a Proſpect to bring himſelf to thoſe in the Pannel, which he has reaſon to apprehend are indifferent; if, when he has challenged the Number the Law allows him, and his Hands, as it were, tied up, the other indicted with him ſhall come in and take off all thoſe indifferent Men, and ſo leave him over to thoſe he had as much (or more) reaſon to ſuſpect as thoſe he had before challenged; which is a Miſchief, and that the Law abhors, for the Juror returned may have Malice to one, and be indifferent as to the other; and ſo is the 9 E. IV. fol. 27. and the Plaintiff or Proſecutor no ways prejudiced, for he might have ſued ſeveral ven. fac. and thereby have been aided. And ſo is the Book expreſly.

Thirdly, For that the Court cannot accept of a joint Plea, nor receive a joint Verdict; but the Plea of Not Guilty, although it be the General Iſſue, yet in its Nature and Effect is Several.

And ſo in Treſpaſs againſt Several; they may every one come and plead ſeveral Pleas by ſeveral Attornies, and have ſeveral Trials: And reaſonable, for otherwiſe a Plaintiff might join one in the Action, who could oblige all the others to ſtand or fall by his Confeſſion, Defence, or Plea. And as in Treſpaſs they may ſever in their Pleas, ſo in Treaſon or Felony Not Guilty is a ſeveral Plea, nay, and amounts to a Special Plea; and the Priſoners, or any of them, ſhall have the ſame Advantages, as if he or they had pleaded ſpecially to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever. Dr. & St. cap. 48. fol. 150, 151, 152.

From whence I argue, That it is the Right of every Subject to demand and have a ſeparate Trial, in criminal Caſes, if ſo he be minded. For,

If Three are indicted of Felony, one challenges whole Number Twenty, and thoſe Twenty are to be drawn, that is, ſet aſide and not ſuffered to paſs upon the other; and the ſecond challenge Twenty, thoſe are to be drawn or ſet aſide in like manner; and the third challenge likewiſe Twenty, who muſt by the ſame Rule be likewiſe drawn or ſet aſide, as to all; this will amount to Sixty challenged by the firſt; and as the firſt and ſecond Priſoners have the Benefit of the Challenges of the third, ſo has the third the Benefit of theirs. This tantamounts to a Challenge of Sixty by each, and thereby endangers their being preſſed or hanged for challenging above the Number preſcribed by the Law; which the Court is by no means to ſuffer.

An Appeal againſt Beauchamp, and ſeveral others, who plead Not Guilty, and one ven. fac. for all iſſued return, &c. at which Day one of the Defendants challenge a Juror peremptorily, and the other Defendants ſay nothing, the Juror ſhall be ſworn againſt them, and the Reaſon there given is, for that otherwiſe they might be delayed of their Acquittal for ever; a Miſchief, Inconvenience, and Wrong: And therefore the Book goes on, and ſays, If Covin be between me and two others, that I bring an Appeal againſt them and another, to the end the other ſhall be detained in Priſon, &c. in that Caſe, if I have a joint ven. fac. &c. and one challenge peremptorily; and if he remain for default of Jurors, then at another Day may the other do in the ſame manner; and then, when they have taken their peremptory Challenges, ſtill one of them may challenge with Cauſe, and I will commit this Challenge, &c. and ſo the Three ſhall remain in Priſon for ever. If the Challenge of one ſhall be for all, &c. And the Doubt there was, Whether the Court could ſever them, it being in an Appeal, and the ven. fac. joint? And by all the Juſtices of the one Bench, and the other, it was held, That becauſe the ven. fac. was joint, the Challenge of the one is for all, for that he could not be drawn as to one, and taken againſt the other; and the Plaintiff ought to have had ſeveral ven. fac.

And afterwards the Plaintiff challenged the Array, which was quaſhed; and the Plaintiff prayed ſeveral ven. fac. againſt every one of them to the Coroners; which, by Juſtice Jenny, he could not have in that Caſe, for this reaſon only, becauſe the Plaintiff had elected to have a joint ven. fac. The Plaintiff notwithſtanding prayed to have ſeveral ven. fac. at their Peril. Which plainly ſhews, that the Law was againſt them as to the other. 9 E. IV. fol. 27.

And it was there ſaid, That at a Gaol-Delivery, if an Inqueſt be demanded to paſs upon two or three Men, and one challenge peremptorily, then the Clerk ought to ſever the Felons, every one by himſelf. And there ſeemed to be a Diſference (and ſo is the Book) where there are ſeveral Plaintiffs, &c. becauſe if a Man be found favourable to one, he is favourable to both, for that their Title is joint: But otherwiſe it is of Defendants, where a Man may have Favour or Malice to one, or not; or be indifferent to the other. 9 E. IV. fol. 27.

Appeal againſt the Principal and Acceſſary, who plead Not Guilty, and the Acceſſary challenge the Array, and the Principal ſaid nothing; and becauſe the Array was quaſhed on his Challenge, Hankford would not take the Inqueſt againſt the other; and the Reaſon was, becauſe the ven. fac. was joint, and the Plaintiff might have had ſeveral ven. fac. 4 H. IV. 58.

And in Banco Reg. Thimelby and Gray were arraigned on an Indictment of Robbery, as Principals, who ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and ſeverally put themſelves upon their Country; upon which a ven. fac. was returned this Term, and the Jury appeared, and Three of the Jury were ſworn againſt both, and Thimelby challenged the four next without Cauſe, or without ſaying peremptorily; and Gray would not challenge them, for which Thimelby was withdrawn from the Bar; and the Four who were challenged by Thimelby were ſworn againſt Gray, and ſo many more, till Twelve were charged on him, who found him Guilty: And Saunders moved, Whether this was a right Trial or not? For that there was but one ven. fac. awarded, nor but one Pannel returned; and one Juror cannot be drawn out of the Pannel, and in the ſame Pannel be allowed: But by the Opinion of all the Juſtices of both Benches, the Trial was good, for that no Judgment was given, that the Jurors that were challenged by the one ſhould be drawn, but, that they ſhould ſtand aſide for a time; and were not clearly diſcharged by the Court; and for that the ven. fac. for the King differ from ven. fac. in an Appeal. Dyer, fol. 152, pl. 8.

And although in 1 H. V. 10. it is ruled by the Opinion of the Court, that a Juror on Indictment may be challenged by one of the Defendants, and ſtand againſt the other, &c. that is, it is no Principal Cauſe of Challenge in one Defendant to ſay the other Defendant had before challenged him. And ſo is the Book to be taken, and the Law is agreeable thereto, and the Reaſon there given fully explains it ſo to be intended, viz. for that they are ſeveral Pannels and Inqueſts in Law; and therefore, if one Defendant had appeared on an Indictment, and the other Defendant had made Default, yet the Court would have proceeded againſt him who appeared, although it may be otherwiſe in an Appeal.

Which plainly proves the Court ought to ſever the Priſoners on Indictment, where they will not join in their Challenges.

And in the Trial of the Regicides; Harriſon, Scroop, Jones, Clements and Scot were ſet to the Bar to be tried, and Sir Thomas Allen was called and ſworn; then Sir Joſhua Aſh was called, and Mr. Scroop excepted againſt him: then Sir Jeremy Whichcot was called, and Mr. Harriſon excepted againſt him; James Halley, Eſq. being next to be ſworn, Mr. Scot excepted againſt him: Whereupon the Court (ſpeaking to the Priſoners) ſaid, "If you will not agree in your Challenges, we muſt be forced to try "you ſeverally." And Henry Mildmay, Eſq. being called next, Mr. Scroop excepted againſt him: Whereupon the Court ſaid, "We muſt needs try "them ſeverally, therefore ſet them all aſide but Harriſon." Which was done, and the ſeveral Perſons which before had been called and excepted againſt, were again called, and excepted againſt by Mr. Harriſon. Trial of the Regicides, State Trials, Vol. II. p. 313. And ſo in Mr. Scroop's Trial.

Jones, Scroop, Scot, Gregory, Clements, and Carew being ſet to the Bar, Sir Thomas Allen was called, and his Hand being on the Book, Scroop challenged him; and thereupon the Lord Chief Baron ſpoke thus to the Priſoners: "That you may not miſtake, if you challenge in "this manner, and do not join in your Challenges, we muſt try you "ſeverally, one after another: I muſt tell you the Courſe of the Law; "if one Challenge one, and another challenge another, we muſt ſever, "and go to Trial one by one. Call the next." The Clerk called Sir Henry

Henry Worth, and Scroop challenged him; upon which the Lord Chief-Baron replied, "Then we muſt go on ſeverally, ſet all aſide but Mr. "Scroop." And directing himſelf to Mr. Scroop, ſaid farther, "Mr. "Scroop, you may challenge particularly whom you will, till you come "to Thirty-five; if you go beyond that Number, you will loſe the Be-"nefit of the Law."

And in that of Carew, Scot, Jones, and Clements: They being at the Bar, the Lord Chief-Baron demanded of the Priſoners, Whether they were all agreed as to their Challenges? Who anſwered, No. "Then "(ſaid the Lord Chief-Baron) we muſt do as before, ſever you, and go "to Trial ſeverally:" And directed, that the Three ſhould be taken away, and that Mr. Carew ſhould be let ſtand at the Bar.

And indeed, through the whole Courſe of the Proceedings on the Trial of the Regicides, the Court took great Care of the ſeveral Priſoners, that none of them might be any ways prejudiced, either by challenging too many (viz. more than the Law allows) of the Jury, or any other Forms of Law, as a Matter perfectly incumbent on the Court to obſerve, take care of, and prevent.

And now I beg Leave to obſerve, that the Reaſon the Court gave in Noble's Caſe, was not that the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt grounded his Opinion on; for that in Fol. 1. of Charnock's Trial, it appears that above eight-ſcore were by the Sheriff returned to ſerve on that Jury, conſiſting of Baronets, Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlemen; ſo that it plainly appears (they having been called over, ſitting the Court) that in caſe each of the Priſoners had challenged Thirty-five, amounting to One Hundred and Five in all; yet would there have been a ſufficient Number of Jurors, to wit, above Fifty-five, left to have paſſed upon, and tried the Priſoners.

And the Words of the Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt in Mr. Charnock's Trial, "We can try you all together, as ye are all together jointly in the ſame "Indictment, and ſave the Time and Trouble, that will otherwiſe be "unavoidable; but if you will not join in the ſame Challenges, but every "Man challenge for himſelf, as by Law he has Liberty to do, we muſt "be forced to try you ſingle, and therefore, &c." can bear no other Conſtruction, for the Word unavoidable is, what muſt happen or come to paſs, notwithſtanding any Accident or intervening Circumſtances or Conjuncture whatſoever: And, in that Senſe, I make no Queſtion, his Lordſhip ſpoke them; for otherwiſe, ſeveral other Expreſſions, no Doubt, would have occurred, and been uſed by his Lordſhip, as it might be neceſſary, and the like.

The often Repetition of the ſame Thing, has alſo a great Weight to enforce this Obſervation.

And this Reaſon clearly to me appears, to be the Foundation of the Caſe in the Commentaries, that though the Pannel be joint on Indictment, and Tales awarded, yet the Court (who are ever to be of Counſel for the Priſoners, to give them Law and Juſtice, 2 Inſt. 178, and not permit any Inconvenience to happen to them in Forms of Law, Trial of Charnock & al. 7. Dr. & St. c. 48. p. 150, 1, 2.) may and (as I humbly apprehend) ought, in caſe the Priſoners ſever in their challenges, to ſever the Pannel, and prevent not only the Inconvenience in that Caſe mentioned, but many other. Plow. Com. 100, 101. H. P. C. fol. 256. Octavo Edition.

And this is the more to be relyed on, for that in an Appeal againſt one Woodlack, the Defendant took ſo many Challenges, that the Jury remained againſt the Defendant, by Default of Jurors, and reſolved, that in an Appeal of Murder, Rape, or Felony, there may be had a larger Number than the principal Pannel returned immediate, viz. what Number the Juſtices pleaſe to award, in regard the Defendants may challenge peremptorily; and therefore the Juſtices award a Tales of 40. 14 H. VII. fol. 716. tit. Appeal. And ſo of an Indictment. Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 257, 8*vo.*——Finch's Law, c. 36. fo. 415. and that the Stat. W. II. c. 38. does not extend to Criminal Caſes or Indictments. Vane's Caſe, Kelyng 7. 16.

And the Practice has conſtantly been, and was ſo reſolved at the Reſtoration, by a great Number of Juſtices, upon mature Deliberation, That if ſeveral Priſoners be put upon one Jury, and they challenge peremptorily, and ſever in their Challenges, that then he who is challenged by one is to be drawn againſt all, becauſe the Pannel being joint, one Juror cannot be drawn againſt one, and ſerve for another; but in ſuch Caſe the Pannel might be ſevered, and that the ſame Jury may be returned between the King and every one of the Priſoners, and then they are to be tried ſeverally, and there the Challenge of one Priſoner is no Challenge to diſable the Juror ſo challenged againſt another. And the Caſe of Dr. Ellis's Servant, Plow. Com. 100, 101. was agreed to be good Law, as to the ſevering the Pannels in that Caſe. And accordingly, in the Trial of Harriſon, Scroop, Carew, and other the Regicides, who challenged peremptorily, and ſevered in their Challenges, the Pannels were ſevered, and they were tried ſeverally. Kelyng's Reports, fo. 9, 10. State Trials of the Regicides, Vol. II. p. 308, &c.

And throughout all the Books there appears to be no Diſpute, but that where the Priſoners on Indictment challenge ſeverally, the Court ought to ſever them in their Trials. But it plainly appears, the only Queſtion was, How, or in what Manner that was to be done, the ven. fac. and Pannel being joint? But that Objection being once removed, the Law is plain, That the Trials in all ſuch Caſes are to be ſevered, or the Priſoners cannot legally be tried at all.

And therefore I humbly ſubmit it to the Judgment of the Learned in the Law, whether, in the principal Caſe, (not as to the Fact, which I pretend no ways to meddle with) although Judgment has paſſed on the Priſoner Noble, yet he having before Sentence moved this Matter in Arreſt of Judgment, and likewiſe, as I have been credibly informed, (my coming into Court being juſt after that was over-ruled) having deſired and earneſtly preſſed to be tried ſeparately and apart from the other two, there be not Room to reſpite Execution till the Point be ſettled, and Conſideration had what may be neceſſary farther to be done therein. And the rather, for that in the Caſe of Hopkin Hugget, on a ſpecial Verdict found at a Gaol-Delivery at Newgate, 25 April, 1666, 18 Car. II. on an Indictment of Murder, to this Effect: That John Berry, and two others with him the Day and Place, &c. had de facto, but without Warrant (for aught appeared) impreſt a Man, unknown, to ſerve in the Wars againſt the Dutch Nation; that thereupon, after the unknown Man was impreſt, he, with the ſaid John Berry, went together quietly into Cloth-Fair; and the ſaid Hopkin Hugget and three others walking together in the Rounds in Smithfield, and ſeeing the ſaid Berry and two others, with the Man impreſt, going into Cloth-Fair; inſtantly purſued after them, and overtaking Berry and the impreſt Man, and the two other Men, required to ſee their Warrant, and Berry ſhewed them a Paper, which Hopkin Hugget and the three others ſaid was no Warrant; and immediately the ſaid Hopkin Hugget and the three others drew their Swords, to reſcue the ſaid Man impreſt, and did thruſt at the ſaid John Berry, and thereupon the ſaid John Berry, and the two others with him, did draw their Swords and fight together, whereupon the ſaid Hopkin Hugget did give the Wound, &c. to the ſaid John Berry, whereof he inſtantly died: And if upon the whole Matter the ſaid Hopkin Hugget be guilty of Murder, they find ſo; if of Manſlaughter, they find ſo, &c. And afterwards the Opinion of all the Judges of England, met at Serjeants-Inn, in Fleet-Street, being deſired in the Caſe, (having had Copies of this Special Verdict ſent to them) whether they held it Murder or Manſlaughter? And there being a Difference in their Opinions, viz. the Lord Chief-Juſtice Bridgman, Lord Chief-Baron Hales, Mr. Juſtice Atkins, Tyrell, Turner, Brown, Archer, and Rainsford, were of Opinion as then adviſed, but not to be bound by it, that it was no Murder, but only Manſlaughter; and gave ſome Reaſons to ſupport their Opinions: But the Lord Chief-Juſtice Kelyng, Mr. Juſtice Twiſden, Wyndham, and Morton, were of another Opinion, and held it to be Murder, and gave their Reaſons for it: After which Difference the Lord Chief-Juſtice Kelyng granted a Certiorari, to remove the Cauſe into the then King's-Bench, to be argued there, and to receive a final and legal Determination. And although all the Judges of the Court were clearly of Opinion it was Murder, yet it being in a Caſe of Life, they did not think it prudent to give Judgment of Death upon him, but admitted him to his Clergy. Kelyng's Reports, fo. 59, 60, 1, 2.

So very tender were the Judges in the Caſe of Life, not only well to be adviſed, but even againſt their own Opinions, and that when they were very clear in it, to give Judgment in Favour of Life, although in a Caſe of Murder.

II. The Trial of Major John Oneby, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, before the Right Honourable Sir Francis Forbes, Knt. Lord-Mayor of London, Mr. Baron Hale, Sir William Thompson, Knt. Recorder of London, and others his Majeſty's Juſtices, March 1725-6, for the Murder of William Gower, Eſq.

"JOHN Oneby, of St. Martin's in the Fields, Gent. was indicted, for "that he, on the 2d Day of February, 12 Geo. at the ſaid Pariſh, "felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice fore-thought, "made an Aſſault upon one William Gower, Eſq. and that he the ſaid "John Oneby, with a Sword which he then and there held drawn in his "Right Hand, the ſaid William Gower in and upon the left Part of his "Belly, near the Navel, felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice "forethought, did ſtrike and thruſt, giving the ſaid William Gower, then "and there, with the ſaid drawn Sword, in and upon his ſaid left Part of "his Belly, near the Navel, a mortal Wound of the Length of one Inch "and a half, and of the Depth of ten Inches; of which mortal Wound "the ſaid William Gower lived in a languiſhing Condition, from the 2d "Day of February to the 3d Day of the ſaid February; on which 3d Day "of February, the ſaid William Gower, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, of the ſaid "mortal Wound did die; and that the ſaid John Oneby, the ſaid William "Gower felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice fore-thought, did "kill and murder."

He was a ſecond Time indicted, on the Coroner's Inquiſition, for the ſaid Murder.

Thomas Hawkins. On the 2d of February, between Nine and Ten at Night, Mr. Blunt, the Deceaſed, the Priſoner and myſelf, went from Hill's Coffee-Houſe to the Caſtle-Tavern in Drury-Lane, where, in about half an Hour, Mr. Rich came to us. After the fourth Bottle, the Priſoner called for a Box and Dice; the Drawer ſaid, they had none in the Houſe, Why then, ſays the Priſoner, bring the Pepper-Box. The Drawer brought it, and Dice were laid upon the Table: but I don't know by whom. We played low, nobody ſetting above half a Guinea, and yet I had no great Inclination to game, and eſpecially to ſet the Priſoner; and therefore, after a trifling Loſs I declined the Play. The Priſoner appeared diſguſted at it, and aſked me, why I refuſed? I told him I ſhould uſe my own Pleaſure, whether it was agreeable to his Humour or not. The Reſt continued playing. The Deceaſed loſt 30*s.* Mr. Rich ſaid, Who will ſet me three Half-Crowns? Upon which the Deceaſed took ſomething out of his Pocket, and laid it on the Table, but concealed it with his Hand, and ſaid, I'll ſet ye three Pieces; and then taking his Hand away, we ſaw three Half-pence. This was not offered to the Priſoner; but he appeared to be much affronted. He ſaid, That is very impertinent to ſet three Half-pence. The Deceaſed ſaid, What do you mean by impertinent? And the Priſoner replied, You are an impertinent Puppy; and preſently ſnatched up a Bottle, and threw it at the Deceaſed's Head, and it beat ſome Powder out of his Wig, but did him no Hurt. He in Return, toſſed a Glaſs or a Candleſtick, I can't tell which, at the Priſoner; but it did not reach him. They both roſe up together, and went to their Swords, which hung up in the Room. The Deceaſed being quickeſt got his Sword firſt, and drew it, and ſtood ſtill in a Poſture of Defence, at a good Diſtance from the the Priſoner, who was advancing, and was drawing his Sword to meet him; but Mr. Rich ſtept in between, and prevented him. Then the Deceaſed threw away his Sword, and they all ſat down again, and drank for about half an Hour; when the Deceaſed offering his Hand to the Priſoner, ſaid, We have had Words, Major, and you was the Aggreſſor; but let us agree. The Priſoner anſwered, No, damn ye! I'll have your Blood! And then turning to me, he ſaid, Hawkins, you was the Occaſion of this. Why then, ſays I, if ye have done with him, and have any thing to ſay to me, I am your Man, and I'll ſee you out. No, ſays he, I have another Chap firſt. In about half an Hour after this, which was near Three in the Morning, the Company broke up. I went out of the Room firſt, and Mr. Blunt, and Mr. Rich were next after me. When I came into the Street it rained, and I run under a Penthouſe, where I ſtood a little while; but not having a Chair ready, and ſeeing none of the Company come out, I returned to the Room, where I found the Deceaſed wounded, and leaning on a Chair in a languiſhing Condition. He died the next Morning. I knew him intimately, and I don't believe that there was a ſweeter temper'd Man in the World.

John Rich. I, the Priſoner, the Deceaſed, and ſome others, went together to ſee the new Tragedy of Hecuba; we ſat in the Pit. The Deceaſed and the Priſoner appeared to be good Friends all the Time of the Play; and as ſoon as it was done I left them; but met them again at the Caſtle Tavern in about half an Hour. The Priſoner and I called for a Box and Dice; which not being to be had, he called for a Pepper-Box, and it was brought; I ſaw Dice lying upon the Table, but don't know how they came there. I ſaid, let us play low. Some Words paſt between the Priſoner and Mr. Hawkins. I laid down three Half-Crowns. The Major ſet me. I threw. Seven was the Main, and Six the Chance. The Deceaſed put down three Half-pence againſt me, and ſaid, Here, I'll ſet ye three Pieces. The Priſoner damned him, and called him an impertinent Puppy. Sir, ſaid the Deceaſed, I am not afraid of ye, and he that calls me a Puppy is a Scoundrel. At theſe Words, the Priſoner threw a Bottle at him. It bruſhed his Wig as it paſſed, and he in return toſſed a Glaſs. They both got up together; but the Deceaſed being nimbleſt, jumped on the Table, and reached his Sword firſt; and then ſtepping down, he drew, and ſtood ready to defend himſelf, but made no Offer to puſh. In the mean time, the Priſoner took down his Sword and Cane, which hung together; and there being the Table and a Chair between them, he came round the Table, and was going to engage with the Deceaſed; but I ſtept between them, told the Priſoner, who was drawing his Sword, if he made a Longe, it muſt be through my Body, which, as I was unarmed, would be wilful Murder. The Deceaſed then threw away his Sword, and they both ſat down again. The Deceaſed put his Hand forward, and ſaid, Come, Major, let us be reconciled, Words in Heat may be forgot and forgiven. The Priſoner anſwered, God damn you, you lie—I'll have your Blood, by God! And then, turning to Mr. Hawkins, he ſaid, This is all along of you. Mr. Hawkins anſwered, Then I am your Man; and the Priſoner replied, No, I have another Chap to deal with firſt. When we all got up to go, the Priſoner hung his great Rug-Coat upon his Shoulders, and I think buttoned it in one or two Places. Mr. Hawkins went out firſt, Mr. Blunt next, the Deceaſed followed him; I, the Deceaſed, and the Priſoner came laſt: but he was hardly out of the Room, when he called to the Deceaſed, Hark ye, young Gentleman, a Word wi' ye. The Deceaſed turned back, they both re-entered the Room. The Door was immediately ſhut faſt. I heard a Claſhing of Swords, and a loud Stamp on the Floor, which I gueſſed was made by the Priſoner, he being a very heavy Man. Mr. Blunt and I ſtept back, and endeavoured to get in; we could not readily open the Door; but the Drawer coming to our Aſſiſtance, we made an Entrance, Mr. Blunt firſt, and I cloſe behind him. The Priſoner was then next to the Door, and ſtanding with his Sword drawn in his Right Hand, the Point of it being towards the Deceaſed, whom he held by the Shoulder with his Left Hand. I think the Deceaſed had then no Sword in his Hand, at leaſt I ſaw none; and I ſoon afterwards found it cloſe to the Wainſcot, behind the Folding of the great oval Table. It was bloody and greaſy four or five Inches from the Point. The Deceaſed cloſed with the Priſoner; but in ſuch a manner, as if he rather fell towards him through Weakneſs, than otherwiſe, which makes me think the Wound was given him before we came in. We put him into a Chair, and ſent for a Surgeon. As I held up my Hand to part them, I felt a little Prick through my Coat, by the Priſoner's Sword; but I believe it was done accidentally. Mr. Blunt at the ſame time clapt his Hand on his Belly, and ſaid he was dangerouſly wounded; but I am ignorant by what Means. I told the Priſoner, when we came out of the Room, that I was afraid he had killed the Deceaſed, No, ſays he, I might have done it, if I would; but I have only frighted him. But ſuppoſe I had killed him, I know what I do in thoſe Affairs; for if I had killed him To-night, in the Heat of Paſſion, I ſhould have had the Law on my Side; but if I had done it at any other Time, it would have looked like a ſet Meeting, and not a Rencounter. I adviſed him however to make off, for fear of the worſt.——I aſked the Deceaſed on his Death-Bed, if he received the Wound fairly? He anſwered faintly, I think I did—but—I don't know—what might have happened —if you—had not—come in.

Michael Blunt. From the Play we went to Will's, and thence to the Caſtle, where we were very merry and friendly, till the Dice were called for. We played low, but Mr. Hawkins ſoon declined; upon which the Priſoner ſaid to him, Why do you come into Company, when you won't do as others do? Mr. Hawkins anſwered, Don't trouble yourſelf about me, I'll do as I pleaſe.—The Deceaſed ſet three Half-pence: the Priſoner ſaid it was damned impertinent; and ſome other Words paſſing, he flung a Flaſk at the Deceaſed, who in return toſſed a Glaſs or a Candleſtick. They took their Swords, but were prevented from engaging, and ſo they ſat down again; the Deceaſed offered his Hand to be reconciled, upon which the Priſoner gave him very ill Language, and ſwore he would have his Blood. As this made me apprehenſive that their Quarrel would break out again the next Day, I invited the Company to dine with me, in hopes to bring on a Reconciliation, and prevent future Miſchief. The Priſoner anſwered my Offer with, No, G---d damn ye, I'll dine with none of ye. Are ye angry, Sir, ſays I, Have ye any thing to ſay to me?—Or me? ſays Mr. Hawkins.—Or me? ſays Mr. Rich.—No, he had nothing to ſay to any of us.—This was about Two or Three in the Morning. And after we were all come out of the Room, I heard the Priſoner call the Deceaſed back; and they were no ſooner got into the Room again, but the Door was flung to, with great Violence, and I heard the Claſhing of Swords. When I got in, which was with much Difficulty, I did not ſee that the Deceaſed had any Sword in his Hand, but he was ſinking forward; and I, by going to aſſiſt him, received a Wound in my Belly, which I was afraid was mortal; but I cannot tell how, or by whom it was given, though I think it could not be by the Deceaſed, becauſe he had no Sword; and beſides, was not in a Condition to do it.—A Surgeon being in the Houſe, gave me his immediate aſſiſtance.

Mr. Shaw, the Surgeon. I found the Deceaſed languiſhing in a Chair. His Inteſtines appeared at the Wound, and by being expoſed to the Air began to mortify. When I had dreſſed him I ſent him Home; but the next Day I found a ſecond Rupture of the Inteſtines. He died ſoon after; and that Wound was the Cauſe of his Death.

Priſoner. A Wager was laid betwixt Mr. Rich and Mr. Blunt, concerning Mr. Mills's acting the Part of Cæſar in the Play of Julius Cæſar, and it was loſt by Mr. Blunt. After this a Box and Dice were called for, but not by me; the Drawer ſaid he had Dice, but no Box; upon which, ſomebody called for a Pepper-Box. I flung a Main at 12*d.* and paſſed it about. Mr. Hawkins refuſing, I ſaid, I thought there was as good Fellowſhip in a little Play, as in altogether Drinking: Then we played for Half-a-Crown or three Shillings; and when the Box came round again, the reſt likewiſe refuſed to play; at laſt, the Deceaſed offered to ſet three Half-pence, which I ſaid was very impertinent. He called me Raſcal; You impertinent Puppy, ſays I, what do you mean by that? Upon which, he threw a Glaſs at my Head, and drew upon me. I told him, he acted baſely in drawing upon me, when it was he that gave the Affront. After this I put on my Great Coat, and was going out. Mr. Hawkins had ſlipt away, and the reſt being gone out of the Room, the Deceaſed puſhed the Door to, and drew upon me, and wounded me in the Knee, and cut my Fingers. I parried and cloſed with him; he endeavoured to ſtab me in the Back; at which Time Mr. Blunt came in, and received a Wound in his Belly, which muſt have been by the Deceaſed's Sword.

John Barnes, the Drawer. I threw the Priſoner's Great Coat over his Shoulders, as he was going out. Mr. Hawkins came out firſt, and aſked if his Chair was at the Door? I ſaid, Yes. Mr. Blunt followed, and I went down to unbar the Door; the reſt of the Company not coming, I went back and met Mr. Rich; he bid me open the Door; I thought he meant the Street-Door, and was turning that Way again; but he ſwore at me, and told me the other Door: I opened it, and went in firſt, and the Deceaſed and the Priſoner were both with their Swords in their Hands, pointing towards each other. The Deceaſed cloſed with the Priſoner in a manner as if he was rather falling than puſhing; and the Priſoner with his Left Hand had hold of the Deceaſed, who, as ſoon as we parted them, was ſo weak that he could not ſtand. I did not ſee him bleeding when I came into the Room, though I cried out to the Priſoner, For God's Sake what are ye doing?

Priſoner. Did not you ſee the Deceaſed offer to ſtab me in the Back?

Barnes. No.

Mr. Burdet, a Surgeon. The next Day in the Evening, the Priſoner ſent a Coach to my Houſe with a Letter for me, informing me that he had been wounded in a Rencounter, and deſiring me to come to him. I went, and found him in Bed at the Houſe of Mrs. Gardiner in Dean-Street, near Red-Lion-Square, where he had concealed himſelf. He had one Wound below his Knee an Inch and half long, another on his Buttock, two of his Fingers were cut in the firſt Joint, and he ſhewed me three or four Holes in his Breeches; but none of his Wounds were above a Quarter of an Inch deep, and that in his Leg had but juſt raiſed the Skin.

Mrs. Gardiner. The Priſoner came to my Houſe about Two o'Clock in the Morning: He was bloody, and upon ſearching him, I found a Wound in his Buttock as deep as my Finger, and I dreſſed it for him.

Court. The Evidence is plain, that the Priſoner gave the firſt Provocation; and it is not denied, that he afterwards killed the Deceaſed. The Queſtion is, Whether from the Time the Priſoner threw the Bottle, to the Time the Deceaſed received the Wound, there was any Reconciliation? If there was not, I think it can be no leſs than Murder.

The Jury found there was no Reconciliation; but not being ſatisfied as to the Murder, they agreed upon a Special Verdict.

The Counſel on both Sides attending, they ſtated the principal Points of the Evidence for the Conſideration of the Judges.

What the Priſoner's Counſel drew up, was to this Effect:

" We find that the Priſoner, the Deceaſed, and Three more met at the " Tavern, where they all appeared very friendly.---A Box and Dice were " called for,---they played ſome Time together, till Mr. Rich ſaid, Who " will ſet me three Half-Crowns?---The Deceaſed put down three Half- " pence, and ſaid, I'll ſet ye three Pieces.—The Priſoner ſaid, That's im- " pertinent---The Deceaſed anſwered, He that ſays I am impertinent, is a " Raſcal.---The Priſoner threw a Bottle, and the Deceaſed threw a Glaſs. " ---They both got up, and took their Swords; but one of the Company " ſtepped in, and prevented their engaging.---They ſat down again to " drink,---ſtaid about an Hour, and then the Company broke up.---The " Priſoner put on his Great Coat---They all went out of the Room.--- " The Priſoner and the Deceaſed returned, the Door was ſhut, and the " Claſhing of Swords was heard."

The Counſel for the King ſtated the Evidence to the following Purpoſe:

" We find, that on the 2d of February the Priſoner, the Deceaſed, " and Three others were in Company at the Caſtle Tavern, and continued " in a peaceable manner for about two Hours.---The Priſoner then called " for a Box and Dice; but none being to be had, he called for the Pepper- " Box, which was brought.---Dice were found upon the Table;---they " played at Hazard.------Mr. Rich aſked, who would ſet him three " Half-Crowns? The Deceaſed in a jocular manner laid down three " Half-pence, and ſaid, There's three Pieces---The Priſoner called him " an impertinent Puppy, and threw a Bottle at him, which miſſed him, " but bruſhed his Wig ---The Deceaſed toſſed a Glaſs or Candleſtick at " the Priſoner, which did not hit him.---They both roſe up, and took their " Swords; but were prevented from fighting.---They ſat down again.---

The

" The Deceased offered to be Friends with the Prisoner; but the Prisoner " answered, No, God damn ye! I'll have your Blood, by God!—In about " an Hour after this, the Company all went out of the Room; but the " Prisoner called to the Deceased, and said, Young Gentleman, a Word " with ye.—They both returned into the Room,—the Door was shut with " Violence, and the Clashing of Swords was heard.—We find that from " the Time that the Bottle was flung, to the Time of the breaking up of " the Company, there was no Reconciliation."

These two rough Draughts being compared, and some Alterations being made, a third was drawn up, which was agreed to and signed by the Jury, and was to this Tenor.

Special Verdict.

" That upon the 2d Day of February, 1725, the Prisoner and the De- " ceased were in Company, together with John Rich, Thomas Hawkins " and Michael Blunt, in a Room at the Castle Tavern in Drury-Lane, in " the County of Middlesex, in a friendly manner. That after they had " continued thus for two Hours, Box and Dice were called for; the " Drawer said, he had Dice but no Box; and thereupon the Prisoner bid " the Drawer bring the Pepper-Box, which he immediately did: And " then the Company began to play at Hazard; and after they had played " some time, the said Rich asked, If any one would set him three Half- " Crowns? Whereupon the Deceased in a jocular manner laid down three " Half-penny Pieces, and then said to the said Rich, I have set you three Pieces, " and the Prisoner at the same time set the said Rich three Half-Crowns, " which the said Rich won: and immediately after the Prisoner, in an " angry manner, turned about to the Deceased, and said, It was an im- " pertinent Thing to set Half-pence, and that the Deceased was an imperti- " nent Puppy for so doing; to which the Deceased answered, Whoever called " him so was a Rascal. That thereupon the said John Oneby took up a " Bottle, and with great Force threw it erga prædict' Willielmum Gower; " which Bottle did not hit the said Gower, but brushed his Perriwig, as " it passed by his Head, and beat out some of the Powder; whereupon " the Deceased immediately after tossed a Candlestick or Bottle erga Præ- " dict' Johannem Oneby, but did not hit him with the same: Upon which " the Deceased and the Prisoner both rose up to fetch their Swords, which " then hung up in the Room; and the Deceased drew his Sword, but the " Prisoner was prevented from drawing his by the Company; and the De- " ceased thereupon threw away his Sword, and the Company interposing, " they sat down again for the Space of an Hour. That at the Expiration of " an Hour, the Deceased said to the Prisoner, We have had hot Words, but " you was the Aggressor; but I think we may pass it over; and at the same " time offered his Hand to the said John Oneby, to which the said John " Oneby answered, No, damn you, I will have your Blood. They further " find, that afterwards the Reckoning was paid by the Deceased, the Pri- " soner, Rich, Hawkins and Blunt; and all the Company, except the " Prisoner, went out of the Room to go home; and the Prisoner remain- " ing alone in the Room, called to the Deceased in these Words, Young " Man, come back, I have something to say to you; whereupon the Deceased " returned into the Room, and immediately the Door was flung to and " shut, and thereby the rest of the Company were excluded; and then a " Clashing of Swords was heard, and the Prisoner, with his Sword, gave " the Deceased the mortal Wound mentioned in the Indictment, of " which he died the next Day. They further find, that at the breaking " up of the Company, the Prisoner had his Great Coat thrown over his " Shoulders; and that he received three slight Wounds in the Engage- " ment; and that the Deceased being asked, upon his Death-Bed, whether " he received his Wound in a manner, amongst Swordsmen, called fair, " answered, I think I did. That from the time of throwing the Bottle, " there was no Reconciliation between the Prisoner and the Deceased. " And whether this be Murder or Manslaughter, the Jury pray the Ad- " vice of the Court, and find accordingly."

The Prisoner being carried back to Newgate, remained very easy, for about a Twelve-month, having no Irons on, and lodged in a commodious Room; and as the Prosecutor had taken no Steps towards bringing on the Hearing of the Special Verdict, he grew pretty confident it would be determined Manslaughter, and fee'd Counsel to move the Court of King's-Bench for a Concilium, to be made for arguing the Special Verdict before the Court; which being ordered, a Certiorari pro Rege was brought (a); and the Prisoner being at the Bar, it was made a Concilium, the Court being of Opinion that it could not be made a Concilium in his Absence; and in Hillary Term, 13 Geo. I. it was argued by Serjeant Darnall for the King, and Serjeant Eyre for the Defendant.

Serjeant Darnall. In order to consider whether this be Murder or Manslaughter, I shall premise that which is not to be disputed, that every malicious Killing is Murder, and that Malice may be either express or implied. This is Malice implied in the Act itself, because there was no reasonable Provocation; there was nothing but Words passed between them, till the Prisoner threw the Bottle at the Deceased; and it has been often resolved, that, in point of Law, Words are no Provocation. But if Words were a sufficient Provocation; yet it appears, the Prisoner began with Words as well as Acts. The calling Mr. Gower an impertinent Puppy was previous to the saying or doing of any thing by Mr. Gower, that could give Offence to the Prisoner: If the setting of Half-pence was a Thing to be resented, the Affront was to Mr. Rich, and not to Mr. Oneby, whose Bett to Rich was not at all affected by what was done by Mr. Gower. And that it is Murder in this Defendant, I think cannot be disputed, after the Judgment of the Court in Mawgridge's Case (inserted at the End of the next Trial); there the Bottle thrown by Cope hit Mawgridge, and broke his Head; here, the Candlestick or Bottle tossed by Gower, did not hit the Prisoner at the Bar: That was a sudden Conflict; this a deliberate Act, after a Disposition to Peace manifested by Mr. Gower, and a Continuance of Malice in the Prisoner for above an Hour after the first Conflict. What was done here by Mr. Gower would have been justifiable in him, even if the Candlestick had hit the Prisoner: and so it was resolved in Mawgridge's Case; for there the Bottle returned by Mr. Cope did hit the Defendant, and broke his Head. And as the Act done by Mr. Gower was justifiable in him, it follows, that it can be no foundation to excuse or mitigate the subsequent Killing by Mr. Oneby. The Case put in Mawgridge's Case of an Assault by A upon B. B draws his Sword, and pursues A to the Wall, where A in his own Defence kills B; this is held Murder in A, though it has many strong Circumstances in favour of A, which are not in this Case. But I apprehend, it is not necessary to rely barely on this Point, that there is Malice implied in the Act; since it plainly appears, upon the State of the Case, that here is express Malice. When the Deceased was desirous to end the Matter amicably, the Prisoner replies, No, damn you, I will have your Blood: This explains and goes through the whole Fact, and proves the subsequent Killing to be malicious.

I do therefore insist, that the taking it either way, either as a Killing out of Malice implied, or Malice express, it is Murder; and that this upon the Fact is a Killing of Malice implied, and upon the Prisoner's own Words coupled with the Fact, it is Malice express, and consequently Murder.

Serjeant Eyre, for the Defendant. The Question is, what degree of Homicide this is; and I apprehend it to be but Manslaughter: The Distinction is, that if the Killing be of Malice fore-thought, it is Murder; if on a sudden Occasion, it is but Manslaughter; and that I take to be this Case: In 3 Instit. 51. Malice prepensed is defined to be, when one compasseth to kill another, and doth it sedato animo: On the other hand, Manslaughter is the doing it without Premeditation, upon a sudden Brawl, Shuffling, or Contention. 3 Instit. 57.

The Law has ever been indulgent to the Passions of Men; Ira furor brevis est, and therefore as a Madman, the Party is excused for what he does in a sudden Transport of Passion. I do admit, that bare Words are no Provocation; but yet they will serve to explain the Nature of the Combat, and shew whether it was sudden or not. The calling the Prisoner a Rascal, was what no Man of Honour could put up; and as this was the Beginning of the Quarrel, the Fighting was as sudden as the reproachful Words. If the Prisoner had stabbed Mr. Gower, upon speaking the Words, and Gower had done nothing, I believe it would have been Murder; but here was a regular Fight, an Interchange of Blows, and so it comes up to the Case put in Kelyng 55. of a Combat between two of a sudden Heat; where if one kills the other, it is but Manslaughter.

The Law has fixed no certain Time, when it shall be presumed the Passions of Men are cooled. The Case in 12 Co. 87. must take up a longer time than this; for there the Boy ran three Quarters of a Mile to his Father, and told his Story, and after that the Father provided himself with a Cudgel, and had as far to go in pursuit of the other Boy; and there is this Difference between that Case and the Case at Bar; that there the Adversary was out of Sight, but here he continued in Presence, which must rather inflame than abate the Passion.

The Words made use of by Mr. Gower carry an Imputation on Mr. Oneby, which might provoke him afresh; the telling him, he was the Aggressor, was not likely to make an End of the Quarrel: And that is plain, from the Manner in which Mr. Oneby understood them, who would never have said so harsh a Thing to his Friend Mr. Gower, if he had been at that Time in any degree Master of himself.

It is not found by the Verdict who began, after Mr. Gower returned into the Room: It is not likely the Prisoner began, because he had his Great Coat thrown over his Soulders; and as to the shutting the Door, it is stated to be done immediately on Mr. Gower's returning, and is likelier to be done by him that came into the Room, when the first Conflict happened. It appears Mr. Gower was the readiest to draw his Sword; it was actually drawn, and the Prisoner's was not; and since it is not stated, who drew first the second Time, I think it ought to be explained by the first.

To make it Murder in the first Instance, it must be done with a Weapon that would endanger Life. The Bottle in Mawgridge's Case was full of Wine, and it hit him (Cope) so violently that he never spoke more. But for any thing appearing upon the Verdict, this might be only a small Oil-Bottle, usually set upon Tables in Public-Houses; and might perhaps be empty before it was flung. The Case of Mr. Turner, which is taken notice of in Comb. 407. was held Manslaughter upon this Reason, because the Clog was not such an Instrument, from a Blow with which it was likely Death should ensue. But supposing the Bottle to be as big and as full as Mawgridge's Bottle, yet no harm was done by it here, as there was in Mawgridge's Case. Here was no drawing the Sword eo instante, as Mawgridge did; which occasioned the Judges to lay the returning the Bottle by Mr. Cope out of the Case, and construe the immediate drawing the Sword, as an Intent to supply the Mischief, which the Bottle might fall short of; and even, in that Case, one great Man differed from the rest of his Brethren.—So that Mawgridge's Case is materially different from this. There the Intention from the first throwing the Bottle was to commit Murder, here it was otherwise. There the first Bottle hit, here it missed. There the Murderer's Intent was immediately carried into Execution, here was a long Interruption. The Deceased needed not have returned, if he had not been equally disposed to combat; and he himself said it was a fair Combat, which there was no Pretence to say in Mawgridge's Case.

Serjeant Darnall replied. The Words on both Sides must certainly be laid out of the Case; if not, Puppy was worse than Rascal, because it is the Name of a Beast. If Mr. Gower took Oneby to be the Aggressor, the Condescension was greater in him; it is no more than saying, I, who have been injured, am ready to pass it by. I do not find it was at all relied upon in Mawgridge's Case, that the Bottle was full; and as to the Case in Comberbatch, Turner's Servant there had committed a Fault, for which he was liable to be corrected: The Deceased's Declaration was only that he received the Wound by a fair Push.

The Court said nothing upon this Argument, but appointed another to be before all the Judges of England. And in Easter Term following (May 6), it was accordingly argued by Mr. Lee for the King, and Mr. Kettleby (Serjeant Baynes, who was retained, being ill) for the Prisoner, to the same Effect as the former Argument. Str. Vol. II. 770. The Prisoner not being present in Serjeant's-Inn (Chancery-Lane), as he was in Court upon the first Argument; this last being only to have the Advice of the other Judges.

The King verſ. John Oneby.

AT the General Seſſions of the Peace, held at Hicks-Hall, for the County of Middleſex, 28th Day of February, in the 12th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, John Oneby, of St. Martin's in the Fields, Gent. was indicted, for that he, the 2d Day of February, 12 Geo. at the ſaid Pariſh, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, made an Aſſault upon one William Gower, Eſq. and that he the ſaid John Oneby, with a Sword, which he then and there held drawn in his Right Hand, the ſaid William Gower, in and upon the left Part of his Belly, near the Navel, feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice fore-thought, did ſtrike and thruſt, giving the ſaid William Gower, then and there, with the ſaid drawn Sword, in and upon his ſaid left Part of his Belly, near the Navel, a mortal Wound; of which mortal Wound, the ſaid William Gower, lived in a languiſhing Condition, from the ſaid 2d Day of February, to the 3d Day of the ſaid February; on which 3d Day of February, the ſaid William Gower, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, of the ſaid mortal Wound, did die; and ſo the Jurors find, that the ſaid Oneby, the ſaid William Gower feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice fore-thought, did kill and murder. Which Indictment being delivered to the Juſtices of Gaol-Delivery for Newgate, the ſaid John Oneby was arraigned thereupon, and pleaded Not Guilty. And upon the Trial, which was had before Mr. Baron Hale, and Sir William Thompſon, Recorder of London, the Jury found the the Special Verdict following, viz.

" That the ſaid John Oneby, and the ſaid William Gower, together with " John Rich, Thomas Hawkins, and Michael Blunt, were in Company " together in a Room in the Caſtle-Tavern, in the Pariſh of St. Martin's " in the Fields, in a friendly Manner; that after the ſaid John Oneby, " William Gower, John Rich, Thomas Hawkins, and Michael Blunt, had " continued together in the ſaid Room, for the Space of two Hours, a " Box and Dice were called for; whereupon the Drawer ſaid, that he " had Dice but no Box; and that thereupon the ſaid John Oneby com- " manded the Drawer to bring a Pepper-Box, and accordingly a Pepper- " Box and Dice were brought; that immediately after, the ſaid John " Oneby, William Gower, John Rich, Thomas Hawkins, and Michael Blunt, " began to play at Hazard; and after they had played half an Hour, the " ſaid John Rich aſked, if any of the Company would ſet him three " Pieces of Money, called Half-Crowns; that thereupon the ſaid William " Gower, in a jocular Manner, ſet three Pieces of Money, called Half- " pence, and then ſaid to the ſaid John Rich, that he had ſet him three " Pieces; that the ſaid John Oneby, at the ſame Time, ſet the ſaid John " Rich three Half-Crowns, which the ſaid John Rich won; and imme- " diately the ſaid John Oneby, in an angry Manner, turned to the ſaid " William Gower, and ſaid to him, that it was an impertinent Thing to " ſet Half-pence; and further ſaid to the ſaid William Gower, that he, " the ſaid William Gower, was an impertinent Puppy in ſo doing; to " which the ſaid William Gower then and there anſwered, that whoſo- " ever called him ſo was a Raſcal; and thereupon the ſaid John Oneby " took up a Glaſs-Bottle, and with great Force threw it at the ſaid Wil- " liam Gower; but the Glaſs-Bottle did not ſtrike the ſaid William Gow- " er, but paſſing by near his Head bruſhed his Peruke, which he then " had upon his Head, and beat out ſome of the Powder out of his Pe- " ruke; that thereupon the ſaid William Gower, immediately after, toſſed " a Glaſs or Candleſtick at the ſaid John Oneby, but the Glaſs or Can- " dleſtick did not hit the ſaid John Oneby, upon which, both the ſaid " John Oneby and William Gower preſently roſe from their Seats, to fetch " their Swords, which then hung up in the Room; So that the Queſtion upon the Special Verdict is, Whether John Oneby, the Priſoner at the Bar, is guilty of Murder or Manſlaughter?

A great deal of Time was ſpent in drawing up this Special Verdict; for although the Trial at the Old-Bailey was in the Beginning of laſt March was twelve Months, yet the Record was not removed into this Court; till Hilary Term laſt, towards the End of which Term, it was argued by Counſel on both Sides; and another Argument being deſired by the Counſel for the Priſoner, we thought it proper to deſire the Opinion of all the reſt of the Judges; and for that Purpoſe, it was argued before all the Judges, at Serjeants-Inn-Hall in Chancery-Lane, upon the 6th Day of May laſt, which was as ſoon as all the Judges could meet, by reaſon of the Intervention of the Circuits. And after mature Conſideration had upon a Meeting of them, they ſeriatim gave their Opinions, and came to this Reſolution unanimouſly, not one of them diſſenting, and which I have Authority from them to declare, viz.

That John Oneby, the Priſoner at the Bar, upon the Facts found upon this Special Verdict, is guilty of Murder.

Without entering into a nice Examination of the ſeveral Definitions or Deſcriptions of Murder, as they are found in the old Law-Books, as Bracton, Britton, and Fleta, where the Wickedneſs of the Act is aggravated by the Circumſtances of Secrecy or Treachery, Murder has been long ſince ſettled to be the voluntary killing a Perſon of Malice prepenſe; and that whether it was done ſecretly or publickly. Staundf. Pl. Cor. 18. b. 3 Inſt. 54.

But then it muſt be conſidered, what the Word Malice in ſuch Caſe imports. In common Acceptation, Malice is took to be a ſettled Anger (which require ſome Length of Time) in one Perſon againſt another, and a Deſire of Revenge. But in the legal Acceptation, it imports Wickedneſs, which includes a Circumſtance attending an Act that cuts off all Excuſe. By 25 H. VIII. c. 3. for taking away Clergy, it is enacted, That every Perſon who ſhall be indicted of the Crimes therein mentioned, and thereupon arraigned, and ſtand mute, of Malice or of Frowardneſs of Mind, ſhall loſe the Benefit of his Clergy. Now in that Place, Malice can never be underſtood in the vulgar Senſe; for the Party cannot be thought to ſtand mute, out of a ſettled Anger, or Deſire of Revenge, but only to ſave himſelf: and therefore ſuch ſtanding Mute, and refuſing to ſubmit to the Courſe of Juſtice, is ſaid to be done wickedly, i. e. without any Manner of Excuſe, or out of Frowardneſs of Mind.

This Malice, an eſſential Ingredient to make the killing a Perſon Murder (to uſe the Expreſſions of Lord Chief-Juſtice Coke, and Lord Chief-Juſtice Hale, whoſe Authority hath eſtabliſhed them), muſt be either implied or expreſs; and ſays Hale, in his Pleas of the Crown 44. this implied Malice is collected either from the Manner of doing, or from the Perſon ſlain, or the Perſon killing. As to the two laſt, there is no Occaſion, at preſent, to take them into Conſideration.

I. As to the firſt, viz. from the Manner of doing, as Hale expreſſes it, or as Holt, Chief-Juſtice (Vide Mawgridge's Caſe poſtea) ſays, from the Nature of the Action: 1. Wilfully poiſoning any Man implies Malice. 2. If a Man doth an Act, that apparently muſt do Harm, with an Intent to do Harm, and Death enſues, it will be Murder. As if A runs with a Horſe, uſed to ſtrike, amongſt a Multitude of People, and the Horſe kills a Man, it will be Murder; for the Law implies Malice from the Nature of the Act. 3. Killing a Man without a Provocation is Murder; as if A meets B in the Street, and immediately runs him through with a Sword, or knocks out his Brains with a Hammer or Bottle. And if angry Words had paſſed in that Caſe between A and B, yet it would have been Murder in A, becauſe Words are not ſuch a Provocation, as will prevent ſuch a Homicide from being Murder; Lord Morley's Caſe, Kelynge 56. and State Trials, Vol. VII. 4. The Law will imply Malice from the Nature of the original Action, or firſt Aſſault, though Blows paſs between the Parties, before the Stroke is given, which occaſions the Death. As if upon angry Words or abuſive Language between A and B, of a ſudden A, without any Provocation (for angry Words or abuſive Language in ſuch a Caſe is looked on as none), draws his Sword immediately, and makes a Paſs at B, or ſtrikes at him with any dangerous Weapon, as a Piſtol, Hammer, large Stone, &c. which in all Probability might kill B, or do him ſome great bodily Hurt, and then B draws his Sword, and mutual Paſſes are made, and A kills B, this will be Murder, for the Act was voluntary; and it appears from the Nature of it, that it was done with an Intent to do Miſchief; and therefore ſince in all Probability it might have occaſioned B's Death, or done him ſome great bodily Harm, the Law implies Malice prepenſe; and the Reſiſtance or Paſſes that were made by B, were but in the Defence of his Perſon, which was violently and cruelly attacked. And this was the Reſolution of Kelynge, Chief-Juſtice, Twiſden, Windham, and Morton, Juſtices in Hopkin Hugget's Caſe, Kelynge 62 (a). And though in the principal Caſe, the eight other Judges differed in Opinion from the four Judges in the King's-Bench; yet, to this Opinion of the Four, the eight Judges did agree, as Kelynge took it. And this was the true Reaſon of Mawgridge's Caſe. The Judgment in which Caſe is a great Authority in this Caſe, that not being ſo ſtrong a Caſe as the preſent Caſe. It was indeed objected by the Counſel for the Priſoner at the Bar, in their Arguments in the preſent Caſe, 1. That Mawgridge's Caſe was a ſingle Caſe, that the Judgment in that Caſe had carried Murder further than it had ever been carried before. 2. That it was not determined with the unanimous Opinion of all the then Judges, for one very great Judge of the then Twelve, viz. Lord Trevor differed from the other Judges, and held it was only Manſlaughter. But upon our meeting to conſider of this preſent Caſe, all the Judges unanimouſly agreed, that Mawgridge's Caſe was undoubted Law (b), and that that Judgment was a right and juſt Judgment, ſo groundleſs was that Inſinuation, which had been made (for ſuch an Inſinuation there was) in Weſtminſter-Hall, that ſome of the preſent Judges were of Opinion, that the Judgment in Mawgridge's Caſe was not a legal Judgment.

And this is as much as is neceſſary, rather more than is neceſſary, to be ſaid as to implied Malice, ſince there will be no Occaſion in this Caſe to look out for Malice implied.

II. Malice expreſs is a Deſign formed of taking away another Man's Life, or of doing ſome Miſchief to another, in the Execution of which Deſign Death enſues. And this holds, where ſuch Deſign is not formed againſt

(a) Judge Foſter's Reports, p. 138, 313, 315, Hugget's Caſe.

(b) This Caſe of Mawgridge, being ſo frequently quoted in this, and the next Trial; and as every Gentleman may not have Kelynge's Reports ready at Hand to turn to, we have inſerted the whole Caſe from Kelynge, p. 117 to p. 138.

againſt any particular Perſon; as if A having no particular Malice againſt any particular Perſon, comes with a general Reſolution againſt all Oppoſers; if the Act be unlawful, and Death enſue, it is Murder. As if it be to commit a Riot, to enter into a Park, Lord Dacre's Caſe H. P. C. 47. Moore 86. Sav. 67. So if A goes with a Reſolution to kill the firſt Man he meets, and meeting B, kills him, it is Murder with expreſs Malice: yet A had not declared any Malice againſt B, nor againſt any particular Perſon. Much more it will be expreſs Malice, when the miſchievous Deſign is formed againſt any particular Perſon, which may be made evident, as well by Circumſtances as by the expreſs Declarations of the Perſon killing. As that he would be revenged of B, or that he would have his Life, or have his Blood; and ſome time after he kills B. And that ſuch Declarations ſpoken ſeriouſly, or deliberately, or after Time for Reflection, manifeſt an expreſs Malice, no body can doubt.

Having thus briefly mentioned that known and ſettled Rule, that there muſt be either Malice expreſs or implied, to make Murder, and alſo ſome Inſtances of what is one and what the other of them; I come to the preſent Caſe before us.

All the Twelve Judges were unanimous in Opinion, That as the Facts are found in this Special Verdict, it appears, that the Priſoner at the Bar had expreſs Malice againſt Mr. Gower, when he gave him the mortal Wound, of which he died: 1. Mr. Gower did nothing that could reaſonably raiſe a Paſſion in Mr. Oneby. He gave him no Provocation whatſoever; for when Mr. Gower ſet the three Half-pence, he ſet them againſt Mr. Rich, and that in a jocular manner; therefore that was no Affront to Mr. Oneby. 2. Upon that Mr. Oneby turned to Mr. Gower in an angry manner, and gave him abuſive Language, and called him impertinent Puppy; the Anſwer of Gower was not improper, nor more than what might be expected, that whoſoever called him ſo was a Raſcal. 3. That as Oneby had before begun with Gower, by giving him abuſive Language; ſo he then took up the Glaſs-Bottle, et magna cum vi, threw at Gower, and beat the Powder out of his Peruke; if it had killed Gower, it had certainly been Murder; upon which Gower toſſed a Glaſs or Candleſtick at Oneby. And the Difference of finding in the Special Verdict is obſerveable: Oneby threw the Bottle at Gower, magna cum vi; Gower only toſſed the Glaſs or Candleſtick at Oneby. 4. When they fetched their Swords, Gower did it only to defend himſelf; for the Verdict finds, that though Gower drew his Sword firſt, yet the Priſoner at the Bar, being hindered by the Company from drawing his Sword, Gower thereupon threw his Sword away. 5. By the Interpoſition of the Company, the Priſoner at the Bar and Mr. Gower ſat down again, and continued in Company for an Hour; after which Mr. Gower ſaid, We have had hot Words, but you was the Aggreſſor, but I think we may paſs it over, and offered his Hand to the Priſoner; that the Priſoner at the Bar was the Aggreſſor, is true, and that in a violent manner: This was ſufficient to have appeaſed Mr. Oneby; but what is his Anſwer? No, damn you, I will have your Blood. There is an expreſs Declaration of Malice, an expreſs Declaration of a Deſign of taking away Mr. Gower's Life. Theſe Words are incapable of any other Conſtruction. Theſe Words ſhew his malicious Intent, even in throwing the Bottle at firſt; they are ſpoken an Hour after the firſt Action, and are ſpoken with Deliberation. The next Fact the Jury find is; that afterwards (not particularly finding what Interval of Time paſſed between the ſpeaking theſe Words, and what is found next) that Mr. Gower, Rich, Hawkins and Blunt went out of the Room with an Intent to go home, leaving the Priſoner at the Bar in the Room; that the Priſoner remaining in the Room, called to the ſaid William Gower, ſaying, Young Man, come back, I have ſomething to ſay to you. Theſe Words alſo ſhew a plain Deliberation; and being attended with the Circumſtances found before, and what follows immediately, import Contempt; young Man are inſolent and imperious; come back, and import a Reſentment he had conceived againſt Mr. Gower, about which he had ſomething to ſay to him. For what Purpoſe did the Priſoner ſtay, after all the Company had left the Room to go home? It was to ſay ſomething to Mr. Gower. What is that? Why, as ſoon as Mr. Gower is returned into the Room, the Door was immediately flung to and ſhut, and the reſt of the Company ſhut out; and then after ſhutting the Door, a Claſhing of Swords was heard, and the Priſoner gave Mr. Gower the mortal Wound, of which he died.

Theſe immediate, ſubſequent Facts ſhew, what it was the Priſoner had to ſay to Mr. Gower; it was to carry the malicious Deſign, he had before declared he had againſt Mr. Gower, into Execution, viz. to have his Blood; and he had it, for he gave him the Wound of which he died.

To go further: If the Priſoner had Malice againſt Mr. Gower, though they fought after the Door was ſhut, the Interchange of Blows will make no Difference; for if A has Malice againſt B, and meets B, and ſtrikes him, B draws, A flies to the Wall, A kills B, it is Murder. H. P. C. 42. Kelynge 58.

Nay, if the Caſe had been, that there had been mutual Malice between the Priſoner and Mr. Gower (which does not appear to have been on the Part of the Deceaſed) (a) and they had met and fought upon that Malice, the killing Mr. Gower by the Priſoner had been Murder. H. P. C. 47. 1 Bulſtr. 86, 87. Hob. 121. Crompt. 21.

The Judges were all of Opinion, upon the Facts found in this Verdict, there appeared to be expreſs Malice in Oneby againſt Mr. Gower; and then Oneby killing Gower, having ſuch expreſs Malice againſt him, they were all unanimous, and clear of Opinion, that this was plainly Murder.

Having thus mentioned the Reaſons, upon which we ground this preſent Reſolution, I ſhall next conſider, if any of the Objections made by the Counſel for the Priſoner are in anſwer to theſe Reaſons, or take off the Force of them.

The Counſel for the Priſoner, Mr. Oneby, inſiſted, that upon the whole Verdict, the Caſe was no more than that from a ſlight Occaſion; paſſionate Words aroſe, mutual Reproaches paſſed; the Quarrel was ſudden, mutual Aſſaults were made; and on a ſudden fighting, in Heat of Paſſion, the Priſoner killed the Deceaſed, which can be no more than Manſlaughter.

That ſuch Fact could amount to no more than Manſlaughter; thy cited the known Caſe, that if A and B fall out upon a ſudden, and they preſently agree to fight, and each fetches his Weapon, and go into the Field and fight, and one of them kills the other; this is but Manſlaughter, H. P. C. 48. 3 Inſtit. 57. becauſe the Paſſion was never cooled.

In this Caſe (ſaid they) it is plain the Quarrel aroſe on a ſudden; Mr. Oneby's Paſſion was raiſed, and that it is not found by the Jury to have ever been cooled; and therefore the Words, Mr. Oneby ſpoke, No, damn you, I will have your Blood, &c. were only Words of Heat, ſpoke under the Continuance of the firſt Paſſion. And they further inſiſted, that the Law had fixed no Time, in which the Paſſion muſt be took to be cool; but that depends upon Circumſtances, of which the Jury are the proper Judges. In this Caſe, the whole Time that paſſed, between the Quarrel, and giving the mortal Wound, was but little more than an Hour; and it has been adjudged, that the Paſſion ſhall not be took to be cooled in very near that Time. 12 Co. 87. Cro. Jac. 296. H. P. C. 48. Rowley's Caſe, where the Child of A beat the Child of B. B's Child, all bloody, ran home to his Father; B, the Father, ran Three-quarters of a Mile, and beat the Child of A; by means whereof he died: This was adjudged to be only Manſlaughter; yet there muſt have been a conſiderable Time after B was provoked by the Uſage of his Child before he killed A's Child, becauſe he ran Three-quarters of a Mile; yet it being one continued Paſſion raiſed in B, upon the beating of his Child, it was held this was only Manſlaughter. And in this preſent Caſe, to ſhew the Paſſion of Mr. Oneby, which was ſuddenly raiſed, was not cooled, the Counſel for Mr. Oneby obſerved, that the Jury had expreſly found that there was no Reconciliation between Oneby, the Priſoner, and Mr. Gower, the Deceaſed, from the time Mr. Oneby firſt threw the Bottle.

This I take to be the chief Objection, upon which the Counſel for the Priſoner principally relied.

In anſwer to this Objection, I muſt firſt take notice, that where a Man is killed, the Law will not preſume that it was upon a ſudden Quarrel, unleſs it is proved ſo to be; and therefore in Legg's Caſe, Kelynge 27. it was agreed, upon Evidence, that if A kills B, and no ſudden Quarrel appears, it is Murder; for it lies upon the Party indicted to prove the ſudden Quarrel.

In the next place, from what I have ſaid before, it appears, that though a Quarrel was ſudden, and mutual Fighting before the mortal Wound given, it is by no means to be took as a general Rule, that the killing a Man will be only Manſlaughter. It is true, if reproachful Language paſſes between A and B, and A bids B draw, and they both draw (it is not material which of them draws firſt), and they both fight, and mutual Paſſes are made, Death enſuing from thence will be ony Manſlaughter, becauſe it was of a ſudden, and each ran the hazard of his Life. But there is a wide Difference between that Caſe, and where upon Words A draws his Sword, and makes a Paſs at B, or with ſome dangerous Weapon attacks him, and then B draws, and they fight, and A kills B; there, though there was a Quarrel upon abuſive Language, and there was afterwards a mutual Fighting, yet ſince A attacked B with a Weapon or Inſtrument, which might have taken away B's Life, though they fought afterwards, that will be Murder. And this was agreed by all the Judges in the preſent Caſe.

But for the Argument's Sake, and it is only for Argument's Sake, and to give the Objection made by the Counſel for the Priſoner its full Force; if it ſhould be looked on here, that what is found in the former Part of the Verdict was upon a ſudden Quarrel, and only the Effect of Paſſion; yet, if it appears upon the Special Verdict, that there was a ſufficint Time for this Paſſion to cool, and for Reaſon to get the better of the Tranſport of Paſſion, and the ſubſequent Acts were deliberate, before the mortal Wound given, the killing of the Deceaſed will be Murder.

And all the Judges were of Opinion, that, upon Conſideration of the Facts found, it appeared, there had been ſufficient Time for Mr. Oneby's Tranſport of Paſſion to cool, and that he had deliberated; and that the killing of Mr. Gower was a deliberate Act, and the Reſult of Malice Mr. Oneby had conceived againſt the Deceaſed.

But before I mention their Reaſons, I muſt lay down this Propoſition, which they all agreed, viz. that the Court are Judges of the Malice, and not the Jury; and that the Court are alſo Judges upon the Facts found by the Jury, whether if the Quarrel was ſudden, there was Time for the Paſſion to cool, or whether the Act was deliberate or not.

Upon the Trial of the Indictment, the Judge directs the Jury thus: If you believe ſuch and ſuch Witneſſes, who have ſworn ſuch and ſuch Facts, the killing the Deceaſed was with Malice prepenſe expreſs, or it was with Malice implied, and then you ought to find the Priſoner guilty of Murder; but if you do not believe thoſe Witneſſes, then you ought to find him guilty of Manſlaughter only; and ſo according to the Nature of the Caſe, if you believe ſuch and ſuch Facts, the Act was deliberate, or not deliberate; and then you ought to find ſo and ſo. And the Jury may, if they think proper, give a General Verdict, either that the Priſoner is Guilty of Murder, or of Manſlaughter. But if they decline giving a general Verdict, and will find the Facts ſpecially, the Court is to form their Judgment from the Facts found, whether there was Malice or not, or whether the Fact was done on a ſudden Tranſport of Paſſion, or was an Act of Deliberation, or not.

Although there are many Special Verdicts in Indictments for Murder, there never was one, where the Jury find in expreſs Terms that the Act was done with Malice, or was not done with Malice prepenſe; or that it was done upon a ſudden Quarrel, and in Tranſport of Paſſion; or that the Paſſion was cooled or not cooled; or that the Act was deliberate, or not deliberate: But the Collection of thoſe Things from the Facts found, is left to the Judgment of the Court. Holloway's Caſe, Palm. 545. Cro. Car. 131. W. Jones 198. So in the Caſe cited by the Counſel for the Priſoner, Cro. Jac. 296. Rowley's Caſe, the Jury find the Fact, but don't find in expreſs Terms, that the Father, whoſe Child was beat, killed the other Child in a ſudden Heat of Paſſion; but that was left to the Judgment of the Court, upon the particular Facts found.

But then it is objected, that the Law has fixed no Time, in which the Paſſion muſt be ſuppoſed to be cooled. 'Tis very true, it has not, nor could it, becauſe Paſſions in ſome Perſons are ſtronger, and their Judgments weaker, than in others; and by Conſequence it will require a longer Time in ſome, for Reaſon to get the better of their Paſſions, than in others: but that muſt depend upon the Facts, which ſhew whether the Perſon has deliberated or not; for Acts of Deliberation will make it appear whether that violent Tranſport of Paſſion was cooled or no.

But thus far the Reſolution of the Judges have already gone; and it has been adjudged, that if two fall out upon a ſudden, and they appoint to fight next:

(a) The Verdict implies the contrary: For He offered him his Hand, &c.

next Day, that the Paſſion by that Time muſt be looked on to be cooled; and in ſuch Caſe, if they meet next Day, and fight, and the one kills the other at that Meeting, it has been often held to be Murder. Hale P.C. 48.

To go a little further. If two Men fall out in the Morning, and meet and fight in the Afternoon, and one of them is ſlain, this is Murder; for there was Time to allay the Heat, and their Meeting is of Malice. So is Legg's Caſe, Kelynge 27.

At the Meeting of all the Judges, before Lord Morley's Trial by the Peers, for the Murder of one Haſtings, they all agreed, that if upon Words two Men grow to Anger, and afterwards they ſuppreſs that Anger, and then fall into other Diſcourſe, or have other Diverſions, for ſuch a reaſonable Space of Time as in reaſonable Intendment their Heat might be cooled; and ſome Time after they draw upon one another, and fight, and one of them is killed; this is Murder, becauſe being attended with ſuch Circumſtances, it is reaſonably ſuppoſed to be a deliberate Act, and a premeditated Revenge upon the firſt Quarrel. But the Circumſtances of ſuch an Act being Matter of Fact, the Jury are Judges of them, Kelynge 56. The Meaning of which laſt Words is, that the Jury are Judges of the Facts, from which thoſe Circumſtances are collected. But, as ſaid I before, when thoſe Facts are found, the Court is to judge from them, whether they do not ſhew the Act was deliberate or not.

Lord Morley upon his Trial by the Peers was acquitted; and after that, in Eaſter Term, 18 Car. II. Broomwich, who was indicted as a Principal, in being preſent, aiding, and abetting Lord Morely, in the Murder of Haſtings, was tried at the King's-Bench Bar. The Quarrel was at a Tavern; but it was proved, when the Quarrel was at the Tavern, that Lord Morley ſaid, If we fight at this Time, I ſhall have a Diſadvantage, by reaſon of the Height of my Shoes; and preſently after they went into the Fields, and fought; Lord Morley killed Haſtings: But while they were fighting, Broomwich made a Thruſt at Haſtings, and Lord Morley cloſed in with Haſtings, and killed him; and (ſays the Book) this was held as clear Evidence of their Intention to fight, when they went out of the Tavern; and the Quarrel being only about Words, and fighting in a little Time after, it was held Murder by all the Court. And there need not be a Night's Time between the Quarrel and the Fighting, to make it Murder, but ſuch Time only, as it may appear not to be done on the firſt Paſſion; for Lord Morley conſidered the Diſadvantage of his Shoes; and the Court directed the Jury that it was Murder in Broomwich, being preſent, and aiding; but the Jury acquitted him. 1 Sid. 277. reports the ſame Caſe, and ſays, that the Court, in the Direction to the Jury, laid it down, that after the Provocation in the Houſe, they ſay, this is no convenient Place (and ſo have Reaſon to judge of Conveniency), and appoint another Place, though the Fight is to be preſently; this is Murder, for the Circumſtances ſhew their Temper.

In H. P. C. 48. if A and B fall out, A ſays he will not ſtrike, but will give B a Pot of Ale to touch him, B ſtrikes, A kills him; Murder.

Two quarrel; the one ſays, if you'll go into the Field, I will break your Head, and there one kills the other; Murder. Crompt. 25. p. 49.

Two fall out on a ſudden in the Town, and they by Agreement go into the Field preſently, and one kills the other; Murder. Crompt. 23. fol. 31.

From theſe Caſes it appears, that though the Law of England is ſo far peculiarly favourable (I uſe the Word peculiarly, becauſe I know no other Law that makes ſuch a Diſtinction between Murder and Manſlaughter), as to permit the Exceſs of Anger and Paſſion (which a Man ought to keep under, and govern) in ſome Inſtances to extenuate the greateſt of private Injuries, as the taking away a Man's Life is; yet in thoſe Caſes, it muſt be ſuch a Paſſion, as for the time deprives him of his reaſoning Faculties; for if it appears Reaſon has reſumed its Office; if it appears, he reflects, deliberates, and conſiders, before he gives the fatal Stroke, which cannot be, as long as the Fury of Paſſion continues; the Law will no longer, under that Pretext of Paſſion, exempt him from the Puniſhment, which from the Greatneſs of the Injury and Heinouſneſs of the Crime he juſtly deſerves, ſo as to leſſen it from Murder to Manſlaughter. Let us ſee, therefore, whether upon this Special Verdict it appears, that the fighting and killing Mr. Gower was only done in Heat of Paſſion, or was a deliberate Act. By what I obſerved before, it plainly appears it was a deliberate Act. But to recapitulate in ſhort; after the Words had paſſed, and the Bottle was thrown by the Priſoner, and Swords drawn; by the Interpoſition of Friends they ſat down, and continued in company for an Hour (a reaſonable Time under thoſe Circumſtances for the Paſſion to cool); and after that Hour expired, the Deceaſed ſays, We have had hot Words, but you was the Aggreſſor; but, I think, we may paſs it over; and at the ſame time offered his Hand to the Priſoner, which was enough to have appeaſed the Priſoner: To this Mr. Oneby anſwered, No, damn you, I'll have your Blood; Words expreſſing Malice, not Paſſion: Then, when the Company went out of the Room, the Priſoner ſtayed, and called the Deceaſed back; Young Man, come back, I have ſomething to ſay to you: The Door immediately was ſhut, claſhing of Swords was heard, and the Deceaſed received the mortal Wound from the Priſoner at the Bar. The Priſoner's Words ſhew, what was his Intention, viz. to take away Mr. Gower's Life; and the Killing him may properly be ſaid to have been done upon Deliberation and Conſideration.

The Counſel for the Priſoner in their Arguments inſiſted, that there were ſeveral Circumſtances found in the ſpecial Verdict in favour of the Priſoner, which were a Foundation for the Court, to conſtrue the other Expreſſions to be only Words of Heat; and that what he did was in the Heat of his firſt Paſſion, which was never cooled, and not out of Malice. As 1. It is found, that at the breaking up of the Company, Mr. Oneby had his Great Coat thrown over his Shoulders; from whence it would be a Strain, to think he then intended to fight with Mr. Gower. 2. It might be Mr. Gower, who ſhut the Door, who came back after he was out of the Room, the Jury not having found who ſhut the Door. 3. That it was found, there was no Reconciliation between them, from the throwing the Bottle at Mr. Gower. But as to the firſt of theſe Objections, conſidering the Words the Priſoner uſed after this, and after the Deceaſed was out of the Room, and what followed, ſince the Jury have found this Fact, without ſaying any more about it, the natural conſtruction is, that this was only uſed by the Priſoner as a Blind to the Company, to conceal from them his real Intention, till they were gone out of the Room. As to the ſecond; it ſtands uncertain upon the Verdict; but it is an Uncertainty, which can have no Influence upon the preſent Determination; for if Mr. Gower had ſhut the Door, that would not alone have materially altered the Caſe. As to the third; ſince expreſs Malice before appeared to be in the Priſoner, the finding that Fact does not import, that the firſt Heat of Paſſion continued only, but that the Malice continued.

The Counſel for Mr. Oneby farther objected, that it appeared there was a mutual Fighting after the Door was ſhut; for it is found that he received three ſlight Wounds; then it is not found, who drew firſt, or made the firſt Aſſault, after the Door was ſhut; and it was poſſible a new, ſudden Quarrel might then riſe, in which Mr. Gower might be the Aggreſſor, and therefore the Special Verdict was uncertain in a material Point. The Anſwer to which is, what is ſaid in Legg's Caſe, Kelynge 27, cited before; that if A kills B, and no ſudden Quarrel appears, it is Murder; for it lies on the Party indicted, to prove the ſudden Quarrel; and therefore the Jury not having found any ſuch Thing for the Priſoner's Benefit, it is to be took there was no ſuch. This is ſaid, ſuppoſing the latter Part of the Verdict could be conſidered, without regarding the former Part of it; and that when the Company went out of the Room, the Priſoner and Mr. Gower were reconciled. But however that might have been, here it appears there was no Reconciliation, and therefore there can be no Imagination of a new, original Quarrel in the Room after the Door was ſhut. And as to the ſlight Wounds the Priſoner received, that is immaterial; for he having Malice againſt Mr. Gower, though there was mutual Fighting, and the Priſoner was wounded, yet, when he killed Mr. Gower, it will be Murder.

The laſt Fact in the Special Verdict, which they relied on, was, when Mr. Gower was aſked upon his Death-Bed, whether he had received his Wounds in a Manner among Swordſmen called fair? He anſwered, I think I did; whereby the Deceaſed ſhewed, he was ſatisfied the Act was fair. The Anſwer to which is plain; that if A have Malice againſt B, and they meet and fight, though the Fight is never ſo fair according to the Law of Arms, yet if A kills B, it will be Murder.

The Caſes the Counſel for the Priſoner principally relied on, to make this Fact only Manſlaughter, were Rowley's Caſe, 12 Co. 87. and Turner's Caſe, Comberbatch 407, 8.

As to 12 Co. 87. the Caſe was, that two Boys fighting together, the one of them was ſcratched in the Face, and he bled a great deal at the Noſe; and ſo he ran Three-quarters of a Mile to his Father, who, ſeeing him very bloody, took in his Hand a Cudgel, and went Three-quarters of a Mile to the other Boy, and ſtruck him upon the Head, upon which he died; and it was held but Manſlaughter, for the Paſſion of the Father continued. And there is no Time, that the Law can determine, that it was ſo ſettled, that it ſhould be adjudged Malice prepenſe. (Note, Theſe are are the Words of 12 Co. 87.)

To which the Anſwer is plain, for the Reaſon given in Cro. Jac. 296. which is the ſame Caſe, that the Father having no Anger before, but being provoked upon the Complaint and Sight of his Son's Blood, and in that Anger beating him, of which he died, the Law adjudged it to be upon that ſudden Paſſion. But that is, conſidering what has been ſaid before, clearly diſtinguiſhable from the preſent Caſe; beſides it may be added, it was but a little Cudgel he ſtruck with, from which no ſuch fatal Event could be reaſonably expected *.

Turner's Caſe was this; his Wife complained the Boy not cleaned her Clogs, upon which Mr. Turner took up a Clog, and ſtruck him on the Head, and killed him; and though there was no other Provocation, it was held only Manſlaughter. But the Reaſon of that was, becauſe the Clog was ſo ſmall, there could be no Deſign to do any great Harm to the Boy, much leſs to kill him; and a Maſter may correct a Servant in a reaſonable manner for a Fault. And Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, in Comberbatch 408. ſays, that in that Caſe, it was an unlikely Thing, meaning that the Clog ſhould kill the Boy. The Counſel for the Priſoner, being apprehenſive of the Authority of Mawgridge's Caſe, beſides the Obſervations they had made, mentioned before, to induce the Court to look upon that Judgment, as not warranted by Law, endeavoured to diſtinguiſh the preſent Caſe from it, ſuppoſing it to be Law. And 1*ſt*, They ſaid, that, in Mawgridge's Caſe, the Bottle hit Mr. Cope, and ſtunned him; but here the Bottle did not hit Mr. Gower, but only bruſhed ſome Powder out of his Peruke. 2*dly*, In Mawgridge's Caſe, the Bottle was full of Wine; here it is not found to have been ſo, and therefore muſt be took to have been empty; and the Size of the Bottle does not appear, it might be very ſmall. 3*dly*. Mawgridge drew his Sword immediately after throwing the Bottle, without Intermiſſion; here Mr. Gower's Sword was firſt drawn. 4*thly*, Mr. Cope never drew; here Mr. Gower not only drew the firſt, but Claſhing of Swords were heard, ſo there muſt have been fighting.

It is very true (ſo far as theſe Facts will make a Difference) this preſent Caſe is diſtinguiſhable from Mawgridge's Caſe; for that Caſe was determined only upon an implied Malice (but, as I ſaid before, was very rightly and juſtly determined, as we all agreed), for ſtrictly and properly ſpeaking, although the Word Expreſs-Malice is mentioned in the Reaſons given for that Reſolution, yet it was but Malice implied. But ſtill this way of diſtinguiſhing the preſent Caſe from Mawgridge's, will be of no Service to the Priſoner, becauſe, though all the Judges held this Caſe was diſtinguiſhable from Mawgridge's Caſe; it was in reſpect that this was a much ſtronger Caſe as to the Murder, the Jury having found Facts which ſhew Mr. Oneby had an expreſs Malice againſt Mr. Gower. Upon the whole Matter, this Court, with the concurrent Opinion of all the other Judges, is of Opinion, that the Priſoner at the Bar, John Oneby, by this Special Verdict, is found guilty of Murder.

Memorandum. As ſoon as I had delivered this Reſolution, I deſired my Brothers Forteſcue, Reynolds, and Probyn, that if they diſapproved any thing I had laid down, they would expreſs their Diſapprobation; but they publickly declared, they concurred in omnibus.

Major Oneby, obſerving that great Streſs was laid on that wicked and malicious Expreſſion of his to the Deceaſed, damn you, I'll have your Blood: he declared, that as he hoped to find Mercy at the Hands of Almighty God, he never made uſe of that Expreſſion. He then prayed to be recommended to his Majeſty's Clemency, in regard to his long and faithful Services in the Army. As to the firſt, the Court told him, that as the Words were ſworn, and ſtood in the Special Verdict, his Allegation availed nothing: And to the ſecond, That as that was a Court of Juſtice, he muſt apply elſewhere for Mercy.

The Priſoner being, after this Reſolution pronounced, intituled by the Courſe of the Court to have four Days to move in Arreſt in Judgment, he was ſent back to Newgate, and a Rule for bringing him up to receive Judgment the End of the Week was made; before which Time, an Account came of the Death of his late Majeſty at Oſnabrug, the 11th of June. And afterwards, at the Time appointed by the Rule, he was brought to the Bar, and Judgment was pronounced againſt him, and Execution awarded (a). After which, a pretty ſtrong Application was made to his Majeſty King George the Second for a Reprieve; but he was pleaſed to declare, that the Judges having adjudged the Priſoner guilty of Murder, the Law ſhould take its Courſe. In which Attempt, the Priſoner not ſucceeding, he killed himſelf in Newgate, in the Night before the Day appointed for his Execution, by cutting through the Great Artery in his Arm with a Razor, by which he bled to Death.

On Monday, the 19th of June, he was brought up, and objected, "That there was no Joinder of Iſſue, for want of a Similiter (b): but "the Precedents in all capital Caſes being in this Manner, the Objection "was over-ruled. And Mr. Juſtice Forteſcue, in a very ſerious Speech, "pronounced the Sentence for his Execution; which was appointed for "Monday the 3d of July. Upon the Morning whereof, he opened a "vein, and bled to Death (c), to avoid the Infamy of an Execution."—He was buried in the Highway, with a Stake drove through his Body.

On his deſtroying himſelf, the following Account was publiſhed in a Narrative of his Life.

"John Oneby—aged about 53 Years, was born at Barwell in Leiceſterſhire.—His Father was an Attorney, of an unblemiſhed Character, and "practiſed with great Succeſs.—He took Care to beſtow an Education on "his Son John—as deſigning him for the Buſineſs of the Law; who accordingly ſerved a Clerkſhip with a Gentleman of great Note and Eminence in his Profeſſion: but proving a Youth of an aſpiring and "haughty Temper—his Head ran upon Things greater than the Proviſion "they had made, or were capable of making for him.

"The Cuſtody of the great Seal of England being committed to Sir "Nathan Wright, a very near Relation of Mr. Oneby's Mother; Application was made to this Gentleman, to beſtow ſome genteel Employment on his young Kinſman.—But nothing greater than the Place of "his Train-bearer could be procured.

"His great Spirit brooked with it for ſome Time, hoping that ſomething better would offer.—But as nothing did, he quitted the Lord-"Keeper's Service, and took up a Reſolution of going abroad into the "Army.

"His Friends ſoon procured him a Commiſſion, and he ſerved in ſeveral "Campaigns under the late Duke of Marlborough in Flanders, where he "acquired the Reputation of a gallant Officer, he having diſtinguiſhed "himſelf in ſeveral Battles and Sieges, and received divers Wounds.

"He having once the Misfortune to quarrel with an Officer of Horſe "at Bruges, they went out together from the Camp, and fought. His "Antagoniſt received a mortal Wound, and died the next Day. But this "being done, as the People of Honour call it, fairly, Mr. Oneby was called "to a Court-Martial, and very honourably acquitted; and had now eſtabliſhed that vain, empty Character, ſo much admired by too many "in the Army, viz. of having felled his Man.

"The next Exploit of this Nature was performed by him at Port-Royal in Jamaica; where fighting a Duel with one Lieutenant Tooley, "they were both deſperately wounded. Mr. Tooley languiſhed for about "eight Months, and then died; but having been long before perfectly "reconciled to Mr. Oneby, the latter was never called in Queſtion about "his Death.

"Having ſerved about 22 Years in the Army, and riſing gradually, according to his Right of Seniority, he at length attained to the Rank of "a Major in the Regiment of Dragoons, commanded by the Honourable "Brigadier Honeywood. But upon the Peace of Utrecht—his Pay was "curtailed, and a Stop put to his farther Preferment.

"In theſe Circumſtances he returned to England, verſed in all Kinds of "Vice, particularly Gaming, to which he had much addicted himſelf in "the Camp, and had there met ſeveral Revolutions of Fortune. Sometimes an auſpicious Hand of Dice having enabled him to make an Entertainment for the chief Generals in the Army; his Ambition leading "him to great Profuſeneſs that Way, when it has been in his Power. "And at other Times his ill Luck has reduced him to ſcandalous Neceſſities. He now aſſociated himſelf with the principal Gameſters of this "Town, deſigning to ſupport himſelf after their Example; and frequented "all the public Places of Reſort, where Gentlemen played, being ſeldom "without Cards or Dice in his Pockets. And there is no Doubt, "but it was he who conveyed the Dice upon the Table at the Caſtle Tavern, in Drury-Lane, which produced Gaming; the Conſequence "whereof was then the Murder of Mr. Gower; and ſince that, of himſelf."

Information for Suſanna Counteſs of Strathmore, and Mr. James Lyon, Brother-German to the deceaſed Charles Earl of Strathmore, and his Majeſty's Advocate for his Highneſs's Intereſt, againſt James Carnegie of Finhaven, Pannel.

THE ſaid James Carnegie is indicted and accuſed as guilty, art and part of WILFUL and PREMEDITATE MURDER; at leaſt of MURDER and HOMICIDE: In ſo far as, upon the 9th of May laſt, upon the Streets of Forfar, with a drawn Sword, he wounded the deceaſed Charles Earl of Strathmore in the Belly, ſome Inches above the Navel; which Wound went through the Inteſtines and the Back, a little lower than where the ſaid Weapon entered the Belly; of which Wound he died ſoon after.

The Indictment, in the firſt Place, charges the Fact as proceeding from a cauſeleſs Ill-will and Reſentment the Pannel had conceived againſt the Defunct, who, at the Time the Wound was given, had done nothing that could be pretended as a Colour or Cauſe of Provocation: And a Circumſtance is noticed, from which it may be inferred, that there was deadly Hatred and Malice; namely, That after one Puſh there was a ſecond, whereby the Wound went quite through his Body.

There is a ſecond Branch of the Indictment, in which the Circumſtance of premeditate Malice and forethought Felony needed not to be libelled; and he is charged only with Murder or Homicide, as ſeparately relevant. And, laſtly, Art and Part is charged upon him.

At calling before the Lords of Juſticiary, againſt the firſt Branch of the Indictment, it was excepted, "That the Indictment was too general, "particular Circumſtances not being expreſt from which the cauſeleſs "Ill-will or Reſentment mentioned, and forethought and premeditate "Malice could be inferred, whereby the Pannel was deprived of the Be"nefit due to all Pannels, when tried for their Life, to exculpate him"ſelf, by ſhewing, that if at any Time, prior to the Time mentioned "in the Indictment, there was any Appearance of Grudge or Quarrel be"tween the Defunct and him, there was an After-reconciliation and en"tire Friendſhip: And it was ſaid, That general Libels ought not to be "ſuſtained."

To this it was anſwered, That a previous Grudge is charged, and that the deceaſt was invaded without the leaſt Colour or Cauſe of Provocation; which is the ſtrongeſt Evidence of Forethought, eſpecially when joined with this other Particular, that the firſt Thruſt was followed with a ſecond Puſh, which was a Mark of inveterate and relentleſs Malice; and that it was ſufficient to charge a previous Quarrel in general, which would be made appear by the Proof. Nor will it be found, that in Libels of forethought Felony, it is uſual or neceſſary to libel all the Circumſtances from which the Forethought may be preſumed, eſpecially when the ſpecies facti is charged in that Manner, as affords the Preſumption of Forethought, ſetting forth, That the Wound was given without the leaſt Colour or Cauſe of Provocation on the Part of the Defunct at that Time. Neither can it be thought unfair with regard to the Pannel, who if he had any relevant Ground of Exculpation, would have Acceſs to prove Friendſhip with the Defunct, to take off any Charge of precedent Quarrels, whereof he could not be ignorant. And ſtill there muſt be leſs Ground of Complaint, where no good Reaſon of Exculpation is offered, whereby the Pannel can be allowed to adduce Proof, which it is believed is, without Contradiction, the Caſe upon the firſt Branch of the Libel.

As to the two laſt Branches of the Indictment, it was alledged, "That "ſeveral Circumſtances attending the Fact complained of were concealed, "which, when opened, afforded the Pannel plain and obvious Defences; "and therefore it was informed, That the Pannel, a Perſon diſpoſed to "Peace, and in entire Friendſhip with the Defunct, chanced to be in "Company with him about the Time charged in the Indictment, with "one John Lyon of Bridgeton, and others: That Bridgeton gave him the "higheſt Provocation, not only by Words, but by proceeding ſo far, as "to throw him into a Kennel, where the Pannel was in Hazard of pe"riſhing, being extremely drunk: That getting up, heated with Liquor, "and ſo extremely provoked, he drew his Sword, and purſued Bridgeton, "and that the Defunct thruſting himſelf between them, caſually received "the Thruſt aimed at another."

From theſe Circumſtances, it was pled for the Pannel, "That if "he did kill the Defunct, it was a mere Miſadventure, rather a Misfor"tune as [than] a Fault, and in no Event could ſubject him to the pœna "ordinaria; for that, 1*mo*, In theſe Circumſtances had he killed the ſaid "John Lyon of Bridgeton, the Pain of Death could not have been inflict"ed either by the Law of God, the Common Law, nor by the municipal "Law of this Kingdom, neither by the Laws of other well-governed "Realms; particularly by the Laws of our neighbouring Nation, in re"gard the Fact was done of Suddenty, by a Perſon in Drink, and highly "provoked."

And, 1*mo*, As to the Law of God, Chap. xxi. Ver. 13. of Exodus was appealed to, where it is ſaid, That if a Man lie not in Wait, there was to be a Place appointed whither he ſhould fly; which ſeemed to require Forethought. And the xxxvth Chap. of Numbers, Ver. 22. where it was ſaid, That if any one thruſt another ſuddenly without Enmity, the Congregation was to judge between the Slayer and the Revenger of Blood; from which it would ſeem, that Slaughter or Suddenty was not puniſhable by Death.

To this it was anſwered, That in the Law of God the general Rule was, Whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed: And at the Hand of Man, and at the Hand of every Man's Brother, and at the Hand of every Beaſt was the Life of Man to be required, Gen. Chap. ix. That by the Law of Moſes, Death of a Suddenty was plainly capital; nor had the Manſlayer the Benefit of the City of Refuge, but where the Slaughter was mere Misfortune, and caſual, which was plainly the Meaning of the Words in Exodus, If a Man lie not in Wait, but God deliver him into his Hand; which could not with any Propriety be underſtood of Slaughter committed, where the Intention and Deſign antecedit ictum licet non congreſſum.

And this Matter is clearly explained in the xxxvth Chap. of Numbers, where he who ſmites with an Inſtrument of Iron, is called a MURDERER; and where it is ſaid, That he who ſmites with a throwing Stone, or with a Hand-weapon of Wood, wherewith a Perſon may die, and he die, the Murderer is ſurely to be put to Death. And then the Law proceeds plainly to treat of Caſes, where Death enſues from Strokes or Thruſts of a Weapon not deadly, and there it requires indeed Hatred and Enmity; but if it be done ſuddenly and without Enmity, or (which is remarkable) in the 23d Verſe, With any Stone wherewith a Man may die, ſeeing him not, and was not his Enemy, nor ſought his Harm; then the Congregation was to judge between the Slayer and the Revenger of Blood. From which 'tis plain, that Slaughter upon Suddenty, even without Forethought or previous Enmity, was capital by the Law of Moſes, if the Wound was given with a lethal [deadly] Weapon, except when it was done by mere Chance, As by throwing a Stone, whereby a Man may die, the Perſon who threw it ſeeing him not, and ſo at no Time was his Enemy, or ſought his Harm. And this is the Caſe mentioned, Chap. xix. Ver. 4. Deut. where it is ſaid, Whoſo killeth his Neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in Time paſt (which is limited by the Example immediately ſubjoined to Homicide merely caſual), ſhall fly into one of theſe Cities, and live. Now, in the preſent Caſe, the Nature of the Weapon and of the Wound are ſuch, as clearly exclude founding with any Colour upon the Diſpoſition of the Law of Moſes, though the Queſtion were of the Pannel's claiming the Benefit of the City of Refuge. But neither is it an Argument of any Force to plead, that where the Benefit of the City of Refuge was granted, that by the Law of Nature the Crime was not capital; for the Revenger of Blood could never have been tolerated to kill without the City of Refuge, where innocent Blood was ſpilt, whereby the Land muſt have been polluted, and the Subjects were permitted impune, ſo notoriouſly to break in upon the eſtabliſhed Laws of Nature; and therefore, though it is an Argument of unavoidable Force, that where-ever, by the Law of Moſes, capital Puniſhments are allowed, ſuch Puniſhments are lawful: But the Argument is not of equal Strength, that where the Powers of the Law were ſuſpended by the jus aſyli eſtabliſhed by poſitive Precept, that therefore, in Countries where there is no ſuch Privilege, either by the Laws of God, or the Laws of the Land, that there the Puniſhment is not to be capital, where the jus aſyli could have been claimed.

2*do*, It was contended, "That by the Common Law, not only dolus, "but propoſitum was neceſſary; and that Slaughter committed impetu et "rixa were not to be puniſhed capitally." And to this Purpoſe, the Authority of the learned Voet. was cited, who ſeems to ſay, That in rixa, if the Perſon cannot be diſcovered who gave the deadly Wound, the ordinary Puniſhment ſhould not take Place.

But when this Matter is conſidered, it is plain there ariſes no good Argument for the Pannel from the Common Law: For though there is a Difference to be made between propoſitum and machinatio præmeditata, and ſudden Paſſion and Heat of Drink, determining the Will to commit the Crime; yet as Laws were made and became neceſſary, chiefly from the depraved Paſſions of Mankind, they cannot afford a ſufficient Excuſe againſt the ordinary Puniſhment of an atrocious Crime; and there is dolus, when a Crime is even committed of a ſudden, although there be no Forethought: So it is commonly ſaid, that Opportunity makes the Thief, and Theft is committed impetu, nevertheleſs not without dole. Nor is it neceſſary to prove or libel a Forethought in the Commiſſion of the Crime. In the ſame Manner Paſſion or Provocation may unfortunately determine the Will to the Commiſſion of a horrid Crime; but it would be of dangerous Conſequence to allow of Bloodſhed under Colour of Paſſions which Men ought to ſubdue, or of Drunkenneſs which they ought to avoid, or of a ſudden vicious Turn of Mind; and therefore, in the Roman Law, whoever committed Slaughter dolo malo, whether deliberately and upon Forethought, or of Suddenty, was to be puniſhed ex lege Cornelia de Sicariis: And to ſhow that it was ſufficient, that the Deſign ſhould only precede the Act from which Death followed, and not the meeting of the Perſons, as the Acts of the Mind are only to be known by external Circumſtances; the Kind of Weapon, in the ſame Manner as in the Law of Moſes, was ſufficient to found a Preſumption of ſuch propoſitum, as, joined with the Act of Killing, brought the Manſlayer under the pœna legis Corneliæ: So in the l. 1. § 3. ff. ad legem Corneliam de Sic. it is ſaid, Si gladium ſtrinxerit, & in eo percuſſerit, indubitate occidendi animo id eum admiſiſſe; and if prior Forethought had been neceſſary, the Kind of Weapon could not poſſibly have founded a ſufficient Preſumption: But as it manifeſtly made appear the Intention to kill, whether that Intention had its Birth from Paſſion or Drink, it was voluntary Slaughter, done dedita opera, and therefore to be puniſhed capitally. And the Paſſage cited from the learned Voet. rather confirms this Doctrine, That if in rixa, which muſt ſuppoſe Suddenty, the Perſon who inflicted the mortal Wound was diſcovered, he was to be ſubjected to the ordinary Puniſhment. And the ſame Author, § 9. of that Title, obſerves, That though ſuch as commit Slaughter, calore iracundiæ, may be ſaid impetu delinquere; yet there neque judicium, neque aſſenſus animi, neque voluntas deeſt; and ſays, That a Perſon provoked by verbal Injuries, how great ſoever, was not free from the pœna ordinaria. And the Truth is, if Paſſion and Provocation were ſufficient to excuſe Slaughter, it were in vain to lay down the Rules ſo anxiouſly conceived in the Laws concerning the moderamen inculpatæ tutelæ, where the Slayer muſt prove that he was conſtitutus in periculo vitæ. And had the Caſe ſtood otherwiſe in the Roman Law, it could never have been doubted, when Jealouſy was the Rage of a Man, and Adultery the higheſt Provocation againſt a Huſband, and a real Injury; the Queſtion could never have been ſtated to be determined by the Emperor, as in l. 38. ff. § 8. ad legem Juliam de adult. Whether a Huſband, impetu tractus doloris, uxorem in adulterio deprehenſam interfecerit, was liable to the pœna legis Corneliæ de Sicariis? And who, by that Deciſion, upon the peculiar Circumſtances of the Caſe was exeemed [exempted], and nevertheleſs made ſubject, ſi loci humilis, of being condemned ad opus perpetuum, and if honeſtior was to be condemned relegari in inſulam. But as the Caſe muſt be determined upon the Law of Scotland, it is unneceſſary to dwell too long upon the Arguments drawn from the Roman Law.

3*tio*, It was contended for the Pannel, "That by the Law of Scotland, "Slaughter and Murder were of old different Species of Crimes, and only

" Murder committed upon forethought Felony was properly computed " Murder, and punished as such; but that Slaughter committed upon " suddenty, or chaud melle, and in rixa, was deemed only homicidium cul- " posum, and not punishable by Death." And to support this Position, several Acts of Parliament were appealed to, by which it was statuted, That Murder was to be capitally punished; but chaud melle, or Slaughter committed upon Suddenty, was to be punishable according to the old Laws: And that in this Case, if the Pannel had even killed Bridgeton, at whom he aimed the Thrust, in the Circumstances above set forth, it was not Murder upon Forethought, but upon Suddenty and high Provocation.

To this it was answered, That this Doctrine, so directly contrary to the received Opinion, had little Countenance from the old Laws and Acts of Parliament, less from the constant Practice before the Act of Parliament King Charles II. in the Year 1661, and stood in plain Contradiction to this last Law, and the constant Practice and repeated Decisions of the Court of Justiciary from that Time down to this Day.

By the old Law, particularly Chap. 3. of the first Statutes of King Robert I. intitled, Men condemned to the Death should not be redeemed, IT IS STATUTED AND ORDAINED, GIF ANY MAN, IN ANY TIME COMING OR BYGANE, IS CONVICT OR ATTAINTED OF Slaughter, REIF, OR ANY OTHER CRIME TOUCHING LIFE AND LIMB " COMMON JUSTICE " SHALL BE DONE UPON HIM, WITHOUT ANY RANSOME." Here Slaughter in general is mentioned, and Justice was to be done upon the Person convict of it, and the Punishment by the Title was plainly Death: So that, at common Law, Slaughter in general was capital. The next Paragraph does indeed save the King's Power (which must be the Power of pardoning), and the Liberties granted by the King to the Kirk and Kirkmen, and other Lords; which must be understood of special Immunities in the case of Manslaughter; For no Privilege was to protect against Murder upon Forethought; and the Exception confirms the Rule.

By Chap. 43. of the Statutes of King Robert III. it is statuted, THAT NA MAN USE ANY DESTRUCTION, HERSHIPS, BURNING, REIF, Slaughter, IN TIME TO COME, UNDER THE PAIN OF TINSEL OF LIFE AND GOODS: Whereby the Pain of Death is clearly made the Punishment of Slaughter in general. And in the immediate subsequent Chapter, the Sheriff was to take diligent Inquisition of Destroyers of the Country, or such as had destroyed the King's Lieges with Hershipps, Slaughter, &c. and was to take Bail from them, if arrested, to compear at the next Justice-ayr; and if Bail was not given, the Sheriff was to put him to the Knowledge of an Assize; And gif he be taynt with the Assize for sic an Trespassour, it is said, HE SHALL BE CONDEMNED TO DEATH: Which seems only to relate to Manslaughter, and not to Murder upon forethought Felony, which was one of the Pleas of the Crown, to be tried only before the King's Justiciar; as is evident from Chap. 11. King Malcolm II's Laws, and Chap. 13 and 15. whereas Slaughter might be tried by the Sheriff, where there was a certain Accuser, as appears from Book I. of the Regiam Majestatem, Chap. 1. § 7, 8, 9.

There are sundry others of the old Statutes, that seem plainly to presuppose that Slaughter was capital, and particularly these of Alexander II. Chap. 2. § 3, 4, 5, 6. And so Skene, in his Treatise of Crimes, Tit. 2. Chap. 6. says, That Slaughter in rixa, or chaud melle, is generally punished by Death, and Confiscation of the moveable Goods pertaining to the Trespassour; but with this Difference, that the Girth or Sanctuary was no Refuge to him who commits Slaughter by forethought Felony, but he should be delivered to the Judge Ordinary, to underly the Law: Which plainly appears from Act 23. Parl 4. James V. whereby Masters of Girth are ordained to deliver up such Persons as are guilty of Murder upon forethought Felony. And it is in vain to found upon Law 90. Parl. 6. James I. which says in the End, GIF IT BE FORETHOUGHT FELONY, HE SHALL DIE THEREFORE; because the Act relates to all Manslayers; and though that particular and most atrocious Species be mentioned, as that for which the Murderer should die, yet the Argument will not hold, That therefore no other Kind of Slaughter was capital: For it is there said in the general, That if the Slayer is taken with red Hand, the Law shall be done upon him within that Sun; which cannot be understood of a Crime not capital. And Sir George Mackenzie, in his Observations upon it, says, This may seem to imply, that Men die not for Murder committed without forethought Felony; but this holds not in our Law, for Murder, though committed without forethought Felony, is punishable by Death, except it was either casual, or in Self-Defence.

The Act 51. Parl. 3. James I. was improperly founded on by the Pannel's Procurators; for that Act does no more than extend the Difference between forethought Felony and chaud melle to all Transgressions as well as Slaughter; as Sir George Mackenzie observes upon that Law, where he says, That chaud melle, or homicidium in rixa commissum, is capital by our present Law.

That Criminals who resorted to, and took Sanctuary in Churches, had Protection, though their Crimes were capital, is extremely plain from Chap. 6. of the Statutes of K. Alexander II. where it is said, That Thieves and Reivers who fly to holy Kirk, if moved with Repentance, he confess that he has heavily sinned, and for the Love of God is come to the House of God for Safety of himself, he shall have Peace in this manner, That he shall not lose his Life nor Limb, but restore what he had taken, and satisfy the King, and swear upon the Evangel, That for thereafter, they shall never commit Reif nor Theft; but if he declared himself innocent, he was to be tryed. And in the last Paragraph of that Chap. it is said, " Moreover Manslayers, &c. if they fly, in " manner foresaid, to the Kirk, the Law aforesaid shall be kept and observed " to them."

There seems to have been this other Difference too, by the Books of the old Law between Murder upon Forethought and Slaughter, that the Trial of Murder was summar, whereas Manslaughter could not be tried till after forty Days, as appears by the Statutes of Robert II. from Chap. 3. to Chap. 9.

After the Reformation, when the jus asyli, formerly given to Churches, dropped, the Distinction between Murder and Manslaughter was looked on with less Attention, and Libels were commonly framed indifferently, for Murder, and Slaughter in general, without any Mention of forethought Felony; nor was it ever objected, that Malice or premeditate Design was requisite to make the Crime capital: And Criminals were punished to Death, where from the Proof there was not a Colour or Pretence of Forethought, or any premeditate Design; as will appear from looking into the Books of Adjournal. And many Instances might be given, particularly in the Case of Jean Currie against William Fraser, the last of July, 1641; where the Pannel was condemned upon an extrajudicial Confession, adminiculated with other Circumstances; in which he set forth the Fact, that the Defunct and he had some little Quarrel about a Staff; and hearing that he had murdered his Brother, he came into a House where the Defunct was; and that either the Defunct, or some other that was by, took the Pannel by the Arm, to hold him: Having freed himself, he aimed a Stroke with a Wninger at the Defunct's Arm; but missing it, he struck the Defunct about the Pap: And upon this Proof, he was found guilty, and executed.

In the Case of Bruce against Marshall, the 3d April, 1664, Slaughter was libelled, and he was condemned upon his own judicial Confession: From which it appears, That he was so far from having any Forethought, that he suffered not only the greatest Provocation in Words, but was even beat with Hands and Feet by the Defunct while he was on the Ground; but at last getting up, and (as the Confession bears) being overcome with Passion, he drew a Knife, and struck at him in two several Places of his Body, whereby he died. And upon this Confession, where there was Suddenty, Provocation and Passion, he was brought in as guilty, and condemned to be beheaded.

The Law remaining somewhat uncertain concerning casual Homicide, and there being no longer any Benefit of Girth as formerly; in the Year 1649, an Act was past during the Usurpation, for removing all Question and Doubt that might thereafter arise in criminal Pursuits for Slaughter, ordaining, that the Cases of Homicide after following, viz. casual Homicide, Homicide in lawful Defence, and Homicide committed upon Thieves and Robbers, should not in Time coming be punished by Death, notwithstanding any Laws or Acts of Parliament, or any Practick made heretofore, or observed in punishing of Slaughter. And this past into a Law after the Restoration in the Year 1661; and at the same time, all Decisions given conform to this Act, since the 4th of February 1649 Years, are declared to be sufficient to secure all Parties interested, as if the Act had been of that Date; which was necessary, because the Acts during the Usurpation had been rescinded: And this Law has ever been looked upon as the Standard. And the Practice of the Court of Justiciary, since that Time, clearly demonstrates, that Slaughter of Suddenty, and Slaughter upon Provocation, which could not be brought under one or other of the Particulars there mentioned, have been taken to be capital.

The Procurators for the Pannel here observed, " That though in the " Cases there mentioned, the Law ordained Slaughter not to be capital, " yet it neither said, nor supposed, that the former Law, whereby Pannels " were intitled to plead against a capital Punishment, was thereby abro- " gated, but only statuted in the Cases there mentioned."

To this it was answered, That the Narrative of the Statute was for removing of all Question and Doubt that may arise thereafter in criminal Pursuits for Slaughter, and consequently cannot be supposed to have left doubtful Cases, that the Pannel's Procurators must admit were not so clear as casual Homicide, and Homicide in Defence: nay, the Law seems to suppose pretty plainly, that all Slaughter by the Laws and Acts of Parliament, or Practicks, was capital, not declaring what was Law from any other Period than the Year 1649, but enacting the same with a non obstante, and judging it necessary to confirm the Decisions that had past, conform to that Act during the Usurpation, which would have been vain, if it had not been at least doubtful, whether casual Homicide, Homicide in lawful Defence, and Slaughter committed upon Thieves and Robbers, did not subject those guilty to the Pain of Death: And if those Degrees of Homicide were so much as doubtful, it is not possible to conceive that chaud melle, or Slaughter committed, dedita opera, though without Forethought, was, by the Law of Scotland, not capital. Or if it should be supposed to have been doubtful, whether these last Degrees of Homicide were capital: that the Legislature, upon a Narrative, that all Question and Doubt that might arise hereafter in criminal Pursuits for Slaughter, should be removed, would have enacted in the clearer Cases, with a non obstante, and left the more difficult in the dark, as surely the greatest Advocates for Slaughter on Suddenty must admit, that, at least, it is more culpable than either Homicide merely casual, or Homicide in lawful Defence.

The Argument drawn from the Rubrick of the Act, which mentions Degrees of casual Homicide only, can conclude no more, than that the Title is imperfect; and it would be resting too much upon an Argument à rubro, to make it defeat what is said in the Law, That all Questions concerning Slaughter were thereby to be removed, and which opposes casual Homicide to Homicide in lawful Defence; and consequently cannot under the Words, casual Homicide, comprehehend all Slaughter not upon forethought Felony. And Sir George Mackenzie in his Observations upon the Act takes notice, that the Title is very ridiculous, and consequently no Argument can be drawn from it.

One Thing may not be improper to notice, is, that if killing by forethought Felony was the only Species of Slaughter capital, the Crown was disabled from pardoning any capital Slaughter whatsomever, which does not appear to have been the Opinion of our Lawyers.

As to the Decisions subsequent to this Law, they will be found entirely agreeable to the Doctrine now laid down; Sir George Mackenzie observes, that tho' many Lawyers are positive, that tho' homicidium in rixa, even where the Author of the Plea is known, may by the Rigor of Law be punished by Death, yet that no Country uses this Rigor; yet he remembered, that in William Douglass's Case, this was urged, and albeit it was not proven that he was the Killer, yet the Assize found him guilty, and he thereupon died. This is a Case more favourable, than where the Person that gave the mortal Wound is known, though given suddenly, and even upon Provocation; and therefore shews what our Law is, and with how little Reason the Procurators for the Pannel maintain their Argument upon the Law of Scotland.

In the Case, his Majesty's Advocate against Nicolson, the 24th June, 1673, Murder and Slaughter, without Forethought, were charged upon Nicolson, the Pannel; and his Procurators pleaded the Benefit of the Act of Parliament anent casual Homicide, in the several Degrees thereof, he being in a Condition that he was not able to remember. To this it was answered, That the Defence was not relevant, in regard the Homicide could not be said to be casual, such as the Case of throwing of Stones over Dikes, and accidentally killing a Passenger: And the Pannel having afterwards proponed a Defence, That being in use to carry a Gun as a Fowler, and calling accidentally cidentally for Meat to his Dogs at a Mill, the Defunct fell upon him, and offered to ſecure him as a French Soldier, or fit to be one; in the Struggle, his Gun being half bend, went off, and killed the Defunct: Both the Libel and Defence were found relevant, and it appeared upon the Proof, that Nicolſon was drunk, and that there was no previous Quarrel; but taking Exception at ſomewhat the Defunct ſaid, he ſhot him with his Gun; and by the Verdict of the Aſſize, he was found guilty of the Slaughter committed upon the Defunct, and ſentenced to have his Head ſtruck off in the Graſs-market; which ſhows that neither Drunkenneſs nor Suddenty is a relevant Defence againſt the pœna ordinaria in Slaughter.

And, in the Caſe of Murray contra Gray, 10th June, 1678, the Lords found the Libel relevant, and that there was no Neceſſity of any diſtinct Probation for proving precogitate Malice; which clearly ſhows that Slaughter, other than upon Forethought, was capital. And to ſhow that Provocation and Paſſion are not received as Defences againſt the pœna ordinaria, a Multitude of Deciſions might be brought, particularly in the Caſe of Aird, who was indicted in 1693, for the Slaughter of Agnes Bayne, having given her ſome ſtrokes on the Side and Belly with his Foot, by which ſhe fell into Fainting-Fits, and immediately died. The Defence was, great Provocation and caſual Homicide: Provocation, in as far as ſhe threw a Chamber-Pot in his Face; and when he gave her hard Words, ſhe and her Neighbours fell upon him, and beat him; upon which he gave her the Strokes above-mentioned. And in that Trial it was argued, there was no animus occidendi, no previous Malice, no mortal Weapon; and the Texts from Scripture urged in defence of the preſent Pannel, and the Arguments from the civil Law, and from our own Acts of Parliament were urged: Nevertheleſs the Lords found the Libel relevant, repelled the Defences; and, upon the Proof, he was ſentenced to die.

In the Caſe of William Carmichael in 1694, Drunkenneſs was founded on to excuſe a pœna ordinaria, and Forethought was neither libelled, nor proven; and the Lords found the Libel relevant, and, upon the Proof, he was ſentenced to be hanged.

In the Year 1695, George Cuming, Writer in Edinburgh, was indicted for the Crime of Murder or Manſlaughter of Patrick Falconer; the Defences now offered for the Pannel, upon the Diſtinction in the old Law, between Forethought and chaud melle, were offered; nevertheleſs the Libel was found relevant, and the Aſſize returned a Verdict guilty of Manſlaughter; upon which he was condemned to die.

In the Caſe of Burnet of Carlops, the 22d January, 1711, though a Defence was ſuſtained, yet the Libel without Forethought was found relevant: And in that of Hamilton of Green, the 30th June, 1716, the Pannel offered to prove, That he was accidentally at the Houſe of Thomas Arcle, of whoſe Murder he is accuſed, at the Day libelled, with ſome of his Acquaintances, and had no deadly Weapon along with him; That he became inebriated to a great Degree, and having left the Houſe, and returned to aſk for the Slip or Cover of the Sheath of a Sword, the Defunct gave him moſt indecent, injurious and ſcurrilous Language, and perſiſting in it, the Pannel puſhed, or ſtruck at him with his Sword, having the Scabbard thereon, that he had Reaſon to believe had a Crampet upon it: And being ſtill more and more provoked by repeated, injurious Words, to protect himſelf from further Inſolence he had Reaſon to look for, the Pannel ſtill remaining on Horſeback, the Defunct ruſhed himſelf upon the Sword. And this circumſtantiate Fact was offered to be proven. Nevertheleſs the Libel was found relevant, and the Pannel's haill Defences repelled, and, upon the Proof, was ſentenced to have his Head ſevered from his Body; and was accordingly beheaded.

In the Caſe of Thomas Roſs and Jaffrey Roberts, the 20th July, 1716, it was pled for the Pannels, that being Recruits lately come from England to Scotland, and not knowing the Way, they aſked the Defunct the Road to Edinburgh, who refuſing to ſhew it, and one of the Pannels expoſtulating with him, why he treated a Stranger ſo, that came to ſerve the King? He uttered very diſreſpectful Words with reſpect to his Majeſty; and one of the Pannels having called him Villain for ſuch opprobrious Expreſſions, he came up to Roſs, and with his Fiſt gave him a Blow on the Face, and then pulled him down to the Ground, and beat him with a great Stick, to the imminent Danger of his Life, ſaying, That he ſhould never go alive out of his Hands: And Roberts having come to his Aſſiſtance, and reſcued him a little; Roſs, the Pannel, gave the Defunct a Wound with a Kniſe, whereof he died. Roſs pleaded, There neither was nor could be forethought Felony, or premeditate Malice, againſt a Perſon whom he had never ſeen before: That it was committed upon Suddenty: That he had the higheſt Provocation, both verbal and real. Nevertheleſs, by the Interlocutor, Roſs, the Pannel, his giving the Wound was found relevant to infer the Pain of Death. And the Defence from Provocation by Words, and receiving a Blow on the Face, being pulled down to the Ground, and beat with a great Stick to the Danger of his Life, jointly ſuſtained relevant to reſtrict the Libel to an arbitrary Puniſhment, was found to be elided by the Reply, That, at the time of giving the Wound to the Defunct, the Defunct's Hands were held by Jaffrey Roberts, the other Pannel. From whence, 'tis evident, that Slaughter upon Suddenty, in rixa or chaud melle, and by a Perſon who had received the greateſt verbal and real Injuries, even beyond that of being thrown into the Kennel, of the Nature that is ſet forth into which the preſent Pannel was thrown, is by that Interlocutor found homicidium doloſum, and not culpoſum, but capital.

And, in a very late Trial, in the Caſe of Davidſon, the Soldier, Slaughter upon the greateſt Suddenty was ſuſtained, and he was upon the Proof executed.

And the Judgment given in 1717, in the Caſe of Brock and Lindſay, determines this Point beyond all Diſpute. Theſe Pannels were accuſed of the Murder of one Anderſon: And as the Libel did expreſly ſet forth a Quarrel and a Struggling betwixt the two Pannels and the Defunct, which made it directly an homicidium in rixa; ſo the Pannels, at leaſt Lindſay, offered a pretty ſtrong Defence, namely, that the Defunct, without any Provocation, juſtled them, and ſtruck at Lindſay, and beat him down to the Ground; and it was while they were on the Ground, the Wound was given. And the Defence was pled for two ſeveral Purpoſes: Firſt, That the Crime was not capital, becauſe no forethought Felony. And, 2dly, To intitle them to the Act of Indemnity, under which all Homicides were included, except wilful Murder, and Slaughter of forethought Felony. And the Interlocutor upon the Relevancy was in thir Words, Find the Pannels, or either of them, at the Place and Time libelled, their giving Archibald Anderſon a Cut or Wound in the Neck or Throat, or other mortal Wound, with a Knife or other mortal Weapon, whereof he, the Defunct, ſoon thereafter died; or that the ſaid Pannels, both or either of them, were art and part therein, relevant to infer the Pains of Death, and other Pains libelled: And repel the haill Defences for the Pannel, excepting that Defence pled upon his Majeſty's gracious Act of Indemnity; anent which the ſaid Lords ſuperſeded to give their Judgment, till the Concluſion of the Probation, and Return of the Verdict.

This then is an undoubted Authority, that Homicide may, by the Law of Scotland, infer the Pain of Death, though it be neither wilful Murder, properly ſo ſpeaking, nor forethought Felony; otherwiſe the Court could not have found the Crime relevant to infer the Pains of Death, and at the ſame time reſerve the Conſideration, whether there was any forethought Felony, or not.

Upon this Interlocutor a Proof was adduced, and a Verdict returned, finding Lindſay, one of the Pannels, guilty; and yet the Court having reſumed the Conſideration of the Indemnity, found him intitled to the Benefit of it: That is, in other Words, they found the Crime was neither voluntary Murder, nor Slaughter of forethought Felony. So that 'tis plain, had not the Indemnity intervened, Lindſay muſt have ſuffered Death for killing, though there was no previous Deſign of Forethought.

And an Interlocutor upon the Relevancy, much to the ſame Purpoſe with the former one, was alſo pronounced, the 31ſt of Auguſt, 1721, in the Caſe of Samuel Matthews, a Soldier; where the Libel was found relevant to infer the Pain of Death, reſerving the Conſideration of another Act of Indemnity then pled for the Pannel.

It would be in vain, and lengthen a Paper already too long, to run through all the Deciſions which ſhew, that neither the Drunkenneſs of the Pannel, nor Provocation given him, nor the Suddenty upon which the Fact was committed, can afford a Defence to the Pannel, to exculpate the Slaughter, or leſſen the ordinary Puniſhment: And therefore the Purſuers ſhall leave the firſt Branch of the Defence with the Lords, with this Obſervation, that if it is really founded in Law, by looking into the Books of Adjournal, one would think our Law has hitherto been very ill underſtood.

2do, It was offered, what indeed is alone applicable in the preſent Caſe, "That if the Pannel intended only to wound or kill Bridgeton, and by "Miſadventure the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore was wounded, and of that "Wound died, the pœna ordinaria was not to be inflicted."

It was anſwered, That according to the Rules of the civil Law, he who intending to kill one, kills another, is nevertheleſs ſubject to the pœna ordinaria; ſo Julius Clarus delivers his Opinion in his Receptæ Sententiæ, lib. 5. § homicidium, N. 6. where, after having taken notice, that the contrary was indeed the Opinion of ſome, adds, Sed certe ego ſi caſus contingeret, illi facerem caput amputari. And the learned Mathæus, lib. 48. tit. de Sicariis, § 12. gives the ſame Opinion, obſerving that the Act is conſummate, there is animus or Deſign of killing, and Death: That it would be a ridiculous Defence, that the Pannel intended to ſteal the Goods of one Man, but happened to ſteal thoſe of another; or againſt Adultery, that he intended to defile one Man's Wife, and happened to light upon that of another: And he thinks 'tis as unreaſonable to hope for Safety from this Defence, that the Meaning was to kill one, but another received the Stroke, and died.

Voet. in his Commentary agrees with them, lib. 48. tit. 8. n. 2. where he ſays, that there is no Difference, Sive vulnus in titium directum ab eo declinatum, Mævio in proximo ſtanti lethale fuerit, ſive denique occidatur qui cædis impediendæ cauſa, ſeſe medium inter agreſſorem & defendentem interpoſuerit: quia prævalet, quod principale eſt, nec error talis tollit aut occidendi animum, aut cædem lege Cornelia vindicandam. And for this not only founds upon the l. 18. § 3. & § ult. ff. de injur. and l. 5. § 1. ff. de ſervo corrupto; but adds the Authorities of Farinacius, quæſt. 125 n. 156 & 157. as alſo, that of Fachinæus, Carpzovius and Berlichius, and others. And this Opinion obviates the Defence, as put in its moſt favourable Light, which however would be of very delicate Proof, that the Defunct thruſt himſelf between Bridgeton and the Pannel, and received the Stroke aimed at the other.

The learned Sande, lib. 5. tit. 9. defin. 6. which has this Title, Qui alium pro alio occidit, nihilominus ordinaria, leg. Cornel. pœna affiendus, ſays, after agreeing, that, according to the Roman Law, ſuch Error would not have excuſed the Murder, Hæc ſententia ubique uſu obtinuit, & ſecundum eam, reus ad mortem condemnatus & decapitatus eſt, 17th November, anno 1621; and there alledges the Authority of Gomeſius, Emanuel, Soir, and Carolus Molinæus, Qui alios cumulat, in his Book ad conſuetudines Pariſienſes. And Sir George Mackenzie in his Criminals, tit. Murder, § 9. ſays, after ſtating the Queſtion, "Yet I think he ſhould die, ſeeing "the Deſign of killing a Man, and not any particular Man, is Murder; "and the Killer intended to deface GOD Almighty's Image, and to take "from the King a Subject."

'Tis nothing to the Purpoſe, that ſome of the Authors who write upon the Roman Law, are of a different Opinion, in a Caſe not determined in Words by the Text, when the Bulk of the Commentators are of the other Side, the moſt recent and of greateſt Authority; and when it appears to be received as a Rule by the Practice of Nations, that the ordinary Puniſhment ſhould be inflicted. And it may not be improper to obſerve, that the Caſes where Lawyers diſſent from the received Opinion, are generally unjuſtifiable Homicide, that is, where the Byſtander was killed, when the Killer intended to execute his Purpoſe in lawful Defence, and not in homicidio culpoſo, which is the higheſt the Pannel's Caſe could poſſibly be pled upon Provocation, according to any Opinion delivered by the ſtrongeſt Advocates for the Queſtion the Pannel pleads.

That it is not always neceſſary, that the Intention ſhould be directed towards the Miſchief done, in order to inflict the Pain of Death, muſt be evident from looking to the xxi. Chap. of Exod. Ver. 22. and 23. where, If a Woman with Child is hurt when men are ſtriving, and Miſchief follow; Life is to be given for Life. And the Kind of Killing now in queſtion was plainly ſuch as, according to the Law of Moſes, would not have intitled the Slayer to the Benefit of the City of Refuge: For though in the xix. Chap. of Deut. Ver. 4. Whoſo killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time paſt, is ſaid to be intitled to that Priviledge; yet this is limited immediately with an Example of Manſlaughter merely caſual.

The Procurators for the Pannel inſiſted, "That this Kind of Killing "was intirely caſual, beyond, and without the Intention of the Party: That "in the Caſe of Maſſon, in the Year 1674, Burnet of Carlops, and ſeveral "others, where it appeared there was no Intention to Kill, the Puniſh-"ment was mitigated."

It was answered, That where, from the Nature of the Weapon, and Means by which the Wound was given, taking all the Circumstances together, there was no Evidence or Presumption that the Pannel intended Death to any Person whatsoever; and the propositum was neither proved, nor could be presumed, as in the Case of Masson. And in that of Burnet of Carlops, where Persons having Swords, only struck with Staves, it was held as approaching towards a casual Homicide. But that can never be pretended, when the Wound given as libelled was so clearly mortal, and the Instrument the most lethal [deadly]; and the Decision of Carlops, even with that Difference, stands single in the Books of Adjournal.

It was further contended for the Pannel, "That as animus occidendi, "and Death following, are admitted to be necessary, in order to inflict the "highest Punishment; so as from the Circumstances mentioned in Ex- "culpation, 'tis evident there was no Intention against the Defunct: And "it cannot be known whether the Pannel's Design was to kill Bridgeton, "since he was not killed, or if the Wound would have been mortal, had "the Sword reached him; and consequently the necessary Requisites to "constitute a Murder, were not to be found here."

It was answered, That the Invasion with a mortal Weapon, with which the Defunct was killed, was a sufficient Proof in Law that the Invader intended to kill, since Death followed; and that there is no wounding by Measure, and Certainty not to kill. The Act implies dolus and Malice, which, with Death following, makes Murder, without any further Proof of an Act of the Will to kill; and there would have been as little Evidence that the Pannel intended to kill Bridgeton, if he had actually received the Wound and died, because it was possible the Sword might have pierced further than he intended; and if he did not design to kill Bridgeton, and killed the Defunct, he must have been the Person against whom the Mischief was directed. As indeed it may be argued from the Rage and Drunkenness pled in Excuse and Defence, 'tis possible that ex rabie he intended to kill whomever he met with; and if Rage from Passion and Drink is allowed to palliate Murder, 'tis impossible any one can be safe. And these very Circumstances, without which the Defence has not a Colour, must, at the same Time, give Evidence, that the Pannel's Intention of pursuing Bridgeton with a Sword, was to kill and destroy him; for he pleads them to excuse his killing of the Defunct, as sufficient Provocations to incite him to it.

The Law of England was frequently mentioned by the Procurators for the Pannel in the pleading, as what would justify the Arguments brought for them; and particularly it was said, "That all Killing of a Suddenty "by that Law, was only Manslaughter, and not Murder." But the contrary will appear, by looking into Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, Book 1. Chap. 31. of Murder, where he clearly distinguishes between deliberate Murder, and Murder committed on a sudden: And in this last Case, Malice prepensed is, by the Law of England, often implied, as Lord Chief-Justice Keylinge lays it down, Regina versus Mawgidge, and justifies it by the Case of Holloway, who espying a Boy that came to cut Wood, took him, and tied him to an Horse's Tail with a Cord, and then gave the Horse two Blows, whereby he run away, and broke the Boy's Shoulder, whereof he died; which must have been sudden, and was adjudged Murder. And pag. 130, he supposes A to have been provoked by B, and to have drawn his Sword, and made a Pass at him, when B had no Weapon drawn, but missed him; thereupon B draws his Sword, and passes at A, and there being Interchange of Passes between them, A kills B. I hold, says the Author, this to be Murder in A, for A's Pass at B was malicious, and what B afterwards did was lawful. Here is both Suddenty and Provocation, and yet, in the Opinion of that great Lawyer, it would have been held Murder. And in the present Question, neither Bridgeton, nor the Deceased, had any Weapon drawn.

And to shew, that according to the Law of England, the aiming at one, and hitting another, does not make Death following Manslaughter; in the End of the next Page he sets down the Case of Dr. Williams, a Welshman, who having a Leek in his Hat, upon St. David's-Day, a certain Person pointed to a Jack-of-Lent that hung up hard by, and said to him, Look upon your Countryman! At which Dr. Williams being enraged, took a Hammer that lay upon a Stall hard by, and flung at him, which hit another, and killed him: And though being indicted upon the Statute of Stabbing, it was resolved he was not within that Statute, because of the Kind of Weapon; Yet, says the Author, if the Indictment had been for Murder, I do think that the Welshman ought to have been convicted thereof (a).

And since the Pannel's Procurators insisted so much upon the Law of England, the Pursuers cannot but mention the Authority of one of those Lawyers, as to one of the Cases they themselves stated in the Debate, Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown, Chap. 31, in fin. The Case is, That a Person shooting at tame Fowls with Intent to steal them, accidentally kills a Man; that Author says, That it is agreed it would be Murder, and not Manslaughter.

'Tis true indeed, that it would appear by the Law of England, as laid down in these Reports, that if there is Provocation, in some particular Cases, sufficient to alleviate the Act of Killing, it reduces it to a bare Homicide. But then no Provocation from Words is ever sustained, nor even Assaults, but upon this Ground, That he who was affronted or assaulted, might reasonably apprehend, that he that treated him in that Manner might have some further Design upon him, which resolves the Matter into a Kind of Self-Defence; and in this the Law of England differs from the Law of Scotland, which requires, in order to lawful Defence, and killing under the Notion of Danger from the Assailant, ut quis sit constitutus in Periculo Vitæ. But then there is no Pretence of apprehending dangerous Consequences, when the Party killed, or intended to be killed, was flying, and had no Weapon, as in this Case, and the Passion in such Circumstances resolves itself simply into Revenge, which no Law ever sustained to alleviate or palliate Murder; for there the Malice prepensed is clear and evident.

But then, if it be considered in the present Case, that the Party affronting or invading, is not only set forth to have fled, and to have had no Weapon in his Hand, but that he escaped; what Colour is there, upon these Principles, to alleviate the killing of a Person interposing to prevent the Mischief, when there was no Resistance upon the Part of any Person whatsoever, as in the Case of a Combat, and where it was voluntary as to the Person giving the Wound, in regard he could have stopped when Bridgeton fled, which cannot be said with regard to the Welshman who threw the Hammer.

To conclude this Matter, it appears pretty evident, the Circumstances offered in Exculpation afford, by the Law and Practice of Scotland, no relevant Defence, suppose the Person killed had been the Provoker, much less in the Case where the Person killed generously interposed to prevent the Mischief, having given no Colour or Cause of Provocation, having no Weapon, and where the Person, against whom the Invasion is said to be meant, was without drawn Sword, and flying: The Murder in these Circumstances must have proceeded either from Rage and Revenge, which no Law can ever favour, since Laws were made, and Judges appointed, that private Persons should not attempt judging in their own Case, and to bridle the unruly Passions of Men, or from set Purpose and Design to kill the Defunct, from former Resentment. And what adds to the Presumption of the last, is the Nature of the Wound, quite thro' the Body, and that the Sword went through the Back lower than where it pierced the Belly; which excludes all Possibility of pleading, that the Pannel's stumbling might have pushed it forward, because, by the Nature of the Thing, had he stumbled after the Sword pierced the Defunct's Body, it must have raised the Point of the Sword, so that it could not have pierced lower in the Back than in the Belly.

Upon the first Branch of the Libel, the Pursuers think it unnecessary to open the particular Circumstances from which the Pannel's causeless Ill-will and Resentment may appear against the Defunct; that is Matter of Evidence, and upon which no Interlocutor in the Relevancy can pass, and must lie in the Breast of the Assize: And against this Relevancy no Exception, or Colour of Exception can be pretended to lye. And as to the separate Relevancy, and Art and Part, what is offered to be proven, that the Defunct thrust himself in a Manner upon the Pannel's Sword: As it is of too delicate Proof, and was repelled in the Case of Hamilton of Green, it is believed the Lords can have no Regard to it. And as for the Drunkenness and Provocation, especially where the Provocation is said to have been given by a third Party; if it were sustained, it must turn up what have been thought the Foundations of the Law of Scotland, and stand in Opposition to all the Practice that can be discovered from the Books of Adjournal. And the allowing such Defences as might possibly have some Colour in the Law of England, to be proven, would be of dangerous Consequence in the Law of Scotland, where the Pursuers are tied up to a precise Relevancy: So that the Procedure in that Part of the Island, in Trials of this Kind, unless the whole Form of Trial were adopted in our Law, would open a Door for leaving Murders unpunished. The Law of Scotland alone can be the Rule in this Case; though, at the same Time, it is believed, that the species facti, as set forth by the Pannel, would be sufficient Warrant for a Verdict of Murder, even according the Laws and Practice of England. In respect whereof, &c.

CHA. ARESKINE.

Information for James Carnegie, of Finhaven, Pannel; against Susanna, Countess of Strathmore, the Honourable Mr. James Lyon, Pursuers, and his Majesty's Advocate, for his Highness's Interest.

THE said James Carnegie, of Finhaven, stands indicted before your Lordships of WILFUL and PREMEDITATE MURDER and HOMICIDE; in so far as, Having a causeless Ill-will and Resentment against the Deceased Charles, Earl of Strathmore, he conceived a deadly Hatred and Malice against him; and (on the Day libelled) "Did, with a drawn Sword, without the "least Colour or Cause of Provocation then given by him, invade the "said deceased Earl, and did basely and feloniously murder and kill him, "by giving him a Wound therewith in the Belly, whereof he soon after "died. At least, At the Time and Place described, the said Charles, "Earl of Strathmore, was, with a drawn Sword, feloniously and barba- "rously wounded, and died of the said Wound within a few Days there- "after; and that the Pannel was art and part in this Murder. And the "Indictment concludes, By all which it is evident, That you are guilty, "art and part, of the Crimes of wilful and premeditate Murder and "Homicide, or one or other of them, at the Time and Place, and in "the Manner above set forth."

The Pannel was brought to your Lordships Bar, upon the 15th of July current, to plead to this Indictment, where he appeared under that deep Melancholy and Depressure of Spirit with which a Man and Christian must be loaded, who finds himself accused, not only of shedding of Blood, but of shedding the Blood of one, whose personal Character and Qualities drew, from all who had the Honour to know him, the highest Esteem and Regard; and for whom the Pannel himself had all the Honour, entire Friendship, sincere Affection, and high Respect, that either his Rank, personal Merit, or great Benevolence could call for; and of having done this barbarously, from premeditated Malice, deadly Hatred, and Felony fore-thought.

Your Lordships having put the Question to him, in the ordinary Way, What he said to the Indictment? He expressed himself in these Words:

My Lords,

"I FIND myself accused by this Indictment of maliciously murdering "the Earl of Strathmore; but as to any Ill-will, Malice, or Design "to hurt the Earl, GOD is my Witness, I had none: On the contrary, "I had all the due Regard, Respect, and Kindness for his Lordship, that "I ever had for any Man. I had the Misfortune that Day to be mortally "drunk, for which I beg GOD's Pardon, so that, as I must answer at "God's great Tribunal, I do not remember what happened, after I got "the Affront your Lordships will hear of from my Lawyers. One Thing "I am sure of, if it shall appear that I was the unlucky Person who "wounded the Earl, I protest before GOD, I would much rather that a "Sword had been sheathed in my own Bowels. And further, I declare, "That I do not so much as remember, that I saw the Earl after I came "out of the Kennel, and even not so much as the drawing of my Sword; "and therefore I cannot acknowledge the Libel, as it is libelled."

From these Words so expressed, it is evident, in what a dismal Situation of Mind this unhappy Gentleman must be. If what he hath said be true, he cannot be guilty of the malicious murdering the deceaſt Lord; yet he may have been the unhappy Inſtrument of his unfortunate Death; and what a bitter Reflection that muſt afford, all Circumſtances, particularly that of Friendſhip, conſidered, will occur to every generous Man: It may produce Thoughts more afflicting than that of Death itſelf.

The Counſel for the Pannel, in the Entry to the Debate, judged themſelves under a Neceſſity, from the great Honour all of them had for the Perſon of the deceaſt Lord, and always will have for thoſe who remain of his Family, and from the particular Obligations of Friendſhip that ſome of them owed him in a more diſtinguiſhed Manner, to declare, that if they had the leaſt Apprehenſions, that his Lordſhip's Death had happened by, or from any Deſign or Intention of the Pannel againſt his Life, that no Motive, even of Relation or natural Tie to the Pannel, would have induced them to open their Mouth in his Defence; but that Innocence is always preſumed, and that the Circumſtances, ſo far as yet appears, ſeem to ſet forth the Action as a Fatality, and not a Deſign, Juſtice and Duty called upon them to give their weak Aſſiſtance, until the Matter appeared in another Light.

The Fact, as laid in the Libel, is in very general Terms; and thoſe Circumſtances from which the Nature of the Action falls to be determined, and which are material for the Pannel's Defence, being entirely omitted, the Procurators for the Pannel were obliged to ſet forth the Caſe as it truly happened, according to the Information given them; which by our Law and Form, they are enabled to do, without owning the Libel, or admitting even thoſe Facts, which, in the Recital, according to Information, they are led to narrate: And the Account given of it was,

" That, on the 9th of May laſt, the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore, the " Pannel, and ſeveral others, were called to be preſent at the Funeral of a " Daughter of Patrick Carnegy of Loures, a near Relation of the Pannel's; " that they dined together at the Gentleman's Houſe, where they drunk " a good deal, all in Friendſhip and Familiarity, without the leaſt Appear- " ance of Quarrel or Difference: That, after the Burying was over, they " together with the Lord Roſehill, Mr. Thomas Lyon, and Mr. Lyon of " Bridgeton, and other Gentlemen, went to one Clerk Dickſon's, a Tavern " in Forfar, where they drunk pretty plentifully, and where the Pannel " happened to be overtaken with too much Liquor: That all this while, " nothing but Friendſhip appeared betwixt the deceaſt Earl and the Pan- " nel; but that Bridgeton was, from Time to Time, bearing hard upon " the Pannel; and, by the whole Tenor of his Converſation, endeavour- " ing to fret or affront him.

" After this, the Pannel waited on the Lord Strathmore, at the Lady " Auchterhouſe's, where his Lordſhip went to viſit, and Bridgeton followed " them thither, and in that Houſe begun the former Way of Converſa- " tion, making the Pannel's Family-concerns the Subject of his Diſcourſe, " in the moſt provoking Manner, aſking him in a jibing Way, to ſupply a " a Lord in the Company with Money, pulling him rudely by the Breaſt, " and gripping him by the Wriſt, and ſtriking his Hand againſt the Table, " telling him, he muſt give that Lord ſuch a Sum at that Time; then in- " ſiſting, That he ſhould give him the Choice of his Daughters; and ſtill " gripping him, and daſhing his Hand in the foreſaid rude manner, told " him, he would have him promiſe to do ſo; and aſking him, in an inſo- " lent way, What, would he not do it? Then telling him, if it were his " Caſe, if he refuſed, he would maul him, ſhaking his Hand in the Pan- " nel's Face. After this, in a ridiculing Way, deſiring him to ſettle his " Eſtate in a certain manner, ſince he had no Sons of his own; then up- " braiding him with his Debt. All which, the Pannel bore with Patience, " and endeavoured to ward off the Diſcourſe, when Bridgeton ſtill in- " ſiſted in the moſt provoking Way. And that Bridgeton likewiſe uſed " very great Rudeneſs to the Lady in whoſe Houſe they were; par- " ticularly, when ſhe in Civility offered him a Glaſs of Brandy, he, " ſeeing the Pannel already overtaken with Drink, deſired the Lady to " give it to him, her Brother; and upon her ſaying that her Brother did " not ſeem to want it at that Time, he gripped her by the Arm ſo rude- " ly, as to make her complain, and ſwore, by GOD, her Brother either " ſhould drink it, or ſhe ſhould drink it herſelf; and perſiſted in this Way " of doing, till the Lord Strathmore thought it proper to break off the Vi- " ſit, and ſo went out of the Houſe.

" That Finhaven and Bridgeton followed the Earl; and when they came " to the Street, ſome Words paſſed, and Bridgeton uſed the Expreſſion, God " damn him, meaning the Pannel, and with that gripped him by the " Breaſt, and puſhed him into a dirty Kennel two Feet deep, over Head " and Ears, where, in the Condition he was, he might have been ſmothered " if a Servant of the Earl's had not helped him out, who at the ſame time " expreſſed his Indignation at the Action he had ſeen, by theſe Words " addreſſed to Bridgeton, Sir, though you be a Gentleman, you are uncivil.

" That Bridgeton, after having ſo flung the Pannel into the Kennel, " leaving him there, walked forward; at the ſame time turning about, " and folding his Arms acroſs his Breaſt, ſcornfully laughed at him in " that Condition.

" That the Pannel being helped out of the Kennel in manner foreſaid, " immediately drew his Sword, and, in a juſt Paſſion, purſued Bridgeton " with a ſtaggering Pace: And Bridgeton run towards the Earl of Strath- " more, whoſe Back was then to him, and endeavoured to pull out his " Sword; at which time the Pannel coming up with Bridgeton, made a " Puſh at him; in which Inſtant the Earl turning haſtily about, puſhed " off Bridgeton, and threw himſelf in the Way of the Sword, by which " he received the fatal Wound."

Theſe are the unlucky Circumſtances of the Fact, as the Lawyers for the Pannel have been inſtructed to plead: And from it, as ſo ſtated, the Defence inſiſted upon for the Pannel was, That the Act of Killing is not Murder, nor capital, where there is no Malice nor Forethought againſt the Perſon killed, either proved to have been conceived and retained at any time preceding the Act of Killing, or preſumed from the Circumſtances to have preceded the Act immediately before the committing of it: But that in this Caſe there is no antecedent Malice ſpecified or libelled; and therefore it muſt be taken for granted, that there was none. And as to preſumed Malice immediately preceding the Act, that the Circumſtances entirely exclude that Preſumption; firſt, Becauſe, as the Fact is laid, any Blow or Puſh that was intended, was made at, and deſigned for Bridgeton, and not againſt the Earl of Strathmore; and ſince the initium facti is to be conſidered, as well as the Event, a Puſh begun and intended againſt Bridgeton, could never be the Foundation of a Preſumption of Malice againſt the Lord Strathmore, the Perſon killed, without which, the Killing could not be capital, but in this Caſe was merely caſual and accidental, it having happened by the Earl's unluckily turning about in the Time of the Pannel's very Act of puſhing againſt Bridgeton, whereby the Earl received the fatal Wound. 2*do*, That the Pannel could never be more criminal in having killed the Earl of Strathmore by a Thruſt directed at Bridgeton, than he would have been if he had killed Bridgeton himſelf; but that ſo it was, that if he had killed Bridgeton, after the Provocation given in Manner above ſet forth, that it would have been conſtrued only as caſual or culpable Homicide, without Forethought, becauſe done ex incontinenti, & ex ſubito impetu, & calore juſtæ iracundiæ; yea, in ſome Meaſure in Self-defence, ſince the Pannel having been thrown into the Kennel, even to the Danger of being ſuffocated, he had Reaſon after that to expect the worſt from Bridgeton, ſince no Gentleman will throw another into a Puddle, who is not ſuppoſed to be ready to go further, as he cannot but expect the ſtrongeſt Retortion of the Injury; and that the Pannel had the more Reaſon to think ſo, that Bridgeton immediately betook himſelf to the Earl of Strathmore's Sword, and endeavoured to pull it out, having none of his own, by reaſon that the known Ferocity of his Character and Behaviour is ſuch, that the Country-Gentlemen of his Acquaintance decline to keep company with him, if he wear any Arms: In ſuch caſe the Pannel was to expect the worſt, and ſo was in ſome meaſure in his own Defence, altho' he may have exceeded the moderamen inculpatæ tutelæ; which Exceſs, in ſuch Circumſtances, would not be puniſhable by Death, but only by an arbitrary Puniſhment.

And in ſupport of this Defence the Counſel for the Pannel ſhall now, in this Information, endeavour, though ſomewhat out of the Order of their pleading, to follow the Information given in for the Purſuers. And firſt, To ſhow your Lordſhips, that Killing in ſuch Circumſtances was not capital by the Divine Law, or Law of Moſes. 2*do*, That it was not capital by the Common Law, which we in great meaſure follow in Matters of that Kind. 3*tio*, That it was not capital by our own ancient Law. 4*to*, That our ancient Law in that particular is not altered by the Statute of Charles II. 5*to*, That the Practice of the Court is not inconſiſtent, but agreeable to what is here pled. And 6*to*, That the Laws of our neighbouring Nations are for the moſt part conſonant to thoſe Principles, as well as the Judgment of foreign Courts.

And to begin with the Divine Law, it may be divided into two: Firſt, The Law of Nature, which is the firſt of all Laws, and hath no other Author than God Almighty himſelf. 2*do*, His Will revealed by Writing, particularly in the Laws delivered by Moſes.

And as to the Law of Nature, one of the firſt Principles ſeems to be, that every Action muſt be conſtrued and regulated from the Intention of the Actor. Every Action whatever, except in ſo far as it is conjoined with the Will and Intention of the Agent, differs in nothing from the Action of an irrational Creature; yea, if we may ſo ſpeak, as to call the Operation or Impulſe of an inanimate Creature an Action, the Actions of Man ſeparated from his Intention and Deſign as a rational Creature, differ in nothing from the Actions of Brutes, or the Impulſe of Things inanimated; and conſequently that Action, be what it will, can neither be Crime nor Virtue; it is a mere Impulſe or Motion, not properly ſubject to Laws or Rules. But then, indeed, when it comes to be conjoined with the Intention, or, which is the ſame Thing, conſidered as the Action of a rational Agent, there it comes to be ſubject to Laws, to be conſidered as criminal or virtuous: Or if it appear to be accidental, ſo as to have depended upon no Will nor Deliberation of Reaſon, then it returns to be of the Nature of the Act of an irrational Creature, or inanimate Subſtance, and is ſubjected to no Penalty, nor yet capable of receiving a Reward. The plain Conſequence of which is, that it is the animus alone that determines the Nature of the Act; and if the animus or Intention was criminal, then, by the Law of Nature, the Action itſelf amounts to a Crime. On the other hand, if it be good and virtuous, the Act is laudable by the Law of Nature, ſuppoſing even a bad Conſequence ſhould follow. But, in the third Place, If the Action truly ariſe from no Intention or Principle governing that Action, it is neither laudable nor puniſhable, it returns to be of the Kind already mentioned, the ſame with the like Act of an irrational Creature, or the Impulſe of an inanimate Subſtance, moved by a Cauſe intrinſic to itſelf. And the Conſequence of all this is, that by the primary Law of Nature, the Intention muſt make the Crime; and therefore if there appear no Intention to commit that particular Fact which happens to be complained of, it is not a Crime, notwitſtanding of a bad Conſequence; it is conſidered as a Fatality.

And the Application is plain to the preſent Argument, that if the unfortunate Act of killing the deceaſt Lord did not flow from any Intention to him directed; then that Act is not by the Law of Nature a criminal Act, however the antecedent Acts directed againſt another may be criminal. It is another Queſtion, how far a rational Agent, verſans in illicito, is bound for Conſequences that did not fall under his Intention? We ſhall afterwards endeavour to ſhew, that that is neither a Queſtion in the Law of Nature, nor in the Divine Law; but is a Queſtion ariſing from the municipal Laws of particular Kingdoms, or at fartheſt from the Law of Nations, ſometimes called the ſecondary Law of Nature.

As this Point, that the Intention directed towards the Act committed, muſt govern the Action, ſo as to render it criminal or not, according to the firſt Principles of the Law of Nature, ſeems to be pretty plain, if we retire our Thoughts from other After-laws; ſo indeed it is confirmed and illuſtrated by the written Law of God, as delivered by Moſes, with regard particularly to the Queſtion of Manſlaughter. It is almoſt unneceſſary to obſerve, that whether the Remedy againſt the penal Conſequences of Actions, committed without Intention, was in form of an Abſolvitor upon the Trial, or by having Acceſs to a City of Refuge; it is the ſame Thing: The Queſtion is, What was to be the Puniſhment that was to take effect? If the Puniſhment was to be ſtopt in that Form, by flying into a City of Refuge the Principle of Law is the ſame, as if the Effect had been to be ſtopt in any other way. And juſt ſo, as we will afterwards have occaſion to notice, it is the ſame Thing as to our Law, whether the Manſlayer was to be ſafe, by flying into Gyrth or Sanctuary, according to the old Law, or now to be ſafe by a judicial Abſolvitor or Reſtriction of the Puniſhment. And juſt ſo with regard to the Law of neighbouring Nations; it is all one, whether a Man is to be freed by Benefit of Clergy, or ſuch other Form, if he is to be free. The Foundation

Queſtion

Queſtion is only, What was the Puniſhment that neceſſarily, cùm effectu, falls to be inflicted upon a Homicide of ſuch and ſuch a Kind; and as in this Caſe, upon a Homicide committed without Forethought or malicious Intention directed againſt the Perſon that hath ſuffered? And therefore if, by the Moſaic Law, one in the Pannel's Circumſtances was to have the Benefit of a City of Refuge, the Argument concludes, that by that Law he would not have been ſubjected to the Pain of Death. Indeed we believe we will be able to go a little further to ſhew your Lordſhips, that, according to the Opinion of the moſt learned Interpreters and Doctors of the Jewiſh Law, the Benefit of the City of Refuge was ſcarce neceſſary in ſuch a Caſe as that which is now before you.

In the xixth chap. of Deut. the Cities of Refuge are appointed to be ſeparated in the Midſt of the Land, that every Slayer may fly thither: And this is the caſe (ſays the Text) of the ſlayer, which ſhall fly thither; that he may live: Whoſo killeth his Neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time paſt; or, as it is ſaid to be more literally in the Original, from Yeſterday the third Day. By this Text your Lordſhips ſee thoſe two are conjoined as explicatory of one another, ignorantly whom he hated not in Time paſt; and ſo the Word ignorantly is put in oppoſition to Hatred in Time paſt, and by that means the Senſe is plain, that by ignorantly is not meant, without knowing that he kills his Neighbour, but without a Fore-knowledge, a Foreſight, a former Ratiocination and Deſign: In which Senſe, Knowledge is moſt frequently taken, becauſe it is impoſſible to maintain, that if a Man ignorantly kill his Neighbour, even whom he hated before, taking the Word ignorantly, in that Senſe, of his not knowing that he kills him, or killing him by mere Accident, without his Knowledge, can be liable as a Murderer; becauſe it is impoſſible to conjoin even previous Enmity with accidental ignorant Killing, ſo as to make out a Crime of Murder; that were exceeding inconſiſtent with every Principle of Reaſon, far more with a Law flowing from infinite Perfection. But then the Matter is fully explained by Ver. 11. of that ſame Chapter, which determines when a Man is not to have the Benefit of the City of Refuge; But if any Man hate his Neighbour, and lie in Wait for him, and riſe up againſt him, and ſmite him mortally that he die, and flieth into one of theſe Cities: Then the Elders of his City ſhall ſend and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the Hand of the Avenger of Blood, that he may die. Here are both Sides of the Queſtion put, the one fully to explain the other; the laſt to explain what is meant by ignorantly, whom he hated not in Time paſt. The laſt Text does by no means ſay, that if a Man ſmites his Neighbour whom he knoweth, although without Hatred, and without lying in Wait, and without riſing up againſt him, that he ſhall ſurely die; but on the contrary, puts the Iſſue of his dying upon his hating of him whom he killed, and upon his riſing up againſt him whom he did kill; and upon his lying in wait, that is, in other Words, upon his deſigning to take his Opportunity from a premeditated Malice: For indeed the Meaning cannot be that of a formal lying in wait, or lurking in a Paſſage where the Perſon was to paſs; but he who deſigns the Thing, and takes his Opportunity, lies in wait in the plain Senſe of the Text. Beſides, the Word ignorantly very plainly imports, and carries under it that Caſe of a Man's killing, by Miſadventure, one whom he did not intend to kill, that is plainly Ignorance as to him who was killed; and yet it will be true, that if he deſignedly kill one in place of another, miſtaking the Perſon, but deſigning to kill that Perſon, as ſuppoſed to be the other, he does not ignorantly kill the Man whom he does ſlay, he kills him knowingly, although he miſtake the Man.

Nor is it of any Importance, that the Examples immediately ſubjoined in the 5th Verſe, are Inſtances of Slaughter intirely accidental; and where the Slayer did really not know that he killed, that is an Example, but not an Example exhauſting the Rule, which the 11th Verſe fully clears, as not extending the capital Puniſhment to all who came not under the Deſcription in the 5th Verſe, but to thoſe alone who hated their Neighbour, lay in wait for him, and roſe up againſt him.

And though this is plain enough from that Part of the Law, yet the Matter is indeed more fully explained in xxxvth Chap. of Numb. where there is another Ordinance as to Cities of Refuge, and they are appointed to be ſix; and the general Rule is ſet down, That every one that kills any Perſon unawares, may fly to thoſe Cities. Nothing can be plainer than the meaning of killing unawares, that is, without Deliberation, unexpectedly, without Fore-thought, ex improviſo, ex inconſultu: Theſe are all ſynonymous, and accordingly the Septuagint Tranſlation ſo renders the Words ἀκουσίως that is, involuntarily; and ſo likewiſe the Jewiſh Doctors have explained it, as will afterwards be noticed.

After this the Text goes on with an Enlargement or Amplification of that general Law, "And if he ſmite him with an Inſtrument of Iron (ſo "that he die) he is a Murderer, &c. And if he ſmite him with throwing "a Stone (wherewith he may die) and he die, he is a Murderer, &c. Or "if he ſmite him with an Hand-weapon of Wood (wherewith he may die) "and he die, he is a Murderer." Theſe are the Amplifications; but then follows the Limitation in the 20th Verſe. But if he thruſt him of Hatred, or hurl at him by lying of wait, that he die; or in Enmity ſmite him with his Hand, that he die: He that ſmote him ſhall ſurely be put to Death; for he is a Murderer, &c. Here is the Limitation, he that killeth or thruſteth with an Iron-Weapon, is a Murderer, under the Limitation introduced by the Particle but, as an explicatory Exception to the Generality of the Rule, but if he thruſt him with Hatred; that is, in other Words, that he is a Murderer, if he thruſt him in Hatred: And therefore Commentators refer from this Text to the other in Deuteronomy, already cited, for Explication of this, where it is ſtatuted, That if a Man hate his Neighbour, and riſe up againſt him, and ſmite him; whereby they plainly underſtand, thruſting him of Hatred, as the ſame with riſing up againſt him, and ſmiting him with Hatred, ſo as to comprehend every Manner of Killing with any Weapon; and conſequently that this is not a diſtinct Manner of Killing, from what is expreſſed in the 16th Verſe, but a Quality adjected to the Manner of Killing, ſo as to make it Capital, viz. That it muſt be done in Hatred. And this is yet more clearly explained by the 22d and following Verſes, where the Oppoſition is ſtated betwixt thruſting ſuddenly and of Enmity, with a direct Reference to the 16th, 17th, and 18th Verſes, But if he thruſt him ſuddenly without Enmity, or have caſt upon him any thing, without laying of wait; or with any Stone wherewith a Man may die, ſeeing him not, and caſt it upon him that he die, and was not his Enemy, neither ſought his Harm: then the Congregation ſhall judge, &c. and ſhall deliver the Slayer out of the Hand of the Avenger of Blood. There all the three Methods of Killing before-mentioned are referred to: Thruſting, properly applicable to the killing with a Sword, but without Enmity; caſting any Thing upon him, without lying in wait, or Fore-thought, or with any Stone, wherewith a Man may die, the very Thing expreſſed in the 17th Verſe, and from which he is deemed to be a Murderer; yet, if he was not his Enemy, neither ſought his Harm, he is not a Murderer, he is not to die, but to be delivered from the Avenger of Blood. So that theſe three laſt Verſes are a plain Limitation of all that went before; the Inſtrument, whatever it was, was to raiſe a Preſumption, if a mortal one: But yet if it appear the Perſon was not thruſt, or hurled at, or ſmitten in Enmity, &c. the Slayer was to be delivered from the Avenger of Blood.

Neither can it ſtumble your Lordſhips, that in the 22d Verſe are theſe Words, ſeeing him not, as if this were one of the Requiſites neceſſary for the Slayer's Safety, that he did not ſee the Man whom he thruſt at, or killed with a Stone, though not done in Enmity: For, firſt, 'Tis impoſſible to imagine, that the Words, ſeeing him not, however they might refer to the Caſe of throwing a Stone, can have any Reference to the Words, thruſting without Enmity. How can a Man thruſt at him whom he ſeeth not? Or, How can he ſmite him whom he ſeeth not, in any proper Senſe of Smiting? And therefore it is plain, that as to the Thruſting, the only Limitation is, that it be done without Enmity. But, 2do, Your Lordſhips will obſerve, that the Word Him in that Sentence, ſeeing him not, is not at all in the Original; it is an Adjection of the Tranſlator's, and, as ſuch, is diſtinguiſhed in different Characters in any correct Editions of our Bibles, and indeed is an erroneous Adjection: The Words ſhould be only ſeeing not; and perhaps the Tranſlations ought not at all to be by the Participle ſeeing, but, according to the Idiom of the Latin Language, by an Adjective, ſuch as, improvidus, imprudens, or the like; and, according to our Language, by a Subſtantive and Adverb, ſuch as, without foreſight: And ſo the Septuagint does tranſlate it in theſe Words, ἀπ' ἀδόκ, which, in our Language, is directly without foreſight, that is, without Premeditation or anterior Deſign to give the Stroke. And ſo the Senſe comes out, that where a Thruſt or Blow of that kind is given, without Enmity, Foreſight and Premeditation, or, in other Words, ſine dolo, that there Death was not to follow, but the Slayer to have the Benefit of the City of Refuge. And that the moſt ancient Lawyers, and Jewiſh Doctors themſelves, have underſtood the Scope of the Moſaic Law to be ſuch, is the next Point we are to endeavour to ſhew your Lordſhips.

And, in the firſt place, We beg leave to refer to an ancient Treatiſe, called Moſaicarum & Romanarum Legum Collatio, laſt publiſhed by the learned Schulten, with his own Notes upon it; in the firſt Tit. of which, De homicidiis caſu, V. voluntate, § 5. are thoſe Words, Item de caſualibus homicidiis Moiſes legaliter dicit, Si autem non per inimicitias immiſerit ſuper eum aliquod vas non inſidians, vel lapidem, quo moriatur, non per dolum (your Lordſhips will pleaſe mark thoſe laſt Words) & ceciderit ſuper eum, & mortuus fuerit, ſi neque inimicus ejus, &c. liberabitis percuſſorem. Here is directly ſet down, by way of Paraphraſe, the Senſe of the 23d Verſe of the xxxvth Chap. of Numb. before cited; and in place of theſe Words, ſeeing not, the Paraphraſe of this ancient Collator is expreſt by theſe Words, non per dolum; which ſhews what Underſtanding he had of the Words, directly congruous to what we have above ſet down, and, as we apprehend, to be the Septuagint Tranſlation; and this Paraphraſe the Annotator approves of as the juſt Meaning of the Text.

But we beg leave to give your Lordſhips another great Authority, who founds his Opinion upon the Notions of the Jewiſh Doctors, or rather ſets forth what they all agreed on to be the Import of the Moſaic Law on this Head, and that is the great and learned Selden, in his Treatiſe, De jure naturali & gentium, juxta diſciplinam Hebræorum, Lib. IV. Cap. 2. The Title of which is, De homicidio involuntario, ſeu quod caſu factum aut errore. There the learned Author takes notice of all the Texts upon this Subject, and of the Jewiſh Doctors who had wrote upon it, whoſe Names we need not trouble your Lordſhips to repeat, but refer to the Quotations Selden makes. That learned Author takes notice of three Sorts of Homicide, which he and the Jewiſh Doctors reckoned to be involuntary, according to the Moſaic Law, and not to be puniſhed with Death: The Firſt is, What is merely accidental. The Second is, Where the Killing was not merely accidental, but as he expreſſes it, prope accedens ad violentiam. The Third we beg leave to ſet down in his own Words, as coming up directly to our Caſe: Tertia autem homicidii involuntiarii ſpecies eſt, ubi qui alium occidit ex errore quidem aut ignorantia, quæ tamen prope accedit ad id quod ſpontaneum eſt ſeu voluntarium; veluti ubi quis alterum occidere volens, alterum jactu aliterve perimit, aut ubi jactu ſive ſaxi ſive teli in hominum cætum, cujus nec ignarus qui jecerit quis occiſus: adeoque interveneric culpa latiſſima. Ex tribus hiſce homicidii involuntarii ſpeciebus, nulla eſt quæ morte ex ſententia forenſi ordinaria, ſive in Ebræo aliove circumciſo, ſive in proſelyto domicilii, aut gentili alio puniretur. Nam in univerſum pronunciant, homicidium nullum, ſeu qui non ſponte ſcelus patraret, ſic foro puniendum. Yea, he goes further, That, in this laſt Caſe, according to the Jewiſh Doctors Opinion, there was no need of going to the City of Refuge, for that the Avenger of Blood had not a Power in that Caſe to kill.

We apprehend, nothing can be more direct or ſtrong to the preſent Caſe, than that Authority which is laid down, as the univerſal Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors, which we hope does deſerve ſome Regard in the Interpretation of the Moſaic Law.

And this naturally leads us further to obſerve to your Lordſhips what we inſinuated before, that the Queſtion ſtarted by Roman and modern Lawyers, how far a Perſon that intends to kill one Man, is liable to the Pain of Death if he kill another, hath no Foundation in the Moſaic Law, either from the Texts, or the Opinion of thoſe Jewiſh Doctors. As to the laſt, your Lordſhips ſee, that Selden from them, directly ſtates the Caſe, ubi quis alterum occidere volens, alterum jactu aliterve perimit; and he and they determined that to be an involuntary Homicide, not puniſhable with Death; and we apprehend, that in this they are founded in the Words of all the Texts, If any Man hate his Neighbour, and lye in wait for him, and riſe up againſt him, and ſmite him mortally, that he die: Not one Word here of riſing up againſt one and killing another; not a Word of hating one, and in conſequence of that Hatred killing another: That was a Caſe which did not fall under that Law. The Hatred and the Riſing-up, was, by that Law, to be againſt the Man who was killed; if another by Fatality happen to be killed, that was a different Caſe, it was an involuntary Homicide; the Crime there was not the Killing, but ſtood upon the riſing up againſt againſt him who was not killed; and ſo the Puniſhment was for Invaſion, but not for Killing. The Texts in the Book of Numbers are all to the ſame Purpoſe: If he ſmite him who is killed of Hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait that he die, or in Enmity ſmite with his Hand that he die, &c. where all the Rules are ſtill directed towards the Perſon alone that is killed; and that of killing another, when the Stroke was not deſigned at him, is quite left out of the Caſe. And the Application of this Reaſoning to the preſent, unhappy Accident, is too evident to need Enlargement. If it appear that the Puſh was aimed at Bridgeton, that the Enmity was againſt him, and not againſt the deceaſed Lord; then, whatever be the Conſtitution of the Roman, or more modern Laws, the preſent Caſe is quite out of the Deſcription of the Moſaic Law concerning this Article of Manſlaughter.

What hath been already ſaid at ſo great Length, does fully obviate what is offered in the Purſuers Information in way of Anſwer. It is true, that the general Rule in the Divine Law is, That whoſo ſheddeth Man's Blood, by Man ſhall his Blood be ſhed; and ſo, by the Sixth Commandment, the Prohibition is general, Thou ſhalt not kill: Yet even the Commandment itſelf admits of Exceptions; ſuch as, Killing in Self-Defence, and Killing in Execution of Juſtice, and Killing in Proſecution of juſt War, and the like. The other Rule likewiſe admits of Exceptions, not ſo as entirely to juſtify the Killing, and to make the Act lawful, but yet ſo as to excuſe from the Pain of Death. The Texts already noticed are expreſs, that a Man's Blood may be ſhed, and yet the Blood of the Shedder not be required on that Account. The Queſtion is, Whether this misfortunate Pannel's Caſe comes not under the Exceptions? And that we have already diſcuſſed.

The Poſition, That, by the Law of Moſes, "Death of a Suddenty "was plainly capital, and that the Slayer had the Benefit of the City "of Refuge, only where the Slaughter was by mere Misfortune," is aſſumed without ſufficient Foundation. 'Tis plain, that he who thruſts without Enmity, does not kill the Man by mere Caſualty: The Act from which Death follows, is a voluntary Act, although without Enmity: And although the Killing is involuntary, and ſo can never be ſaid to be merely caſual in the Senſe the Pu ſuers would take the Words; neither are the Words in Exodus, If a Man lye not in wait, but GOD deliver him into his Hand, in the leaſt contrary to what hath been advanced: For it is moſt properly ſaid, that where the Act is without the Deſign of the Killer, without Enmity, and without Hatred; that there, in ſo far as concerns the Killing, GOD hath delivered the Man into the Hand of the Slayer. The plain Meaning is, That where a Man is killed, not with Deſign, but that the Thing happens by the over-ruling Hand of Providence, permitting Things of that Kind, in his Sovereign Wiſdom, and from his Supreme Power; that there the Perſon is delivered to Death by the over-ruling Hand of GOD. And where could ever this be more properly applied, than on the preſent melancholy Occaſion, when the providential turning-about of the unfortunate, deceaſed Lord, occaſioned his receiving the fatal Wound?

It is likewiſe a Poſition aſſumed without Reaſon, "That wherever a "Man was killed by a mortal Weapon, that was Murder by the Moſaic Law." We hope we have already demonſtrated the contrary. If Enmity and Fore-thought was required, (and we need only repeat that one Text, which expreſſes the Killing a Man with a Stone, wherewith he may die) there the Text declares the Stone to be a mortal Weapon; yet for all that, in caſe of the Circumſtances mentioned in the other Verſe, the Slayer was not to die, but to be delivered from the Avenger of Blood: And this ſingle Conſideration muſt be ſufficient to refute ſuch a Poſition. Is it not poſſible for a Man to uſe a mortal Weapon, where there is no Enmity, nor Deſign to kill the Perſon who is ſlain? If it be poſſible, as it certainly is, then can we imagine that a Law, ſo perfect as the Divine Law itſelf, could make a Man guilty of Murder, becauſe of the Uſe of ſuch a Weapon, where he really intended no more Harm, than a Man that uſed a Weapon of another Kind? Beſides, that in truth every Weapon is a mortal Weapon with which a Man may be killed: And therefore, to imagine that the Divine Law laid ſuch a Difference betwixt an Inſtrument of Iron, and one of another Kind, is certainly to go too far. The Law of GOD has put the Matter upon a much juſter Footing, to wit, the Intention of the Perſon, which alone can diſtinguiſh his Actions.

The Purſuers alſo ſay, "That though the Argument is good, that "wherever the Benefit of the City of Refuge was not competent, there "the Crime was capital; yet it does not follow, that where the Power "of the Laws were ſuſpended by the Jus Aſyli, that the Puniſhment "is not to be capital in a Country where the Jus Aſyli takes no Place."

But, with Submiſſion, this is no ſolid Way of arguing: The Queſtion hitherto treated is, What was the Law of Moſes, with regard to Puniſhments in the Caſe of Manſlaughter? If the Puniſhment in any Caſe was not capital, becauſe of the Privilege of the Aſylum, the Concluſion is juſt, that the all-wiſe GOD did not intend ſuch Puniſhments ſhould be inflicted for ſuch an Offence, and the Form of granting the Protection for the Puniſhment, does not alter the Subſtance of the Law.

The next Point undertaken to be illuſtrated is, That Manſlaughter, under ſuch Circumſtances as occur in the preſent Caſe, was not, by the Common Law, puniſhable by Death: And this Argument muſt indeed be divided into ſeveral Branches, ſuch as, 1mo, That culpable Homicide was not ſo puniſhable, and that Homicide committed upon ſuch high Provocation, as was here given by Bridgeton, could amount to culpable Homicide only. 2do, That, by that Law, the deceaſed Lord not having been intended to be killed, but the Invaſion, whatever it was, intended againſt another; the killing the Earl was caſual, or at worſt culpable, not puniſhable with Death.

And as to the firſt of theſe Points, we ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with Infinity of Laws and Opinions of Lawyers that might be adduced upon the Point, but only take Notice of ſome of the moſt remarkable, and which ſeem moſt appoſite to the preſent Caſe. And in the firſt Place, The Foundation of the Roman Law on this Point, appears to have been laid down as early as the Days of Numa: For the Roman Writers take Notice of a Law of his in theſe Words; In Numæ legibus cautum eſt, ut ſi quis imprudens hominem occidiſſet, pro capite occiſi & natus ejus in concione offerret arietem. This Law is taken Notice of by Pithaeus, in his Annotations upon the fore-cited, ancient Treatiſe, comparing the Moſaic and Roman Law, with regard to this Head of Manſlaughter, as agreeing preciſely with the Law of Moſes; and the plain Meaning of it is, That where a Man kills another, although culpably, yet if it be ſine dolo per imprudentiam; he is not to ſuffer Death, but to make an Aſſythment to the neareſt Relations of the Perſon killed: And the ſame Treatiſe takes Notice of a Reſcript of Adrian's to the ſame Purpoſe, directed to Taurinus Ignatius, approving of a Judgment given in the Caſe of one Marius Evariſtus, whereby the Proconſul had mitigated the Puniſhment of Manſlaughter upon that ground, That ſuppoſe it was done per laſciviam, and culpably, yet it was ſine dolo. The Words of the Reſcript are, Pœnam Marii Evariſti recte, Ignate Taurine moderatus es ad modum culpæ; refert enim, & in majoribus delictis conſulto alio quod admittatur an caſu; & ſane in omnibus criminibus diſtinctio hæc pœnam aut juſtitiam provocare debet aut temperamentum admittere. And Schulten, in his Annotations, explains what is meant by caſu, in theſe Words; Per caſum hic intelligitur fieri quod non fit dolo, quamvis et quod impetu fit, caſu dicitur fieri, l. 1. §. 3. ad leg. Cornel. de Siccar. Ubi pro cauſa, editiones veteres & gloſſam recte haberi caſu certiſſimum eſt. Which, by-the-bye, ſhows how erroneous the Purſuers Interpretation of the Words caſus and caſual is, when they would reſtrict them to what is done by mere Accident.

The general Rules of the civil Law are plain on this Point, That it is the animus qui maleficia diſtinguit; That there can be no Murder, ſine animo occidendi. But theſe general Topics need not be inſiſted on, where the Texts themſelves are ſo expreſs, ſuch as not only theſe already mentioned, but even that l. 1. §. 3. ad leg. Corn. de Siccar. Divus Adrianus reſcripſit, eum qui hominem occidit, ſi non occidendi animo hoc admiſit, abſolvi poſſe. And a little after, Et ex re conſtituendum hoc, nam ſi gladium ſtrixerit, & in eo percuſſerit, indubitate occidendi animo id eum admiſiſſe. But then he adds the Exception, Sed ſi clavi percuſſit, aut cuccuma in rixa: quamvis ferro percuſſerit, tamen non occidendi animo, leniendam pœnam ejus qui in rixa caſu magis quam voluntate homicidium admiſit. It is true that the Purſuers, and indeed ſeveral of the Doctors, endeavour to turn this Text the other Way, by a plainly erroneous Interpretation, and wrong pointing of the Text. They pretend, "That where a Wound is given "by a Sword, there the animus is undoubtedly preſumed;" and ſo far right as to the Rule. But then the Law ſets down the Exceptions; firſt, If the Stroke be clavi aut cuccuma, ſuppoſe theſe be mortal Weapons wherewith a Man may die, yet becauſe they are not Inſtruments expreſly made for Death, the Preſumption is, that aberat animus occidendi, unleſs Circumſtances make it appear otherwiſe. Then the ſecond Exception is in rixa, quamvis ferro percuſſerit, although a Man ſtrike with a Sword, yet if it be in rixa, ſuddenly, or upon a Provocation given, tamen non occidendi animo, leniendam pœnam, becauſe in rixa, caſu magis quam voluntate homicidium admiſit. Thoſe Doctors, indeed, who go wrong in the Interpretation of this Text, pretend, That the Meaning of quamvis ferro is not, although he ſtrike with a Sword, but would make the Meaning to be, Although he ſtruck with an Inſtrument of Iron, and ſo make the Word ferrum, and alſo thoſe Words, in rixa, refer to other Words, clave aut cuccuma; ſo as that the Senſe ſhould be, if a Man ſtrike, clave aut cuccuma in rixa, although theſe be Inſtruments of Iron, he is not preſumed to have had the animus occidendi. But, with Submiſſion, as both the learned Noodt and Schulten obſerve upon that Law, the Interpretation is ſtrained, and indeed illiterate: For the Word ferrum is never uſed in Law in that Senſe, but always does ſignify a Sword; and ſo the Expreſſion is the ſame, but ornately repeated in other Words, as if the Emperor had ſaid, in rixa quamvis gladio percuſſerit: And ſo the Senſe is, that the animus is in general preſumed from the uſing a Sword, that it is not preſumed where the Inſtrument is not an Inſtrument made for Death; but if the Killing happen in rixa, the animus is not preſumed, although the Stroke be given with a Sword.

And this is likewiſe the Opinion of the learned Gretius, in his Annotations upon the Text, in Numbers above cited, Ver. 16. which, in the Latin Tranſlation, is rendered, Si quis ferro percuſſerit; on which Grotius hath this Note, Mos Ebraiorum multis verbis rem circumloqui. Senſus eſt; mortis eſſe pœnam qualicunque telo quis hominem occiderit. Ex telo præſumitur malum conſilium, niſi contrarium appareat. There your Lordſhips ſee that Author's Opinion is as we plead, that the uſing a mortal Weapon preſumes the Deſign, but not præſumptione juris & de jure; for he adds, niſi contrarium appareat.

The Reſcript of the Emperor Antonine is likewiſe as expreſs on this Head as can be, l. 1. Cod. de Siccar. Frater veſter rectius fecerit, ſi ſe præſidi provinciæ obtulerit. Qui ſi probaverit, non occidendi animo hominem a ſe percuſſum eſſe, remiſſa homicidii pœna, ſecundum diſciplinam militarem ſententiam preferet; crimen enim contrahitur, ſi et voluntas nocendi intercedat, cæterum ea quæ ex improviſo caſu potius quam fraude accidunt, fato plerumque non noxæ imputantur. Here the Emperor plainly ſets down theſe two Things, firſt, That pœna homicidii eſt remittenda, ſi animum occidendi non habuerit. 2do, That where the Thing is done ex improviſo, there is no animus; that 'tis to be looked upon as done caſu, by Fatality, rather than Crime: But nevertheleſs, that in ſuch a Caſe there may be an arbitrary Puniſhment.

The Doctors of the Roman Law ſeem to be unanimous on this general Point. Carpzovius, one of the ſevereſt Criminaliſts, is moſt expreſs upon it; Ceſſat porro pœna ordinaria homicidii, ſi culpa vel caſu fuiſſet commiſſum homicidium; and goes on, quod adeo verum eſt, ut in homicidio lata culpa, dolo non æquiparetur. Clarus is likewiſe as expreſs upon this general Head; and ſuch Shoals of others are by them quoted and referred to, that it were vain to repeat their Names, or trouble your Lordſhips with quoting their Words. We don't know that any Lawyer of Reputation differs upon the general Point.

But then indeed the Queſtion comes, What is culpable Homicide? And whether the preſent Caſe falls under that Deſcription? Which is next to be illuſtrated. And here we humbly inſiſt, that where the Homicide is committed upon a ſudden Quarrel, and Provocation given, eſpecially by real Injury, and that Quarrel begun not by the Killer; that this is no more than culpable Homicide: And for this, in the firſt Place, we oppone the Law already cited, in rixa quamvis ferro percuſſerit. And to the ſame Purpoſe is the firſt Law, §. 5. ff. ad ſenat. conſult. Turpillianum, the l. 2. Cod. de abolit. and the §. 2. l. 16. de pœnis; the Words of which we ſhall not trouble your Lordſhips with repeating, becauſe they are the common Texts founded upon by Doctors on this Head. We have likewiſe for us the Authority of all the ancient, moral Philoſophers; ſuch as, Ariſtotle, Plato, Plutarch, and many others, likewiſe commonly taken Notice of by the Lawyers on this Subject. It is true, ſome of the ſevereſt Criminaliſts, ſuch as Matthæus and Carpzovius, don't admit the Rule in general, but ſtill they admit as much as is neceſſary in the preſent Queſtion: They don't allow, that where the the Killer is auctor rixæ, that he is at all to be excuſed, although the Killing happen in calore iracundiæ; but then moſt of them do admit it, if the Killer be not the auctor rixæ, but be the Perſon provoked, to whom a juſt Provocation has been given, eſpecially by a real Injury: And ſo particularly Carpzovius, one of the ſevereſt, after he has argued at length againſt the general Point, concludes in his Quæſtio 6. §§ 14 and 16. Nihil quoque adverſatur regula adducta, quod ſcilicet delictum ira commiſſum, mitius puniri ſoleat; quia hæc regula de ira ex juſta cauſa proveniente accipienda eſt: duplex etenim ira eſt, alia ex juſta cauſa provenit, quæ ſi non in totum, tamen ex parte excuſat, ut delinquens mitius puniatur; alia vero non provenit ex juſta cauſa, quæ in nihilo excuſat. Then he adds, Hæc diſtinctio communiter recepta eſt ab interpretibus, and cites ſeverals. And then concludes, Si ergo juſta cauſa calorem iracundiæ præcedat, veluti ſi quis ab alio fuerit provocatus, aut alio modo offenſus, tunc is qui ira et intenſo dolore permotus, provocantem ſeu offendentem interficit abſque dubio a pœna ordinaria liberabitur; ſecus vero ſi quis, abſque juſta et probabili cauſa iratus, aliquem occidat, de quo caſu nos hic loquimur, qui pœnæ homicidii ordinariæ neutiquam eſt eximendus. And then takes Notice, that the Practice in the Court of Lipſwick is agreeable to this.

There is an adjudged Caſe very appoſite, publiſhed in a Book, called Alphonſi Villagut Neapolitani Conſultationes Deciſivæ, very learnedly reſolved. It is the Deciſio 29. We ſhall ſtate the Caſe in the Words of the Author, Quidam nobilis Raguſinus fuiſſet verberatus, extra (ſed prope) eccleſiam ſanctæ crucis caſtri Gravoſæ, a quodam alio nobili Raguſino, in eodem puncto evaginavit pugnionem contra dictum verberantem, ac in fugam jam converſum & ipſum inſequens, unico vulnere ſibi inflicto in dicta eccleſia (quam ille ingreſſus fuerat) dictam eccleſiam egrediens ſeſe in fugam dedit & cum dictus verberator, ex dicto unico inflicto vulnere intra dictam eccleſiam mortuus eſſet. The Caſe came to be tried, at leaſt the Queſtions upon it, to be reſolved by the ſaid Alphonſus; where ſeveral Queſtions occurred, but thoſe which are moſt applicable to the preſent Caſe are two: Firſt, An hujuſmodi homicidium in eccleſia perpetratum, fuerat dicendum voluntarium nec ne, eo quod dictus nobilis inſecutus fuiſſet illum ceſſantem a verberibus inferendis, ac ſic unico vulnere inflicto interfeciſſet? The ſecond Queſtion is, An dictus nobilis prædicto modo ac de cauſa violans dictam immunitatem eccleſiaſticam, veniat in foro ſeculari, & eccleſiaſtico pœna ordinaria plectendus, vel ſolum mitiori pœna? The Reſolution upon the firſt Queſtion is, That though, at firſt View, the Homicide might ſeem voluntary, Eo quod dictus nobilis, nemine ipſum compellente, fugientem hominem vulneraverit, nihilominus nullo pacto fore judicandum homicidium voluntarium, aut pro tali dictum nobilem puniendum. The Reaſons for this Reſolution are ſet down with great Learning and Judgment, but are ſo long, that 'tis impoſſible to repeat them: Firſt, They are taken from the Definition of voluntary Homicide. 2do, From the Texts of the Roman Law, and the Opinion of Doctors. 3tio, From that Particular, that the Nobleman had been immediately ſtruck before; on which the Words are remarkable, Ex hoc ergo articulo, apertiſſime elicitur homicidium hujuſmodi fuiſſe caſuale, & non voluntarium, nam nulla mora interjacente, evaginato pugnione, ipſe nobilis bacculo percuſſus inſecutus fuit dictum percuſſorem jam fugientem, & hoc pro honoris proprii redemptione, ut ſic ſe tueretur ab injuria corporali recepta ex verberibus: After which follows a long Reaſoning, all in the Pannel's Favours. And this Caſe we take the more Notice of, becauſe the Purſuers pretended to make a Diſtinction betwixt the Caſe of a Wound given the very Moment a real Injury is done, and the like given after the Injurer has deſiſted from beating, and retired to ſome Diſtance; but there is no Difference, except the Interval be ſo long, as it can be ſuppoſed the Thought of the Perſon injured was cool. The other Queſtion is likewiſe reſolved in Favour of the accuſed, that in ſuch a Caſe, not the ordinary Puniſhment, either eccleſiaſtical or civil, ought to take Place, but only the pœna mitior, and confirmed by very ſtrong Reaſons, which we cannot recite, but refer to.

Amongſt other Authors that might be cited for ſupporting this Opinion, is the learned Voet, in the very Section cited by the Purſuers, ad tit. ad leg. com. de ſic. n. 9. where, after he has ſaid what is cited for them, that one killing another who has provoked him only by a verbal or ſlight Injury, vix eſt ut ab ordinaria pœna abſolvendus ſit; he adds, that if the Provocation was by an atrocius real Injury, that would be ſufficient to mitigate the ordinary Puniſhment; and to confirm that, cites Mathæus Berlichius, &c. And the Reaſon given by theſe Authors for making this Allowance, in caſe of juſt Provocation, is expreſt in theſe Words by Gothofred, ad l. 17. d. t. Quod ei ſit ignoſcendum, qui provocatus ſe ulciſci voluit, quique juſtum dolorem proſequitur.

And indeed we apprehend this Opinion is founded in the firſt Principle of Nature; for ſcarce any human Conſtancy can ſuffer ſuch high real Injury, without the Paſſions being inflamed: And although Killing is no Doubt an Exceſs in the Retortion of a real Injury, yet ſtill it is but an Exceſs, and the Injury ſhews the Thing done without Deſign; and therefore, becauſe of inſuperable, human Weakneſs, the Puniſhment falls to be mitigated. And the Application to the preſent Caſe, as we apprehend, is obvious; Bridgeton had given the higheſt Provocation, not only by a Track of verbal Injuries and Endeavours to pick a Quarrel, but had committed the moſt provoking real Injury, to throw a Gentleman over Head and Ears in a dirty Puddle, in the Middle of a Town, and Sight of ſo many On-lookers; no Injury could be more provoking. Yea indeed there was more in it than an Injury only: One that was able to throw the Pannel into the Puddle in that Manner, was likewiſe able to have ſuffocated him there; the Pannel had no Reaſon to expect otherwiſe, and therefore no Wonder if he betook himſelf to his Sword. And the other Circumſtance noticed, that Bridgeton, immediately upon the doing the Thing, endeavoured to draw and make himſelf Maſter of my Lord Strathmore's Sword, gave the Pannel Ground to expect the worſt; and ſo it may be doubted, if he was obliged to wait till Bridgeton ſhould have an Opportunity to give him the Blow, even with a mortal Weapon. And when this is conſidered, the Fact goes further than a Retortion of the higheſt Injury: The Pannel was in ſome Meaſure put upon his Defence; and granting that his puſhing at Bridgeton was an Exceſs, yet ſtill that Exceſs falls only to be puniſhed pœna extraordinaria.

All Lawyers diſtinguiſh Exceſſes of that Sort into three Kinds, that of Time, Place, and Weapon that is uſed; and Exceſs in point of Time is puniſhed even with Death, where the Interval is great; becauſe that Interval preſumes Fraud and Deliberation: But here was no Exceſs of Time; the Thing was done ex incontinenti, when the Injury was freſh and recent. There is likewiſe Exceſs in point of Place, when the Injurer is allowed to retire to a conſiderable Diſtance from the Place where the Injury is given; and this in ſome Meaſure coincident with the other, becauſe it implies an Interval of Time: Yet if it be not great, the Lawyers hold it to be only puniſhable arbitrarily. And then the third is the Exceſs in the Uſe of the Weapon, where there is no Interval of Time or Place; and that is always agreed to be puniſhable only arbitrarily, where the Provocation is high.

From what is ſaid it ſeems plain, that if Bridgeton had received the Thruſt, the Homicide would have been culpable only; and ſo it remains to be conſidered, if the Caſe comes out worſe for the Pannel, becauſe it was my Lord Strathmore that received the Wound, and not Bridgeton. And we apprehend it does not, but on the contrary, that this gives a great Strength to the Defence: And that becauſe, 1mo, The Puſh being deſigned at Bridgeton, ſhows that there was no Malice at my Lord Strathmore, neither premeditated, nor preſumed from the giving of the Wound: For admitting it to be true, that in an ordinary Caſe, the giving a Wound with a mortal Weapon preſumes the Dole or malevolous Intention; yet that can never be where the Puſh is pointed at another than him who by Fatality receives it. And ſo the Caſe comes out thus, That the Pannel in making one Puſh, could not deſign it at two Perſons; and ſo if he deſigned it at Bridgeton, 'tis impoſſible to ſay he had a Deſign againſt my Lord Strathmore. It is plain in the Nature of the Thing, that the Deſign, tho' preſumed from the giving the Wound, yet in point of Time it precedes the actual receiving of the Wound, altho' that Preceding or Precedence be but momentary; and therefore if, in the very Act of Puſhing, the Deſign appears to have been againſt Bridgeton, it excludes all Pretence of any animus againſt another who received the Wound by Fatality, in the very Moment that the Deſign was pointed againſt the other.

And here your Lordſhips will likewiſe obſerve, that there can be no animus occidendi preſumed at all againſt any Man, not even againſt Bridgeton himſelf; becauſe the drawing a Sword, and puſhing at a Man with it, does not of itſelf preſume a Deſign to kill the Man puſhed at, except the Wound, and Death actually follow: For it is from the Event of the Wound, and Death following alone, that the Intention is preſumed. Therefore ſince Death did not happen to Bridgeton, the Law cannot preſume an Intention to kill him; ſince the Foundation of the Preſumption is removed, or did not happen. If the Blow had miſſed him, or had not killed, but wounded him; the Intention would not be preſumed: And therefore it cannot here be preſumed, as the Caſe happened; for there is no ſuch Preſumption in Law, as that Killing one preſumes a Deſign to kill another; except where it appears that the Slayer killed one Man by Miſtake, taking him to be another: As for inſtance, killing Caius in the Dark, when the Killer really believed him to be Titius; there indeed the killing of Caius preſumes the Intention of killing Titius, although he was not actually ſlain: And therefore in that Caſe the Killer is indeed guilty of Murder. But 'tis quite another Caſe, where one Man is killed, not by Miſtake for another, but by Fatality, when the Puſh was intended at another, whom the Killer knew, which is the Caſe in Hand. And therefore we do humbly inſiſt, that it cannot be ſaid there was an Intention to kill Bridgeton, ſince his Death did not follow. Neither can it be ſaid there was an Intention to kill the Earl of Strathmore; becauſe, though his Death did moſt unluckily happen, yet the initium, upon which the Intention muſt be founded, did not happen, the Puſh being made at Bridgeton; for thoſe two muſt always concur, the Puſh made at the Man who dies, and the actual Death: And where it happens otherwiſe, the Death is a mere Fatality; not intirely innocent, becauſe the Killer was ſo far faulty in invading the other; but then it is no more than an Invaſion; it is not Murder from Malice preſumed. No Preſumption of Law can get the better of contrary Evidence: The Preſumption of Law may be, That where a Man is killed, he was intended to be killed: But if from the Circumſtances the direct contrary appear, that there was no Intention againſt him; this is Evidence which excludes the Preſumption; and ſo there can be no Murder in the Caſe.

It is indeed a Caſe ſtated by the Lawyers, What ſhould be the Conſequence, if a Perſon intending to kill one Man, kill another? And we acknowledge they are greatly divided among themſelves upon the Queſtion; a great many of the ableſt of them are in all Caſes clear, that where one Man is killed, and another was deſigned, it cannot be Murder, becauſe of the Want of an Intention againſt him. Bartolus, Farinacius, Gomeſius, Menochius, and Numbers of others quoted by them, are plain in that Opinion, and give an Account of ſeveral Judgments of the Courts of Mantua, and Naples, and others, to that Purpoſe; and Farinacius ſays, that it is the common Opinion, Et ab hac ſententia in judicando non eſſe recedendum. And however other Lawyers may ſeem to differ, yet, in the firſt Place, the divine Law, for any Thing that can be found in it, is on this Side; becauſe it plainly ſpeaks only of beating him, and riſing up againſt him who happens actually to be killed, and mentions no ſuch Caſe as deſerving Death, as this is of riſing up againſt one Man, and by Fatality killing another. 2do, That this was the Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors, is plain from the Quotation already brought from Selden, where this very Thing of killing one Man in place of another is made part of the third Caſe ſtated of involuntary Homicide, and determined not to be capital. But 3tio, Thoſe Lawyers, who at firſt view ſeem to differ, do really not differ, when the Caſes are diſtinguiſhed: For what they plainly mean, is only where a Man by Miſtake kills Titius, believing him to be Mevius. This we admit is capital, for Reaſons before given; but not the other of killing one by Fatality, and not for another, but directing the Blow at the other.

But then your Lordſhips will obſerve, that all Lawyers agree in this, That wherever a Man is to ſuffer for killing one, when he intended to kill another; that can only be where the Forethought and doloſe Intention to kill the other is certain, but not where the Invaſion is ex impetu: And therefore, ſuppoſing one invade another, with an Intention to hurt, or percutere, as the Lawyers call it, but without a certain Evidence that his thorough Intention was to kill; there, ſuppoſing the Blow intended for one do kill another, the Killer cannot ſuffer Death: And which by-the-bye ſhows your Lordſhips, that there is no ſuch Preſumption in Law, as, That becauſe the Puſh killed the Earl of Strathmore, therefore the Pannel intended to kill Bridgeton; for if that were Law, then the Queſtion could never occur, but would be inept, Whether a Man intending to kill one, and killing another with with that Blow, is guilty of Murder, or is presumed to have intended to kill that other at whom the Stroke was intended? We shall trouble your Lordships only with two Authorities on this Point, which are very direct to the Case: The first is that of Berlichius, which we the rather notice, because he seems to be against us on the general Point; after discussing which, he hath these Words, speaking of his own Opinion, Fallit, si quis aliquem non occidere, sed percutere tantum, volens, alium præter intentionem percutiat ut moriatur. From this your Lordships see, that it is no consequence, That because the Thrust killed my Lord Strathmore, therefore it should be presumed the Pannel intended to kill Bridgeton: If that were true, that Lawyer's Position, from whom Nobody differs, must be direct Nonsense. And therefore since there is no other Evidence of a further Intention against Bridgeton than percutere, except it arise from the Death of my Lord Strathmore, and that his Death cannot presume it; we are directly under the Position the Lawyer lays down, That though my Lord was unhappily killed, yet the Pannel ought not to suffer Death, where it does not appear that he intended to do more than to push at Bridgeton at random, percutere, without a certain Design to kill.

But this is yet more plainly laid down by another very distinct Lawyer, Masurius Labio, in his Treatise called, Homicida excusatus, cap. 35. where treating of this very Question, he first notices, that if the Killer was occupatus in re licita, such as defending against any Aggressor, which in some measure is the case here, that then he is not liable, although he chance to kill a third Party: But then he goes further, Aut etiam, ut amplius dicta extendamus, reus quantumvis in re illicita occupatus, tali tamen in casu constitutus fuit, ut si Caium interfecisset, non nisi culpæ reus futurus fuisset, ejusque loco cum infelici fato Sempronius lethalem acceperit ictum, magis est, ut reus hoc ipso causam suam non gravasse censeri debeat: cum enim Caii internecione mortem meritus non fuisset, certe imprudentia atque in facto error magis eum à Sempronii cæde excusare debet: atque Caio potius, si is vel rixæ auctor fuerit, vel iracundiam alterius justam provocaverit, id quod inde secutum imputandum reor. Here your Lordships see he is stating the Case of a Rixa, where one had given Provocation as Bridgeton did; he indeed supposes, that in such a Case killing the Provoker ought not to infer Death; much less, says he, the accidental killing of a third Party: And your Lordships will observe he asserts further, that the Provoker, or auctor rixæ, is rather to be judged guilty of the Slaughter.

And a little after, he comes yet closer to the present Case: Quod si tamen Caium adversarium occidere nollet, sed illi tantum nocere, Sempronium autem imprudenter se ictui objicientem, eo ipso interemerit, tunc certe imprudentia Sempronii delictum rei aggravare non debet; si enim is moderatorem rixæ se non obtulisset, corpusque suum subito & ex propinquo non objecisset, Caius a cædente forte remotior, non nisi vulnus aliamve noxam inde reportasset, unde Sempronio mors oblata est: excusandus ergo a tanto merito percussor tunc, cum occidendi animus hic non adfuisse apparet.

This is so apposite to the present Question, that one would think it were a Resolution on the Case: For by that your Lordships see, that notwithstanding one's being killed, the Author says it does not from thence appear, that there was an Intention to kill the other: The other, who, as being at a greater Distance, might not have been killed, might only have been hurt and wounded, although the Person that came unhappily in the way happened to be killed. This is just what we have pled, That it does not appear there was an Intention to kill Bridgeton, because he might not have been killed, but he might only have been hurt or wounded; and therefore the Pannel ought not to suffer Death, because of the Fatality of killing the deceased Lord, qui subito corpus suum ex propinquo objecit. And upon all those Grounds, we humbly insist, that if Bridgeton had been killed, there would have been no Place for a capital Punishment: But then separately, whatever be in that, that since it does not appear (nor cannot, since Death did not follow) that there was a certain Intention to kill him, the casual Killing of the Earl of Strathmore cannot be punishable with Death.

What has been said, fully removes any Argument that may be drawn from Sir George Mackenzie's Opinion, "That he who by mistake kills one "for another, should die:" For your Lordships see, that he speaks only of that Case, when one Man is certainly intended to be killed, but another is killed by mistake, being supposed to be him: That is not the Case now before your Lordships.

And in this Question, concerning the Pannel's Intention and Design, the Circumstance of his being overtaken with Drink, is a Circumstance that assists in the Argument. We do not say, that being drunk affords a Defence for killing; nevertheless it is a Circumstance whereby to show, there was no Malice or Dole, especially against the Earl of Strathmore; since every body may conceive, how easy it is for a Man that is drunk, pushing at one, even to stagger upon another, or not to have the Judgment and Presence of Mind to draw back, when that other suddenly throws himself in the way of the Thrust.

What is laid down by the Pursuers, in opposition to all this, in their Information, is so fully obviated, that it is quite needless to repeat their Argument; only whereas they say, "That if Killing, notwithstanding of "Provocation, had not been capital, it could not have been a Doubt in "the Common Law, Whether a Husband ought to suffer Death, who "killed his Wife taken in the Act of Adultery?" But we apprehend, that the direct contrary Consequence follows, that if high Provocation had not afforded a Defence, then indeed there could not have been a Doubt the Husband must have died, because high Provocation was all that he had to plead: But the Doubt was, whether a Provocation of that kind, where there was no real corporal Injury to the Husband himself, was sufficient? And the Law determines that it was; and consequently establishes the Rule, That high and grievous Provocations ought to alleviate the Punishment.

The Brocard, That versans in re illicita tenetur de omni eventu, affords no Argument against the Pannel in this Case; nor indeed hath it been much insisted on by the Pursuers. 1mo, It is not true in many Cases. But, 2do, It holds in no Case, except with regard to Consequences or Events, that happen with regard to that Subject or Object, against whom or which the unlawful Act is directed: As for instance, if one sets fire to a House, he is guilty of Murder, if a Person happen to be burnt in that House; or if he undermine a House, he is liable for all the Goods that may be destroyed by its Fall; but he is not liable for any extrinsic Damage that may happen to another. Subject casually and by accident: And therefore, suppose it were proved, that one unlawfully invading another, without a Design to kill, might in some Cases be liable, if Death followed; yet that can only be with regard to the Person he invades, but never with regard to what accidentally happens to another Person. And so Carpzovius explains the Matter, Qu. 1. §. ult. in these Words: Supra dicta enim (quod nempe danti operam rei illicitæ imputari debeat, quicquid fuerit præter ejus intentionem ex eo actu secutum) procedunt tantum, quantum ad subjectum, circa quod versatur ipsa malitia illicite operantis, & quantum ad ea quæ illi objecto per se & immediate junguntur, aut necessario sequuntur; non autem quoad illa quæ per accidens oriuntur, a re illa mala, cui opera datur. Besides, 'tis certain, that the Brocard is no Rule at all in the Matter of Manslaughter, otherwise there never could be such a Thing as culpable Homicide; which 'tis plain there is.

The next Thing to be considered is, What was and is the Law of Scotland concerning this Matter? And first, As to our ancient Law, the Pursuers seem to be the first that ever disputed, that according to it there was a Distinction betwixt Slaughter and Murder. Sir George Mackenzie is express upon it. By our Law, says he, Slaughter and Murder did of old differ, as homicidium simplex et premeditatum in the civil Law; and Murder only committed, as we call it, upon forethought Felony, was only properly called Murder, and punished as such; for which he quotes the express Statute, Parl. 3. cap. 51. K. James I. appointing that Murder be capitally punished, but chaud melle, or Slaughter committed upon Suddenty, shall only be punishable according to the old Laws, and several other Acts of Parliament, to which we beg leave to refer [See the Abstract of them at the End]; which expressly make the Distinction betwixt forethought Felony, and Slaughter of Suddenty: And though none of all these Laws particularly express the Punishment of Manslaughter, as they could not well do, because that was arbitrary according to Circumstances; yet, as Sir George observes, the Opposition and Distinction is established betwixt Slaughter by Forethought, and chaud melle, and the Punishment of the one to be less than that of the other: And therefore, we apprehend, we may leave this Point as clear and undoubted.

The Pursuer has endeavoured, to no manner of purpose, to set up others of our ancient Laws, in opposition to those observed by Sir George Mackenzie, such as the third Statute of King Robert I. which, with Submission, is nothing to the purpose: For, first, It does not concern capital Crimes only, but any Crime touching Limb, as well as Life. 2do, Though the Word Slaughter is mentioned, without adding by forethought Felony, yet the same Thing is added in other Words, when it says, touching Life or Limb, to which alone the Act relates, that is, forethought Felony; because Slaughter, by chaud melle, touched neither Life or Limb. The Title of the Act is, Men condemned to Death should not be redeemed. But what is that to the purpose, in a Question, Who should be condemned to Death, and who not?

The 43d Chap. of the Act of King Robert III. is as little to the purpose; for as it speaks of Hairships, Burnings, Reif, and Slaughter, 'tis very plain it means only wilful, premeditate Slaughter, otherwise it would follow, that not only wilful Fire-raising, but burning of a House by Neglect, or lata culpa, would infer the Pain of Death, which Nobody ever dreamed. And the next Paragraph makes it further clear, appointing Sheriffs to take diligent Inquisition, GIF ANY BE COMMON DESTROYERS OF THE COUNTRY, OR HATH DESTROYED THE KING'S LIEGES WITH HAIRSHIP, SLAUGHTER, &c. Can a Man be a common Destroyer by Slaughter, except where the Slaughter is supposed to be by forethought Felony? 'Tis certain he cannot; and therefore the Pursuers Procurators fall into a great Mistake in Law, when they say, that gif he be ken'd with the Assize, Si attentus fuerit per assisam tanquam talis malefactor, condemnabitur ad mortem, must relate to Manslaughter, because the Sheriff could not judge of Murder. It is directly otherwise: If he be attainted by the Assize as such a Malefactor, that is, as a common Oppressor by Slaughter, &c. he is to be condemned to Death. This is an Exception from the Rule, that Murder was to be tried by the Justice-ayr: This Law appointed it to be tried in that Way, in case the Person accused could find his Barras or Borgh to compear at next Justice-ayr; but if he could not, the Sheriff was immediately impowered to try: And by-the-bye, this does not concern particular Fact, but concerns that general Accusation of being a common Oppressor, like to the Case of a Sorner, or one habite and repute an Egyptian. Nor can the Lawyers for the Pannel find any Word in the Statutes of Alexander II. which the Pursuers refer to, that does in the least pre-suppose that Manslaughter was capital in them: The direct contrary appears, that Manslayers were to be tried, whether guilty of Murder or not; and if found not guilty, that they were to have the Benefit of the Gyrth. And accordingly Skeen, in his Annotations, refers directly to the Acts of Parliament, which Sir George Mackenzie takes notice of, establishing the Distinction, and to some of the English Acts to the same Purpose.

As to the Passage cited from Skeen, in his Treatise of Crimes, tit. Slaughter, there is certainly a direct Blunder in the Printing; and instead of these Words, or casually by chaud melle, probably it ought to have been, not casually, or by chaud melle; for otherwise he directly contradicts himself, and cites Acts of Parliament which prove the very contrary of what the Pursuers would make him assert: Yea, the very next Paragraph establisheth the Distinction in these Words, SUA THAT THE GYRTH OR SANCTUARY IS NAE REFUGE TO HIM WHA COMMITS SLAUGHTER BE FORETHOUGHT FELONY; ergo, it was a Refuge to him that committed Slaughter, not by forethought Felony, and saved him even from the arbitrary Punishment of Manslaughter. And Skeen himself, in his Explication of the Words chaud melle, says it is in Latin rixa, an hot, sudden tuilzie, or debate, which is opponed, as contrary to forethought Felony; and cites the Act James I. But how is it contrary in our Law, if the Effect and Punishment be the same? And upon the Words forethought Felony, he in like manner makes the just Distinction, and supports it by the Authority of Cicero, in his Treatise De Officiis, where he is writing, as a Moralist, and not as an Orator.

The Pursuers Answer to the 8*th Act*, 6 Parl. J. I. is quite trifling; for nothing can be plainer than the Opposition there stated betwixt forethought Felony and other Slaughter: And when the Act statutes, THAT IF IT BE FORETHOUGHT FELONY, THE SLAYER SHALL DIE; the Consequence is obvious, according to the plainest Rules of Logic, that if it be not forethought Felony, he shall not die, otherwise the Act is absurd. And as to Sir George Mackenzie's Observation upon these Words, it is certainly not so accurately placed as an Observation upon that Act, because it plainly relates relates to the Act of Charles II. and therefore falls to be considered, when we come to argue the Import of that Act.

The Pursuers Observation, by way of Answer to the 51st Act. Parl. 3. James I. is entirely nought; for if it extend the Difference between Forethought and chaud melle to all Transgressions as well as Manslaughter, then for certain it establishes the Distinction in the Case of Manslaughter; and so Sir George Mackenzie likewise says, in his Observations on this Act, as well as in his Criminals. And as to his further Observation, That chaud melle is by our present Law punishable by Death; that still refers to the Act of Parliament Charles II. and must be examined with it.

The Pursuers have further pled, "That the Benefit of the Sanctuary "might be competent where Crimes were capital;" which he founds upon the Statutes of Alexander II. But this is not worth disputing; for if the Flying to the Sanctuary, joined with Repentance, and so forth, rendered the Crime not capital, it is all the same thing; that is, in effect, to render the Crime not capital only by another Form, but still the Substance remains, that according to the Law the Pain of Death was to be inflicted. At the same time that Statute concerning Reifs, whereby Repentance absolves from the Punishment, is somewhat peculiar, and does not at all contradict the other Laws, which make or suppose chaud melle not to be capital; and the last Part of the Statute, appointing, THAT IF MANSLAYERS FLY TO THE KIRK, THE LAW SHALL BE KEEPED AND OBSERVED TO THEM, establishes the Point, that if they were not found Murderers by Forethought, they were to be returned to the Sanctuary, and freed from Punishment.

The Pursuers say, "That after the Reformation, when the jus asyli "was in effect abolished, then the Distinction betwixt forethought Fe-"lony and chaud melle ceased; and that it was never objected, that Ma-"lice or premeditate Design was requisite to make the Crime capital." And for this they take notice of two Cases, Currie against Fraser, July 1641, and Bruce against Marshal, April 1644. But in the first place, The Procurators for the Pannel with Reason say, That if that happened, it was an Error in Judgment; for since the Distinction was established by the old Laws, and that there was no Law at that time altering or repealing those old Laws, the Abolition of Popery, and of the Flying to the Kirk in consequence, was no Reason for judging contrary to the civil Laws that were still standing; and if an Escape of that kind happened, it must be attributed to the over-great Zeal, and, if we may be allowed to say it, a Sort of enthusiastic Keenness of those Times: And we do apprehend, that the Act 1649, and the Act of Charles II. were intended to correct the Errors that by too great Zeal had then crept in.

At the same time, as to the two Cases cited, they are nothing to the purpose; for as to the first, which is Fraser's, there was not one Circumstance pled or proved which could make the Slaughter chaud melle: But, on the contrary, it appeared direct premeditate Murder, no real Provocation, but a Quarrel about a Staff; a Murder committed in Revenge, upon the Slayer's hearing the Person killed had murdered his Brother, which plainly implied a premeditate Design. What Argument this can afford, is submitted. This indeed may be remarked, that the Case gives some Notion of the Spirit of the Times; the Presbytery took Evidence whether the Murder was accidental or wilful, they found it to be wilful, and no ways accidental; their having done so, was taken as Evidence in Court, and even the Wife of the Deceased was sworn as a Witness: Things, it is hoped, not to be drawn into example; only so far it shews, that even then it was a Consideration by the Presbytery themselves, Whether it was a wilful Murder or not? Which seems to point at an Establishment of the Distinction. But, in short, there is not one Circumstance in the whole Case that could exclude the Premeditation or Forethought, but all quite on the contrary.

The other Case of Marshall, in the 1644, is as little to the purpose; he was libelled for wilful Murder, and he confessed it, without pleading any Defence, because indeed he had none. He in his Confession adjected some Circumstances which might have given some Colour, but indeed very little for a Defence: But he offered no Proof even of those Circumstances; and his own Declaration could be no Evidence of them. They were not intrinsic, but extrinsic Qualities of the Declaration. He had given repeated Stabs with a Knife. Where could be the Question that that was Murder? And these being all the Instances the Pursuers bring before the Act of Charles II. it is plain they prove nothing by them.

As to the Act, Charles II. [See the Act at the End] it is humbly insisted for the Pannel, That it introduces no new Law against any Person accused of Slaughter, but ascertains somewhat in their Favours, viz. "That ca-"sual Homicide, Homicide in lawful Defence, and Homicide committed "upon Thieves, &c. shall not be punished by Death. And then further "statutes, That even in case of Homicide casual, it shall be leisome to "the Criminal Judge, with Advice of the Counsel, to fine him in his "Means, &c. or to imprison him." This Law seems introduced to correct some Abuses that had been; whereby Homicides falling under some of those Descriptions, either had been punished with Death, or at least that it had been made a Doubt of, if they might not be so punished. What those Cases were, does indeed not appear from the Records, so far as the Pannel's Procurators know; but it seems such Cases, at least such Doubts, were. But then the Act does not determine what was meant by casual Homicide, and does by no means say, that nothing was to be reckoned casual Homicide, except that which was merely accidental; but, on the contrary, it leaves casual Homicide to be explained, according to the Construction of former Laws, whether our own Laws, or the Laws of other Nations.

2do, It is plain from the Act, that, by casual Homicide, something is understood quite different, at least beyond Slaughter merely accidental; for the Act is concerning the several Degrees of casual Homicide: And so even Homicide in Defence, and Homicide committed upon Thieves, &c. are brought under that general Description of casual Homicide; and these last Kinds are given as Exemplifications of the general Description; which shews, that casual Homicide was intended to be opposed only to Slaughter dolose, committed either by premeditate Forethought, or Malice presumed to be taken up from the Circumstances immediately preceding the Act; and therefore, however critical Exceptions may be taken to the Rule, yet materially there is no strong Objection lies to it, because when casual is taken in the extensive Signification, as opposite to fraudulent and dolose Slaughter, all the Species mentioned in the Act do properly enough fall under it, and are Degrees of casual Homicide. And indeed it is worth observing, and makes in this Case for the Pannel, that the Rubric cannot be said to have been indigested or adjected by mere Inadvertency, since the same Rubric is made use of in the Act 1649, and again repeated in the 1661, so many Years after.

And this Rubric affords another plain Argument, That the Legislative did at least consider that there might be Degrees of casual Homicide, and consequently they could not understand by that, only merely accidental Slaughter, strictly so called: Since there can be no Degrees of that; it is but one, and does not admit of Degrees. And therefore this is sufficient to shew, that more was meant than the Pursuers incline to admit; and if more was meant, that can allow of no other Construction, than to bring under these Words what the Lawyers call culpable Homicide, so as that your Lordships and the Jury may judge from Circumstances, whether the Slaughter is to be reckoned as casual, or really malicious, from Malice prepense.

The last Part of that Act of Parliament further enforces that Matter, which gives a Power not only to fine for the use of the nearest Relations, but even to imprison for casual Homicide. Now, how is it possible to believe, in Consistency with any Justice, that a Man might be imprisoned for a Fact intirely innocent, and no ways either culpable or criminal? Yet such Homicide merely accidental is: And therefore this shews to Demonstration that the Legislator understood, that under the Description of casual Homicide, such a Fact might come as carried a culpa along with it, and was not absolutely accidental or innocent.

And this being the plain Meaning of the Law, it must remain only to consider, whether culpable Homicide, or more particularly the present Case, does not, in a true and legal Sense, fall under the Words casual Homicide. And we hope we can be under no Difficulty to make that good, from what has been already said; first, That even by the Jewish Doctors and Interpreters of the Mosaic Law, Homicide without Hatred and Foresight, hath been called casual Homicide; the Passage above cited from the Collation of the Mosaic and Roman Law expressly shews it. 2do, All that has been said from the Texts of the civil Law, and Lawyers, prove it; since they directly call Slaughter, ex subito impetu, ex calore iracundiæ, in rixa, where there was just Provocation, casual; casu magis quam voluntate fit; casui magis quam noxæ imputandum: And all the rest of their Expressions plainly denominating all Slaughters casual in the large Sense, except that which is done dolose animo occidendi. 3tio, The Expressions in our own old Laws prove the same Thing; those Kind of Slaughters are called chaud melle or Chance-Medley, which is casual: And so Skeen speaks, in the very Place the Pursuers have cited, Manslaughter committed voluntarily, by forethought Felony, or not (which ever of the Degrees be received) casually by chaud melle. There your Lordships see chaud melle is expressly brought under the Description of casual; and so that being the case, we are under the Letter of the Act Charles II. we are included under the first Branch of casual Homicide.

And as we apprehend this holds in general, so it holds more particularly in the Pannel's Case, where, whatever was designed against Bridgeton, yet, as to my Lord Strathmore, the Killing was casual, and therefore falls directly under the Words of the Statute.

It affords no solid Argument against us, that the Act of Parliament bears these Words, FOR REMOVING OF ALL QUESTION AND DOUBT THAT MAY ARISE HEREAFTER IN CRIMINAL PURSUITS FOR SLAUGHTER. For, 1mo, Those Words must still be understood with regard to the Particulars enacted upon, that it is for removing all Doubts as to those Particulars; for it can never be pretended, that this or any Act of Parliament could remove all Doubts, even upon unforeseen Cases, many of which might happen that could not fall under the Words of that Law: For instance, Homicide committed in suppressing a Mob, strictly speaking, falls under none of the Words; or Homicide committed in preventing the Escape of a Prisoner actually imprisoned, and endeavouring his Escape: And many other Cases may be figured. But, 2do, According to the Interpretation we insist upon, the Act of Parliament does remove all Questions, so far as human Eyes could foresee, if the Words (casual Homicide) be taken in the Sense we give them; and, on the contrary, it does not remove all Questions, if culpable Homicides, and this very Case be not included; for then the Law has statuted nothing upon them, either one way or other, but hath only statuted upon Murder merely accidental, Homicide in Defence, and the others therein mentioned. Besides, that it may be pled without any Stretch, that a culpable Homicide is a Species of Homicide in Defence; though not precisely in Defence of Life, it is in Defence against a further Injury threatened, and expected from the prior Injury already given: And on these Considerations, we humbly apprehend, the Act of Parliament makes nothing against the Pannel, but rather favours him, since the Question is anent a Homicide purely casual as to the Person that was killed: and which Consideration entirely distinguishes his Case from every other Case that hath been tried since the Act of Parliament. And it may not be improper to notice, that Sir George Mackenzie says, "The Word casual, in the "Rubric of this Act, is taken in the lax Signification." And why not then take it in the same lax Signification in the statutory Part?

It is now proper to take notice of Sir George Mackenzie's Observations upon the 51st Act, James I. And in the first place, If Sir George be supposed to go as far in his Opinion as the Pursuers plead, we must beg leave to oppone the Law, and submit the Interpretation of it to your Lordships Judgment, as not sufficiently supporting his Opinion. 2do, Sir George says nothing against the Slaughter's being casual in the present Case, where the Blow was intended at one, and another struck by Fatality. 3tio, His Words do not go so far as the Pursuers would stretch them; for, in his Observation on the said 51st Act, he only says in general, That chaud melle, or homicidium in rixa commissum, is capital by our present Law: And so it is in many Cases; for instance, where the Killer is the Provoker, where he reiterates Strokes in such a manner, as to shew a Forethought and formed Design, although not premeditated for a long Interval of Time before: But Sir George does by no means say, that chaud melle or homicidium in rixa commissum, is in every Case capital; the contrary is most certain, as will appear from your Lordships Judgments afterwards to be noticed.

His Obervation upon the 90th Act is no ways against us; he says, indeed, "That Murder, though committed without forethought Felony, "is punishable with Death:" By which he must mean premeditated Malice,

Malice, and that is true; for no doubt Malice, where it can be presumed from the Act itself, and where the contrary does not appear from Circumstances, is punishable by Death, without further Forethought; but then he subjoins an Exception, which leaves the Matter where it was, except, says he, it be casual; that is, according to the Words of the Law: And so the Question remains, What is casual in the Sense of that Law?

The Pursuers use an Argument, which seems to be of no Force, "That "if Manslaughter was not capital, then the Crown could not pardon any "capital Slaughter; because by our Law the Crown could not pardon "Murder." We might easily admit the whole, without hurting our Argument; for if it be true that the Crown could not pardon Murder, then it is likewise true that he could not pardon any Slaughter that was capital; because no Slaughter was capital but Murder: Nevertheless the Position, That the Crown could not pardon Murder, is not supported by Practice, and, we doubt, not by our Law; because in several Cases, even of Murder, the very Thing statuted is, THAT THE PERSON OF THE CRIMINAL SHALL BE IN THE KING'S WILL; consequently the King can pardon, as well as order to be put to Death.

The Pursuers, in their Information, next go on to mention a great many Cases that have been judged by the Court since the Act 1661; and the first mentioned is that of William Douglas, which appears in the Records, and is noticed by Sir George Mackenzie, and is indeed noticed by him as a Foundation for some Things, wherein he seems to go too far. But this Case will never deserve any Regard; it has always been looked upon as a hard one, and we are afraid a Reproach on the Justice of the Nation. But at the same Time the Fault did not lye on the Court; it was truly the Jury; for the Trial went in general upon the Art and Part; and there appears no particular Pleadings to this Purpose on record in that Case: So that what Sir George says of it must be from mere Memory of Things not thought fit to be recorded.

The next Case mentioned is that of Nicolson, in the 1673, which can never make for the Pursuers, because there your Lordships sustained both the Libel and the Defence, though indeed the Defence was not proved: And therefore, if the Pursuers say, that the Defence was upon chaud melle, or culpable Homicide; the Case is with us, because your Lordships sustained the Defence. And although in Reality the Crime was proved to be wilful Murder, and the Defence not proved; yet so far it is on the Pannel's Side, that the Advocate insisted Nicolson was versans in re illicita, by carrying a Gun, which he acknowledged used to go off on half-bend; yet your Lordships sustained the Defence, "That the Gun "went off in a Struggle:" And if an Argument from a Lawyer's Pleading be good for any Thing, Sir George Mackenzie pled for the Pannel, in that Case, some of the very same Principles we now insist on, "That there "was no Prejudice against the Person killed, and that the Gun went off "in a Struggle." But indeed, the Case is naught in the Argument, and it seems strange why it is cited: It is true the Man was said to be drunk, and there was not a previous Quarrel; but then there was no Provocation, no justa causa iracundiæ, and no iracundia at all; but the Gun was twice deliberately snapped, and the third Time the Man was killed.

The third Case mentioned, is Murray contra Gray, yet less to the Purpose than any other: For there, the giving the Wound was libelled so far premeditate, that the Slayer followed the Person out of the House where he was, and killed him without any Provocation: And not one single Fact was pled in Defence, but a strange Demand made, that the Lords should make an Inquisition, in order to discover who was the first Aggressor; but it was not once pled that the Defunct was the Aggressor or Provoker. What can be the Meaning of citing such Cases?

The next Case cited is that of Aird, in the 1693; which indeed is something more to the Purpose, but yet does not answer the Pursuers Intention: For the Lords did not there find, that every Homicide was capital, except what was merely accidental; they indeed sustained the Libel, and repelled the Defences, which were mainly founded upon Provocation by ill Words from a Woman, and her throwing a Chamber-pot at the Pannel's Face, who was a Soldier: Which the Lords did not find sufficient to exculpate from the Libel, which bore reiterate Strokes to have been given the Woman in her own Door (which, by-the-bye, was hamesucken) she thrown over the Stairs, and pursued by the then Pannel. That Case was very singular: First, an Attack upon a Woman by a Soldier, who ought to have contemned Insults from the Female Sex, at least, not returned them with any Blows: No Injury of that Kind from a Woman can justify Blows given, much less reiterated Blows, and deliberately trampling to Death, throwing her over her Stair, and still continuing to pursue her: There, the presumed Difference of Strength, and Difference of the Sex, made such an Attack a barbarous Murder; just as an Invasion by a much stronger Man against a weaker, or by a Man against a Woman, although not with a mortal Weapon, would make a Blow with a mortal Weapon, given by such a Woman or weaker Person, come within the Description of Self-defence: Which is a Case that Lawyers state, although the same Thing would not be good, if they were of equal Strength, or that the Invasion was by the Woman, or Person of weaker Strength.

Another Case mentioned, is that of Carmichael in the 1694. But sure your Lordships must be weary of so many Cases, so little to the Purpose: For neither there, is there one Circumstance pled upon to exclude Forethought, or to show that the Thing was casual in any Sense; but some trifling Objections against the Form of the Libel: Only, indeed, Drunkenness, by itself, was founded on, which your Lordships did not sustain. And who can doubt it must be so?

The seventh Case mentioned by the Pursuers, is that of George Cuming the 1695. And upon looking into the Case, it must be owned, that it seems a very narrow, hard Case: But then the whole Burden of the Pursuers pleading turns upon this. That supposing there was a rixa, and that the Thing happened upon a sudden Quarrel; yet Cuming himself was the first Provoker, and the auctor rixæ, and therefore could not plead the Benefit even of Self-defence; which indeed brings the Case within what all Lawyers agree on. And had it not been for that Circumstance, 'tis impossible the Decision could have gone as it went: For in effect, the King's Advocate admitted the Defence, barring that Circumstance; but insisted upon that as what governed the Case. Yet still the Decision is narrow.

The Pursuers also mention the Case of Burnet of Carlops, anno 1711. But it is plainly against them; and it being to be noticed for the Pannel, shall not be dwelt upon here.

The next Case is that of Hamilton of Green, anno 1716; which does not all meet: For there a plain Murder was libelled, that the Pannel first made several Pushes with his Sword and Scabbard upon it; and not content with that, drew the Sword, and gave the Defunct the mortal Wound. And no Provocation was pled upon, on the Part of the Pannel, except what was verbal only. And the only real Injury, by striking with the Sword and Scabbard, was admitted to have been given by the Pannel. And though it was there pled, that the Defunct himself rushed upon the Sword, that was contrary to the Libel. And if the Fact had come so out, the Libel would not have been proved. And therefore, that Case does not all meet; for there were not sufficient Circumstances to exclude the Dole, or so much as to make a homicidium culposum.

Another Case they mention, is that of Thomas Ross, and Jeffery Roberts, 20th July, 1716; which makes against the Pursuers, as it is set forth by themselves: For there the Lords did sustain the Defence of Provocation by Words, receiving a Blow on the Face, being pulled down to the Ground, and beat with a great Stick or Car-rung, relevant to restrict the Libel to an arbitrary Punishment. And though the Words, "To the "imminent Danger of his Life," are insert, as they were pled in the Defence; yet that was not a Fact, but a Consequence inferred from the being struck with a Stick. And if the periculum vitæ had been the Foundation on which the Interlocutor went, then it must have been unjust; because no Man alive ever doubted, that a Man in Self-defence might lawfully kill, without being subject to any arbitrary Punishment whatsoever: But the Case was, that your Lordships found the Provocation and real Injuries reduced the Fact to a homicidium culposum. You indeed sustained the Reply, That the Defunct was held by Jeffrey at the Time of receiving the Wound, because that excluded the Defence of the Pannel's being upon the Ground when he gave the Wound, and made the Fact amount to Murder; because it never was doubted, but if one stab another, especially with a Knife, which is stabbing in the most barbarous Sense, when that other is held, and so put out of the State of doing further Injury, that is Murder by the Law of all Nations.

The Pursuers likewise mention a Case of Davidson, without noticing either Date or Circumstances; and therefore the Pannel must conclude there was no Defence proposed, exclusive of the Dole or Forethought.

The Case of Lindsay and Brock, the Greenock Taylors, is very far from putting the Case out of Doubt, or indeed touching it at all. The Case was, that the Defunct was enticed out of his House, and was attacked by two at the same Time; and when he and they were on the Ground, one of them, which came out to be Lindsay, stabbed him in the Throat with a Penknife. There your Lordships did not sustain the Crime as capital against them both, even upon the Art and Part, but only against the one who should appear to have given the Stab, and that came out to be Lindsay: But then indeed you found, not without Difference in Opinions, that nevertheless he had the Benefit of the Indemnity, upon this Foundation, that tho' the homicidium was dolosum, because of the Circumstances, yet it was not from Malice premeditate: And the Majority were of Opinion, that the Indemnity excluded nothing but premeditate Murder, and did not touch any Case done in rixa, notwithstanding the Person guilty might be the auctor rixæ. This does by no means determine any Question betwixt a dolosum and culposum homicidium; for that Fact was insisted to be dolosum, and indeed so found. 'Tis true, it proves that an Indemnity may reach even a homicidium dolosum, where the Dole arose immediately, and not ex intervallo; but that says nothing to this Question, nor is it proper to enter upon the Argument about the Indemnity, now that the Judgment is given.

The Case of Mathews, the Soldier, the Pursuers admit, was of the same Nature, and so needs no other Answer; only, That, in that Case, there were no Circumstances sufficient to exclude the Dole, or make it only a culpable Homicide.

These are all the Cases the Pursuers have mentioned, and, if Numbers would do, no Doubt there is enough; but your Lordships are to judge how far to the Purpose: And one Thing is remarkable with regard to them all, That not one of them touches the Case in hand, in so far as concerns the Slaughter's being casual as to my Lord Strathmore, the Invasion being intended against Bridgeton.

But now the Counsel for the Pannel beg leave to take notice of several Decisions, even since 1661, which directly establish the Point pled for the Pannel; and the first is Mason's Case in the 1674, to be seen in the Record; and also observed by Sir George Mackenzie. Mason was accused of killing Ralston, The Defences were three, first, That Ralston had followed Mason from House to House, at last put violent Hands upon him; whereby Mason was forced to throw him off, and that he fell against a Stool. 2*do*, That the Wound was not mortal, but Ralston died ex malo regimine. 3*tio*. That the Homicide was merely casual, and in Self-defence, Ralston being the Aggressor. The Lords sustained the Libel only relevant to infer the pœnam extraordinariam, and seperately sustained the other Defences to assoilzie in totum, and remitted all to the Knowledge of the Inquest. Here your Lordships see, the Killing only sustained ad pœnam extraordinariam, without regard to the three Defences of casual Homicide, Self-defence, and dying ex malo regimine; for they are all sustained separately to assoilzie, even from the pœna extraordinaria: Here then was a culpable Homicide, sustained only ad pœnam extraordinariam, though neither merely casual, nor in Self-defence; and so there can be no Judgment more direct upon the Point now pled.

And here the Pannel must notice, once for all, That it makes nothing to this Question, That in that, and other like Cases to be mentioned, a mortal Weapon was not used; for it is one Question, What is sufficient to make a Homicide only culpable? And quite another, Whether, in our Law, there is such a Thing as culpable Homicide, though neither merely casual, nor in Self-defence? That of the using a deadly Weapon enters into the Argument, Whether a Homicide is dolose or culpable only? But it makes nothing to the other Question, since Homicide may not be merely casual, although no mortal Weapon is used, as appears both from this Decision, and the Case of Bain, cited for the Pursuers.

Another Case is that of Grierson and others, 12th March, 1684; where the Pannels being accused of Murder, for killing the Defunct in a Scuffle; the Defence proponed was, That the Defunct was the first Aggressor, and did invade the Pannels, or one or other of them; and that William Grierson, or one or other of them, being ſtanding before the Fire, the Defunct threw the ſaid William, or one or other of them, in the Fire, and fell upon him himſelf; and then, after the Scuffle was over, the Defunct did riſe, walked up and down, diſcourſed, and of new again beat the ſaid William Grierſon, and threatened to kill him if he would not be gone; that the Defunct went in good Health to the Door thereafter. Theſe the Lords ſuſtained relevant to liberate from the ordinary Pain of Death. Here is another Deciſion in Point; the Crime was not found merely caſual, or the Court muſt have aſſoilzied; at leaſt, could only have impriſoned, and could have inflicted no other arbitrary Puniſhment. But that was not the Caſe, it was found culpable, and not merely caſual; and therefore the Puniſhment reſtricted. Sure then it is not true in Law, that all Homicides are capital, unleſs they be merely caſual.

A third Caſe, is that of Maxwell and others, 7th November, 1690, purſued for the Murder of John Ruſſel, where the Court ſuſtained this Defence, That there was a previous Combination to make a Convocation, in order to debar and keep out Mr. Walter Macgil, Miniſter of from entering into his Church that Sunday, in conſequence of which a Convocation happened; and when they were required to diſperſe, they took the Keys from the Beadle, and beat the Notar, and the Miniſter's Wife, and others, before the Slaughter was committed, relevant to reſtrict the Slaughter to an arbitrary Pain. And found yet further, That if any actual Attempt was made, by throwing great Stones at the Miniſter, before committing the Slaughter, that that was ſufficient to liberate from the Slaughter ſimpliciter. Sure the firſt Part of the Defence implied neither accidental Homicide, nor Self defence, but a Provocation by real Injuries; yet the Court juſtly ſuſtained it to reſtrict.

On the 6th November that ſame Year, another Judgment was given, very oppoſite to the Purſuer's Pleadings, in the Caſe of Captain Price and others, who were proſecuted for ſhooting one John Reid, a Tradeſman of Glaſgow, and Serjeant at that Time of a Guard kept in that Town. The Caſe was, That Captain Price, and others with him, had made ſome Diſturbance in the Houſe where they lodged, and committed ſome Rudeneſs to the Landlady and her Maid, which occaſioned the Guard to be called; and when the Guard came, commanded by Reid, and entered the Room where Price was, he and his Company reſiſted the Guard, and one of them ſhot Reid dead. The Defence proponed was, "That before any "Guard came, a Mob had begun to riſe, and had gathered at the Door "where the Officers were, who had ſhut the Door upon themſelves, and "cried out to ſhoot the Dogs, and Words to that Purpoſe: That when "the Guard came, they did not know it was the Guard, but reſiſted and "fired, from Apprehenſion that it was the Mob, and ſo killed Reid the "Commander of the Guard." The Lords "ſuſtained that Defence re-"levant to reſtrict the Libel." And in that Judgment, beſide the Eſtabliſhment of the general Principle, this may be obſerved, That Reid was killed by Miſtake, as one of the Mob, and there neither was nor could be any Provocation from him; neither was it pled, That the Mob had given any real Injury, but only were gathered in a tumultuous Way, and uttering injurious Words: Yet the Court juſtly reſtricted the Libel; tho' it is plain the Slaughter was not accidental, except in ſo far as the Commander of the Guard was killed in Place of a Mobber. Neither was it Self-defence, becauſe the Pannels had no Right to reſiſt the Guard, only there was an Injury by the Convocation, and an Apprehenſion given of greater Injuries, though that Apprehenſion was not ſo idly founded.

The Caſe of Captain Wallace firing on the Boys from the Abbay, may likewiſe be noticed; but being a well-known Caſe, needs not be at length recited.

A fourth Caſe is that of Enſign Hardie, 6th June, 1701: He was accuſed of Murder, by giving repeated Thruſts, with a drawn Sword, to one Smith, who at the Time had no Arms, whereof Smith inſtantly died; and that he afterwards boaſted of his Crime and Cruelty, telling other Gentlemen, That he had bowed his Sword upon the Perſon of a Fellow at Scarbridge. The Defence proponed, and ſuſtained, was, "That the De-"funct was the firſt Aggreſſor, and did take Hold of the Pannel's Horſe-"bridle; and when he was holding the Horſe by the Bridle, did give the "Pannel a Stroke over the Face with a Rung or Tree, and wounded "him to the Effuſion of his Blood; and that the Defunct beat the Pan-"nel from his Horſe." Theſe were found relevant to reſtrict the Libel to an arbitrary Puniſhment. And then the Reply was ſuſtained relevant to elide it, "That the Pannel beat the Defunct on the Face with a twiſted "Rod, before he ſtruck the Pannel." Here again the Point is fixed; no caſual Homicide, nor Homicide in Self-defence: And ſo your Lordſhips had found by a former Interlocutor, wherein you repelled the Defence, when proponed as Self-defence, but yet reſtricted the Puniſhment, becauſe the Homicide was culpable.

A ſixth Caſe yet ſtronger, is that of the firſt of March, 1710: Peter Madean, who was accuſed of the Murder of James Ewing, by ſhooting him dead with a Fowling-piece, when Ewing had no Arms in his Hand. The Defence ſuſtained to reſtrict the Libel to an arbitrary Puniſhment was, "That the Defunct quarrelled the Pannel, under the Name of "Raſcal, how he durſt carry a Fowling-Piece, and that if the Prince "had his own, he durſt not ſo do;" and adding theſe Words, "That her "Majeſty was but a Whore; and thereupon aſſaulted the Pannel for tak-"ing his Carabin from him." Theſe are the Words of the Interlocutor; and it is ſo plain, that no Obſervation needs to be made upon it.

Another Caſe is that of Bathgate, 23d January, 1710: He was accuſed of murdering Andrew Braidwood, by throwing him down to the Ground, and giving him ſeveral Strokes and Bruiſes, whereof he died. Your Lordſhips "found the Libel only relevant to infer an arbitrary Puniſhment;" yet the Fact was not entirely caſual, nor pled to be ſo: And you ſuſtained the Defence, "That the throwing down libelled was only a Wreſt-"ling, out of no Malice, and that previous thereto the Defunct was va-"letudinary, and in the Habit of ſpitting Blood, relevant to elide the "Libel in totum."

The Caſe of Govan, 3d March, 1710, is not ſo plain as the others above-mentioned; but yet it does aſſiſt in the Queſtion: For there your Lordſhips ſuſtained opprobrious Language and Invaſion, by beating in a Scuffle, though without mortal Weapons, relevant to reſtrict the Puniſhment of killing with a Sword, even ſuppoſe the killing ſhould be proved to have been without the Door of the Houſe, when the laſt beating was only pretended to have been within the Houſe; and ſo the beating muſt have been over before giving the Wound, and the Pannel employed in proſequendo, by way of Retortion of the Injury that had been given.

Another unanſwerable Caſe is that of Carlops, January 8th, 1711; the Circumſtances of which are ſo well known, that it is in vain to repeat them; ſure it was neither accidental Homicide, nor Homicide in Defence: But the Lords ſuſtained the Defence, That the beating was per plures commiſſum, in Conjunction with any two of the following Defences, viz. "That any beating committed by them was in a Tulzie or Rixa, "in which they mixed themſelves, to relieve a Youth in the Defunct's "Grips, or in a Struggle with him. Or, ſeparatim, That they had "Swords about them, and only made uſe of Staves or Batons, relevant "to reſtrict the Libel to an arbitrary Puniſhment."

There is another Caſe likewiſe worth noticing, 18th December, 1712; the Caſe of Serjeant Davies, who was accuſed of the Murder of Mr. Robert Park—where your Lordſhips "found the Pannel his being alone, Time "and Place libelled, and a Scuffle then happening betwixt the Defunct, "with two or three more in his Company and the Pannel, and after a "beating with Staves betwixt the ſaid Men and the Pannel, the ſaid Pan-"nel his retiring, and calling for the Guard, and being mutilate in the "Hand before he gave the ſaid mortal Wound, relevant to reſtrict the "Libel to an arbitrary Puniſhment."

Another very late Caſe is that of Jaſper Reyſano, 14th December, 1724, where the Pannel being accuſed of killing Robert Lamb, by throwing him over the Stairs, without Cauſe or Provocation, whereby he was brained, your Lordſhips ſuſtained it only "relevant to infer an arbitrary Puniſh-"ment." Yet ſure it was not accidental, far leſs in Defence. All which Caſes plainly eſtabliſh the Point, that even ſince the Act of Parliament, 1661, the conſtant Practice hath been to find culpable Homicides only relevant to infer arbitrary Puniſhment; and that there are Homicides not puniſhable with Death, though neither merely accidental, nor in Self-defence.

There is alſo a Caſe which deſerves to be noticed as to that Point, of a third Party's being killed when interpoſing betwixt other two in a Scuffle: Which is the Caſe of John Graham, 1ſt December, 1712, where Graham was accuſed of murdering David Cochran. But your Lordſhip ſuſtained the Defence, "That while he was attacked by Blyth with a drawn Dirk, "the Pannel was in his own Defence with a drawn Bayonet; and that in "the mean Time, the Defunct interpoſing as a Redder betwixt them, "did caſually receive the Wound libelled relevant to reſtrict the Libel to "an arbitrary Puniſhment."

This Information having drawn to ſo great a Length, we are unwilling to trouble your Lordſhips with further References to the Laws of other Countries, particularly to the Law of England; although we apprehend the Law there does not differ ſubſtantially from our Law in this Particular, except it be in theſe; 1*ſt*, That Manſlaughter is in effect not puniſhable at all in England, otherwiſe than by a Kind of eluſory Puniſhment; 2*dly*, That in no Caſe dolus is preſumed only from the giving the Wound, except upon the particular Statute of Stabbing: Whereas, indeed, it is in ſeveral Caſes otherwiſe with us; culpable Homicide is puniſhable arbitrarily, and no Doubt in many Caſes, where contrary Circumſtances do not appear, the giving the Wound preſumes Dole, and even by the Statute of Stabbing, the Killer hath the Benefit of his Clergy, if the Perſon killed give the firſt Blow or real Provocation, and that although the Provocation did not immediately precede the Act of Killing, if it happened at any Time of the Quarrel.

That by the ancient Law of England, Slaying a Man did not infer Death, yet perhaps not what we call Murder itſelf, ſeems plain from Aſſiſa Henrici Regis apud Northampton, publiſhed by Selden, in his Jahus Anglorum, Page 120. of the laſt Edition; by which it appears, that even Murder itſelf and Robbery, was puniſhable only by Mutilation, ſuch as cutting off the Hand or Foot: And all their Law-books, as well as the daily Practice, eſtabliſhes the Diſtinction betwixt forethought Felony, and ſlaying on Suddenty; yea of old, even a Murderer by Malice prepenſe ſeems to have had the Benefit of the Clergy, and that Benefit only taken away from ſuch Murderers by the firſt Act, 23d Henry VIII. and their Books of Reports are full of the Examples that Slaughter on Suddenty is not Murder or capital. In Coke's Reports it is ſtated, that ſeveral Men playing at Bowls, two of them quarrelled, and a third, in Revenge of his Friend, ſtruck the other with a Bowl, of which wound he died: This was held Manſlaughter; for it was done upon a ſudden Emotion, in Revenge of his Friend.

There likewiſe, two Boys combating together, one of them was ſcratched in the Face, and his Noſe run a great Quantity of Blood; he went three Quarters of a Mile off to his Father; who ſeeing him all bloody, took in his Hand a Cudgel, and went three Quarters of a Mile to the Place where the other Boy was, and ſtruck him upon the Head, of which the Boy died. This was held but Manſlaughter; for the Ire and Paſſion of the Father was continued; and there was no Time determined in the Law that it was ſo ſettled, that it ſhall be adjudged Malice prepenſe in Law.

The Caſe of Mawgridge, ſet down at length by Lord Chief-Juſtice Keyling, in his Reports *, makes ſtrongly for us; and we beg Leave to refer to the whole Treatiſe there ſet down, and particularly to the firſt Ground of Provocation, which he declares to be ſufficient ſo as to alleviate the Act of Killing, and to reduce it to a bare Homicide: "He ſays, "If one Man, upon angry Words, ſhall make an Aſſault upon another, "either by pulling him by the Noſe, or fillipping upon the Forehead, "and he that is ſo aſſaulted ſhall draw his Sword, and immediately run "the other thorow, that is but Manſlaughter; for the Peace is broken "by the Perſon killed, and with an Indignity to him that received the "Aſſault: Beſides, he that was ſo affronted might reaſonably apprehend, "that he that treated him in that Manner might have ſome further De-"ſign upon him." Your Lordſhips ſee how cloſe this is to the Caſe: The Inſult and Indignity done by Bridgeton was vaſtly ſtronger than any any thing here mentioned and having received such an Affront, he had Reason to expect worse; more especially when, as we offered to prove, Bridgeton was endeavouring to pull out my Lord Strathmore's Sword.

We must likewise humbly refer to several Cases set down by Serjeant Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, which fully agree with what we now plead; and particularly take notice of what he says, pag. 84. "If a third "Person happen, accidentally happen, to be killed by one engaged in a "Combat with another, upon a sudden Quarrel, it seems that he who "kills him is guilty of Manslaughter only." And it would seem that there is even a Difference made, betwixt killing a Person that endeavours to interpose, if he tell that he comes for that Purpose, and killing one who accidentally is interposed betwixt the two contending Parties, which was my Lord Strathmore's Case: The Killing him who interposes to separate, if he give notice what he is doing, is reckoned worse than the Killing the other. And this Observation shews that the present Case is stronger than the above-cited Case of Graham, where your Lordships restricted it to an arbitrary Punishment. And what that Author observes, confirms a Distinction we have made, betwixt a Man quarrelling with another, and killing a third Party, where it is proved the Killer had a felonious Intention to murder the other, and the Case where that does not appear; for however, in the first Case, he might be guilty of the Murder of the third Party, yet if a Design to murder the Person he quarrelled with is not proved, then he can never suffer capitally for killing the third Party: And we have already endeavoured to prove, that that must be the Case as to Bridgeton, where he gave the Provocation, and no Act followed against him sufficient in Law to establish a Design of murdering him.

The Pursuers have cited the same Books, and Mawgridge's Case, as for them; but that we submit. The particular Cases of Holloway, and Williams the Welchman, spoke of by Keyling, are not at all to the Purpose: The Welchman's Case was no Judgment; but neither in that nor in Holloway's was there any real personal Injury, on which a great Stress is laid in all these Questions.

The Pursuers mention another Case stated, but never adjudged; A Person shooting at Fowls with an Intent to steal them, accidentally kills a Man; that will be Murder. This perhaps may be justly doubted. Sure it would be too severe. But supposing it were so, it is of no Importance: Stealing, even of Fowls, by the Law of England, is Felony of Malice prepense; And where a Man attempting to commit one Felony, does another, there is little Doubt but in strict Law he is guilty of the Felony committed (a). But what is that to the Case of a Provocation by a real Injury?

The Pursuers have quoted the Authority of Voet, and a Decision observed by him from Sande, to prove, that where one Man was intended to be killed, and another slain, the Crime is Capital: In which, no doubt, Voet differs from many as learned Lawyers, who are of the other Side. But his Opinion, and that of Sande, is obviated by what is already said: It is only in the Case of no Provocation or real Injury on the Part of him who was designed to be killed. And 2do, 'Tis always taken for granted by Voet, and all who are of that Opinion, that the Design of murdering the Person intended to be invaded, do appear and is proved: But we have already shewn, that cannot be said in the present Case.

The Pursuers pretended, That there was a Circumstance in the Libel which implied Malice against the Earl of Strathmore, viz. "That the "Thrust given was followed by a second Push." But as there is nothing in this Fact, it may be the Subject of Imagination, but can never be the Subject of Proof, unless it were pretended, as it is not, that the Pannel drew back or out his Sword, and made a second Thrust; which will appear not to be true, from the Nature of the Wound; and the Thrust will be found to have been so momentary, that it was impossible. 2do, If any thing like that happened, it will appear, that there was no more in it, but the Pannel's staggering, or moving the Sword, by his Weight leaning upon it. 3tio, There is no Relevancy in it at all; the Fact being, That the Pannel pushed as at Bridgeton: And no Circumstance will make it appear, that he knew he had touched the Earl of Strathmore till some time after the Fatality was perfected.

The Pursuers further pretended, "That as they had libelled Malice, "they would prove it from other antecedent Facts that had happened some "Time before, whereby it would appear, that there was Enmity betwixt "the Defunct and the Pannel."

It is answered for the Pannel, 1mo, That no such Facts being libelled, nor, to this Minute, condescended upon, either in the Debate or Information, they can by no means enter into the Proof, otherwise the highest Injustice would be done to the Pannel in this and every such Case: For if the pretended Facts, inferring Malice, had been libelled, then it would have been competent to the Pannel to have elided the same by a proper Proof, to shew that they inferred no Malice on his Part; he might have proved Dissimulation or Reconciliation, and would have been prepared for that Purpose. But where such Facts are concealed, and may have happened at an unknown Distance of Time, 'tis impossible the Pannel can be prepared with proper Evidences. And though it is sufficient, in an Indictment, to libel Malice in general, in order to make a Relevancy; yet then it is always understood that the Pursuer intends no more than the presumed Malice arising from the Fact libelled: Neither can such Proof come in under the Head of Art and Part, because that can only have Regard to such Facts as happen at the Time of committing the Action complained of, and such as import a Share in the Action; but cannot reach to pretended Qualifications of Malice that happened the Lord knows when.

In the next place, the Pannel offers to exclude all Pretence of former Enmity, by proving, that, for some Time before, they had met from Time to Time occasionally, without any Marks of Enmity, but all the seeming Requisites of Friendship and Civility intervening; and particularly, that that very Day they had dined together, afterwards drunk together for a considerable Time, and visited together, in the Lady Auchterhouse's, a common Relation, with all Appearances of Friendship; and that the deceast Earl had kindly invited the Pannel and his Family to come and visit him and his, and made a Challenge of Kindness of it, That he was too great a Stranger. In the Case of Enmity, the Divine Law itself determines, when Hatred is to be presumed, and when not: "Whoso killeth his "Neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in Time past; in the He- "brew, from Yesterday, the third Day;" or, as in the Latin Translation, qui heri & nudius tertius nullum odium contra eum habuisse comprobatur. So that the very Friendship that passed that Day on which the unhappy Accident happened, excludes all Pretence of former Enmity, suppose there had been any seeming Differences, of which the Pannel is not conscious, far less of Malice, or any capital Enmity that ever was.

Upon the whole, though this fatal and melancholy Accident, which gives occasion to the Trial, does and must ly heavy on the Mind of the Pannel, and produce the strongest Sorrow and Regret in all that had the Honour to know the deceast Earl; yet the punishing the Pannel capitally for an Offence which happened casu magis quam voluntate, would be a very rigorous Extension of the Law. It is plain, from what is above said, that culpable Homicide, both by our Law and Practice, is punishable only arbitrarily, and comes under the general Description of casual Homicide in the Act 1661. No Case can be more pitiful or favourable than this, where the Death happened to a Person nowise intended to be hurt: And therefore 'tis hoped your Lordships will sustain the Defence pled, relevant to restrict the Libel to an arbitrary Punishment.

(a) At the Lent Assizes at Chelmsford in Essex, 1763, two Sailors were convicted for the Murder of a Farmer: The Case was, the Sailors came to steal the Farmer's Fowls; the Farmer with his Son pursued them; one of the Sailors struck the Farmer several Blows on the Arm, which (though not likely) killed him. This was held to be Murder; because the Act they were about was unlawful; but the Sailors, after several Respites from Execution, received his Majesty's most gracious Pardon.

the ninth Day of May laſt, betwixt the Hours of Eight and Nine o'Clock at Night, where he did ſee the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore, Lord Roſehill, and Mr. Thomas Lyon my Lord Strathmore's Brother, walking in the Streets; and at the ſame Time did ſee Lyon of Bridgeton, and Finhaven the Pannel, ſtanding near to the Lady Auchterhouſe her Houſe, upon the Street; what Words paſſed betwixt them, he being at a Diſtance could not hear; ſaw Bridgeton give Finhaven a Puſh with his Hand; and Finhaven fell in the Gutter; and he ſaw a Servant of the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore help Finhaven up out of the Gutter; and when Finhaven got up, he ſaw him draw his Sword immediately; but that Bridgeton coming up faſter than Finhaven, he ſaw Bridgeton offer to draw my Lord Strathmore's Sword; but does not know whether he got it drawn, or not, but ſaw Finhaven draw his Sword before Bridgton offered to draw my Lord Strathmore's; and when Bridgeton was coming up from the Place where Finhaven fell, he looked over his Shoulder, and ſeeing Finhaven with his Sword drawn, he went faſter up to my Lord Strathmore, as ſaid is; and when Finhaven came up, my Lord Strathmore being ſtanding about a Pair of Butts from the Place where Finhaven fell, and when Bridgeton came up, and endeavoured to draw my Lord Strathmore's Sword, as ſaid is, my Lord turned him about, and ſet Bridgeton aſide, and made ſome Steps towards Finhaven, who would be at that Time about ſix or eight Ells from my Lord; and he did ſee my Lord endeavour to take Finhaven in his Arms when they met, and in a little after that, that he did ſee my Lord withdraw himſelf aſide from the reſt of the Company, and ſaw him put down his Breeches, and lift up his Shirt, and heard him ſay he had got a Wound, and repeated theſe Words three Times, and ſaw him put up his Shirt, and in a ſhort Time thereafter ſaw my Lord fall to the Ground. And being interrogate, If he ſaw Finhaven the Pannel make a Thruſt at my Lord Strathmore with a Sword? Deponed, He did not ſee him make the Thruſt, but at that Time did ſee no other Sword drawn but Finhaven's; and after my Lord retired he ſaw ſeveral other Swords drawn. Deponed, That there was no other Company ſtanding with my Lord but my Lord Roſehill, and his own Brother Mr. Thomas, before that Bridgeton and Finhaven came up: And that he ſaw all this that he has deponed upon, from his own Shop-door, which was about ſeven or eight Ells Diſtance from that Part of the Street where my Lord Strathmore was ſtanding. And being interrogate, If he knows what came of Bridgeton, after he came up to my Lord? Deponed, That he knew not what became of Bridgeton after my Lord put him aſide: And that there was as much Day-light as he could ſee what he has deponed upon: And that Finhaven the Pannel was in Boots; and that he was coming faſt up after Bridgeton, but Bridgeton went faſter towards my Lord; and that when my Lord Strathmore fell, he ſaw Thomas Adam, Maltman, take up my Lord from the Ground, and ſaw no other Body aſſiſting. Deponed, He ſaw the Pannel's Sword twiſted out of his Hand by Mr. Thomas, or my Lord Roſehill; but which of them, he knows not; and that it was after my Lord fell. And deponed, That he did ſee the Wound in my Lord's Belly, a little below the Navel; and that it was blooding. Deponed, That he ſaw Finhaven, after his Sword was twiſted out of his Hand, walk in his ordinary way of walking, towards the Lady Auchterhouſe her Houſe. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he ſhould anſwer to God.

Robert Hepburne.

AD. COCKBURNE.

Nota, The Procurators for the Pannel having (before purging) objected to the above-named Robert Hepburne, why he ought not to be a Witneſs in this Caſe; becauſe, ſince his Citation to be a Witneſs, he had expreſſed Malice and Ill-will againſt the Pannel in thir Words, viz. "That he thanked GOD, he had now an Opportunity to hang "him, and would do it if he could." And ſeeing theſe Expreſſions were clearly proven againſt him, by two concurring Witneſſes, in Preſence of the Court and Jury, they deſired the ſame might be ſo marked in the Books of Adjournal. Which, and this Depoſition, the Lords left to the Conſideration of the Jury.

David Lord Roſehill, ſolemnly ſworn, purged, examined and interrogate, deponed, (being interrogate for the Pannel) That the Time libelled, the Deponent, on the Occaſion of a Burying, was brought in Company with the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore, the Pannel, and others; and together they dined in Mr. Carnegie of Lours's Houſe; and after Dinner and the Burying was over, they together went to the Houſe of Mr. Dickſon, Clerk of Forfar, where they continued ſome conſiderable Time, drinking a Glaſs of Wine together; and after they left that Houſe, they aſſembled in the Houſe of my Lady Auchterhouſe, in the ſame Town, the Pannel's Siſter, where the deceaſt Earl had gone to make a Viſit. Deponed, That during all that Day, and in the ſeveral Places where the deceaſt Earl, the Pannel, and the reſt of the Company were, he the Deponent, obſerved nothing but great Civility and Friendſhip betwixt the deceaſt Earl and the Pannel. Deponed, That before they parted from the Lady Auchterhouſe's, the Pannel appeared to the Deponent to be drunk, and far gone in Drink, to the Degree of ſtaggering; and he obſerved the Pannel drink plentifully in theſe ſeveral Houſes. Deponed, That he the Deponent, during the Time of his being with the ſaid Company, was moſtly engaged in Converſation with the deceaſt Earl, and had not the Occaſion to obſerve what paſſed in Converſation betwixt the Pannel and Mr. Lyon of Bridgeton: And being interrogate about what he knew of the Character and Temper of the Pannel? Deponed, That, according to the Deponent's Knowledge of him, which had been of long Continuance, and particularly according to the Character he the Pannel bore in the Country, he was thought to be nowiſe quarrelſome in his Temper, but to be of a peaceable and good Diſpoſition. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this was the Truth as he ſhould anſwer to God. Roſehill.

D. ERSKINE.

William Douglas, lawful Son to William Douglas, late Provoſt and Chirurgeon-Apothecary in Forfar, ſolemnly ſworn, purged, examined, and interrogate for the Purſuers, deponed, That on that Day whereon the deceaſt Earl of Strathmore was wounded, he the Deponent was at Forfar, and on the Streets, where he did ſee the Earl with my Lord Roſehill and Mr. Thomas Lyon his Brother, and at the ſame Time, he obſerved Finhaven and Mr. Lyon of Bridgeton ſtanding together near to the Lady Auchterhouſe her Lodging; and ſo on thereafter looking about, he obſerved Finhaven leaning and falling backwards into a Kennel; and after getting out of it, which he appeared to the Deponent to do very ſoon, he drew his Sword, and with it went up to the Company where the Earl, Bridgeton, and the reſt were; and at the firſt Sight, upon the Pannel's approaching to the Earl, Bridgeton and the reſt, Bridgeton was then interpoſed betwixt the Earl and the Pannel; but all of a ſudden and a clap (a), the Earl came to be interpoſed betwixt Bridgeton and the Pannel; and at the Time of the ſaid Earl's Interpoſition, the Pannel was within the Length of his Sword at the Place where Bridgeton was ſtanding; that is to ſay, had been ſtanding. Deponed, That he did obſerve the Pannel make a Thruſt with his Sword, and at the Time of ſo doing, the Earl was ſtanding next the Pannel, and his Face towards him. Deponed, That the Earl received a Wound in his Belly, and after receiving it, he ſaw him pull his Shirt from under his Breeches, and at the ſame Time ſaw him blooding, and ſoon thereafter his Lordſhip fell down, and he heard him ſay, that he had got it; and before the Earl fell, and while he was upon the Ground, he did obſerve his Brother Mr. Thomas, with his drawn Sword, twiſt Finhaven's Sword out of his Hand, after ſeeing and hearing ſome claſhing of their Swords: But at the Time when Finhaven made the Puſh, as ſaid is, he obſerved no other Sword drawn but Finhaven's; and at the Time when the Pannel recovered his Thruſt, the Pannel and the Earl were very near one another: And all this Time, the Deponent was about the Length of this Room, or ſome more, diſtant from the ſaid Earl and the Pannel, whoſe Sides were oppoſite to the Deponent; and after the Earl of Strathmore's Fall, and that his Brother Mr. Thomas, twiſted the Sword out of the Pannel's Hand, the Pannel, who was in Boots, ran towards his Siſter's Door: After the deceaſt Earl was carried to a Houſe, and his Wound was dreſt, he heard his Lordſhip ſay, that after the Sword entered his Belly, he the Pannel gave it a ſecond Thruſt. Deponed, That when he obſerved Finhaven falling into the Puddle, as aboveſaid, there was none ſtanding with him or by him but Mr. Lyon of Bridgeton. And what he has above deponed, happened on the ninth Day of May laſt, about the Hour of Nine at Night. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this was Truth as he ſhould anſwer to God. Will. Douglas.

DA. ERSKINE.

Andrew Douglas, alſo lawful Son to the ſaid William Douglas, ſolemnly ſworn, purged, examined and interrogate, Deponed, That the Time and Place libelled, the Deponent ſaw John Lyon of Bridgeton puſh the Pannel upon the Breaſt, whereby the Pannel fell in the Gutter, which the Deponent apprehended would have taken him up to the Knee; that it was a very naſty Gutter; and that he ſaw the Pannel ariſe out of the Gutter, and immediately draw his Sword, by which Time Bridgeton was walking off towards my Lord Strathmore and others, who were ſtanding upon the Street about the Diſtance of the Length of this Room from the foreſaid Gutter: And deponed, That he followed after Finhaven immediately, after ſtanding a little while with his Comerades: And that before the Deponent came up to the Place where my Lord Strathmore and the other Gentlemen were ſtanding, my Lord Strathmore had fallen upon the Street. And the Deponent being aſked, how ſoon that happened? Deponed, That it was in a moment; and that when the Deponent came up as aforeſaid, he ſaw Mr. Thomas Lyon and Finhaven engaged, and making Paſſes at other with their drawn Swords; which the Deponent explained to be only a claſhing with their Swords; and that Mr. Thomas Lyon did very ſoon twiſt the Sword out of Finhaven's Hand; whereupon Finhaven ran away to his Siſter's, the Lady Auchterhouſe's Lodging, and the Door was ſhut after him. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this was the Truth as he ſhould anſwer to God. Andrew Douglas.

AND. FLETCHER.

John Ferrier, Reſidenter in Forfar, ſolemnly ſworn, purged, examined and interrogate, deponed, That, at the Time and Place libelled, the Deponent having Occaſion to go to water his Maſter's Horſe, he ſaw Bridgeton and the Pannel, as they came out from the Lady Auchterhouſe's Lodging, about the Bridge-ſtone near the Shambles, and there heard Bridgeton ſay to the Pannel, You muſt give me an Anſwer to my Queſtion, which the Deponent heard was, If the Pannel would give his Daughter to the Lord Roſehill? And upon the Pannel's ſaying, No; Bridgeton aſked him, If he would drink a Bottle of Wine, and if he would drink the King's Health? And upon the Pannel's refuſing to do either, the Deponent ſaw Bridgeton take hold of the Pannel by the Breaſt, and violently puſh him into the Kennel; and heard Bridgeton at the ſame Time, ſay, Go, and be damn'd, and your King George, whom you love ſo well. And deponed, That he, the Deponent, that ſame Night did ſpeak to my Lord Gray, to ſpeak to my Lord Strathmore, to get Finhaven added to the Committee, ſaying, That would make all Things right; But my Lord Gray returned no Anſwer to the Deponent. Cauſa ſcientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he ſhould anſwer to GOD.

Accordingly the Pannel did write a Letter to the Earl to the foresaid Purpose, which he delivered to the Deponent; and with it he the Deponent did again go to Glammis, and at that Time also had the Misfortune to miss his Lordship: Upon which he the Deponent delivered the Letter to one Mr. Greenhill, the Earl's Servant; and the Meeting of the Heritors holding upon the Wednesday thereafter, the said Mr. Greenhill came from his Lordship, and attended the Meeting: And deponed, That the writing of the foresaid Letter, and delivering of it, was about the End of March, or Beginning of April last. Deponed, That the Deponent has for these three Years past been intimately acquaint with the Pannel; and during the whole Course of his Acquaintance, he observed him always to be regular in his Life, and of a peaceable Temper and Disposition, which is the Character he bears in the Country. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to GOD.

MR. James Maxwell, Minister of the Gospel at Forfar, solemnly sworn, purged, examined and interrogate, ut supra, deponed, That soon after the Earl of Strathmore received his Wound, the Deponent waited of him, and from him he went to the Prison and visited the Pannel, whom he found in great Disorder, and under the Impressions of Drunkenness, his Cloaths being all covered with Mire, and his Face besmired with Dirt; the Deponent helped him to take off his Cloaths, and sent for a Coat and some Linens of his own to put on, at least the Coat was his own, which he helped to put on him, and to wash and clean his Face. The Deponent spoke to him suitably to the Occasion of his Visit, both in respect to his Drunkenness, and what was published abroad he had committed upon the Earl of Strathmore, by giving him a Wound; upon hearing whereof, and the Deponent further saying, That he had to his great Satisfaction heard the Earl of Strathmore pray to God to forgive him: Upon this the Pannel fell into the greatest Disorder, tossing himself backwards and forwards upon a Table, and hanging his Head downwards, cried out, Good GOD! have I wounded the Earl of Strathmore, a Person for whom I had great Kindness, and against whom I had no Design. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to GOD.

MAWGRIDGE's Caſe in the Queen's-Bench, Term: Hill. 5 Annæ Reginæ.

AT the Seſſions of the Peace held at Guildhall, London, on the Firſt of July, in the fifth Year of the Queen, John Mawgridge of London, Gent. was indicted, for that on the Seventh of June, in the ſame Year, he did feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of his Malice forethought, make an Aſſault upon William Cope, Gent and with a Sword on the left Part of his Breaſt, near the left Pap, did him ſtrike and pierce, giving him thereby a mortal Wound, of which the ſaid William Cope did inſtantly die. Which Indictment being delivered to the Juſtices of Gaol-Delivery for Newgate, he was arraigned thereupon, and pleaded Not Guilty.

The Jury found this Special Verdict:

That William Cope was Lieutenant of the Queen's Guards in the Tower, and the principal Officer then commanding there, and was then upon the Guard in the Guard-Room; and that John Mawgridge was then and there, by the Invitation of Mr. Cope, in company with the ſaid William Cope, and with a certain Woman of Mr. Cope's Acquaintance, which Woman Mawgridge did then affront, and angry Words paſſed between them in the Room, in the preſence of Mr. Cope and other Perſons there preſent, and Mawgridge there did threaten the Woman; Mr. Cope did thereupon deſire Mawgridge to forbear ſuch Uſage of the Woman, ſaying that he muſt protect the Woman; thereupon Mawgridge did continue the reproachful Language to the Woman, and demanded Satisfaction of Mr. Cope, to the Intent to provoke him to fight: Thereupon Mr. Cope told him 'twas not a convenient Place to give him Satisfaction, but at another Time and Place he would be ready to give it to him, and in the mean time deſired him to be more civil, or to leave the Company: Thereupon John Mawgridge roſe up, and was going out of the Room; and ſo going, did ſuddenly ſnatch up a Glaſs-Bottle full of Wine then ſtanding upon the Table, and violently threw it at him, the ſaid Mr. Cope, and therewith ſtruck him upon the Head, and immediately thereupon, without any Intermiſſion, drew his Sword, and thruſt him into the Left Part of his Breaſt, over the Arm of one Robert Martin, notwithſtanding the Endeavour uſed by the ſaid Martin to hinder Mawgridge from killing Mr. Cope, and gave Mr. Cope the Wound in the Indictment mentioned, whereof he inſtantly died. But the Jury do farther ſay, That immediately, in a little Space of Time, between Mawgridge's drawing his Sword and the giving the mortal Wound by him, Mr. Cope did ariſe from his Chair where he ſate, and took another Bottle that then ſtood upon the Table, and threw it at Mawgridge, which did hit and break his Head; That Mr. Cope had no Sword in his Hand drawn all the while; and that after Mawgridge had thrown the Bottle, Mr. Cope ſpake not. And whether this be Murder or Manſlaughter, the Jury pray the Advice of the Court.

A Day being appointed for the Reſolution of the Court, and the Marſhal required to bring the Priſoner to the Bar, returned he was eſcaped; which being recorded, the Chief-Juſtice gave the Opinion of the Judges in this Manner:

This Record being removed into this Court, the Caſe hath been argued before all the Judges; and all of us, except my Lord Chief-Juſtice Trevor, are of Opinion that Mawgridge is guilty of Murder.

This hath been a Caſe of great Expectation.

This Diſtinction between Murder and Manſlaughter only, is occaſioned by the Statute of 23 H. VIII. and other Statutes that took away the Benefit of Clergy from Murder committed by Malice prepenſed, which Statutes have been the Occaſion of many nice Speculations.

The Word Murder is known to be a Term or a Deſcription of Homicide committed in the worſt Manner, which is no where uſed but in this Iſland, and is a Word framed by our Saxon Anceſtors in the Reign of Canutus upon a particular Occaſion, which appears by an unconteſted Authority, Lamb. 141. In the Laws of Edward the Confeſſor: Murdra quidam inventa fuerunt in diebus Canuti Regis, qui poſt acquiſitam Angliam & pacificatam, rogatu Baronum Angliæ remiſit in Daciam exercitum ſuum. Thereupon a Law was made, That if any Engliſhman ſhould kill any of the Danes that he had left behind, if he were apprehended, he ſhould be bound to undergo the Ordeal Trial to clear himſelf; and if the Murderer were not found within eight Days, and after that a Month was given, then if he could not be found, the Ville ſhould pay forty-ſix Marks, which if not able to pay, it ſhould be levied upon the Hundred. Bracton 120. agrees with this Account.

Though this Law ceaſed upon the Expulſion of the Danes, yet William the Conqueror revived it for the Security of his Normans, as appears by his Laws, after he had confirmed King Edward the Confeſſor's Laws. And Henry I. Anno primo Regni, afterwards by his Law (as appears in the Addition to Lambert) eſtabliſhes, " That if a Man be found ſlain, he ſhould be taken to be a Frenchman, if it was not proved that he was an Engliſhman, and the Country was bound to enquire whether the Perſon ſlain was an Engliſhman or a Frenchman." Theſe Inquiſitions were taken before the Coroner, and returned to the Juſtices in Eyre, and if the Jury found him an Engliſhman, then the Country was to be diſcharged, which Law was called Engliſhire, and the Juſtices in Eyre were alſo bound to enquire thereof, untill the Statute of 14 E. III. which, as it is mentioned in Stamford, was aboliſhed.

Hereby a Miſtake upon the Statute of Marlebridge is rectified, which is cap. 26. Murdrum de cætero non adjudicatur coram juſticiariis, ubi per infortunium adjudicatum eſt, ſed locum habeat murdrum de interfectis per ſe oniam tantum, & non aliter. This was not made upon a Suppoſition that he that killed the Perſon ſlain by Misfortune ſhould be hanged, but only to explain, or rather to take off the Rigor of the Conqueror's Law, that the Country ſhould not be compelled to find out the Manſlayer; or if he were found out, he ſhould not undergo the Penalty of that Law. For as the Law ſtood, or was interpreted before that Statute, if a Man was found to be ſlain, it was always intended, 1. That he was a Frenchman. 2. That he was killed by an Engliſhman. 3. That Killing was Murder. 4. If any one was apprehended to be the Murderer, he was to be tried by Fire and Water, though he killed him by Misfortune; which was extended beyond Reaſon and Juſtice in favour of the Normans: But if an Engliſhman was killed by Misfortune, he that killed him was not in Danger of Death, becauſe it was not Felony. For, ſaith Bracton (who wrote the latter End of H. III.) fol. 136. " He that killed a Man by Misfortune, was to be diſcharged." 5. If the Malefactor was not taken, then the Country was to be amerced. But by the Statute of Marlebridge, if it was known that the Perſon ſlain was a Frenchman, and was killed by Misfortue, then the Country ſhould not be amerced if the Manſlayer was not taken; or if he were taken, he ſhould not be put to his Ordeal Trial. This ſeems to be the true Meaning of that Statute.

But, ſecondly, it will appear to a Demonſtration, That before that Statute, he that killed an Engliſhman per infortunium was never in any Danger of Death; for this Statute of Marlebridge was made 52 H. III. The Statute of Magna Charta was conſummate 9 H. III. and that ſuppoſes, " That every one impriſoned for the Death of a Man, and not thereof indicted, might of Right purſue the Writ de odio & atia; and if it was found that the Perſon impriſoned killed him ſe defendendo, or per infortunium, and not per felonium, then he was to be bailed." Which ſhews that he was not in danger of Death; for if he had, he would not have been let to Bail, 2 Inſt. 42.

Hereby I have given a true Account of the Senſe of the Word Murder, what it was when (firſt in the Time of Canutus) a Dane, and ſince (in William the Conqueror) when a Frenchman was killed; for, as it was then ſuppoſed in the Time of Canutus, the Engliſhmen hated the Danes upon the account of their Nation that had ſubdued them, and would upon all Occaſions ſeek their Deſtruction, as they did of a conſiderable Number of them in the Time of Ethered, the Saxon King that preceded Canutus next ſave one; ſo the Conqueror had the ſame Reaſon to ſuſpect the Safety of his Normans.

Afterwards, as appears by the Confeſſor's Laws, Lamb. 141. the ſecret or inſidious killing of any other as well as a Foreigner was declared to be Murder. Bracton 120, 134, 135. Murder is thus defined, Eſt occulta hominum extraneorum & notorum occiſio manu hominum nequiter perpetrata. With which agrees the other old Books of Britton and Fleta: Only in caſe of a Foreigner it was penal to the Country; not of a Native.

Next, it may be neceſſary to ſhew what was to be underſtood by Homicide or Manſlaughter. Bracton 128. mentions the worſt Part of it, which is a voluntary Homicide, defined in this Manner: Si quis ex certa ſcientia & in aſſultu præmeditato, ira, vel odio, vel cauſa lucri, nequiter & in felonia, ac contra pacem Domini Regis alquem interfecerit: If one knowingly, and by a permeditated Aſſault, by Anger or Hatred, or for Lucre-Sake, ſhould kill another, this was accounted Manſlaughter; If it be done clanculo, ſaith Bracton, it is Murder: That was all the Difference there was between the one and the other.

It appears, that ſince that of Bracton the Notion of Murder is much altered, and comprehends all Homicides, whether privately or publickly committed, if done by Malice prepenſed. With this agrees Stam. Pl. Cor. 18. b. " At this Day (ſaith he) a Man may define Murder in another Manner than it is defined by Bracton, Britton and Fleta: If any one of Malice prepenſed doth kill another, be he Engliſhman or Foreigner, if ſecretly or publickly, that is Murder: This was the Definition long before the making of the Statutes of 4 & 23 H. VIII. and the other Statutes that took away Clergy." To define Murder, there muſt be malitia præcogitata, as alſo murdravit: So that if an Indictment be that the Party murdravit, and not ex malitia præcogitata, it is but Manſlaughter, Yel. 204. 2 Cro. 283. 1 Bul. 141. Bradly & Banks. So if it be ex malitia præcogitata, omitting murdravit, it is but Manſlaughter, Dyer 261. Pl. 26—304. Pl. 56. Vide Stat. 10 E. III. cap. 2. The Parliament complained that Murderers, &c. were encouraged to offend, becauſe Pardons of Manſlaughters were granted ſo eaſily; the Act therefore prohibits the granting thereof. 13 R. II. recites the ſame Miſchief, and great Damage by Treaſons, Murders, &c. becauſe Pardons have been eaſily granted: Therefore the Act doth provide, " That if a Charter for the Death of a Man be alledged before any Juſtice, in which Charter it is not ſpecified that he of whoſe Death any ſuch is arraigned was murdered or ſlain by Await, Aſſault or Malice prepenſed, it ſhall be enquired, whether he was murdered or ſlain by Aſſault, Await, or Malice prepenſed; and if it be ſo found, the Charter of Pardon ſhall be diſallowed." This is a plain Deſcription of Murder, as it was taken to be according to the common Underſtanding of Men.

Ever ſince the killing of a Man by Aſſault of Malice prepenſed hath been allowed to be Murder, and to comprehend the other two Inſtances. But becauſe that Way of killing by Poiſon did not come under the ancient Definition of Bracton, &c. which is ſaid to be manu hominum perpetrata, or of this Statute of 13 R. II. Therefore by the Statute of 1 E. VI. c. 12. it was enacted, " That wilful poiſoning of any Perſon ſhould be accounted wilful Murder of Malice prepenſed."

One Thing more is fit to be obſerved, That in all Indictments for Murder a Man is not charged poſitively, that he did murder the Perſon ſlain, but that he ex malitia præcogitata, in ipſum inſultum fecit, ac cum quodam gladio, he gave him a Wound whereof he died: Et ſic ex malitia præcogitata ipſum murdravit, ſo the Murder is charged upon him by way of Concluſion, and as a Conſequence from the antecedent Matter that is poſitively alledged. To come cloſe to a State of the preſent Queſtion, It doth appear that Mawgridge threw the Bottle at Mr. Cope without any Provocation given to him; for the Difference was between him and the Woman that was there in Company, and his Behaviour was ſo rude and diſtaſteful as did induce Captain Cope to deſire him to leave the Room, where he was only a Gueſt to him, and there by his Permiſſion; this Cope might reaſonably do, which could be no Cauſe to provoke Mawgridge to make the leaſt Aſſault upon him: Therefore I ſhall maintain theſe three Poſitions:

1. That in this Caſe there is expreſs Malice by the Nature and Manner of Mawgridge's throwing the Bottle, and drawing his Sword immediately thereupon.

2. That Mr. Cope's throwing a Bottle at Mawgridge, whereby he was hit and hurt before he gave Mr. Cope the mortal Wound, cannot make any Alteration in the Offence by reducing it to be of ſo low a Degree as Manſlaughter.

3. I ſhall conſider what is ſuch a Provocation, as will make the Act of killing to be but a Manſlaughter only.

1. He ce

1. Here is expreſs Malice, that appears by the Nature of the Action. Some have been led into a Miſtake, by not well conſidering what the Paſſion of Malice is; they have conſtrued it to be a Rancour of Mind lodged in the Perſon killing, for ſome conſiderable Time before the Commiſſion of the Fact, which is a Miſtake ariſing from the not well diſtinguiſhing between Hatred and Malice. Envy, Hatred, and Malice, are three diſtinct Paſſions of the Mind.

1ſt. Envy properly is a repining, or being grieved at the Happineſs and Proſperity of another, Invidus alterius rebus macreſcit opimis.

2dly, Hatred, which is odium, is, as Tully ſaith, Ira inveterata, a Rancour fixed and ſettled in the Mind of one towards another, which admits of ſeveral Degrees. It may arrive to ſo high a Degree, and may carry a Man ſo far as to wiſh the Hurt of him, though not to perpetrate it himſelf.

3dly. Malice is a Deſign formed of doing Miſchief to another; Cum quis data opera male agit, he that deſigns and uſeth the Means to do ill, is malicious, 2 Inſt. 42. Odium ſignifies Hatred, atia Malice, becauſe it is eager, ſharp, and cruel. He that doth a cruel Act voluntarily, doth it of Malice prepenſed, 3 Inſt. 62. By the Statute of 5 Hen. IV. If any one out of Malice prepenſed ſhall cut out the Tongue, or put out the Eyes of another, he ſhall incur the Pain of Felony. If one doth ſuch a Miſchief on a ſudden, that is Malice prepenſed; for, ſaith my Lord Coke, "If it "be voluntarily, the Law will imply Malice." Therefore when a Man ſhall, without any Provocation, ſtab another with a Dagger, or knock out his Brains with a Bottle, this is expreſs Malice, for he deſignedly and purpoſely did him the Miſchief. This is ſuch an Act that is malicious in the Nature of the Act itſelf, if found by a Jury, though it be ſudden, and the Words ex malitia præcogitata are not in the Verdict, 1 Cro. 131. Halloway's Caſe, who was Woodward of Oſterly-Park, in Middleſex; a Boy came there to cut [ſteal] Wood, whom by Chance he eſpying, and the Boy being upon a Tree, he immediately calls to him to deſcend, which the Boy obeying, Halloway tied him to an Horſe's Tail with a Cord that the Boy had, then gave him two Blows, the Horſe ran away and brake the Boy's Shoulder, whereof he died. This was ruled to be Murder by all the Juſtices and Barons, except Juſtice Hutton, who only doubted thereof; and that was a ſtronger Caſe than this; for there was ſome Kind of Provocation in the Boy, who was ſtealing the Wood in the Park, of which Halloway had the Care; and it cannot be reaſonably thought, that he deſigned more than the Chaſtiſement of the Boy, and the Horſe running away in that Manner was a Surprize to Halloway; yet in regard the Boy did not reſiſt him, his tying him to the Horſe's Tail was an Act of Cruelty, the Event whereof proving ſo fatal; it was adjudged to be Malice prepenſed, though of a ſuddain, and in the Heat of Paſſion. This Caſe is reported in Jones, 198. Pal. 585. And there held, that the Court could determine it to be Malice prepenſed upon the ſpecial Matter found, Crompton 23. Two playing at Tables fall out in their Game, one upon a ſuddain kills the other with a Dagger: This was held to be Murder by Bromley at Cheſter Aſſizes, 27 Eliz. So in this Caſe, if the Bottle had killed Mr. Cope before he had returned the Bottle upon Mawgridge, that would have been Murder without all Manner of Doubt.

In the ſecond Place, I come now to conſider whether Mr. Cope's returning a Bottle upon Mawgridge before he gave him the mortal Wound with the Sword, ſhall have any Manner of Influence upon the Caſe: I hold not. Firſt, Becauſe Mawgridge by his throwing the Bottle had manifeſted a malicious Deſign. Secondly, His Sword was drawn immediately to ſupply the Miſchief which the Bottle might fall ſhort of. Thirdly, The throwing the Bottle by Captain Cope was juſtifiable and lawful; and though he had wounded Mawgridge, he might have juſtified it in an Action of Aſſault and Battery, and therefore cannot be any Provocation to Mawgridge to ſtab him with his Sword. That the throwing the Bottle is a Demonſtration of Malice is not to be controverted; for if upon that violent Act he had killed Mr. Cope, it had been Murder. Now it hath been held, That if A. of his Malice prepenſed aſſaults B. to kill him, and B. draws his Sword and attacks A. and purſues him, then A. for his own Safety gives back, and retreats to a Wall, B. ſtill purſuing him with his drawn Sword, A. in his Defence kills B. This is Murder in A. For A. having Malice againſt B. and in purſuance thereof endeavouring to kill him, is anſwerable for all the Conſequences, of which he was the original Cauſe. It is not reaſonable for any Man that is dangerouſly aſſaulted, and when he perceives his Life in Danger from his Adverſary, but to have Liberty for the Security of his own Life, to purſue him that maliciouſly aſſaulted him; for "he that hath manifeſted that he hath Malice againſt another, is not fit to be truſted with a dangerous Weapon in his Hand *," Dalt. 292. Hale 42. And ſo reſolved by all the Judges, 18 Car. II. when they met in Serjeants-Inn, in Preparation for my Lord Morley's Trial, Dal. 272. If A. of Malice prepenſed, diſcharge a Piſtol at B. and then runs away, B. purſues him, and A. turns back, and in his own Defence kills B. It is Murder. This I hold to be good Law; for A. had a malicious Intent againſt B. and his Retreat after he had diſcharged his Piſtol at B. was not becauſe he repented, but for his own Safety.

In a ſet Duel, there are mutual Paſſes made between the Combatants, yet if there be original Malice between the Parties, it is not the Interchange of Blows will make an Alteration, or be any Mitigation of the Offence of Killing. Therefore I hold, if Mawgridge had thrown the Bottle at Mr. Cope, and Mr. Cope had returned another upon him, and hit him, and thereupon Mawgridge had drawn his Sword and killed Mr. Cope, it would have been Murder. Some will ſay, that there is a Difference between the Caſes; for that the Aſſault by the Piſtol, and the fighting a Duel was expreſs Malice, but this is only Malice implied. Surely there is no Difference, for Malice implied is prepenſed, as much as if there had been a Proof of Malice, or Hatred for ſome conſiderable time before the Act; for the Stroke given, or an Attempt made by Malice implied, is as dangerous as a Stroke given upon Malice expreſſed, therefore may be as lawfully reſiſted. This very Point was alſo conſidered by the Twelve Judges at Serjeants-Inn, and by them reſolved to be Murder upon the Occaſion of my Lord Morley's Caſe. When a Man attacks another with a dangerous Weapon without any Provocation; that is expreſs Malice from the Nature of the Act, which is cruel. The Definition of Malice implied is where it is not expreſs in the Nature of the Act; as where a Man kills an Officer that had Authority to arreſt his Perſon: The Perſon who kills him in Defence of himſelf from the Arreſt, is guilty of Murder, becauſe the Malice is implied, for properly and naturally it was not Malice, for his Deſign was only to defend himſelf from the Arreſt.

3. I come now to the third Matter propoſed, which is, to conſider what is in Law ſuch a Provocation to a Man to commit an Act of Violence upon another, whereby he ſhall deprive him of his Life, ſo as to extenuate the Fact, and make it to be a Manſlaughter only. Firſt, Negatively, what is not. Secondly, Poſitively, what is. Firſt, No Words of Reproach or Infamy are ſufficient to provoke another to ſuch a Degree of Anger as to ſtrike, or aſſault the provoking Party with a Sword, or to throw a Bottle at him, or ſtrike him with any other Weapon that may kill him; but if the Perſon provoking be thereby killed, it is Murder.

In the Aſſembly of the Judges, 18 Car. II. this was a Point poſitively reſolved.

Therefore I am of Opinion, That if two are in Company together, and one ſhall give the other contumelious Language (as ſuppoſe A. and B.), A. that was ſo provoked draws his Sword, and makes a Paſs at B. B (then having no Weapon drawn) but miſſes him. Thereupon B. draws his Sword, and paſſes at A. And there being an Interchange of Paſſes between them, A. kills B. I hold this to be Murder in A. for A.'s Paſs at B. was malicious, and what B. afterwards did was lawful. But if A. who had been ſo provoked, draws his Sword, and then before he paſſes, B's Sword is drawn; or A. bids him draw, and B. thereupon drawing, there happen to be mutual Paſſes: If A. kills B. this will be but Manſlaughter, becauſe it was ſuddain; and A.'s Deſign was not ſo abſolutely to deſtroy B. but to combat with him, whereby he run the Hazard of his own Life at the ſame Time. But if Time was appointed to fight (ſuppoſe the next Day), and accordingly they do fight, it is Murder in him that kills the other. But if they go into the Field immediately and fight, then but Manſlaughter. Suppoſe upon provoking Language given by B. to A. A. gives B. a Box on the Ear, or a little Blow with a Stick, which happens to be ſo unlucky that it kills B. who might have ſome Impoſtume in his Head, or other Ailment which proves the Cauſe of B.'s Death, this Blow, though not juſtifiable by Law, but is a Wrong, yet it may be but Manſlaughter, becauſe it doth not appear that he deſigned ſuch a Miſchief.

2. Secondly, As no Words are a Provocation, ſo no affronting Geſtures are ſufficient, though never ſo reproachful; which Point was adjudged, 3 Cro. 779. Wats and Braim, in an Appeal of Murder.

There having been a Quarrel between A. and B. and B. was hurt in the Fray; and about two Days after B. came and made a wry Mouth at A. who thereupon ſtruck him upon the Calf of the Leg, of which he inſtantly died. It was Murder in A. for the affronting him in that Manner was not any Provocation to B. to uſe that Violence to A.

There hath been another Caſe, which I fear hath been the Occaſion of ſome Miſtake in the Deciſion of Queſtions of this Kind, Jones 432. D. Williams's Caſe, he being a Welſhman, upon St. David's Day having a Leek in his Hat, a certain Perſon pointed to a Jack of Lent that hung up hard by, and ſaid to him, Look upon your Countryman; at which D. Williams was much enraged, and took a Hammer that lay upon a Stall hard by, and flung at him, which miſſed him, but hit another and killed him: He was indicted upon the Statute of Stabbing. Reſolved, He was not within that Statute, but guilty of Manſlaughter at Common Law. I concur with that Judgment, that it is not within the Statute of Stabbing, for it is not ſuch a Weapon, or Act that is within that Statute, neither could he be found guilty of Murder, but only of Manſlaughter, for the Indictment was for no more. But if the Indictment had been for Murder, I do think that the Welſhman ought to have been convicted thereof, for the Provocation did not amount to that Degree, as to excite him deſignedly to deſtroy the Perſon that gave it him.

3. Thirdly, If one Man be treſpaſſing upon another, breaking his Hedges, or the like, and the Owner, or his Servant, ſhall upon Sight thereof take up an Hedge-ſtake, and knock him on the Head; that will be Murder, becauſe it was a violent Act, beyond the Proportion of the Provocation, which is ſufficiently juſtified by Halloway's Caſe, who did not ſeem to intend ſo much the Diſtruction of the young Man that ſtole the Wood, as that he ſhould endeavour to break his Skull or knock out his Brains, yet uſing that violent and dangerous Action of tying him to the Horſe's Tail, rendered him guilty of Murder.

If a Man ſhall ſee another ſtealing his Wood, he cannot juſtify beating him, unleſs it be to hinder from ſtealing any more; (that is) that notwithſtanding he be forbid to take any, doth proceed to take more, and will not part with that which he had taken. But if he deſiſts, and the Owner or Woodward purſues him to beat him ſo as to kill him, it is Murder.

If a Man goes violently to take another Man's Goods, he may beat him off to reſcue his Goods, 9 E. IV. 281. b. 19 Hen. VI. 31. But if a Man hath done a Treſpaſs, and is not continuing in it; and he that hath received the Injury ſhall thereupon beat him to a Degree of Killing, it is Murder, for it is apparent Malice; for in that Caſe he ought not to ſtrike him, but is a Treſpaſſor for ſo doing.

4. Fourthly, If a Parent or a Maſter be provoked to a Degree of Paſſion by ſome Miſcarriage of the Child or Servant, and the Parent or Maſter ſhall proceed to correct the Child or Servant with a moderate Weapon, and ſhall by Chance give him an unlucky Stroke, ſo as to kill him; that is but a Miſadventure. But if the Parent or Maſter ſhall uſe an improper Inſtrument in the Correction; then if he kills the Child or the Servant, it is Murder: And ſo was it reſolved by all the Judges of the King's-Bench, with the Concurrence of the Lord Chief-Juſtice Bridgman, in a ſpecial Verdict in one Gray's Caſe, found at the Old Bailey, 10th October 18 Car. II. and removed into this Court, Kelyng, p. 64 Gray being a Smith, B. was his Servant; he commanded B. his Servant to mend certain Stamps belonging to his Trade; afterwards he and his Servant being at

* Judge Foſter, in his Reports, p. 274—5. ſays, in Mawgridge's Caſe, "He, upon Words of Anger between him and Mr. Cope, threw a Bottle with great Violence at "the Head of Mr. Cope, and immediately drew his Sword, Mr. Cope returned the Bottle with equal Violence; it was, ſaith Lord Holt, lawful and juſtifiable in Mr. Cope ſo "to do: For, as he argueth a little afterwards, He that hath ſhewn that he hath Malice againſt another, is not fit to be truſted with a dangerous Weapon in his Hand."——Upon which the Judge obſerves, "It was upon this Principle I preſume (and poſſibly, too, upon the Rule laid down touching the Arreſt of a Perſon who had given a dangerous "Wound), that the Legiſlature in that Caſe of the Marquis De Guiſcard, who ſtabbed Mr. Harley ſitting in Council, (9 Ann. cap. 16.) diſcharged the Party who was ſup- "poſed to have given him the mortal Wound, from all Manner of Proſecution on that Account; and declared the Killing to be a lawful and neceſſary Action."

Work at the Anvil, Gray asked his Servant whether he had mended the Stamps, as he had directed him. But B the Servant having neglected his Duty acknowledged it to his Master; upon which the Master was angry, and told him if he would not serve him, he should serve at Bridewel; to which the Servant replied, That he had as good serve in Bridewel as serve the said Gray; whereupon the said Gray took the Iron-Bar upon which he and his Servant was working, and struck his Servant with it upon the Skull, and thereby brake his Skull, of which the Servant died. This was held to be Murder; yet here was a Provocation on a sudden, as sudden a Resentment, and as speedy putting it in Execution; for though he might correct his Servant both for his Neglect and Unmannerliness, yet exceeding Measure therein, it is malicious. Every one must perceive that this last is a stronger Case than this at Bar.

1. First, Gray was working honestly and fairly at his Trade, and justly calling to his Servant for an Account of his Business: This Miscreant was in the actual Violation of all the Rules of Hospitality.

2. Secondly, Gray's Action was right, as to the striking his Servant by way of Correction; but the Error was in the Degree, being too violent, and with an improper Weapon. This of Mawgridge was with a Resolution to do Mischief.

3. Thirdly, He had not the least Provocation from Mr. Cope, until after he had made the first and dangerous Assault, and then pursued it with the drawing his Sword to second it, before Mr. Cope returned the other Bottle. But Gray had a Provocation by the Disappointment his Servant gave him in neglecting his Business, and returning a saucy Answer.

The like in obstinate and perverse Children, they are a great Grief to Parents, and when found in ill Actions, are a great Provocation. But if upon such Provocation the Parent shall exceed the Degree of Moderation, and thereby in chastising kill the Child, it will be Murder. As if a Cudgel in the Correction that is used be of a large Size, or if a Child be thrown down and stamped upon: So said the Lord Bridgeman and Justice Twisden, and that they ruled it so in their several Circuits.

5. If a Man upon a sudden Disappointment by another shall resort violently to that other Man's House to expostulate with him, and with his Sword shall endeavour to force his Entrance, to compel that other to perform his Promise, or otherwise to comply with his Desire; and the Owner shall set himself in Opposition to him, and he shall pass at him, and kill the Owner of the House, it is Murder, 2 Roll. Rep. 460. Clement against Sir Charles Blunt, in an Appeal of Murder. The Case was, that Clement had promised a Dog to Sir Charles Blunt; and being requested accordingly to deliver him, refused, and beat the Dog home to his House: At which Sir Charles Blunt fetched his Sword, and came to Clement's House for the Dog. Clement stood at the Door, and resisted his Entry. Blunt thereupon kills Clement. The Jury were merciful, and found this Fact in Sir Charles Blunt to be but Manslaughter. Dodderidge was clearly of Opinion it was Murder. But the Lord Chief-Justice was a little tender in his Direction to the Jury. But Rolls makes this Remark, that it was not insisted upon by the Appellant's Counsel, that Clement was in the Defence of his House, and that Blunt attacked Clement to force in: It was without all Question Murder, though of a sudden Heat, for there was no Assault made by Clement upon him nor on any of his Friends, but all the Violence and Force was on Sir Charles Blunt's Side.

Having in these Particulars shewn what is not a Provocation sufficient to alleviate the Act of Killing, so as to reduce it to be but a bare Homicide, I will now, secondly, give some particular Rules, such as are supported by Authority and general Consent, and shew what are always allowed to be sufficient Provocations.

1. First, If one Man upon angry Words shall make an Assault upon another, either by pulling him by the Nose, or filliping upon the Forehead, and he that is so assaulted shall draw his Sword, and immediately run the other through, that is but Manslaughter; for the Peace is broken by the Person killed, and with an Indignity to him that received the Assault. Besides, he that was so affronted might reasonably apprehend, that he that treated him in that Manner might have some further Design upon him.

There is a Case in Stiles, 467. Buckner's Case. Buckner was indebted, and B and C came to his Chamber upon the Account of his Creditor to demand the Money, B took a Sword that hung up, and was in the Scabbard, and stood at the Door with it in his Hand undrawn, to keep the Debtor in until they could send for a Bailiff to arrest him; thereupon the Debtor took out a Dagger which he had in his Pocket and stabbed B. This was a Special Verdict, and adjudged only Manslaughter, for the Debtor was insulted, and imprisoned injuriously without any Process of Law, and though within the Words of the Statute of Stabbing, yet not within the Reason of it.

2. Secondly, If a Man's Friend be assaulted by another, or engaged in a Quarrel that comes to Blows, and he, in the Vindication of his Friend, shall on a sudden take up a mischievous Instrument and kill his Friend's Adversary, that is but Manslaughter; so was the Case, 12 Rep. 87. If two be fighting together, and a Friend of the one takes up a Bowl on a sudden, and with it breaks the Skull of his Friend's Adversary, of which he died, that is no more than Manslaughter. So it is, if two be fighting a Duel, though upon Malice prepensed; and one comes and takes Part with him, that he thinks may have the Disadvantage in the Combat, or it may be that he is most affected to, not knowing of the Malice, that is but Manslaughter, Pl. Com. 101. John Vaughan and Salisbury.

3. Thirdly, If a Man perceives another by Force to be injuriously treated, pressed, and restrained of his Liberty, though the Person abused doth not complain, or call for Aid or Assistance; and others out of Compassion shall come to his Rescue, and kill any of those that shall so restrain him, that is Manslaughter, 18 Car. II. adjudged in this Court upon a Special Verdict found at the Old-Bailey, in the Case of one Hugett, 18 Car. II. Kelyng, p. 59. A and others in the time of the Dutch War without any Warrant impressed B to serve the King at Sea; B quietly submitted and went off with the Press-Masters; Hugett and the others pursued them and required a Sight of their Warrant; but they shewed a Piece of Paper, that was not a sufficient Warrant: Thereupon Hugett with the others drew their Swords, and the Press-Masters theirs, and so there was a Combat, and those who endeavoured to rescue the pressed Man killed one of the pretended Press-Masters. This was but Manslaughter; for when the Liberty of one Subject is invaded, it affects all the rest: It is a Provocation to all People, as being of ill Example and pernicious Consequence. All the Judges of the King's-Bench, viz. Kelyng, Twisden, Wyndham and Moreton were of Opinion, that it was Murder, because he meddled in a Matter in which he was not concerned: But the other Eight Judges of the other Courts conceived it only Manslaughter, to which the Judges of the King's-Bench did conform, and gave Judgment accordingly.

4. Fourthly, When a Man is taken in Adultery with another Man's Wife, if the Husband shall stab the Adulterer, or knock out his Brains, This is bare Manslaughter; for Jealousy is the Rage of a Man, and Adultery is the highest Invasion of Property, 1 Vent. 158. Raymond 213. Manning's Case.

If a Thief comes to rob another, it is lawful to kill him. And if a Man comes to rob a Man's Posterity and his Family, yet to kill him is Manslaughter; so is the Law, though it may seem hard, that the Killing in the one Case should not be as justifiable as the other, Lev. xx. Ver. 10. If one committeth Adultery with his Neighbour's Wife, even he the Adulterer and the Adulteress shall be put to Death. So that a Man cannot receive a higher Provocation. But this Case bears no Proportion with those Cases that have been adjudged to be only Manslaughter, and therefore the Court being so advised doth determine that Mawgridge is guilty of Murder. More might be said upon this Occasion; yet this may at present suffice to set the Matter now in question in its true Light, to shew how necessary it is to apply the Law to exterminate such noxious Creatures.

Upon this Conviction the Court did direct that Process should be issued against Mawgridge, and so to proceed to Outlawry if he cannot be retaken in the mean time.

The Case was, Mr. Cope (a younger Branch of the Copes of Bramsel, in Hampshire, Barts.) having got a Lieutenant's Commission in the Guards, invited some Officers and other Gentlemen to dine with him at the Delphin Tavern in Tower-Street, June 17, 1706, in order to wet his Commission; one of the Gentlemen took Mawgridge along with him, telling him he would be as welcome to Mr. Cope as any of the Company; upon that he went, and after Dinner was over, and paid for by Mr. Cope, they all staid a while longer, and had more Wine brought in, and paid Half a-Crown each for their Club; then they broke up, and most of them went away; but Mr. Mawgridge and the rest being invited by Mr. Cope to the Guard-Room in the Tower, went with him, and called for Wine. Two Bottles were accordingly brought; and as they were drinking, a Coach came to the Guard-Room Door with a Woman in it (of no very modest Behaviour), and asked for Capt. Cope; whereupon he and Mawgridge went to the Coach-Door, and brought her into the Guard-Room; where having been a-while, she cried, Who shall pay for my Coach? Upon this Mr. Mawgridge said, I will, and so discharged the Coach; then he offered to salute her, but she rejected him, and gave him ill Words; to which he made Returns of the like Kind; on which Lieut. Cope took the Woman's Part; and then Mawgridge demanded Satisfaction of Mr. Cope, in order to provoke him to fight, &c. &c. and killed Mr. Cope. Upon this Mawgridge was tried at the Old-Bailey in July 1706, for the Murder, and a Special Verdict found, wherein all the Particulars are related, as before-mentioned:—But before the arguing the Special Verdict, he made his Escape out of the Marshalsea, where he was confined; and that Night went to his Father, Major Mawgridge, who with his Wife (Mawgridge's Mother-in-Law) washed and rubbed him all over with green Walnut Shucks and Walnut Liquor to disguise him, and then all three set out in the Night, and walked above 30 Miles into Essex, where the Father gave One Hundred Guineas to a Master of a Vessel, near Colchester, to carry him safe to Holland, which he did; there he was concealed above a Year and half; for though he was a very handsome Man, he was so disfigured scarce any one knew him; he spoke French and Spanish generally and mighty well; but at last being at a Tavern at Ghent in Flanders, and a little too merry, he spoke English so fluently, and by some Expressions he dropt, became suspected, seized (a large Reward having been offered for apprehending him), and on Examination found to be the Man who killed Mr. Cope, was brought over to England in March 1707-8, and being brought to the King's-Bench Bar, received Sentence of Death, and was executed at Tyburn, on Wednesday, April 28, 1708, with William Gregg, for High-Treason (whose Case will be inserted in the Appendix). The Ordinary says, Mawgridge went in a Coach with him (and Gregg in a Sledge) to Tyburn; "That he submitted willingly "to his Sentence, owning the Justice of it, tho' he declared he had no "premeditated Malice against the Gentleman he so unfortunately killed. "He said, he heartily repented of it, and prayed that God would wash "away the Stain, and deliver him from the Guilt of that Blood which "he had so shed. He owned that he had been a very great Sinner, but "was sorry that he had any ways offended God and Man, and begged "Pardon of both. That he hoped God would shew him Mercy in another World, because he was always grieving for his Sins, and particularly for this, ever since he had made his Escape; and tho' he had no "Apprehension of being brought to Condemnation here for it, it was still "continually before him, and the Remembrance of it was painful to him. "He made strong Resolutions to live otherwise, and was always praying "to God to pardon him, and to keep him for the future. He acknowledged the Justice of God had overtaken him, and would not suffer him "to live long unpunished for this heinous Crime: He declared his being "in charity with all the World, even with those who had brought him to "this his Punishment, and prayed for the Conversion of all wicked Persons, desiring they would take Warning by him. He told me, he was about "40 Years of Age, born at Canterbury of good Parents, and brought up "in the Church of England; that both his Father and Ancestors had had "the Honour to serve the Crown for above 200 Years as Drum-Major; "and that he himself had received a very good Education, and brought up "genteelly, tho' he was for a considerable time Kettle-Drummer to the "First Troop of Guards, and was a going with a Commission into the "Army when this melancholy Accident happened."——Major Mawgridge, on his Son's Execution, which had so great an Effect on him, could not be prevailed on either to eat or drink for three Nights and three Days, and raved about like a Madman; he afterwards behaved at times like one distracted, drawing his Sword, and threatning to murder his Wife, obliging her to kneel down for him to stab her, &c. and then relenting. In short, he was never after easy or in his right Senses; moving about from place to place, though he lived to near fourscore Years of Age.

Clerk. Oyez. If any Man can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Juſtices, the King's Attorney, the King's Serjeants, in this Cauſe between our Sovereign Lord the King and William Hales, let him now come forth.

Mr. Attorney-General, Sir Philip York (afterwards Earl of Hardwick). My Lord, we deſire that thoſe that were ſummoned on the Jury, who happened not to be ſworn, ſhould ſtay, leſt when Mr. Kinnerſley is arraigned there ſhould be a Defect of Jurymen.

It was ordered accordingly by the Court.

Clerk of Arraigns. Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales ſtands indicted, by the Name of William Hales, late of London, Goldſmith, for that he being a Perſon of evil Fame and Converſation, and endeavouring Samuel Edwards, Eſq. and divers others willingly to defraud, on the 1ſt of June, in the Pariſh of , had in his Cuſtody a certain Note, bearing date May 17, 1728, by which Note it was ſuppoſed, that Mr. Robert Hales * did promiſe to pay unto Samuel Edwards, Eſq. the full Sum of Eight hundred Pounds; and that, on the ſame Note, with an Intent to defraud, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, he did fraudulently and deceitfully, on the 13th of June, forge and counterfeit a certain Indorſement, to the great Damage of the ſaid Samuel Edwards, Eſq. to the Breach of his Majeſty's Peace, and the ill Example of his Majeſty's Subjects in like Caſe offending.

Mr. Strange. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar, William Hales, ſtandeth indicted for forging, counterfeiting, and publiſhing an Indorſement of Samuel Edwards, Eſq. on a Promiſſory Note. The Indictment ſets forth, that the Priſoner did endeavour to deceive and defraud Samuel Edwards, Eſq. and others his Majeſty's Subjects, having in his Poſſeſſion a certain Promiſſory Note, under the Hand of Robert Hales, bearing Date May 17, 1728, by which Note, this Robert Hales is ſuppoſed to promiſe to pay to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order, a certain Sum of Eight hundred Pounds, having this Note in his Cuſtody, did forge and counterfeit, and cauſed to be forged counterfeited, a certain Indorſement on the ſame Note, viz.

Pray pay to for Samuel Edwards.

and having in his Cuſtody the ſaid Note for Eight hundred Pounds, payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. on which there was ſo forged an Indorſement in the Name of the ſaid Samuel Edwards, Eſq. did publiſh it to be a true Indorſement, knowing the ſame to be ſo forged and counterfeited. This is ſaid to be to the great Damage of the ſaid Samuel Edwards, Eſq. the Breach of his Majeſty's Peace, and the ill Example of his Majeſty's Subjects in like Caſe offending. To this the ſaid Defendant hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Attorney-General. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel on the ſame Side, for my Lord the King. The Charge againſt the Defendant, William Hales, is for forging an Indorſement on a Promiſſory Note to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. for the Sum of Eight hundred Pounds. The Note was made in the Name of Robert Hales, for Eight hundred Pounds, payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order. And, Gentlemen, it will appear, that the Priſoner hath been guilty both of forging this Indorſement, and of publiſhing of it, knowing it to be ſo forged. Gentlemen, this Samuel Edwards, Eſq. hath a conſiderable Employment in the Exchequer, and is beſides a Member of the Houſe of Commons, and by that hath the Privilege of ſending his Poſt-Letters free. It was his Misfortune to live in the Neighbourhood of Mr. Hales, in Duke-ſtreet, in Weſtminſter. The Opportunity for committing of this Fraud ſeems to have been in this manner: Mr. Hales uſed frequently to apply to Mr. Edwards, ſometimes by himſelf, ſometimes by a Servant, for Frank-Covers of Letters to ſend News into the Country. The Gentleman's Good-nature induced him to accommodate him according to his Deſire with them, ſuppoſing that they were only deſigned to ſend News to his Friends in the Country. He having poſſeſſed himſelf of ſeveral Papers thus ſubſcribed, it will appear, that moſt probably he made uſe of one of theſe Franks to commit this Forgery. The Forgery is an Indorſement on a Note of Robert Hales. The Note is this:

May 17, 1728.

I promiſe to pay to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order, Eight hundred Pounds, three Months after Date, Value Received.

ROBERT HALES.

The Indorſement is thus:

Pray pay the Value of this to , for Value received.

SAMUEL EDWARDS.

This Indorſement being thus wrote over the Name Samuel Edwards, Gentlemen, it appears by the Face of this Indorſement, that it is cut off from another Writing. There is the Tail of a Letter, which manifeſtly appears. The Word the is wrote with an Abbreviation y^e. That will appear to be a Word altered from ſomething elſe. It is difficult to tell whether to read it for y^e, or, which looks like the Truth of the Caſe, for ye. It will appear to be very probable, that the Manner of forging was this: Having poſſeſſed himſelf of theſe Franks, he cut off a Piece of one of theſe Franks proper for a Promiſſory Note to be wrote on it, which would have on the Back of it the Name of Samuel Edwards. When he had done this, he did not think proper to write the Note himſelf, but got another Gentleman to write a Promiſſory Note on the Back of this Paper, payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order. When this was done, the Name Samuel Edwards ſerved for an Indorſement on the Note. And the Alteration ſeems to have been made in the following manner: There being the Word Free wrote over the Name, there is the Letter o crowded in between the f and the r. As to the ee's after the r, the Uſe made of them is this: Out of the one of them is drawn the ſtroke for the Letter y, the latter e ſtands on one Side, or rather above the y, and makes y^e. Having done this, it appears, that here is a Promiſſory Note, in the Name of Robert Hales, to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. and here is an Indorſement of Mr. Samuel Edwards, which, by Virtue of an Act of Parliament, which makes theſe Notes current, and the Indorſer liable, Mr. Edwards is made liable to the Payment of this Note. The Uſe made of this Note is this, to raiſe Money upon it, and ſtake the Credit of Mr. Edwards as a Security for this Money. Gentlemen, having done this, he applies to Mr. Harle, to borrow of him a certain Sum of Four hundred and fifty Pounds. He knew very well, that his Credit would not ſerve for that Purpoſe, he being a known Bankrupt; but deſired that Mr. Harle would lend him Four hundred and fifty Pounds, upon the Credit of this Note. Mr. Harle knew that Mr. Edwards was a Gentleman of great Credit: It was a Promiſſory Note of Eight hundred Pounds, payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. and indorſed by Samuel Edwards: Mr. Harle made therefore no doubt of advancing the Money deſired upon it. The Manner of advancing this Money was by Mr. Harle's making a Draught upon his Goldſmiths, Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount, where Mr. Hales received this Money. Gentlemen, there will be Evidence to charge this upon Mr. Hales. Gentlemen, the Occaſion of diſcovering this Forgery was this, Mr. Hales having been taken up in September laſt, on another Diſcovery of forging a Note of Mr. Gibſon's, for which he was convicted laſt Seſſions †, that cauſed a pretty deal of Noiſe.

And,

† William Hales, for Forgery, at the Old-Bailey, Dec. 7, 1728.

William Hales was indicted for a Miſdemeanour, in forging and counterfeiting a certain Writing, or Note of Hand, in theſe Words:

Auguſt 27, 1728.

I promiſe to pay to George Watſon, Eſq. or Order, the Sum of Six thouſand four hundred Pounds, upon Demand, the like Value received,

For myſelf and Partners, THOMAS GIBSON.

* This Robert Hales, Eſq. Jan. 27, 1728-9, was tried at the King's-Bench Bar, Weſtminſter, by a Special Jury of the County of Middleſex, of which Sir George Walters, Knt. was Foreman, on an Indictment for a Miſdemeanour, for that the ſaid Robert Hales, Eſq. would have defrauded Samuel Edwards, Eſq. of Eight hundred Pounds, by means of a Note, drawn by the ſaid Robert Hales, Eſq. for Eight hundred Pounds, payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order. The Paper, on which the ſaid Note was drawn, having the Name of the ſaid Samuel Edwards on the Back thereof, only as a Frank of a Letter to be ſent by the Poſt; he, the ſaid Robert Hales, having no Dealings with the ſaid Samuel Edwards. The Trial laſted ſeven Hours, when the Jury brought him in Guilty. But in June following, he pleaded his Majeſty's moſt gracious Pardon in the Court of King's-Bench, for the ſaid Offence.

Mich. Term, Geo. II.

Dominus Rex verſ. Robertum Hales.

" Mr. Attorney moved for a Trial at Bar on an Information filed by him for Forgery. But it not being carried on at the Expence of the Crown, but of a private Proſe-
" cutor, the Court held, that he muſt make out the uſual Requiſites to bring it to the Bar: So the Motion was denied. And, at another Day, Mr. Attorney moved, on an " Authority from the King, to proſecute, and it was granted as of Right to the King in his own Cauſe. And in Hil. ſequen'. it was tried, and the Defendant convicted.
" And in Trin. ſequen'. being called to Judgment, he produced a Pardon, which was allowed; and being only for a Miſdemeanour, he was not put to go to the Bar, or " plead it upon his Knees." Strange, Vol. II. p. 816.

And

And, Gentlemen, such as had Notes of Mr. Hales for their Security were alarmed; Mr. Harle heard of this among others, and the Thing thus coming to be inquired into, it appeared plain Mr. Edwards had no dealing with them, but it was a Forgery and an Imposition both upon Mr. Edwards and Mr. Harle. We will call the Witnesses, and then we apprehend, that the Thing will speak for itself, and will appear a plain Forgery.

Mr. Serjeant Whitaker. My Lord, there are a pretty many Indictments, and Mr. Attorney hath opened the Cause: Therefore we shall immediately call the Witnesses.

Thomas Maddocks called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Whom do you live with?---Th. Mad. Mr. Edwards, Sir.

Mr. Attorney General. There were (I apprehend you say) several that were franked?---Th. Mad. Yes, Sir, there were frequently.

Th. Mad. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Lacy. They asked you, whether there were any Dealings between your Master and Mr. Hales, besides this of Letters. I would enquire of you, whether your Master acquaints you with his Dealings with any other Persons?—Th. Mad. No, Sir.

Anne Clarke called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Had you a Note of Directions for Letters to be franked by Mr. Edwards?---Anne Clarke. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Who brought it?---Anne Clarke. Mr. Hales's Servant.

Mr. Serj. Whit. What was his Name?

Anne Clarke. Robert, I think they called him.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Do you know whose Writing it was?

Anne Clarke. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. We shall, my Lord, call another Witness to prove that it was Mr. Hale's.

Mr. Serj. Whit. When was it?---Anne Clarke. I cannot say.

Mr. Serj Whit. Was it Summer or Winter?---Anne Clarke. Summer.

Mr. Serj. Whit. In what Month was it?

Anne Clarke. I believe that it was in July last.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Did you deliver them to Mr. Edwards?

Anne Clarke. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. What did you say to him, or he to you?

Anne Clarke. I told him, that Mr. Hales's Servant had left that Paper of Directions for the Franks that he had desired; and said that his Master understood that he would not frank them without a Superscription, and therewith an Intent to defraud Thomas Gibson, Esq. and other his Majesty's Subjects; and for publishing the said false and counterfeit Note, as a true Note, he knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, Nov. 7.

The Counsel for the King having opened the Indictment, and the Evidence against the Prisoner, proceeded to call and examine the Witnesses.

Philip Booth, Servant to Mr. Gibson. I have known the Prisoner for some Time. He came to me about a Year and a half ago, and desired me to get my Master (who is a Member of Parliament) to frank two Letters for him; for he said, that the Gentleman, who used to frank his Letters, was gone out of Town. He then gave me two large Sheets of Paper, folded up in a large Size, for Letters, and desired that they might be directed, To Robert Booth, Esq. at Bristol. These were accordingly done by Mr. Gibson; and under the Directions he wrote,

Free,

THO. GIBSON.

Counsel. Are you acquainted with Mr. Gibson's Hand?

Ph. Booth. Yes, very well.

Counsel. Look on that Note.

Ph. Booth. This is a Note for 6400*l*. signed Tho. Gibson.

Counsel. Do you take it to be all of Mr. Gibson's Writing?

Ph. Booth. I take the Name to be his Writing, but I believe the Body of the Note was writ by another Person; and, that it is Part of one of the Letters that Mr. Gibson franked for the Prisoner, the Note being written in the Space between the Direction, which is cut off, and Mr. Gibson's Name.

Counsel. Why do you think so?

Ph. Booth. For several Reasons.---I am well satisfied, that this Word For, was originally Free; and that the two ee's have been taken out; and it is plain, that the o is crowded in between the F and the r; and that the Words, myself and Partners, are added a little below; for over the m, there appears the Bottoms of the two ee's; and the o, and these following Words, are writ with Ink of a different Colour from the F, the r, and Mr. Gibson's Name. Indeed the Words, Myself and Partners, are a faint Imagination of Mr. Gibson's Hand: But I am so well acquainted with his Writing, that I could easily distinguish the true from the counterfeit, though I had nothing to judge by but the Form of the Letters. But what is more, this Note is not drawn after Mr. Gibson's Manner: I never knew him write, For myself and Partners, but always, For Self and Co. Nor did I ever remember to have seen a Note of his with such Words in it, as the like Value received. Besides, the Note appears to have been folded like Part of a Letter, and I can never believe, that Mr. Gibson would draw a Note of such Consequence upon such a Scrap of Paper.

Robert Booth of Bristol, Esq. I never received any Letter, either franked or otherwise, from the Prisoner; and there is no Person in Bristol, but myself, who goes by the Name and Title of Robert Booth, Esq.

Thomas Remsey. I have been acquainted with the Prisoner above a Year, but more intimately from last June, to the 7th of last September, on which Day I was at his House, in Duke-Street, Westminster. I had then got on a light Coat, a red Waistcoat and Breeches, and a broad open Silver-laced Hat. He bid me change my Dress, and put on a Suit of plain Cloaths that I had by me. I did so, but not having a plain Hat, he bid me put on one of his. When I had thus dressed myself, I went with him into the City; but, by the Way, to make me look the more like a Man of Business, he furnished me with a Letter-Case, and, in Middle-Row in Holborn, he bought me a dark Wig, and made me put my light one in my Pocket. When all this was done, we went to John's Coffee-House, in Sheer-Lane, where we had not been long before a Porter came in. The Prisoner asked him, if he did not want Mr. Romsey? meaning me. The Porter said, Yes, and delivered a Letter to the Prisoner, who immediately gave it to me, and bade me open it, which I did, and found a Note in it for 6400*l*. signed, Thomas Gibson.

Coun. Is that the Note?

Remsey. Yes, I know it very well.

Coun. What followed?

Remsey. In the Body of the Letter there was writ, To the Lady Harriot Elliot, 4300*l*. and, To to Sir John Hind Cotton, 2100*l*. And, under this last, the Prisoner bade me write, To James Moreton, Esq. or Bearer, 70*l*. which I did, and the Prisoner gave me three Bank Notes, one for 40*l*. and two of 25*l*. each. These Bank Notes, the Letter and the counterfeit Note for 6400*l*. the Prisoner put into my Letter-Case, and bade me go to Mr. Snow, the Banker's, and desire them to change those Notes for Notes of their own, for such Sums, and payable to such Persons as were mentioned in the Letter. The Prisoner shewed me the Shop, and stood within Sight of it. I went in, and first produced Bank Notes, and desired Mr. Peltzck to change them according to my Directions. He did it very readily. Then I pulled out the 6400*l*. and prayed him to change that too, but he refused; for he said it was not all of Mr. Gibson's Hand-Writing, and therefore he would not meddle with it.

I returned to the Prisoner, and told him what had been done: And then he went again to John's Coffee-House in Sheer-Lane, where he ordered me to write on a Piece of Paper, To Sir Richard Grosvenor, 4300*l*. and To Sir John Hind Cotton, 2100*l*. And, when I had done so, he went out with me again, and shewed me Mr. Hoare's Shop, and bid me, if I could, to change that Note of 6400*l*. for Hoare and Company's Notes, payable to Sir Richard Grosvenor, and Sir John Hind Cotton, for the Sums I had set down. He likewise gave me another Note of about 70*l*. to change there, and ordered me, if any Body should ask my Name, to say, that my Name was Fowler. So I went into Mr. Hoare's Shop, and got all the Notes changed, and then, going to the Prisoner, who waited for me at a Fruit-Stall hard by; we took Coach, and drove to the Royal-Exchange, and thence we went to Janeway's Coffee-House, where the Prisoner bade me write, 3100*l*. and 1200*l*. payable to Samuel Palmer, therefore he had ſent that Paper of Directions. He ſaid then that he did not care to frank them, becauſe Mr. Hales had both a Brother and a Nephew that were Members of Parliament, and therefore had no need to apply to him for Franks.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, we ſhall now prove the Paper of Directions to be Mr. Hales's Hand-Writing.

Mr. Booth called and ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Sir, Are you acquainted with Mr. William Hales's Hand-Writing?—Mr. Booth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Whoſe Writing do you take that Paper of Directions to be?—Mr. Booth. I verily believe it to be Mr. William Hales's.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, there is ſomething very worthy of Obſervation as to theſe directions and Covers. The Covers are very large. The Directions are extremely ſhort, e. g. for John Pratt, Eſq. Briſtol. The whole Direction is but one Line, which would conſequently leave a great deal of Room. Another is to Mr. Levett of Huntingdon. And there are two to each of theſe. The other two to Steven Mitford, Eſq. at Exeter. The Man gave an Account of ſix Covers ſent to be franked; there are two to each of theſe, which very well agree.

Mr. Serj. Whit. You ſay, Sir, that this is the Hand-Writing of Mr. William Hales?—Mr. Booth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. I would aſk, whether it is common for a Perſon that hath a promiſſory Note to write his Name thereon?

Mr. Booth. I know not, Sir, that it is common.

Note of Directions read.

Two to John Pratt, Eſq. Briſtol.
Two to Mr. Levett, Huntingdon.
Two to Stephen Mitford, Eſq. Exeter.

Mr. Harle, called and ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Let the Gentlemen of the Jury ſee the Directions and Covers.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Gentlemen, you will obſerve the Size of the Covers, and the Shortneſs of the Directions juſt fitted for the Purpoſe.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Mr. Harle, pleaſe, Sir, to take that Note in your Hand, and give us an Account who you received it from?

Mr. Harle. From Mr. Hales.

Mr. Serj. Whit. When was it?

Mr. Harle. To the beſt of my Remembrance it was June 13th laſt.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Will you give us an Account on what Account it was, and what Mr. Hales ſaid to you when he brought that Note?

Mr. Harle. Mr. Hales on the 13th of June laſt came to me, and brought me that Note from a Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Where was you?

Mr. Harle. To the beſt of my Remembrance, at Baker's Coffee-houſe in Exchange Alley. He deſired to borrow of me four hundred and fifty Pounds upon the Credit of that Note: I accordingly made him a Draught on Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount, with whom I left my Caſh for that Sum; for a Security for which he left that Note, and he promiſed that he would pay it in a few Days.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Did he take any particular Notice of the Indorſement?

Mr. Harle. Not much, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Was it then indorſed?

Mr. Harle. Yes, Sir, I am ſure it was; for I was deſired to lend the Money on a Note ſo indorſed.

Mr. Serj. Whit. The Note then, upon this Occaſion, was left in your Hands after that it was ſo indorſed, Was it not?—Mr. Harle. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Upon what Occaſion did it happen to be ſuſpected or diſcovered? Did you pay it yourſelf, or your Goldſmith?

Mr. Harle. Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount, on whom I made a Draught.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Have you that Draught?—Mr. Harle. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. It hath been delivered up, hath it?

Mr. Harle. Yes, Sir, and cancelled.

Mr. Serj. Whit. On what Occaſion?—Mr. Harle. When I ſettle my Accounts with my Goldſmiths, I take up my Notes.

Mr. Strange. You was going to give us an Account how you came to ſuſpect this Note?

Mr. Harle. I think it was on Sept. 9, 1728, I was in Exchange Alley all the Morning, my Buſineſs calling me thither. At Two I went home as uſual. It ſeems there was a Meſſage left with my Servant by Mr. William Hales, that he had paid to my Goldſmith four hundred and fifty Pounds, Part of the Money which he owed me; for he owed me other Money on Security. He went to them and paid them this Money for which he took a Memorandum that he had paid them ſo much Money upon Account. Going then to Bethnall Green, when I came home Mr. Caſwal told me what had happened. There is (ſaid he) a ſad Thing hath happened; Mr. William Hales, with whom you have Tranſactions, is taken up for Forgery. He hath paid to us To-day four hundred and fifty Pounds upon your Account, which is attached in our Hands. It ſeems there was found in his Pocket-book a Memorandum which gave an Account of his paying that Sum to them.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Was this the firſt Occaſion of your Suſpicion?

Mr. Harle. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What did you do upon that?

Mr. Harle. I had aſked a Gentleman, now in Court, ſome Days before, knowing him well acquainted with Mr. Edwards, and the Affairs of the Exchequer, whether he knew Mr. Edwards's Hand-writing, and whether he knew that to be Mr. Edwards's Hand-writing? He ſaid, he believed that it was. I indeed myſelf believed that it was. After that Mr. Hales was taken up (I think that it was the Wedneſday or Thurſday after); I went up to the Exchequer to that Gentleman to get him to go with me to Mr. Edwards. He went up, but Mr. Edwards was not there. We then went into the Hall, where we met with Mr. Edwards, who ſeemed to be very much ſurprized. As to the Note (ſaid he) I know nothing of it. As to the Hand-writing, he could not poſitively ſay whether it was his own or not; if (ſaid he) it is mine Hand, it is made an ill Uſe of. We went immediately to the Coffee-houſe to inquire after Mr. Robert Hales, thence to the Cock-pit, and thence to his Houſe; but met not with him. I then left Mr. Wright and Mr. Edwards. I told them that my Buſineſs required me to go into the City. They reſolved to meet Mr. Robert Hales, and inquire of him whether it was his Note or not.

Lord Chief Baron. Read the Note diſtinctly.

Draught read. 51.] Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount.

June 13, 1728. Pay to Mr. William Hales or Bearer, on Demand, four hundred and fifty Pounds. Robert Harle.

Lord Chief Baron. Sir, you ſay that you are acquainted with the Hand-writing of Mr Edwards, Do you not?—Mr. Harle. No Sir.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, we beg that the Gentlemen of the Jury will look upon the Indorſement. But before it be put into their Hands, I would make an Obſervation thereon. It appeareth by the End of the Paper that it is cut off from ſomething elſe. It is not ſtraight as it would be naturally, but ſeems cut off obliquely: And there is the Tail probably of a Letter of the Direction of the Cover whence we preſume it cut off. Then the Words, 'Pray pay to the Order of,' at a Diſtance from the other Words, 'for the Value received.' There is this Material alſo, that the Words 'for the Value received' are not uſual Words in an Indorſement; when the Words 'Value received' are mentioned, ſtill more unuſual to put in the Word the. But the Word free being there, there muſt be ſome Way contrived to uſe thoſe Letters: An o is therefore crouded in between the f and the r: And then the y ſeems to be a much blacker Ink than the reſt: And then as to the two ee's, the one of them the y is drawn from, and the other of them ſtands for the other Part of the Contraction.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Look on it, Gentlemen, and you will find it as mentioned.

Mr. Att. Gen. Obſerve, Gentlemen, over it there is a Stroke or Hook.

Mr. John Spicer called and ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Spicer, What Employment are you in under Mr. Edwards?—Mr. Spicer. A Clerk, Sir, in the Exchequer.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long in that Capacity?

Mr. Spicer. About ten Years in that Capacity: But in all I have ſerved him for four-and-twenty Years.

Palmer, Eſq. or Bearer, and then ſent me to Mr. Woodward's, there to change Hoare and Company's Note for 4300 l. payable to Sir Richard Groſvenor, for Woodward's Notes for 3100 l. and 1200 l. to Samuel Palmer, Eſq. at the ſame time the Priſoner ordered me, if any Body enquired who I was, to ſay, that my Name was Thomas Fowler; and, if they aſked any Queſtions about Samuel Palmer, Eſq. I might ſay, that he lived in Manſell-Street, in Goodman's Fields. I accordingly went to Mr. Woodward's; but his Door being ſhut, I ſtepped back to the Priſoner, who thereupon ſent me to Mr. Bracy's, and there I got Mr. Bracy's Notes to Samuel Palmer, Eſq. in lieu of Hoare's Note to Sir Richard Groſvenor.

This was on Saturday Night, and, it being now too late to do any more ſuch Buſineſs, we went Home to the Priſoner's Houſe, where I lodged. He bade me be ready in the ſame Dreſs on Monday Morning, which I accordingly was. We went again to Janeway's Coffee-Houſe, from whence the Priſoner ſent me to Alderman Hankey's, where I changed the Notes again. From Mr. Hankey's I went to Mr. Halſey, and turned theſe Notes into South-Sea and India Bonds, and the Bonds were afterwards converted into Bank Notes. The Priſoner employed another Agent to get off ſome of theſe Bank Notes, and he had better Luck than I met with: For, unknown to me, Mr. Gibſon's Caſhier had diſcovered the Forgery, and traced out the Places where we had been; ſo that I, going to the Bank with two Notes, each for 200 l. I was ſtopped. The Priſoner then waiting for me in the Old-Jury, he was preſently taken into Cuſtody.

Mr. Maddox. I had Inſtructions to ſtop any Perſon who brought Notes of ſuch a Number to the Bank; and Romſey coming ſoon after with ſuch Notes, I ſtopped him. He ſent a Letter, directed to Mr. Hales, at Robin's Coffee-Houſe; we went thither, and found the Priſoner, and brought him to the Bank. He confeſſed there, and likewiſe before Mr. Alderman Bellamy, that the Note for 6400 l. came from him, but he ſaid he had it of one Samuel Palmer. The Money and Notes that were found upon the Priſoner and Romſey, made up the whole Sum of 6400 l.

Mr. Poltock, Mr. Richard Hoare, Mr Turner, Mr. Hankey, Mr. Cole, Servant to Mr. Halſey, and Mr. George Lee, confirmed the Particulars of Romſey's changing the Notes.

Robert Hall. I am the Priſoner's Taylor, and by his Directions I took Notes and Money for him at Mr. Bracey's on Monday Morning, and from thence I went to the Bank, and received Money for the Bank Notes I had taken at Mr. Bracey's.—The Priſoner ordered me, if any Body ſhould aſk my Name, to ſay it was John Roberts, and that I lived in the Hay-Market, —or in any other Place that I could remember.

Counſel for the Priſoner. We will not pretend to prove, that the Note in diſpute is not counterfeit; but we ſhall endeavour to ſhew, that he received that Note of Samuel Palmer, Eſq. with whom he had very conſiderable Dealings. And, as Mr. Hales has been a Bankrupt for theſe twenty Years paſt, and has not been able to obtain his Certificate, he has been obliged to tranſact his Affairs under other People's Names, or perhaps to make uſe of fictitious Names, in order to ſecure his Effects.—— Here, Mr. Granper, do you know one Samuel Palmer?

Mr. Granper. I did know ſuch a Man: He was employed by the Eaſt-India Company. They ſent him abroad, and I remember he came back again, but I don't know where he is now.

Counſel. Had not Mr. Hales conſiderable Dealings with him?

Granper. Dealings? I never knew they had any Dealings with one another.

The Jury found the Priſoner guilty.

He was a ſecond Time indicted for a Miſdemeanor, in fraudulently, and by falſe Tokens, procuring the Notes of Benjamin Hoare and Henry Hoare, to the great Damage of the ſaid Benjamin and Henry.

The Evidence was to the ſame Effect, as in the laſt Trial, and the Jury found him guilty.

But Judgment againſt him was reſpited till the next Seſſions, there being other Indictments againſt him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you known in all that Time any Money-dealings between Mr. Edwards and Mr. Robert, or Mr. William Hales?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there had been any, do you think that you should have known it?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir, I believe that I should; for, as to Affairs of that Nature, I believe that I know as much as any except himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Note. Do you take any Part of that Note to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Spicer. The Name is his; and the f I believe is his. As to the other Letters they are so altered that I cannot say. Value received is not his.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you acquainted with his Writing?

Mr. Spicer. Very well, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you seen his frank Letters?—Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is his Method of franking?

Mr. Spicer. Free Samuel Edwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Doth he write the Word free?—Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of f doth he make?

Mr. Spicer. A Sort of double f just such as is here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you take the Letter e to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Spicer. It is an altered Letter. It was something else turned into an o.

Mr. Att. Gen. The r what is that, doth it not seem to have been another Letter?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, it seems altered from another Letter; but bunglingly done.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. We will, my Lord, call one of Mr. Caswal's Apprentices to prove that this Draught hath been complied with.

(Mr. George Branthwait called and sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Do you look upon that Draught. Do you remember whether it was ever brought to you, and by whom?

Mr. Branthwait. I believe it was brought by Mr. Hales.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. To you?

Mr. Branthwait. Yes, Sir, and it was marked by me.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What had he for it?

Mr. Branthwait. He had of me two Notes. One was for 250*l.* the other for 220*l.* which was 470*l.* and he brought besides this Draught two Notes of Wanley's for 20*l.* which made the Balance.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Whom were they payable to?

Mr. Branthwait. One to one Calthrope, and the other to himself.

Lord Chief Baron. You say there were two Notes you gave him. Whom was the 250*l.* Note payable to?

Mr. Branthwait. To Mr. William Hales.

Lord Chief Baron. And who was the 220*l.* Note made payable to?

Mr. Branthwait. To one Charlton Thrup. He gave me this Draught of Mr. Harle's for 250*l.* and Notes of twenty Pounds.

Lord Chief Baron. Whom did you say the 220*l.* Note was made payable to?—Mr Branthwait. To one Charlton Thrup.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence.

Lord Chief Baron. Well, What do you say to this?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. I have nothing material in mine Instructions; therefore, I shall not trouble your Lordship.

Mr. Lacy. I take leave to observe, that it doth appear that no Prejudice is done by this Note. The 450*l.* borrowed on it hath been repaid.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hales owed Mr. Harle Money upon other Accounts, and he had it upon Account: And besides, it is attached in the Goldsmith's Hands, and it was on the very same Day that he was taken.

Lord Chief Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment against William Hales, Goldsmith, for a very great Misdemeanour. It is for forging an Indorsement on a promissory Note for eight hundred Pounds; for the charging of the Person indorsing with the Payment of this Sum; and the publishing of this Indorsement as a true one, knowing it to be so forged. It is a very great Offence, a Misdemeanour of the highest Nature; not only as it affects particular Persons, and charges the Person whose Name is made use of with the Payment, but as it is destructive to all Commerce: You are therefore to consider what Account the Defendant can give of it. The Indictment sets forth that the Defendant had in his Custody a certain Note or a Writing, purporting to be a promissory Note, with the Name of Robert Hales; by which Note it was supposed, that Robert Hales promised to pay to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or his Order, the Sum of eight hundred Pounds, within three Months after Date. And upon this, the Charge by the Indictment is, that the Defendant, with an Intention to charge Mr. Edwards with the Payment of the Money contained in this indorsed Note, and to defraud and deceive him and others, on the 13th Day of June did falsely and deceitfully forge and counterfeit a certain Indorsement on this Note in these English Words following:

'Pray pay to the Order of for the Value received,' over the Name of Samuel Edwards, as if subscribed to that Indorsement; and, that knowing the same to be a forged and counterfeit Indorsement, he published the same in order to deceive several Persons, the King's Subjects, as a real Indorsement, as well as to defraud the said Samuel Edwards, Esq. Now in order to prove this, the Counsel gave some Account of the Circumstances of the Defendant, the Character of Mr. Edwards, the Acquaintance between them as Neighbours. And to shew you the Circumstances of the Fact, they have called several Witnesses: First, they called a Servant of Mr. Edwards's, who mentioned that he had lived some considerable Time in Mr. Edwards's Service; during which Time the Defendant, Mr. Hales, hath frequently, for several Years, sent to Mr. Edwards to have Franks delivered him in the Name of Mr. Edwards, who hath for some Years been a Member of Parliament, in order to send these free of the Postage. It appears that this hath been done for several Years; and the usual Way was, when Mr. Edwards had received the Direction of the Name of the Person, he himself wrote the whole Superscription, and then subscribed to frank it Free Samuel Edwards. He tells you, that in the Beginning of July last, several Covers were brought to him for Franks, made up as you may perceive pretty large. The Covers were brought over to Mr. Edwards's House by a Servant of Mr. Hales's. The Message was, that Mr. Hales desired some Franks upon these Covers, particularly desiring them to be franked without any Superscription. He saith, that these were left in this Manner, and were all delivered to a Servant of Mr. Edwards with this Desire, that he would only write thereupon Samuel Edwards free; that the rest might be left to be filled up by Mr. Hales as he thought fit. He tells you, that when his Master came home, his Master having, as he observes, always wrote himself the whole Superscription, his Master refused to do this; and therefore these Covers remained without franking: Mr. Edwards would not accommodate the Defendant, Mr. Hales, in that manner with his Hand, and leave the rest blank for another Person to fill up as he thought fit. This was very prudently done; Mr. Edwards, who is a Gentleman in Business, might well apprehend that an Opportunity might be hereby given to serve Purposes that it might not be in his Power to controul. This, Gentlemen, is made use of as Proof of an Attempt by the Defendant, to get such Sort of Franks into his Power to make use of to such a Purpose as this. The next Witness that they called is Anne Clarke, who saith that she is likewise a Servant to Mr. Edwards, and she produceth a Note written by Mr. Hales; and saith, that this was brought to the House of Mr. Edwards, with a Desire to have some Franks directed to each of those Persons, two to each of these three several Persons: She saith, that it was some Time last Summer, she thinks about July. She saith, that when her Master, Mr. Edwards, came home, she shewed it to him; and Mr. Edwards declined giving or accommodating Mr. Hales with Franks to these Persons. The Reason that he gave was this: Mr. Hales (said he) hath both a Brother and a Nephew that are Members of the House of Commons; and therefore he need not send to me for Franks, when he may have them from his own Relations; he therefore declined it at that Time. These were the Directions: Two to Mr. Levett of Huntingdon, two to John Pratt, Esq. at Bristol, two to Stephen Mitford, Esq. at Bristol. Gentlemen, to corroborate this Evidence that this Note came from the Defendant, Mr. Hales, Mr. Booth is called. He is asked, Whether he is well acquainted with the Hand-writing of the Defendant Mr. Hales? He saith that he is, and that he verily believes that this Note is his Hand-writing. It hath been observed by Mr. Atterney, that there seems to have been some Design, the Form wherein it is wrote being very proper to give an Opportunity for an Alteration; that each of these Directions is very short, and would take up at most but one Line on the Superscription or Outside of the Cover; that there would have been a considerable Space left, so that when Free, Samuel Edwards, was wrote, there would have been a sufficient Space of Paper to write a Note or any thing over it. This is the Observation that hath been made upon this Note of Directions. After this they produce Mr. Robert Harle, who is Secretary to the Million Bank, to witness to the particular Fact. He saith, that this Note was on the 13th of June last brought and delivered to him by the Defendant Mr. William Hales. He saith, that he was then at Baker's Coffee-house in Exchange Alley; that the Defendant, Mr. Hales, came to him, and produced this very Note of eight hundred Pounds payable to Samuel Edwards, Esq. within three Months, subscribed Robert Hales, and indorsed in the Name of Samuel Edwards, and desired him to advance him four hundred and fifty Pounds upon the Credit of that Note; that seeing a promissory Note made payable to Samuel Edwards, Esq. and indorsed by the said Samuel Edwards, Esq. this appeared to him sufficient Security to lend four hundred and fifty Pounds upon; that he did thereupon comply with the Request of the Defendant, Mr. William Hales, to advance him that Sum; that he drew a Draught for it on Caswal and Mount, who were his Goldsmiths for this Sum, which Draught he took up afterwards, and allowed in his settling of his Accounts with his Goldsmiths; that at that Time when the Defendant brought this Note to him, this very Note was delivered to him, with this very Indorsement that is now upon it,

Pray pay to the Order of for y^e Value received
Samuel Edwards.

He saith, that he is sure that it was thus indorsed when it was left with him, he being desired to lend the Money on a Note so indorsed; that it hath been in his Custody ever since, so that he is sure there hath been no Alteration made thereon since that it was delivered unto him. You may remember that he was particularly asked, Are you sure that it was indorsed when it was delivered you? He saith that he is sure; and indeed the Thing bespeaks itself. 'When a Note is made payable to a particular Person, if any other Person brings it, every one expects that there should be an Indorsement to intitle any Person that is not the very Person to whom it was made payable. I am therefore sure (saith he) that it was so indorsed: And as Mr. Edwards was a Person of very great Dealings and considerable Substance, and so likely to have such a Note made payable to him, I therefore gave Credit to this Note as a sufficient Security to reimburse me the four hundred and fifty Pounds which I advanced thereupon.' This Fact he tells you was thus transacted at that Time; and he is sure that he received it from the Defendant thus indorsed, and that the Defendant hath had the Benefit of the Draught which he gave him on the Credit thereof. Mr. Harle hath allowed this in settling his Accounts with his Goldsmith. Upon this the Note hath been read to shew you the Purport thereof, and the Indorsement thereon. The Note is this,

May 13, 1728.

I promise to pay to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or Order, the Sum of Eight Hundred Pounds, within three Months after Date, for Value received,
Robert Hales.

Then upon the Back of the Note there is this Indorsement,

Pray pay to the Order of for y^e Value received,
Samuel Edwards.

Mr Harle goeth on in the Account which he gives you, and saith that this Note was left in his Hands in June; and that on Sept. 9 after, he was in Exchange-Alley all the Morning till about two; that there was a Message left for him at Baker's Coffee-house, but he received it not there; that he went

Home, and heard that there was a Meſſage left for him bythe Defendant, Mr. Hales, at Baker's Coffee-houſe; that he went out in the Afternoon, and had not a particular Account of the Meſſage till he came Home. The Meſſage was from Mr. Hales, that he had that Morning paid to his Goldſmiths Caſwal and Mount Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds on his Account: Mr. Harle tells you that there was more Money due to him on Security. So much Money was then paid in Diſcharge of ſo much, Part of Money advanced by him to Mr. Hales, and it was the exact Sum which had been advanced on the 13th of June on the Credit of this Note. He tells you, that in the Evening Mr. Caſwal came to him, and told him there was a melancholy Account, that a ſad Accident had happened: For Mr. William Hales, the Perſon that had paid them this Money on his Account, was taken up for Forgery, and this Money was attached in their Hands for to prevent his iſſuing it out. Mr. Harle tells you, that this was the firſt Diſcovery that he had of the particular Fact, that gave him Occaſion to make the more particular Inquiry: He had indeed two or three Days before ſpoke to a Gentleman of the Exchequer, one Mr. Wright, had ſhewed him the Indorſment; and having ſome Suſpicion, aſked him whether he was acquainted with Mr. Edwards's Hand, and whether he thought that that was his Hand-writing? Mr. Wright thought it was a little odd, was ſomething diffident, but believed that it was Mr. Edwards's Hand, as Mr. Harle himſelf alſo thought that it was. He ſaith, that after that the Defendant was apprehended, he went to Mr. Wright to deſire him to go with him, that they might have from Mr. Edwards more particular Satisfaction. They went and met with Mr. Edwards, in Weſtminſter-Hall, ſhewed him the Note, aſked him whether he knew of it, and whether it was his Indorſement? Mr. Edwards was very much ſtartled, and ſaid, that he never gave any ſuch Note, and knew nothing of it. Mr. Harle aſked him whether the Name was his Hand-writing? He ſaid that if it was, an ill Uſe was made of it. Mr. Edwards took a Copy of it, and kept it by him. The Note hath been read to you, and appears to be a promiſſory Note in the Name of Mr. Robert Hales, for Eight Hundred Pounds, payable in three Months, to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. The Indoſement is

Pray pay to the Order of for the Value received,
Samuel Edwards.

Gentlemen, upon the producing and reading of this Note, Mr. Attorney hath made ſeveral Obſervations on the Manner of writing it. You have had the Inſpection of it, and ſomething very particular appears to every one's View. It is by the Counſel for the Proſecutor ſuppoſed, that this Note muſt be formed from Part of a Frank Cover ſigned ffree Samuel Edwards, ffree being turned into for ye Value received; that there is the Remainder of another Letter. And you may obſerve whether there is a Selvedge, or any Thing of that Nature, that ſheweth it to have been the Outſide of a Sheet of Paper. All the Edges indeed ſeem to be ſmooth and clean as a Paper that is cut. The Indorſement begins, 'Pray pay to the Order of for' then comes ye, and then a large Diſtance between that and 'Value received.' So that it ſeems pretty extraordinary that if any one was honeſtly writing, and had a Paper not written on before, that they ſhould write in this Manner that the Word ye ſhould be tacked to the Word for, and put at ſuch a Diſtance from 'Value received.' Received follows Value immediately in a more plain Writing: Beſides, it is unuſual to make uſe of the Word ye before 'Value received;' but they ſay it is more generally 'Value received.' You have an Inſtance in the Note itſelf; the Concluſion of the Note is 'Value received:' and I believe the Obſervation is juſt; that it is not ſo uſual to ſay 'For ye Value received.' But the Obſervation of the Counſel was this, that there was a Neceſſity of this in order to accommodate the Letters to the Forgery; as the Words now ſtand they exactly ſuited. And, Gentlemen, the f is of a paler Ink than the or, and theſe Letters thicker, and ſeem of a deeper Ink. If there were two ee's before, the Alteration and making the other Letters muſt occaſion the Thickneſs of theſe Letters, and their ſeeming of a blacker Ink. Other Letters being to be ſuperinduced, they muſt of Neceſſity be thicker and deeper than the firſt Letters. Here is a very ſtrange Sort of an r, and the o ſeems very odd. At the End of the r is ſomething made uſe of to aſſiſt to make the upper Part of the y, which doth not ſtand cleverly. And you will find that Part which is the Head of the y much thicker than the other Part that makes up the y. And then on the Side or one Shoulder of the y there is a Sort of e put. You may ſee how improperly it ſtands. It is not an e directly over the y, which is the Way ſometimes of writing the ſhort; but it comes to the Bottom of the Head of the y. So that, Gentlemen, theſe are the Obſervations that have been made by the Counſel. You have ſeen this Note, and may obſerve upon it, whether you think theſe Obſervations plain, proper and juſt? Upon this Occaſion, another Servant of Mr. Edwards is called, one Mr. Spicer. He ſaith, that he hath been a Clerk in the Exchequer above ten Years, but in the whole in Mr. Edwards's Service upwards of twenty Years; that he is well acquainted with his public Dealings and private Tranſactions in Money-Matters: and that he never knew or heard that he had any Money-Dealings with the Defendant, which he believes he ſhould, if there had been any, being his Clerk, and acquainted with his Money-Dealings. And he ſaith, that as to the Name Samuel Edwards, he believes it to be Mr. Edwards's proper Hand-Writing, being very well acquainted with his Hand. And he ſaith, that as to the Indorſement, he believes that the f is his, but not the other Letters; that he is ſatisfied that 'Value received' is not Mr. Edwards's Writing. And he ſaith, that the o and r he doth not take to be Mr. Edwards's Hand-Writing, but an Alteration from ſomething that Mr. Edwards had wrote before; that the uſual Way of Mr. Edwards franking is free with a ff as here ffree; and that the o appears to be made out of an altered Letter. So that this is a proper Obſervation, that there is an Alteration, as they believe upon their Oaths. He ſaith, that it is bunglingly done; that he apprehends it done as hath been mentioned. Well, another Witneſs is called, Mr. George Branthwaite, a Servant to Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount. He ſaith, that this Draught was brought to their Office by the Defendant himſelf, becauſe he hath put his Mark upon it, as is proper for Perſons of ſuch Dealings; that that Mark of his at the Bottom reminds him that the Defendaht brought it. Upon the bringing of this Draught, he had two Notes from this Witneſs on account of his Maſter; one was for Two Hundred and Fifty Pounds, the other for Two Hundred and Twenty: That came to Four Hundred and Seventy Pounds: Therefore the Deficiency of this Draught was to be ſupplied with another to make up that Sum complete. Therefore, he ſaith, that he brought Notes of Wanley's for Twenty Pounds, which made up the Balance. The Note for Two Hundred and Fifty Pounds, he ſaith, was made payable to the Defendant himſelf; and that for Two Hundred and Twenty Pounds to one Charlton Thrup; and that at this Time the Draught and Wanley's Notes were delivered to him for theſe Notes on Account of Meſſ. Caſwal and Mount. This is the Account given by them. The Defendant himſelf and his Counſel are here. Nothing material is ſaid by them in Defence, only Mr. Lacy mentioned that there is no Damage done by this Note, the Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds borrowed on it being repaid. To this it was replied by Mr. Attorney, that the Money was paid upon Account, there being other Monies due to Mr. Harle on Security; and beſides it is attached in Mr. Harle's Goldſmiths Hands, to prevent its being iſſued out. Gentlemen, you will obſerve, that if this was a real Indorſement, it would be an Aſſurance of paying the whole Debt. Whoſoever indorſeth a Note, whereof no Part is paid, is liable to the whole. Therefore the Queſtion is not, Whether or not this Money was paid? but whether here is not an Engagement to pay the Note, which the Re-payment of the Money borrowed thereon is no Fence againſt? Therefore if the Money had been repaid, that had been no acquitting of the Crime. That will no more diſcharge a Perſon, than if a Felon ſhould ſay that he is acquitted becauſe the Goods are reſtored. The Behaviour afterwards is not a ſufficient Acquittal of a Crime. And conſider when that was. It was not before, but upon the Monday, the very Day that he was apprehended. Then the Meſſage was left, and the Money paid. You are to conſider, therefore, whether this did not ariſe from an Apprehenſion and Fear of a Diſcovery, in order to clear Things as well as he could? Gentlemen, as there is ſufficient Evidence to fix this upon the Defendant, ſo hath he not proved how he came by this Note. He hath not called one Witneſs to ſhew that he had any Money-Dealings with Mr. Edwards, or that he received it of any other Perſon; but it is left on the Evidence given by the Proſecutor. Therefore, there can be no Doubt in the Matter. If a Perſon is ſilent to the Charge, and cannot give you any Satisfaction as to it, it ſtands as fully fixed upon him as if any had ſeen him write the Indorſement. Therefore, Gentlemen, you are to conſider, whether any Thing appears to afford the leaſt Preſumption that this was a true Indorſement made by Mr. Edwards, for Value received by him? It is, Gentlemen, an Offence of a very heinous Nature, and, if not ſuppreſſed, muſt tend to hinder all Commerce by Bills and Paper-Credit. If this be ſuffered to increaſe, none can take ſuch a Note, unleſs he goeth to the Perſon himſelf. It will render it inſecure to carry on Commerce by Notes or Bills. As to an Indorſement of this Nature, though it was not mentioned, it is proper for me to take notice, that tho' the Name be not named, it may be made to any Perſon. The Perſon, in whoſe Poſſeſſion it is, can go and receive the Money. So that the Indorſement is complete Authority to impower the Perſon in whoſe Poſſeſſion the Note is, to receive the Money, and likewiſe to charge the Perſon that ſo indorſed it with the Re-imburſement of the Money. Therefore, Gentlemen, the Crime and Offence ſeems complete. Upon this Evidence, it doth not ſeem to me that there can be any doubt with you, whether he be guilty of this Fact or not.

V. William Hales was indicted for a Miſdemeanour, in obtaining the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds, from Mr. William Harle, by falſe Tokens *.

Jury ſworn over again.

Clerk. OYEZ, Oyez, if any one can inform, &c. Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales ſtands indicted by the Name of William Hales, &c. for falſely and deceitfully obtaining the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds of Mr. William Harle by a falſe Token, to wit, a Promiſſory Note in the Name of Mr. Robert Hales, whereby the ſaid Robert Hales is ſuppoſed to engage to pay within three Months after Date, the Sum of Eight Hundred Pounds to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. with a counterfeit Indorſement on this Note to the great Damage, &c. To this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Strange. This likewiſe is an Indictment againſt the Defendant Mr. William Hales, and is for falſely and deceitfully obtaining a Sum of Money of Mr. William Harle by a falſe Token. And it ſets forth, that the Defendant having in his Poſſeſſion a Promiſſory Note of Mr. Robert Hales's for Eight Hundred Pounds, payable in three Months after Date to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. with a forged Indorſement thereon in the Name of the ſaid Samuel Edwards, Eſq. did falſely and deceitfully obtain of one Mr. William Harle, the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds on the ſaid Note. This is laid to be the great Damage, &c.

Mr. Hungerford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, the Fact charged is the very ſame as in the former Cauſe already heard, only upon a different Law, 33 Hen. VIII. There was, it ſeems, ſo long agone an abominable Practice of obtaining Money by falſe Tokens. The Act of Parliament hath prohibited that Practice, and made it penal. There is but one Witneſs that we ſhall trouble your Lordſhip with.

Mr. Harle called and ſworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Harle, pray give an Account to my Lord, and the Jury, when you firſt ſaw that Note, and what Money you paid upon it.

Mr. Harle. On the 13th of June, Mr. Hales applied to me, to lend him Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds upon this Note. I accordingly made a Draught on my Goldſmiths, which I ſuppoſe was paid the ſame Day, having taken up the Draught on ſettling mine Accounts.

Lord Chief Baron Pengelly. Mr. Lacy, do you expect that they ſhould go on further in their Evidence?

Mr. Lacy. No, my Lord.

* Theſe Trials were taken in Short-Hand by Order of Mr. Edwards.

Lord.

Lord Chief Baron Pengelly. This Indictment is against William Hales, Goldsmith. It is for obtaining upon this Note a Draught equivalent to Money, and which afterwards produced Money, by this false Token. If the Note was forged, it was a false Note. He brought this Note as a good Note, to induce Mr. Harle to accommodate him with Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds thereupon. That is the Description of the Act of Parliament, that if any one by a false Token doth obtain or get any Thing or any Goods of another's, corporal Punishment shall be inflicted. If this appear to be a forged Indorsement; this being a false Token, he must be guilty. So that the Evidence is the same as to both these Indictments.

The Officer sworn to keep the Jury.

Clerk. Gentlemen, answer to your Names.

Jury called over.

Clerk. Are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Agreed.

Clerk. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How say you, Is William Hales guilty of the Misdemeanour wherewith he is charged, in forging and publishing an Indorsement on a Promissory Note, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. How say you, Is William Hales guilty of the Misdemeanour wherewith he stands charged in obtaining Money by a false Token, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

VI. William Hales and Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk, were indicted for Forging and Counterfeiting a Note of Hand, bearing Date Aug. 16, 1727, for Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, payable to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or Order, signed Thomas Kinnersley, and indorsed Samuel Edwards.

Jury called over again, and sworn.

Cryer. OYEZ, Oyez. If any one can inform my Lord the King's Justice, the King's Serjeants, Attorney, &c. in this Cause between our Sovereign Lord the King and William Hales and Thomas Kinnersley, let them come forth, &c.

Here the Indictment was read.

Mr. Strange. Gentlemen of the Jury. This is an Indictment against the two Prisoners at the Bar, William Hales of London, late Goldsmith, and Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk. The Indictment sets forth that these two Defendants, being Persons of ill Fame and Reputation, and devising and intending to defraud Samuel Edwards, Esq. and divers other his Majesty's Subjects, in March last had in their Custody a certain Note or a Writing purporting to be a Promissory Note signed by Thomas Kinnersley, and dated Aug. 16, 1727. In this Note Thomas Kinnersley is supposed to promise to pay Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds to Samuel Edwards, Esq. within three Months after Date, for Value received; that on this Note which they had in their Custody, they forged an Indorsement in these Words, 'Pray pay to the Order of for Value received, Samuel Edwards;' That thus having in their Custody this Note with this forged Indorsement thereupon, and knowing this to be a forged Indorsement, they did afterwards publish it to be a true one. These Offences are laid to be to the great Damage of the said Samuel Edwards, Esq. the Breach of his Majesty's Peace, and the ill Example of other his Majesty's Subjects in like Case offending. To this Indictment they have pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel on the same Side for my Lord the King. Gentlemen, the Charge against the Defendant is for forging an Indorsement on a Promissory Note for Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds. Likewise they are charged with publishing the said counterfeit Indorsement for a true one, knowing the same to be forged and counterfeit. Gentlemen, this is not the first of several Facts of this Nature that have come to be considered with regard to the Defendant Mr. Hales: But the first that hath come to be examined in this Place charged upon the other Defendant, Mr. Kinnersley, a Clergyman: And it is a very melancholy Thing that when a Scene of Forgery of this Nature is going on, which as you have been told is of a very pernicious Nature to Trade and Commerce, we should see one charged therewith that hath a Right to appear in that Habit, and thinks fit to appear here in it. But it will appear that there is just Ground to charge not only the Defendant Hales, but the Defendant Kinnersley. Gentlemen, as to the Fact, it will seem that it took rise in the same manner as the former Fact; that by that Correspondence that Mr. William Hales thought fit to let himself into with Mr. Edwards, by applying for Frank Covers to send News into the Country, he took occasion to make Use of such a Paper; and that there being an Intimacy between him and Mr. Kinnersley, Mr. Hales having by this Means possessed himself of a Frank Cover with the Name of Samuel Edwards free thereon, that upon a Piece of that Paper cut off from the rest, a Promissory Note is written. I take it that the Note will appear to be the Hand-writing of Mr. Kinnersley, dated in a different Hand, Aug. 16, 1727. The Words are these:

I promise to pay to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or his Order, three Months after Date, the Sum of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, for the Value received.
THOMAS KINNERSLEY.

On the Back of the Paper these Circumstances will appear: First, The Edge of the Paper on that Side of it where the Indorsement is wrote appears cut off; and as in the former Case, so here there are the Tails of two or three Letters still remaining plainly to be seen. And it will appear that here is an Irregularity and Unevenness in the cutting; the Edge in one Place smoother being turned in, and an Hook or Dent made in the Paper. Under this, pretty near the Top of the Paper, is written 'Pray pay to the Order of,' then there is a wide Blank as in the former Instance; then follow the Words, 'For the Value received, Samuel Edwards.' It appears that the Words for the are written in a stronger and blacker Ink than the former; the f of the former Sort, probably Mr. Edwards's. The Word the is not written in a Contraction as before, but at length. Here, instead of changing Letters, erasing or turning, are Letters written over in a blacker Ink: The other Letters, as the two e's, appear in a paler Ink; so that it will appear to a Demonstration that this was a Frank turned to this Use. Other Observations will likewise appear as to the Manner of penning it: This Note being written, and the Indorsement upon it, it will appear what Use was made of it; and it will appear by strong Circumstances, if not by the Confession of the Defendant Kinnersley, that the Name of Samuel Edwards was there when he wrote the Note: If so it will appear clear against Kinnersley. It will thus appear a Circumstance to charge the Defendant; as first, it appears that there never was any Dealing between Kinnersley and Mr. Samuel Edwards: I know not that it will appear that they were so much as known to each other; and yet here is a Note wrote by Mr. Kinnersley, whereby he engageth to pay Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, within three Months after Date, to him or his Order. It is very extraordinary that any Gentleman should write a Promissory Note, especially should write such a Note to pay such a Sum to another, to one with whom he had no Dealings. It is incumbent therefore on Kinnersley to shew any such Dealings, and upon what fair Occasion it can be made appear to be given. Gentlemen, as this will appear to you to be the Nature of the Note and the Manner of indorsing it, and that there were no Dealings between them, and consequently no Reason for putting it in Mr. Edwards's Name, but that his Name was there, and to make him the Indorser; so the Use made of it was to carry it to Mr. Bird, an Officer to the Hudson's Bay Company. Mr. Hales delivered it to him as a true Note and Indorsement; and desired that Mr. Bird would accommodate him with Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds upon it. I think that Mr. Hales gave his own Note for that Sum: But as the principal Security this Note of Mr. Edwards's was left with Mr. Bird. It was on the 20th of March 1727 that this Note was left and thus deposited with Mr. Bird. And, Gentlemen, in April following there was the Sum of Four Hundred and Fifty Pounds, as Part of the Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds paid by Mr. Hales. Gentlemen, the Residue not being paid in such a Time as it was expected, Mr. Bird directed one Mr. Tomkins to write to Kinnersley to demand the Money, and to threaten to sue for it. After this Mr. Kinnersley came to him at Fenchurch-Street, the Hudson's Bay House. Mr. Bird told him that there was such a Note which was left with him for a Security for Money borrowed; that there was so much thereof that remained due, and desired the Money. It will appear that at that Place and Time when the Note was shewed to Mr. Kinnersley, he owned that he had wrote this Note, and said that he was an undone Man, and that Mr. Bird must not expect the Money from him, but apply to Mr. Edwards who indorsed the Note. Gentlemen, after this Declaration had been made by Mr. Kinnersley, in September there was a Discovery made of Mr. Gibson's Note, upon which Mr. Hales was committed, September 9 last: That gave occasion to every one that had received of Mr. Hales's Notes for their Security to look about them, which produced a particular Inquiry about this Note. Mr. Edwards was informed that such a Note was in the Hands of Mr. Bird; upon his applying to Mr. Bird, it appeared in the manner that I have opened unto you: When that appeared, and that the Note was wrote by Mr. Kinnersley on a Paper signed by Mr. Edwards, Mr. Kinnersley was taken up. I think that there was some Difficulty at first for the Constable to apprehend him; but at length he was apprehended, and carried before Sir Richard Hopkins. It will appear that he was then in great Confusion, and appeared to have some Sort of Inclination to make the only Reparation that Guilt of such a Crime could admit of, viz. making a full Discovery. He said, that he would confess every thing, and owned that both the Body of the Note and the Subscription to it was his Hand-writing. He confessed likewise, if my Brief be right, that he knew that Mr. Edwards's Name was on the Back of it; that Mr. Edwards was a Stranger to him, and that he had no Dealings with him. It happened at that Time that there was one Mitford present, something of an Attorney or Solicitor, and a Relation of Mr. Kinnersley's. He found that Mr. Kinnersley was on a dangerous Point when he declared, that he knew that Mr. Edwards's Name was there when he wrote the Note. He stopt him short, bade him confess nothing, asked him what he meant? He took his Advice, and, I think, denied his own Hand-writing. Upon that Occasion a Discovery was prevented: He was then committed, and that is the Occasion of the present Prosecution. We shall call the Witnesses. As to Mr. Hales, the Evidence that we shall lay before you in his usual Practice of applying to Mr. Edwards for Franks, the Manner of making this Note and Indorsement, the Use he made of it, his publishing and depositing of it as a true Indorsement, when it appears on the Face of it to be a forged one. It will appear plainly against him that he was concerned in the Forgery, and in the Publication of it. As to the other of the Defendants, Mr. Kinnersley, the Circumstances that I have mentioned will make it appear to be his, and be as strong Evidence against him as against the other.

Mr. Serj. Whit. I will not take up any of your Lordship's Time, there being more Indictments; but shall immediately call our Witnesses.

Thomas Maddox and Anne Clark were called and sworn.

N. B. Their Examination was in Substance the same as in the former Trial, p. 69, 70. therefore need not be inserted over again.

Mr. John Spicer called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Look upon that Note. Are you acquainted with Mr. Edwards's Hand-writing?—Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. How long have you been acquainted with it?

Mr. Spicer. Twenty-four Years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. How long have you been a Clerk to him?

Mr. Spicer. Between ten and eleven Years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. How much is his Hand?

Mr. Spicer. Samuel Edwards and the f.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Very well. As to the other Letters, What are they?

Mr. Spicer. Some of them seem to be written over other Letters, which I suppose were Part of the Word free. The r seems visible between the o and r.

Mr. Strange. What was his Method of writing the Word free?

Mr. Spicer. With a double f, juſt as it is here, ffree.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know him uſe the Word Frank?

Mr. Spicer. Never, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. You ſay that you have been concerned as Clerk between ten and eleven Years. Was you concerned before for him?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. In what Buſineſs?

Mr. Spicer. As to his private Affairs in Town, Caſh in Town, and many of his Rents.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. During the Time that you was acquainted with his private Tranſactions, did you ever underſtand that there were any Tranſactions in Money Affairs between him and Mr. Hales?

Mr. Spicer. No, never any whatever. I never ſo much as heard his Name in the Family.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Did you ever know that Mr. Edwards uſed to make a Practice of indorſing any other Perſon's Notes, or of giving promiſſory Notes?———Mr. Spicer. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. I believe you will all be convinced that it is his Hand-writing.

Mr. Kinnerſley. I admit, Sir, the whole Body of the Note to be mine own Hand-writing.

Mr. Strange. Look upon it before you do that. We deſire nothing but what is fair.

Mr. Kennerſley. Yes, Sir, I admit both the Figures on the Top, and the whole Note to be mine.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Gentlemen, you will obſerve that there were but three Months mentioned in the Note. The Note is drawn Aug. 16. and was not brought till March 20 after, ſo that the whole Time was long expired before the Note was left with Mr. Bird for the Money which he lent upon it.

Mr. Strange. I verily believe, my Lord, the Indorſement and Note to be both the ſame Hand.

(Mr. William Wright called and ſworn.)

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir, was you at any Time with Mr. Kinnerſley and Mr. Edwards, and was there any Diſcourſe paſſed between them about this Note?

Mr. Wright. When Mr. Kinnerſley was examined before Sir Richard Hopkins, he there owned it to be his own Hand-writing, both the Note and Indorſement.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. But give us an Account whether he was going to make a Confeſſion, and what was ſaid upon it?

Mr. Wright. As ſoon as he ſaid that the Note was all his Hand-writing——

Lord Chief-Baron Pengelly. And what did he ſay beſides?

Mr. Wright. What he ſaid, my Lord, as to the Indorſement was afterwards. As ſoon as he ſaid that the Note was all his Hand-writing, Mr. Edwards aſked him, Why he drew the Note payable to him, when there never had been any Dealings or Negotiations between them?

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What ſaid Mr. Kennerſley to that?

Mr. Wright. He ſaid that there never had been any Dealings between them, either before or ſince the making of the Note payable to him; that he did not know Mr. Edwards, nor, except that Time before Sir Richard Hopkins, had not ſeen him.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Pray, Sir, give us an Account how he was prevented going on.

Mr. Wright. He opened himſelf in this Manner: That he was indebted to Mr. Hales in that Sum, and more, and that Mr. Hales deſired him to give a Note of his Hand; that he aſked Mr. Hales to whom it ſhould be made payable? I replied, It is very unuſual to aſk that. It is ſure natural for a Man to make it payable to a Perſon that he oweth the Money to. I ſaid, Sir, you ſeemed before to declare yourſelf an unhappy Perſon, an undone Man. I aſked him the Reaſon; and upon that Mr. Mitford, who was with him, ſaid, You ſhall not go on to declare any thing further, you may do yourſelf an Injury.

Mr. Strange. Did he ſay at that Time, that he ſaw any thing on the Back of that Note?

Mr. Wright. As ſoon as he had declared the Note to be his Hand-writing to Mr. Edwards, and Mr. Bird had ſhowed the Note to Mr. Kinnerſley, he was aſked, Whether he knew of that Indorſement of Mr. Edwards's Hand before he ſaw the Note? He ſaid, he did know of the Indorſement thereof, but know not how it came there.

Mr. Strange. How did Mr. Edwards aſk the Queſtion?

Mr. Wright. He aſked Mr. Bird, Did Mr. Kinnerſley own the Indorſement before you ſhowed him the Note?

Mr. Strange. Sir, you do not apprehend the Queſtion aſked you. What was the Queſtion that Mr. Edwards aſked Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Wright. Whether he knew of the Indorſement before that Mr. Bird ſhowed him the Note?

Mr. Strange. What did he ſay?—Mr. Wright. He anſwered that he did.

Lord Chief Baron. Was that all that he ſaid?

Mr. Wright. He ſaid that he had had ſeveral Dealings with Mr. Hales, which was the Cauſe of his drawing that Note in that Manner.

Lord Chief Baron. But what did he ſay concerning the Indorſement?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Bird ſaid, That before he ſhewed Mr. Kinnerſley the Note, Mr. Kinnerſley ſaid that there was ſuch a Note of his Hand, with ſuch an Indorſement.

Lord Chief Baron. But what was the Anſwer that Mr. Kinnerſley gave Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Wright. That he knew of the Indorſement, but knew not how it came there.

Mr. Strange. Did he, Mr. Kinnerſley, mention the Indorſement himſelf? Did he ſay, whether he ſaw the Name before his writing the Note?

Mr. Wright. Not at that Time, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Did he at any other in your Hearing?

Mr. Wright. No, Sir.

Mr. Strange. When Mr. Mitford ſtopt him, was there any Diſcourſe afterwards whoſe Hand-writing the Note might be; was there any Diſpute?

Mr. Wright. Sir, the Company broke up then, when Mr. Mitford had given him that Caution.

(Sir Richard Hopkins ſworn.)

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir Richard——

Mr. Lacy. I would beg firſt to aſk Sir Richard, whether this Examination was reduced into Writing?

Sir Richard Hopkins. I always take a Memorandum in my Book of what is ſaid upon an Examination. There was none other Examination in Writing, but my Memorandum of what I thought ſufficient to occaſion the Commitment that I made.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. When was it?

Sir Richard Hopkins. It was ſome time about September. I remember that he was charged before me about two Notes. One was a Note of Twelve Hundred and Sixty, the other was a Note of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, which of theſe you deſire me to ſpeak to, I know not.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. That of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds.

Sir Richard Hopkins. There was ſuch a Note drawn by Thomas Kinnerſley, payable within three Months after Date to Samel Edwards, Eſq. and indorſed by Samuel Edwards. I looked upon it; and, turning over the Indorſement, it ſeemed to me to be an altered and forged Thing. Upon this I examined Mr. Bird, whom they offered as an Evidence. Mr. Bird told me, that he had lent Money upon that Note of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, and that he had received ſome Money in Part of Payment of what he had lent: That hearing that Mr. Hales was taken up, he made Application to Mr. Kinnerſley for what Money remained due to him; that when he made ſuch Application to Mr. Kinnerſley for this Money, Mr. Kinnerſley, before he ſaw the Note, told him, that he had a Note of his for his Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, payable in three Months after Date to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. or Order, and indorſed by Samuel Edwards. This I laid my Finger upon before him, thinking it ſufficient to commit him, and repeated the Words to Mr. Bird, Are theſe the Words that you ſay? If they are, repeat them; which he did. I aſked Mr. Kinnerſley, whether he had any Dealings with Mr. Edwards? He ſaid, that he had not. I aſked then, How he came to make a Note for twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds payable to him, a Perſon with whom he had no Dealings. He ſaid, That he did it at the Requeſt of Mr. Hales, to whom he was indebted in that Sum of Money. He ſaid, That as to the Indorſement he knew not how it came there. He ſeemed ready to make an ample Confeſſion; but there was a Perſon there, who was (I think) one Way or other related to the Law, who ſtopt him directly, and had oft interrupted. I ſaid to him, Sir, this is not becoming here: I expect to examine any Perſon without your interrupting. I will afterwards aſk any Queſtion that——

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir, when Mr. Kinnerſley had owned the Note, was there afterwards a Denial?

Sir Richard Hopkins. Afterwards, Sir, there was a Denial. It might be as to the other Note; and not that which you are now aſking me about.

(Mr. Richard Davis, the Conſtable, called and ſworn.)

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Richard Davis, I think that you was the Conſtable ſent to apprehend Mr. Kinnerſley. Will you give us an Account how often you went to apprehend him, whether he was to be met withal, and what paſt when he was apprehended?

Mr. Richard Davis. My Lord, on September 12, there was a Warrant iſſued out to take up the Rev. Mr. Kinnerſley, and was given to me to execute. Accordingly I went in the Afternoon, and took a Porter with me. We went to the Magpy Tavern without Aldgate. I ſent the Porter thence to Mr. Kinnerſley's Houſe in Manſel-Street, to tell him, that there was a Gentleman there to ſpeak with him; becauſe, he living in Manſel-Street in Middleſex, I could not there execute my Warrant. When the Porter came back, he told me, that the Daughter came to the Door, and ſaid, that the Reverend Mr. Kinnerſley was not in Town. After I had paid for what I had called for, I went from thence to the Clerk of the Pariſh, and aſked him, whether the Rev. Mr. Kinnerſley was in Town? He anſwered, No; and ſaid, that he went out of Town on Tueſday, I think it was, and that he did not know when he would be in Town. He aſked me what I wanted with him? I told him that a Couple wanted to be married, and wanted a Licence. Won't (ſaid he) the Curate do? No (ſaid I), the young Gentlewoman will not be married by any but the Doctor, and at his Church: So the Perſon having no Apprehenſion, ſent me to London-Houſe in Aldersgate-Street, to enquire for Mr. May, who would tell me when the Doctor would be in Town. He told me, that he would be in Town next Thurſday Night. Accordingly I went the next Friday Morning, took a Porter with me, went directly to the Doctor's Houſe. When I came there I rung hard at the Gate. Out came the Daughter. I aſked to ſpeak with the Doctor; ſhe ſaid that he was not at Home, and enquired what I would have with him. I told her the ſame about my wanting a Licence that I had told the Clerk before. I will (ſaid ſhe) go and call my Mamma. Accordingly Madam Kinnerſley came out: I told her that I wanted a Licence, was informed that the Doctor generally kept Licences by him, or at leaſt could help me to one. She deſired me to walk into the Parlour, ſaid that the Doctor had been out of Town, was very much fatigued, which was the Reaſon that he was denied. Out came the Doctor, Sir, (ſaid he) where is the Gentlewoman? Sir, (ſaid I) ſhe is hard by, at the Magpye Tavern by Aldgate. Who (ſaid he) is ſhe, and who are her Friends? I told him that her Name was Bird. Where (ſaid he) lives ſhe? I ſaid in Fleet-Street. I do not (ſaid he) remember that Name. You do, Sir, (ſaid I) know her Father very well. What Age (ſaid he) is ſhe? I told him her Age. Have her Friends given Conſent (ſaid he), without that I would not do it for an hundred Pounds: The Penalty is fifty Pounds; I told him that it had been done to my Knowledge. Aye (ſaid he) it may be at the Fleet. I deſired him to go to the Tavern, where her Brother was with her, and he would be ſatisfied. My Intent was to decoy him into the Liberties of the City. He ſaid, No, he wou'd not go with me: So I had no Opportunity then. But having ſeen him once, and ſo knowing him, I afterwards watched for him, and ſaw him come out, and go through the Minories. I watched him till he came to Aldgate; I then paid my Reſpects to him. I think (ſaid he) that you are the Perſon that came to me about a Marriage. Yes, Sir, (ſaid I) but I have now another Affair to ſpeak to you of. I have a Warrant againſt you for Forgery of a Note of twelve hundred and ſixty Pounds. He ſaid, God forbid. He aſked to ſee my Warrant. He ſaid, had the Gentleman ſent to him, he woul readily have come. I aſked him why he denied himſelf? He ſaid, that he apprehended an Arreſt. I deſired him to go with me to the White Hart Tavern in Biſhopſgate-Street. He there owned the Note.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Was it within or without the Bars?

Mr. Davis. It was within.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Did you go with him to Sir Richard Hopkins?

Mr. Davis. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, there is another Thing that we shall prove; for all is Circumstance. We shall shew that Mr. Kinnersley and Mr. Hales have been often together for four or five Months in a private Manner. As soon as the one hath come in, the other hath gone with him into a private Room, and they have stayed some Time together; and this was about the Time that these Transactions have been. When these Matters are laid together, you will judge that Mr. Kinnersley hath not been so kind to Mr. Edwards as to give him Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds; but that there was a plain formed Design to raise this Money upon his Credit. Join this together with his owning, that he knew that Mr. Edwards's Hand was on the Back of the Note before he drew the Note, and that he knew of the Indorsement, though he said he knew not how it came there. Considering these Things, none will doubt but that there was a Contrivance between them. We shall call several Witnesses.

Mr. Lacy. We submit it to my Lord, whether it be proper. It is foreign to this Indictment; and we should have nothing offered but what we may be supposed to come prepared to defend. We cannot be supposed to come prepared to defend this, by shewing how he came there, and upon what Account.

Lord Chief Baron. It is an Indictment against both the Defendants. The Note was indeed subscribed by the Defendant Kinnersley: But then it was delivered out by the other Defendant Hales. Now, they say, that they will shew by several Witnesses that they were very conversant together about that Time, and they are acquainted with the private Manner of their conversing together. You hear what is the Use they make of it. I see not that we can refuse their giving this Account. What Use is to be made of it must be left to the Jury.

Mr. Mather. Are these Things to be proved by Circumstances?

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Can Forgery be proved any otherwise?

Mr. Bab called and sworn.

Mr. Strange. Pray, where do you live?

Mr. Bab. At Peel's Coffe-house, in Fleet-street.

Mr. Strange. Do you keep that House?

Mr. Bab. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Have you ever observed that Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnersley ever frequented that House, and in what Manner?

Mr. Bab. Last Summer, the greatest Part of the Summer, sometimes twice or thrice in a Week, till near the Time that the Gentleman was taken up, Mr. Hales would sometimes come thither, and sometimes be there an Hour or two. Sometimes he would ask whether a Minister had been there to ask for him? We hardly knew the Name of either of them, but knew whom he meant. Mr. Hales would often be in our Room, and see sometimes Mr. Kinnersley coming, out of the Window. Mr. Hales would hardly take any Notice of him; but as soon as he came in Mr. Hales would go into a private Room, and the other afterwards go to him. And sometimes as soon as one came in at one Door, the other went out at the other, and he followed him.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. How often was this?

Mr. Bab. Twice or thrice in a Week.

Mr. Strange. Do you remember on what Occasion, and how they left off coming to your House?

Mr. Bab. Mr. Kinnersley was not at the House for two or three Weeks or a Month before Mr. Hales was taken up. Mr. Hales was there a few Days before.

Mr. Strange. Do you remember that Mr. Kinnersley passed by?

Mr. Bab. Once he did. He went down Fleet-street: Mr. Hales rose up, went out, and went after him.

Mr. Strange. How long was this before Mr. Hales was apprehended?

Mr. Bab. It was three Weeks or a Month, I believe, before he was apprehended.

Mr. Strange. I ask, Whether at any Time they sat down in the publick Room?

Mr. Bab. Very seldom: They generally went into the private Part.

Mr. Strange. Was that distinct from the rest of the House?

Mr. Bab. Yes, Sir, quite separate.

Mr. John Brooks called and sworn.

Mr. Strange. Where do you live?

Mr. Brooks. I keep a Coffee-house in Downing-street, in Westminster.

Mr. Strange. What Name doth your Coffe-house go by?

Mr. Brooks. My own Name.

Mr. Strange. Do you know that you have ever observed that Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnersley ever frequented your House, and in what Manner?

Mr. Brooks. Mr. Kinnersley hath sometimes come to the Coffee-house; sent for a Porter; gave him a Note to Mr. Hales, who hath come, and they have gone to a private Part of the Room.

Mr. Strange. Was there any other with them?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir, never.

Mr. Strange. Was it often that they met thus?

Mr. Brooks. About four or five Times in a Month.

Mr. Strange. How long have they stayed?

Mr. Brooks. Several Hours. When I have asked the Servant why a Candle was not carried them, he hath said, that they refused it.

Mr. Strange. How long was it before Mr. Hales was taken up?

Mr. Brooks. About a Month.

Mr. Strange. Was there any Observation made upon his being taken up?

Mr. Brooks. I observed it the more, having often seen them together.

Thomas Janeway called and sworn.

Mr. Kinnersley. I admit, my Lord, that we have been together at several Coffee-houses.

Lord Chief Baron. Well, now the Man is sworn, we will go on with him.

Mr. Strange. Do you know Mr. Kinnersley and Mr. Hales?

Mr. Janeway. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Do you keep a Coffee-house?---Mr. Janeway. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Where?----Mr. Janeway. In Cornhill, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Do you remember that they have frequented your House together, and in what Manner?

Mr. Janeway. I believe they may have been there together several Times.

Mr. Strange. What Company had they with them?

Mr. Janeway. I take no Notice what Company is there. I observed them not.

Mr. Strange. How often have you observed them retire up Stairs together?

Mr. Janeway. I take no Notice of such Things. They might for an hundred Times, for aught I know.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, we shall rest the Evidence here. We submit it to your Lordship and the Jury, when such a Note is drawn by such a Man upon such a Paper, by which he promiseth to pay such a Sum to a Person with whom he had no Dealings, to what End can it be. Can it be with any other Intention than to charge an innocent Man with it? I think it is a plain Case. It is certain that Mr. Hales carried this Note, and borrowed a Sum of Money upon it; and Mr. Kinnersley made Preparation for it by making a Note for so much Money payable to Mr. Edwards. Doth a Man so easily give Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds to a Stranger with whom he hath had no Dealings? To what Purpose could it then be thus drawn? Why, to be indorsed. And this Mr. Kinnersley did, and he owned that the Name was there, and he knew that Mr. Edwards was a rich Man. Well, if Mr. Edwards was a rich Man, and the other not worth a Groat, as he owned himself to be an undone Man, to what Purpose then can it be? Well, I think it clearly appears that this was a Contrivance between them two. If you think not this plain, I think that it is impossible to convict any Man on a stronger Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lord, I am Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Hales. And I think it doth appear that there was a Transaction beween Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnersley; and that this Money was due from Mr. Kinnersley to him. And we apprehend, notwithstanding what hath been offered, that the Confession of Mr. Kinnersley, is a proper Justification of Mr. Hales. It is not, my Lord, Mr. Kinnersley's being a Defendant that shall deprive Mr. Hales of the Benefit of this Confession. It appearing that he was indebted to Mr. Hales, this Note was given in Satisfaction: We apprehend that it was given upon this Account to Mr. Hales. In Confirmation of what Mr. Hales saith, we can produce a Person to shew that there was an Account between them, and Mr. Kinnersley acknowledged such a Balance, in Satisfaction of which this Note was given. And we think that it could not be drawn as a Note of Mr. Kinnersley's payable to Mr. Hales, not only because the Account would be as good against Mr. Kinnersley as such a Note of his Hand, but also because of Mr. Hales's own Circumstances. Mr. Hales applied to a Gentleman that recommended him to Mr. Bird to borrow Money upon this Note. And, Gentlemen, it was this Note thus drawn that recommended him. Mr. Hales had the Misfortune to be concerned with Sir Stephen Evance; he could not therefore appear himself; and, therefore, by the Assistance of this Note, borrowed the Money. When Difficulties came upon it, he went and paid Part of the Money, and I believe would have taken care to have paid the whole: It doth not appear that this hath affected Mr. Edwards. His name indeed hath been exposed as a Man would not be willing that it should; Money hath been raised upon the Credit of his Name; but he hath not been affected thereby. This therefore lieth on the unhappy Circumstances of Mr. Hales. We will call one Witness, and then this Confession of Mr. Kinnersley we hope will avail.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, I apprehend that there is a Circumstance that lessens the Weight of, if it not wholly sets aside what they go upon. What they have gone on was, that Mr. Edwards's Franks were used to this ill Purpose. Maddox, a Servant of Mr. Edwards, is produced, who tells us of a Parcel of Franks that were delivered in July last. Mr. Bird gave an Account that this Note was brought to him in March: So that it was brought him before these Franks were delivered. And though it may be apprehended that there were other Franks, we think that there ought to be a Proof of some Franks that were delivered before.

Mr. Strange. There have been, Mr. Lacy, (as hath been deposed) for several Years. Those that were brought in July last, are those that never were franked, but were only Covers left for that Purpose.

Mr. Robert Burkit called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Do you know, Sir, of any Account stated between Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnersley?

Mr. Robert Burkit. No, Sir, none at all.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. No! What doth the Man mean?

Mr. Strange. What, none in Newgate, nor no where else? Do you know of none?——Mr. Robert Burkit. No, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Do you know of any Money that was at any Time due from Mr. Hales to Mr. Kinnersley?

Mr. Robert Burkit. No, Sir, none at all.

Lord Chief Baron. Have you any other Witness?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. My Lords, there are two Witnesses to this Account stated.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel for Mr. Kinnersley. I apprehend that he is innocent. I readily agree with Mr. Attorney, that the Affair of Notes, established by Act of Parliament, is of great Moment, and their Security necessary to Commerce; and that the Forgery of such Notes and Indorsements thereupon is very pernicious to the Publick: I therefore apprehend that there ought to be strong Evidence for the convicting of such a Crime. I humbly submit it, that before a Man be convicted of so infamous an Affair, there ought to be strong Evidence; and the rather because he is a Clergyman of the Church of England, and his Capacity of Service depends upon his Credit: And it doth appear that he hath behaved himself with all possible Caution. You see that the Contrivance that the Officer sent to apprehend him made use of, was a Pretence of a Marriage. You see, Gentlemen, and I am glad to see it, and wish that all others used the same Caution, that upon his Inquiry what Age the young Woman was of, understanding that she was not of Age, and her Parents not being there, notwithstanding that he was told that her Brother was there with her, yet he absolutely refused and said, that he would not be concerned for an hundred Pounds without the Parents Consent: That is such a Point in his Favour, that I think that it is a stronger Circumstance for him, than the other Circumſtances are againſt him. As to the Offence that is charged upon him, it is, I ſuppoſe, that he ſhould give out a Note made in his Name payable to Mr. Edwards, and indorſe ſuch a Note in Mr. Edwards's Name, in order to charge Mr. Edwards with the Payment of the Money. They lay a great Streſs upon this, and ſay, that Mr. Kinnerſley was wholly unacquainted with Mr. Edwards. One of the Witneſſes ſaith, that Mr. Kinnerſley himſelf owned that he had never ſeen Mr. Edwards before in his Life. How therefore (ſay they) is it likely, that there ſhould be any fair Reaſon for a Man to make ſuch a Note payable to one that he had no Dealing nor Acquaintance with, nor had ſo much as ever ſeen before in his Life? I ſubmit it to you, whether in the Courſe of Buſineſs it is a material Thing whom a Note is made payable to. If a Man owe a Sum of Money, and give a Note for it, it is natural to enquire to whom it ſhould be made payable. It was the more natural in this Caſe, as Mr. Hales, having the Misfortune to have a Commiſſion of Bankruptcy ſtanding out againſt him, could not negotiate Notes in his own Name, but muſt act in ſome Friend or Neighbour's Name. And it is no great Wonder that Mr. Kinnerſley, whoſe Character directed his Studies another Way, and who was not acquainted much with theſe Affairs, ſhould be impoſed upon to give ſuch a Note; and the leſs ſo for this plain Reaſon: Sir Stephen Evance and Mr. Hales formerly lived in Mr. Kinnerſley's Pariſh; received him with a great deal of Civility: It can be no Wonder therefore that he afterwards continued an Acquaintance with him. Notwithſtanding his Misfortunes, it is plain that Mr. Hales was ſtill acquainted with ſeveral very worthy Gentlemen: Mr. Gibſon and Mr. Edwards both furniſhed him with Franks; Sir Biby Lake recommended him to Mr. Bird, to borrow of him a conſiderable Sum of Money. If ſuch Gentlemen as theſe thus correſponded with him after his Misfortunes, no Wonder that Mr. Kinnerſley, who had been the Miniſter of the Pariſh where Mr. Hales had lived, ſhould keep up an Acquaintance with him; and ſo no Wonder that he ſhould be ſo impoſed on. In fact, we ſhall ſhew you that he was indebted for ſuch a Sum to Mr. Hales. It is impoſſible to give a particular Account of the whole Affair; Mr. Hales being alſo a Defendant, and therefore no Evidence: But that he was indebted in ſome ſuch Sums is plain. Gentlemen, it is very innocent if a Man give a Note where there is no Conſideration. It is no Injury to the Publick. The Perſon that gives the Note may injure himſelf, but not the Publick. There is no Act of Parliament againſt the giving of ſuch Notes. Well, if the giving of the Note be not culpable, conſider how the Fact of the Indorſement comes about. And if you conſider how that comes about, no doubt but that he muſt be cleared of the Fact. How muſt this be done to affect Mr. Kinnerſley? It muſt be on the Back of the Note when he wrote the Note, and he muſt know it to be there. Now, with great Submiſſion, have they given any Proof, or Colour of Proof, that it was then there, or, that if it was, he knew it to be there? They have given you the Proof of Mr. Bird and the Conſtable, who was preſent when he was examined. According to the firſt of theſe, it is plain that he knew not. He ſaid that he knew that the Name was there, but knew not how it came there. This, I think, inſtead of a Confeſſion, is an avoiding of it, by ſaying, that he knew nothing at all how it came there: But conſider the Nature of the Thing, how it is ſuppoſed to be done from a Frank of Mr. Edwards's. Mr. Edwards had never franked a Letter for him, but many for Mr. Hales. Is it not moſt natural to ſuppoſe then that Hales was concerned? How doth it follow, that this being done from a Frank, the Name muſt be there before the Note was wrote? A Man that is capable of drawing ſuch a Note for ſuch an End, might he not give it to be franked? Is it not eaſy to conceive, that if I give ſuch a Note on a Quarter of a Sheet of Paper doubled up to a Perſon to be franked, that he ſhall do this ſo as to make the Name ſtand for an Indorſement? I would make this further Obſervation, it hath been counted doubtful, whether the making uſe of a Man's Name to a different Purpoſe from what he deſigned it for, ſhall be counted a Forgery. I think that the Doubt ariſeth upon a Diſtinction of my Lord Cowper, on the Statute of 8 Eliz. between forging and making a Falſe Deed. I do not pretend to ſay but that the Opinion of the King's-Bench was right. It was in the Affair of Ward and Bridge.

Lord Chief Baron. No, Bridge and Dutton: There was an Alteration. The Queſtion was, Whether it could be accounted a Forgery within the Act of Parliament? The Words of the Deſcription in the Act of Parliament are, "If any one forge or eraſe, &c." whether he could be charged with forging of that Note? I was one of the Counſel. It appeared their Opinion, that he forged it as much as if he had wrote the whole Note.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, I agree it to be as your Lordſhip puts it. I only mention it as a Doubt not ſettled by the printed Books. My Lord, a Man may alter a Deed, e.g. a Perſon oweth me Money on Bond; if I alter the Bond to mine own Damage, that is no Forgery; but when he doth it to the Injury of the Perſon to whom the Money is owing, then it is Forgery: The Forgery therefore lieth in the Deſign of defrauding another. Now, whoſe Good is it that this Note was drawn for? It appears that my Client had no Benefit at all by it. The Money was all received by Mr. Hales, and the whole Tranſaction about paying the Money was by Mr. Hales: He was therefore to receive the Benefit, moſt likely therefore that the Forgery was his. And as to this Promiſſory Note, what was the Effect of it? No one will pretend to ſay, but that if Mr. Edwards was to bring an Action he might recover his Money of Mr. Kinnerſley: He hath, therefore, only wrote a Note, which, without Controverſy, hath ſubjected him to the Payment of ſuch a Sum of Money. Mr. Hales hath received the Money, and gained by this Note. We ſubmit it therefore to your Lordſhip.

Mr. Mather. My Lord, with relation to the Tranſactions between Mr. Kinnerſley and Mr. Hales, we ſhall call Evidence to ſhew the Reaſons of thoſe private Meetings that were between them.

(Mr. Peter Marſh called and ſworn.)

Mr. Mather. Sir, do you know the Defendants, Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Peter Marſh, I have, Sir, known Mr. Hales many Years.

Mr. Mather. But have you known Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Peter Marſh. Not ſo many Years.

Lord Chief Baron. What is your Buſineſs or Employment?

Mr. Peter Marſh. I am an Attorney, my Lord.

Mr. Mather. Do you know of any Tranſactions between Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Peter Marſh. About ten or eleven Years ago, Mr. Hales brought me a Bond of fifty Pounds, payable by Mr. Kinnerſley to me. Mr. Kinnerſley owed him the Money, and had given him a Bond payable to me. He deſired me to get it.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. This is not Evidence. What ſignifieth it what the Defendant told him?

Mr. Mather. What was done upon that? What came of the Bond?

Mr. Peter Marſh. I delivered it to Mr. Hales again.

Mr. Mather. Did Mr. Hales owe you any Money?

Mr. Peter Marſh. No, Sir, none at all.

(Mr. Cropley called and ſworn.)

Mr. Lacy. Mr. Cropley, What do you know of any Money-matters between Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Cropley. I received about ſixty Pounds at Janeway's Coffee-houſe, a Debt which was due to me from Mr. Kinnerſley: They were there together; Mr. Kinnerſley was the Debtor, Mr. Hales had given me a Note for it. Mr. Kinnerſley had prevailed on me to lend him an hundred and odd Pounds upon but a ſlight Acquaintance: He brought another Gentleman to be Security with him for the paying it me; ſo I forbore him for ſix Months. I then enquired of him after it: When he had led me a Dance from Coffee-houſe to Coffee-houſe for ſome Months, I was forced at laſt to ſue for it. He deſired me to ſue the other Party, and forbear him: I recovered Half from the one, then I came upon him for the other. When I came to ſerve him with a Notice of a Writ of Enquiry, he met me with Mr. Hales at ſome Tavern in Holborn, about June or July laſt was a Twelvemonth. Then Mr. Hales ſaid to me, I am to receive about ſix or ſeven hundred Pounds within about three Months Time; and then I ſhall be ready to pay that Money: Upon that I ſtopt my Procedure upon the Writ of Enquiry; and, as Mr. Hales requeſted me, I took Mr. Hales's and Mr. Kinnerſley's Note for the Payment of it within three Months. When that Time was expired, or within about four Months, I got it. What was his Part to pay I received at Janeway's Coffee-houſe: They were together; which paid me I cannot ſay. The Money was in half and quarter broad Pieces; I refuſed to take it in thoſe Pieces, being to tranſact it in the Alley. Upon that he took me to a Banker's about Temple-Bar, and there changed it.

Lord Chief Baron. When was this?

Mr. Cropley. It was in February. Mr. Kinnersley gave me a little Note at the ſame Time for the Damages that I had ſuſtained in ſeeking it; about fifty Shillings, or thereabouts.

Mr. Strange. Hath there been any Application made, Sir, to you to appear as a Witneſs?

Mr. Cropley. Yes, Sir, Mrs. Kinnersley ſent to deſire me; and Mr. Kinnersley alſo ſent me a Letter, and beſides that ſent me a Subpœna.

Mr. Strange. Can you produce that Letter?

Mr. Cropley. I have it not here, Sir.

Mr. Strange. You cannot ſay which paid you the Money, Sir?

Mr. Cropley. No, Sir, but they were both together.

Mr. Kinnersley. Sir, one Word I beg. Did not Mr. Hales give you a Note for it?

Mr. Cropley. Yes, Sir, you and Mr. Hales joined in it.

Mr. Peter Beart was called, but did not appear.

(Mr. John Wells called and ſworn.)

Mr. Lacy. What do you know, Sir, of any Money due from Mr. Kinnersley to Mr. Hales?

Mr. John Wells. No, Sir, I know not of any.

Mr. Lacy. Or of any Money lent, particularly an hundred Pound? Was Mr. Kinnersley indebted to you?

Mr. John Wells. Yes, Sir, an hundred Pound.

Mr. Lacy. Who lent him the Money to pay you?

Mr. John Wells. Mr. Hales, as Mr. Kinnersley told me.

Mr. Lacy. Who paid you the Money?

Mr. John Wells. Mr. Kinnersley.

Mr. Lacy. Was Mr. Hales preſent?

Mr. John Wells. I do not know, Sir. It was paid to my Attorney.

(Mr. John Simpſon (Banker) called and ſworn.)

Mr. Lacy. Sir, what do you know of Money due from Mr. Kinnersley to Mr. Hales?

Mr. Simpſon. I know not Mr. Hales, Sir. I never ſaw him out of Court.

Mr. Lacy. Was Mr. Kinnersley indebted to you?

Mr. Simpſon. Some Months ago he borrowed of me thirty Pounds on ſome Lottery Tickets.

Mr. Lacy. Who paid it you off?

Mr. Simpſon. I was not at the Shop when the Money was paid.

Mr. Lacy. But do you not know how it was diſcharged, whether by Money or Notes, and by whom?

Mr. Simpſon. No, Sir, I cannot ſay. It doth not appear by our Books.

Mr. Lacy. Do you know or not that Mr. Hales paid it, or gave a Note for it?——Mr. Simpſon. I do not know, Sir.

Mr. Lacy. Doth any Note by your Books appear given for it, or by whom paid?

Mr. Simpſon. No, Sir; if it had been paid by any other Hand than Mr. Kinnersley's, I believe that it would have appeared by our Books.

(Mr. Fowler (Banker) called and ſworn.)

Mr. Kinnersley. Sir, I beg you to ſay whether you remember that I gave you a Note from ſome Friend of Mr. Hales's?

Mr. Fowler. You never mentioned his Name. I lent you Money upon Lottery Tickets; but know nothing of that you mention.

Mr. Kinnersley. Did not Mr. Hales come to your Shop, take up the Note, and pay it?

Mr. Fowler. No, Sir, not that I know of. I never ſaw him there.

(Mr. John Hall called and ſworn.)

Mr. Lacy. Did you ever, Sir, give a Note upon Mr. Hales's Account and for his Money?

Mr. Hall. Not that I know of.

Mr. Lacy. Did you at his Deſire pay any Money?

Mr. Hall. No, Sir.

Mr. Lacy. Do you know any Perſon that did?—Mr. Hall. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Do you know Mr. William Hales? Will you give us an Account of his paying you a Bill in broad Pieces, and whether he asked you to write his Name Wells. He can tell very well I know what this means. Did you give any Note, or set your Name?

aſked

Mr. Hall. I set my Name.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Do you know your Name again?---Mr. Hall. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Is that your Name?---Mr. Hall. Yes, Sir, it is.

Mr. Serj. Whit. When did they get it of you?

Mr. Hall. On August 17 last.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. I see not how my Brother makes this Evidence against Mr. Hales. He is not brought for him but for Mr. Kinnersley; and they would cross-examine him as to Mr. Hales.

Mr. Serj. Whit. I agree with you that we could not have called him: But my Brother Eyre called him to shew that there was a promissory Note, he denies it. Well, I submit it.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, we have gone through the Evidence opened: But I would mention this as to the Examination before Sir Richard Hopkins. It is suggested that Mr. Kinnersley would have confessed, but that he was interrupted by Mr. Mitford. It is plain that he had spoke to all that was material both as to the Note and the Indorsement: I think that it is therefore wrong for them to say that he would have confessed more, but that he was interrupted. But we will call a Gentleman to shew in what a candid Manner he behaved, and that he was not interrupted in the Manner that hath been suggested.

(Rev. Mr. John Hayes called and sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Was you present, Sir, at Sir Richard Hopkins's, when Mr. Kinnersley was examined?---Mr. Hayes. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. What did you observe about his being stopped, or did he fully speak his Mind?

Mr. Hayes. I remember, Sir, that Mr. Mitford desired him to be cautious, and not too free in making his Reply.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. I only ask you, whether he had not then spoke both as to the Note and the Indorsement?

Mr. Hayes. He said that the Note was his. He said that as to the Indorsement, he had heard that it was indorsed by Mr. Edwards, but knew not how it came.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Do you apprehend that his being cautioned was to be careful in his Answer, or that referred to the Answers that he had already made?

Mr. Hayes. I apprehended that the Caution was to be careful in his Answers.

(Mr. Grants called and sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Was you present at the Examination of Mr. Kinnersley before Sir Richard Hopkins?

Mr. Grants. Yes, Sir, Mr. Kinnersley sent for me when he was first taken up. I suppose it was because I married a Relation of his; for I knew nothing of any Transactions between him and Mr. Hales.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. I ask you, whether he fully spoke his Mind about the Note and the Indorsement, or whether he was interrupted therein?

Mr. Grants. Sir Richard asked him, whether he knew the Note and the Indorsement? There then passed a Sort of a Squabble between him and Mr. Mitford.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Did you observe that any Gentleman interrupted Mr. Kinnersley, or cautioned him as to his Answers?

Mr. Grants. There was an Interruption: But what it was I could not particularly hear.

Lord Chief-Baron. Have you done?---Mr. Serj. Eyre. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, I observe that the Defence that they have made is for one to throw it upon another. Mr. Kinnersley thinks that Mr. Hales is as deep as he can be, and therefore may bear the Load: But then, my Lord, Mr. Hales wants to retort it upon Mr. Kinnersley; but the Drift of both is, that Mr. Kinnersley may get out as he can. You will observe the Defence: There is a Pretence of mutual Dealings, and that this Note was given in Discharge of the Balance of the Account. I submit whether there hath been any Evidence of any Dealings to any such Sum: If not, to what Purpose was it given? If it was to raise Money, was it for a fraudulent Purpose, or not? If it was, they are both equally guilty. But the Pretence now is this, Mr. Hales was a Bankrupt; and it was therefore proper for them to have a third Person, in whose Name to transact. Now how could that be proper, if it was a Person over whom they had no Power? Would any one be willing to take Notes in the Name of a Stranger? Is a Stranger to be trusted with such a Sum? No. If not, how then? Here is one Man to write such a Note for another in Mr. Edwards's Name, to what Purpose? Why, in order to charge Mr. Edwards with the Money: Else, what signifieth the Indorsement. The Question then is, Was Mr. Edwards's Hand there? And did Mr. Kinnersley know it? They that would have it that Mr. Kinnersley was very innocent, say, that he knew nothing at all that Mr. Edwards's Hand was there. Well, when he comes to be called upon and importuned for the Money by Mr. Bird, what doth he say? Why, Mr. Edwards is a rich Man; I am an undone Man: You must therefore resort unto him. This was said not only upon the Sight of the Note, but before it was shewed to him. He then told Mr. Bird that he knew that he had such a Note of his so indorsed. Gentlemen, Things of this Nature are only to be detected by Circumstances. They will not call Persons to be Witnesses to these Transactions. If this was a fair Dealing, it was proper to have called some one honest Man to give an Account that he was present thereat, and privy to this Transaction: But instead of that, which is the wickedest I cannot tell; but it is plain that here is a Contrivance to charge an innocent Person; and such little Things as Evidences of Transactions of a Note of fifty or thirty Pounds, or the like, are not to go against it. Circumstances will not make a plainer Proof than here is of Forgery. A Note drawn on such a little Paper, in so slovenly a Manner, detects itself. Here is a plain Forgery. The Question is, who is guilty of it; and whether there is not sufficient Proof that the Defendants are the Persons guilty of it?

Mr. Strange. My Lord, I beg it may be considered, whether it is not criminal to give such a Note. At several Times he declared before he saw the Note, that the Name of Mr. Edwards was on the Back of it. If the Jury are of my Mind, as to one Fact, it is a Demonstration that the Name was upon it when the Note was given. If the Jury will look upon the Note, it will appear that something was written upon the Note, and nothing more probable than free. Can any imagine, that Mr. Edwards, whose name is there, would ever write a Frank upon a Note? If therefore, the Jury is of my Opinion in this Observation, that there was at first free Samuel Edwards, it is impossible to imagine but that it was wrote there before the Note was drawn. My Lord, that the Jury will take on their View. My Lord, there have been several Things said as to whose Benefit this should be for, that it is plain that Mr. Kinnersley received no Benefit by it, that therefore it could not probably be his Forgery. My Lord, it is plain by the Account that we have given you of their Correspondence, that there was something carrying on between them, which must be of a very private Nature. Doth it not appear for whose Benefit it was? I am (said he) an undone Man; you cannot expect it of me, but must apply to Mr. Edwards who indorsed it: And therefore, though he made himself liable, that signified not, as he was at the same Time liable to many more Actions. It appears that they were obliged to give the Note in the Name of another Person who was responsible, having no Credit of their own. As to that Objection, for whose Benefit, we apprehend it of no Consequence; they might probably share it between them. There was another Thing endeavoured to be proved, viz. such a Debt due from Mr. Kinnersley to Mr. Hales. Since they thought it necessary to attempt a Proof of that Kind, if they have failed in that Proof, I apprehend that their Opinion was that they stood in Need of a Proof of that Kind, which hath failed them. What have they gained? Notwithstanding a Note given of twelve hundred and sixty Pounds (a very great Sum to be due from a Clergyman in his Circumstances), they have pretended to prove nothing but one Bond of fifty Pound, which hath not been proved, but only Mr. Hales came to Mr. Marsh and told him this, which I apprehend to be no Evidence: Had they brought the Bond, it would have appeared whether true or not: This is no Proof that Mr. Kinnersley was indebted to Mr. Hales. What Mr. Cropley saith, amounteth to no more than about fifty-nine or sixty Pounds. I must submit it, whether they have given a reasonable Account of this Affair. My Lord, it is an Happiness that there are such general Circumstances as tend to detect them.

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, I desire to speak.

Lord Chief-Baron. You were called on before. You should advise with your Counsel whether it be proper: I would only acquaint you that it is not regular. If you would be heard, or call any Witness, if you have any Thing material for your Defence, it shall be heard: But if you produce any Thing new, the Counsel for the King must have Liberty to answer; or if you bring any Witness, they must have Liberty to cross-examine, or to bring any other Evidence on their Side.

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, I shall call no other Evidence. I shall leave it to your Justice; and this Gentleman I believe will acquiesce. Mr. Hales lent me fifty Pounds; he took it in that Gentleman's Name that was called for a Witness: Next, Mr. Took had one hundred and fifty Pound Note: Another Gentleman (Mr. Burton) hath Notes of one hundred Pound, which Mr. Hales gave him to discharge a Debt.

Lord Chief-Baron. Mr. Kinnersley. You intimated that you should bring nothing new.

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, at a Publick Coffee-House he desired me to lay down twenty-five Pounds, and the Policies are now in Court which were actually insured for so much Money. And as to this Note, I call God to Witness, that this Note I gave him upon no other Account but on settling the Account in Exchange for other Notes which amounted to that Sum. He directed me how to do it; took the Paper out of his Book, and held it double, whence I now apprehend that Mr. Edwards's Name was then on the Back. I never was privy to his altering any Letters: I gave him that Note for want of Money, for a Debt which is still due, and call upon him to declare what is true.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, whatever Mr. Kinnersley hath avowed is without Witness.

Lord Chief-Baron. When Persons are prosecuted capitally, the Law alloweth him not Counsel as to Fact: Therefore, what a Person alledges himself must be taken Notice of. Upon a Charge of Misdemeanour you make your Defence by Counsel, and they state the Case. It doth not avail in Proof what a Person saith himself, and what they say avails not, except supported by Proof. What you say will have no Weight as proved, except proved.

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, are Policies no Proof? Here is a Certificate from the proper Officer. Sir, I insist upon it that you do me Justice in this Matter. I will be content to suffer Death if this be not so.

Lord Chief-Baron. You are not to be now regarded.

Lord Chief-Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment against Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk, and William Hales, late of London, Goldsmith, for forging and publishing an Indorsement on a promissory Note, for the Payment of Twelve Hundred and Fifty Pounds to Samuel Edwards, Esq. And the Indictment sets forth, That the Defendants, having in their Custody a promissory Note subscribed by Thomas Kinnersley, and bearing Date August 16, 1727, whereby Kinnersley promised to pay Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds to Samuel Edwards, Esq. within three Months; that the Defendants, having this Note in their Custody with an Intention to deceive and defraud the same Samuel Edwards, Esq. and being Persons of evil Fame and Reputation, did falsly and fraudulently forge and counterfeit on this Note for Twelve Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable within three Months after Date to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or his Order, an Indorsement to this Effect,

Pray pay to the Order of for the Value received, thereby intending to charge Mr. Edwards as the Indorser of that Note with the Payment of the Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds contained in the Body of the said Note; that after they had forged and counterfeited this Indorsement upon this Note, and knowing it to be a Counterfeit, they did publish the said Note so indorsed. Gentlemen, the Counsel on the Behalf of the Prosecution have acquainted you that they look upon this as a Contrivance of both Defendants to carry on this Forgery upon what they suppose at first merely a Frank; that the Name of Mr. Edwards upon the Cover of a Letter with the Word ffree; that the Word ffree hath been at the Time of the Indorsement altered and made for the, and the Word Value received added to that, and made the Indorsement to this Note. For the corroborating of this they have called called ſeveral Witneſſes. Firſt, Thomas Maddox was called a Servant to Mr. Edwards. He tells you that Mr. Edwards lives in Duke-ſtreet, Weſtminſter, and that the Defendant Hales lived near over-againſt him; that the Defendant Hales frequently ſent Covers over, upon which he had ſeveral Franks directed to ſeveral Perſons; that this hath been the Cuſtom for ſeveral Years; that Mr. Edwards uſed to ſend them over indorſed with his Name Samuel Edwards, ffree. He ſaith, that his uſual Way was to indorſe the whole Superſcription; but that laſt Summer, ſome Time about July, there were ſix Covers ſent over by the Defendant to Mr. Edwards's Houſe by the Defendant Hales, deſiring that they might be franked with only Samuel Edwards ffree, without writing the whole Superſcription; that Mr. Edwards declined that, ſaying that he never did it: He therefore refuſed him, and thoſe Covers were not indorſed, but were produced here. He hath been aſked, Whether he knew of any Correſpondence beſides this of franking Letters between Mr. Edwards and Mr. Hales; and whether he knew of any between Mr. Edwards and Mr. Kinnerſley? He anſwered, That he doth not know of any whatſoever. Another Servant, one Anne Clarke, comes and produceth a Paper of Names that was brought over from the Defendant Hales to Mr. Samuel Edwards's Houſe, in order for him to frank Letters to thoſe Perſons, and write the whole Superſcription as at other Times. She produced the Paper in Court, which ſhe ſaid that ſhe received from Mr. Hales's Servant. And Mr. Booth being examined thereto declares it to be the proper Hand of the Defendant Hales, with whoſe Writing he hath been well acquainted, eſpecially ſince his Bankruptcy, he being a Clerk in that Commiſſion. In this Paper is wrote,
SAMUEL EDWARDS.

Two to John Pratt, Eſq; Briſtol.
Two to Mr. Levett, Huntington.
Two to Stephen Mitford, Eſq; Exeter.

They make uſe of this Evidence to ſhew that there was a Sort of an Attempt to get Covers with theſe Names franked, hoping or ſuppoſing that there might be a Space left ſufficient to write a Note of this Nature. Mr. Booth who was called to prove the Hand-writing of Mr. Hales, was croſs-examined by the Counſel for the Defendant, whether he knew of any Traffick of Mr. Hales ſince his Bankruptcy. He ſaith, That he doth not know of any, but that he was well acquainted with his Hand-writing, being employed in the Affair of the Commiſſion of Bankruptcy. Mr. Thomas Bird was next called and examined as to the Circumſtances of the Publication of this Note. He tells you that this Note, dated Aug. 16, 1727, for the forged Indorſement whereof both the Defendants are proſecuted, was brought to him, in order to take up Money upon this Note, and further Security, which Mr. Hales gave in March laſt; that it was brought in the Manner that it now is, and no Alteration made either in the Body of the Note or in the Indorſement, but it ſtands and remains in the ſame Manner as when he firſt received it; that when Mr. Hales came to him, he propoſed to borrow of him ſeven hundred and fifty Pounds upon the Credit of this Note for his Security, and likewiſe upon his own Note for the Payment of this Money; that he had been requeſted by a Friend of his in the Morning before to accommodate Mr. Hales with this Money upon the Credit of a Note which the Perſon had in his Hand, and which was the ſame Note; and that on the Afternoon of the ſame Day [March 20], while he was at the Hudſon's-Bay Houſe, in Fenchurch-Street, Mr. Hales came to him with the Note, and he then lent him the Money for fourteen Days; that he then deſired Mr. Hales to write ſome Paper to teſtify the Reciept of the Money, and be a further Security to him; and that the ſaid Mr. Hales thereupon wrote a promiſſory Note dated the ſame Day, wherein he promiſed the Re-payment of this Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds in fourteen Days, which Note was ſubſcribed by the Defendant Hales himſelf; that the Sum of Money was made up in ſeveral Bank Notes; that he delivered theſe to the ſaid Defendant Hales, and took this Note and Mr. Hales's own Note, as a Security for the ſaid Money; that April 3 following Mr. Hales brought four hundred Pounds, which he indorſed upon his own Note; and that the reſt of the Money remains due. He tells you, that when he heard that the Defendant Hales was apprehended in September laſt, he ſent to one Tomkins, an Attorney, delivered this Note to him to go to Mr. Kinnerſley, to get this Money for him. The Account that he received was, that Mr. Kinnerſley was out of Town, ſo that he could not meet with him. At length Mr. Tomkins intimated that Mr. Kinnerſley cared not to ſee him, but would come the next Day to Mr. Bird himſelf upon this Affair. Accordingly on or about the 16th of September, the Defendant, Kinnerſley, came to Mr. Bird at his Compting-houſe: Mr. Bird, not knowing who he was, ſeeing a Clergyman come in his Gown, and looking a little at him, he ſaid his Name was Kinnerſley. He hereupon ſaid that he had a Note of his Hand left with him for a Security; to which he replied, I know, Sir, that you have, and it is for Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, payable in three Months to Mr. Edwards or his Order; that he ſaid that the Note was of his own Hand-writing; but immediately added, How it came to be indorſed by Mr. Edwards I know not. This, Gentlemen, you muſt take particular Notice of, becauſe this was the firſt Mention of Mr. Edwards's Indorſement: At that Time Mr. Bird had not mentioned that, nor ſhewed him the Note; when Mr. Kinnerſley having owned the Note to be his Hand-writing, immediately added, but how it came to be indorſed by Mr. Edwards I know not; naming thus the particular Perſon who was the Indorſer of this Note. He ſaith, that Mr. Kinnerſley was in a great Conſternation at that Time, and ſaid that he was an undone Man, among other Expreſſions. And he ſaid likewiſe, that Mr. Edwards was a Gentleman of Subſtance; and this he declared, tho' Mr. Bird had not ſhewn him the Note at that Time: I am (ſaid he) an undone Man; Mr. Edwards is a Man of Subſtance. This he ſaid before that the Note was ſhewn to him, or any Declaration was made by Mr. Bird relating to Mr. Edwards's being the Indorſer of this Note. He ſaid further that he was not in a Capacity to pay this Money; and that they muſt apply to Mr. Edwards, who was a ſubſtantial Man, for it. Gentlemen, this was made uſe of as a Sort of Defence at this Time to avoid this Thing, to put it off from himſelf by this Argument, why Bird ſhould not come upon Kinnersley himſelf, who was uncapable of paying him, but take his Remedy againſt Mr. Edwards, who was a ſubſtantial Man. He was croſs-examined: The Counſel for the Defendant aſked who was the Perſon that recommended Mr. Hales to him as the Borrower of this Money? It was anſwered, That it was Sir Biby Lake. He was aſked on whoſe Credit he lent the Money, Mr. Hales's or Mr. Edwards's? It was anſwered both, as it muſt be in ſuch a Caſe. Gentlemen, upon this the Note was read; for it being received directly from the Hands of the Defendant Hales, that was ſufficient Cauſe to read the Note, and lay it before you. Accordingly it appears to bear Date Aug. 16, 1727, and is a promiſſory Note, running thus:

I promiſe to pay to Samuel Edwards, Eſq; or his Order, within three Months after Date, the Sum of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, for Value received, £. 1260. Thomas Kinnerſley.

Then comes the Indorſement: And there, there is wrote on the Top, 'Pray pay to the Order of,' then there is a large Blank, then comes 'for Value received', and then there is the Subſcription 'Samuel Edwards.' Gentlemen, upon this it is proper to take notice of the Obſervations made by the Counſel for the Proſecution on the Manner of the writing of this Indorſement. They obſerve that this muſt be a Subſcription by Mr. Edwards of his Name for a Frank for the paſſing of a Letter free: It appears very probable from the Manner of his writing a Frank. Free and not Frank is the Word that he makes uſe of: And upon what appears by what remains in this Note, they ſay, that by the Top it appears that it muſt be cut off from ſome other Note, and that there is an Indenture where they ſuppoſe that ſome other Letters were; that there is the Appearance of ſomething not a Blot, but the Appearance of the Remainder of a Letter or Figure on this Place, and ſome Appearance of a little Daſh from it. But they ſay that for the is ſubſtituted for the Word free; that it appears by the Thickneſs of the Letters, by the Ink, and by the Manner wherein the Letters are put there, and by the Form of the ff which Mr. Edwards makes in the Word ffree; and that there is ſtill the Appearance of the Remainder of one or both the ee's. Upon this, Gentlemen, you will conſider whether the o and the r have not the Appearance of ſome other Letters under them, and between the f and the r. It is plain upon Sight whether the other Letters ſeem wrote of the ſame Strength and Thickneſs with the f and r. The ff ſeems paler and thinner, and of a different Ink from the other Letters. And then, Gentlemen, the Word the is here written at Length. You will conſider whether this ſeems not to have been from a Neceſſity to put ſome other Word to fill the whole Compaſs of the Word free. Now the ſeems not wrote at the ſame Time, and with the ſame Ink with Value received. If this had been wrote all at the ſame Time, it is pretty extraordinary that it ſhould not have been wrote even. The f is wrote in a ſtraight Line even with Value received, but the o ſinks a little, and the r comes under. You will conſider, Gentlemen, whether there was ſufficient Room, and whether this was the Cauſe of putting it ſo. Theſe Conſiderations are made uſe of to make it probable that it was wrote at different Times: If ſo, it is moſt probable that it was at firſt ffree, and that the other Words were ſubſtituted afterwards. So that theſe are the Obſervations as to the Manner of writing it, which you are to conſider whether they are true, and there be a Foundation for them or not. Mr. Spicer then was called, who hath been a Clerk to Mr. Edwards in the Exchequer between ten and eleven Years, but hath been in his Service about twenty-four Years. The Note was ſhewn to him, and he tells you, that as to the Name, he takes it to be the proper Hand-writing of Mr. Samuel Edwards, his Maſter: The f he alſo counts to be his. Upon his Obſervation and Oath, which is Evidence to be left to you, the Word for is wrote over other Letters, and he believes, upon his Oath, that the firſt Word was ffree. He ſaith, that Mr. Edwards, when he maketh a Frank, makes uſe of a ff as in the Manner that it here ſtands. If it was made for Value received at firſt, it is pretty extraordinary that a ff ſhould be written, and not a ſingle f as uſual. Why (ſaith he) it is my Maſter's uſual Way of Writing ffree. And then he ſaith that he always wrote ffree and not frank; which is material, as the Word frank might not ſo well correſpond with this Alteration. He ſaith that the r ſeeems viſible, and to ſtand between the o and r. You will ſee whether there be the Remainder of any ſuch Letter or no; ſince he ſaith that he doth think that the r is viſible. He tells you, that as he is Clerk to Mr. Edwards, ſo he is acquainted with his private Affairs, relating to his Eſtate and the like, and that he doth not know of any Money Tranſactions between his Maſter and either of the Defendants; that he is ſo well acquainted with his Affairs, and the Nature of his Employment under Mr. Edwards ſuch, that he believes that if any ſuch Dealings had been, it would have come to his Cognizance. He tells you, likewiſe, that Mr. Edwards is not a Perſon that uſeth to deal this Way: It was very proper to aſk him this, becauſe it is common for many Perſons to indorſe Notes in this Manner. He ſaith that it is not his uſual Cuſtom: It cometh not into his public Buſineſs; and, as to his private Tranſactions, he never knew him to do it. They were then going to call a Witneſs to prove the Body of the Note to be Mr. Kinnersley's Hand-writing. Upon this, Mr. Kinnersley took upon him to admit that it was all his own Hand-writing. So then it is to be taken for confeſſed, that the Body of the Note was his writing. It is written in this Manner,

Auguſt 16, 1727.
I promiſe to pay to Samuel Edwards, Eſq; or his Order, three Months after Date, the Sum of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, for Value received,
£. 1260. Thomas Kinnerſley.

Well, Gentlemen, after this, the Counſel for the Proſecution ſay, that Mr. Kinnersley hath in effect confeſſed as much as amounts to what they ſtand in need of to convict him of this Forgery. Firſt, They call Mr. Wright, who was preſent at the Examination of Mr. Kinnersley before Sir Richard Hopkins. Mr. Wright tells you, that at that Time the Defendant Kinnersley owned that the Note was all his own Hand-writing; that Mr. Edwards thereupon aſked him why he drew the Note payable to him, when there never had been any Dealings between them. Mr. Wright ſaith, That the Defendant Kinnersley owned at that Time that there never had been any Dealings between them, and likewiſe that he did not know Mr. Edwards, nor had, to the beſt of his Knowledge ever, ſeen him till then before Sir Richard. But he ſaid, that the Reaſon of his doing it was this: That he was indebted to the other Defendant Hales in a Sum of ſuch an Amount and more; and that Hales deſired him, the Defendant Kinnersley, to write him a promiſſory Note for that Sum; that he aſked Mr. Hales whom he ſhould make the Note payable to, and Mr. Hales ſaid to Samuel Edwards, Eſq; and that accordingly he wrote the Note in that Manner that it now appears in to you upon the Request of Mr. Hales. Mr. Wright tells you, that at that Time he had heard what had past relating to the Discourse with Bird; and he told him, Why you have expressed yourself as if you was a ruined and undone Man; why did you say that, if Mr. Hales requested your writing, him a Note for such a Sum as Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds? Upon this, one Mitford said to Mr. Kinnersley, 'You shall not go on to declare yourself any further, you may do yourself an Injury.' This is made use of as a Circumstance by the King's Counsel, that Mr. Kinnersley was going to explain himself further if he had not been prevented by his Friend or Solicitor, who knew the Consequence of a Confession of this Nature. Mr. Wright tells you, that at this Time when Mr. Bird was examined, and said that he had not at that Time shewed the Note to Kinnersley, when he said, that how it came to be indorsed by Mr. Edwards he could not tell. Mr. Edwards hereupon asked him whether he knew of this Indorsement before Mr. Bird shewed him the Note? That he answered that he did, but that how it came there he could not tell. So that that is the Substance of his Confession in that Respect, that he did know of it, though he said he knew not how it came there. Sir Richard Hopkins likewise was called to give an Account of what passed before him: He saith, that he took Minutes of what passed; that it was in the latter end of September that he was brought before him charged with Forgery of two Notes, this of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, and another of Sixteen Hundred Pounds; that as to this Note, it seemed to him an altered Note, which was the Occasion of his more strict Examination of the Matter. He saith, that he examined Mr. Bird, who advanced this Money, who said that before he had shewn this Note to Mr. Kinnersley, when he had only told him that he had a Note of his Hand left with him for a Security, he answered, I know that you have: It is for Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, payable in three Months to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or his Order, and is indorsed by Samuel Edwards. Sir Richard hereupon asked Mr. Edwards if he had had any Dealings with Mr. Kinnersley? Who said that he had not. Kinnersley also said the same, but said that he drew this Note payable to Mr. Edwards at the Request of the other Defendant Hales, to whom he was indebted in that Sum, and more; but that he did not know Mr. Edwards, nor to the best of his Knowledge had ever seen him before that Time. He saith, that upon his observing that it was very strange that he should make such a Note payable to a Person with whom he owned that he had no Dealings, and who was an utter Stranger to him, Kinnersley was going further to open his Mind, but one Mitford stopt and prevented him from going on. Richard Davis, who is the Constable that apprehended him, was next called to give an Account of what passed when the Warrant was issued out, and given him to be executed. He tells you, that because Mr. Kinnersley lived out of the City, he went to a publick House within the Jurisdiction of the City, and sent a Porter to desire to speak with him; but received Answer that he was not in Town. He inquired when he would be in Town, and went himself, and made a Pretence of a Couple wanting to be married. At first came out the Daughter, and then the Mother, whom he acquainted with his Business: At first they seemed to say that he was not at Home, or did not readily say where he was; but after that he had given an Account of his Business, he was carried into the Parlour, and then Mr. Kinnersley came to him. He told him the Business of the Marriage: The Defendant thereupon asked him several Questions; and, among the rest, how old the Lady to be married was? This is necessary to be mentioned, because they have insisted upon it as a Proof of his Honesty, that he asked whether she was of Age or not? And being told that she was not, then asked whether there was Consent of Relations or not? If (said he) there be not, I will not be concerned in a Thing of this Nature for an hundred Pound. He was told that the Brother was with her at the Magpye Tavern, and asked to go thither for Satisfaction, but would not go. Upon this the Constable saith, that he went away, and made it his Business to watch and see when Mr. Kinnersley came out. In an Hour or two he came out, he dogged him up the Minories, then when he was come within Aldgate, he told him that he had a Warrant against him for Forgery of a Note of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds. He then desired him to go into a House with him, where he asked to see the Warrant: Upon seeing it, he said, that if the Gentleman had sent for him he should readily have come to him. Being asked why he denied himself? He answered, that he was afraid of being arrested for Debt, and that was the Reason of his denying himself when the Constable came to inquire for him. He then owned that the Note was his own Hand-writing; but said that he knew not how the Indorsement came there. This agrees with what was said by the Counsel, and proved by the Witnesses, concerning what was said by him upon his Examination before Sir Richard Hopkins, and to Mr Bird at his Compting-house when he came to him. This is the Evidence, as to the Fact. The Counsel for the Prosecution go on and say, that there hath been a private Correspondence carried on between these two Defendants, which they insist on as a Circumstance to make it likely that they joined herein. They called to this, first, Mr. Thomas Bab, who saith, that both the Defendants used to meet frequently at his House; that Mr. Hales frequently came there early in the Morning, would sometimes walk about a considerable Time, would ask sometimes if the Minister had been there without naming him, but they knew whom he meant, having frequently seen them together; that some Time before Kinnersley came in, Hales sitting by the Window, saw him go by and went to him; sometimes Kinnersley came in and went through the Coffee-room into a back Room, and Hales would follow after him, and they would stay there together; Kinnersley sometimes would go out at one Door, and Hales immediately go out at the other; that this continued for about a Month or three Weeks before Mr. Hales's Apprehension; that one Time particularly, Mr. Kinnersley passed by and went down Fleet-street, and Mr. Hales seeing him, rose up and went out after him: This, he saith, was about a Month before the Defendant Hales was taken up. He saith, that they seldom sat down in the publick Room, but went into a private Room. John Brooks was next called, who saith, that he keeps a Coffee-house in Downing-street, in Westminster. He said, that Mr. Kinnersley used to come sometimes to his Coffee-house, send for a Porter, and give him a Note for Mr. Hales, who hath come to him, and they have gone into a private Part of the Room, and there they have staid for three or four Hours together; that it being in the Evening he hath thought them in the dark, and asked the Servant why a Candle was not carried them? Who hath answered, that he had carried them one but they refused it, not caring to be interrupted; that they met thus about three or four Times in a Month, a litttle while before Mr. Hales was apprehended. Mr. Janeway also was called, who saith, that he hath seen the two Defendants several Times retire up Stairs together at his Coffee-house. This, Gentlemen, is relied upon, and given in Evidence, to shew that there was a Correspondence between them about some Affairs not so proper to be managed in Publick. This is the Substance of the Evidence on the Side of the Prosecution: And the Counsel for the King tell you, that as to Things of this Nature, they must be done in a very private Way in order to prevent a Discovery; it cannot be expected that they would call Persons to see such a Thing done; that the only Evidence, therefore, that can be given is Circumstance. Well, Gentlemen, the Defendants come upon their Defence: They appear by different Counsel, and make a separate Defence. The Counsel on the Behalf of the Defendant Hales insist that there was a Debt due from Kinnersley to Hales, for which this Note was given; that this doth appear from the several Declarations made by Mr. Kinnersley from time to time. They rely upon this as Evidence of such a Debt for Money advanced to him, and that this Note was given by the Defendant Kinnersley for such a Debt. They tell you, that Mr. Hales being a Bankrupt, and therefore it not being proper to have such a Note in his own Name, because it would be liable to be claimed by the Assignees in the Commission of Bankruptcy against him, that therefore it was proper to make use of the Name of another Person; that Mr. Edwards was never affected or injured hereby; that Part of the Money hath been paid, and if they had had a little Patience, as Four Hundred Pounds was paid, so the rest would have been paid. And though they admit that the making of such a Note in the Name of another to advance Credit without his Leave was criminal, yet it did not, they say, really affect or injure him. And then to shew that there was a Reason or Foundation for the giving of this Note, they said that they would call Witness that there was an Account stated, upon which this Money appeared to be due. They called Robert Burkit to it: But he saith that he knoweth of no such Account, it is all Imagination; that his Name was made use of without his Knowledge; that he knew nothing of any Money ever due between them: So that it is plain, that that Witness is lost in the Examination as to any Benefit to them. They said that they had another Witness who happened not to be here: This is the Substance of the Defence of the Defendant Hales. Kinnersley then comes on his Defence. His Counsel insist that he is not evidenced to be concerned and knowing of this Forgery; that as this is a Crime of a very heinous Nature, and deserves the greatest Punishment, so it is necessary that the clearest Proof should be given you before you convict him. They say that his Character likewise requires stronger Evidence than others; that his Credit is more concerned than others, because the very Exercise of his Function depends upon his Credit, without which he will be of no Use in the Parish where he doth or may minister. And they say, that it appears by the Evidence on the Side of the Prosecution, that he is very careful in the Discharge of his Function, which they insist on from his Refusal to be concerned in a Marriage without a Licence and Consent of Friends, it being contrary to Acts of Parliament and to the Canons of the Church, and that they suppose him as cautious in other Things. They say, that the Thing itself is usual, and that it is an innocent and harmless Thing; that no Person is hurt by another's engaging to pay him a Sum of Money by such a Note; that the Person, indeed, who gives such a Note is liable to an Action for the Money, but that there is no Injury done to the Person to whom it is made payable; that therefore as to Mr. Kinnersley's subscribing a Note for so much Money payable to Samuel Edwards, Esq. especially when it was done upon the Request of the Defendant Hales, upon account of a Debt which was due from him to Hales, and for the Convenience of Hales, it was an innocent Thing; that Kinnersley was to pay Hales so much Money, and Hales himself desired a Note for it in this Name. They say that Kinnersley might be induced to do this from the Credit and Character of Hales, and from their former Acquaintance; that he was the Minister in his Parish when the Partnership was between him and Sir Stephen Evance; that notwithstanding his Misfortunes since that first Acquaintance, it is plain that he hath been corresponded with by Persons of Credit, therefore there can be no Reflection on that Head on Mr. Kinnersley. And they say, that as there was nothing culpable in giving of the Note, so nothing amiss hath happened thereupon; that if Mr. Hales hath done any thing amiss, it does not affect Mr. Kinnersley. Though they raise Mr. Hales's Credit at first, yet afterward they sink it, and seem to throw the Blame upon him. They plead also, that there is no Evidence that the Indorsement was upon the Note when it was subscribed by Mr. Kinnersley. If it was afterwards (say they) indorsed with or without Authority from Mr. Edwards, it will not affect Kinnersley, except there be express Proof that he did it. They say also, that there is no Proof of any Franks delivered to Kinnersley but only to Hales; that he had not therefore the Opportunity that Hales might have; that therefore he is not involved in that Circumstance of the Inducement hereto, that Proof or Evidence given is nothing against him. And then (say they) to what Purpose should the Note be contrived to be indorsed with the Privity of Kinnersley, when he hath no manner of Benefit thereby, Hales having received the Money? They ask the Question cui bono, and thence infer that Kinnersley could not do this And they insist upon it in point of Law, that the writing of this Note can be no Fraud in him, he having done what renders him liable to an Action. And to shew that the Money was due from Kinnersley to Hales, they have called several Witnesses to shew that there was a Foundation for this Note. Mr. Peter Marsh was called. He saith, that about ten or eleven Years ago he brought a Bond of Fifty Pounds to him made by Mr. Kinnersley payable to him. Mr. Hales told him, that Mr. Kinnersley owed him this Money, and had given him this Note made payable to him, which he desired him therefore to get for him. He knew nothing of the Matter, was surprised that his Name was made use of, and so returned the Bond again. This is insisted upon, Gentlemen, to shew that there were Tranſactions between Kinnerſley and Hales. Now whether this proves a Debt due from the one to the other, or proves an extraordinary Method of taking Bonds in the Names of Perſons without their Conſent, you are to conſider; eſpecially when you muſt know that if this Bond had been put in ſuit by Peter Marſh, he would have been liable to recover the Money. Well, then William Cropley is next called. He ſaith, that he received at Janeway's Coffee-houſe about Sixty Pounds, a Debt that was due from Kinnerſley to him. He received it of the Defendant Hales, and Kinnerſley was there with him at that Time. He ſaith, that Kinnerſley was the original Debtor for the Money, and that Hales gave him his Note for it. He ſaith, that Kinnerſley had borrowed of him an Hundred and odd Pounds; that he brought another Gentleman to be Security with him for it; that at the End of ſix Months he could not get his Money; that he enquired of Kinnerſley for it, who led him a Dance from Place to Place after him for a conſiderable Time; that at laſt he was forced to ſue for the Money; and recovered half from the other Gentleman; that he then proſecuted Kinnerſley for the reſt; that then Kinnerſley met him with Mr. Hales at ſome Tavern, and then Hales told him that he was to receive about ſix or ſeven hundred Pound within about three Months Time, and then he would pay him. He ſaith, that upon that Offer of Hales he took a Note of Hales, and a new one of Kinnerſley for the Money; and that in February laſt he got the Money as before-mentioned, and received it at Janeway's Coffee-houſe. And he ſaith, that ſome little Matter (about fifty Shillings or thereabouts) was due for the Charges, for which he gave him his Note. Hales gave his Note for the Payment of a Debt of Kinnerſley's, a Debt of Fifty Pounds, and he gave this Reaſon for it, that he was to receive within ſix Months about Six or Seven Hundred Pounds for him, and therefore he could venture being Security for Kinnerſley. This is a Tranſaction of quite another Nature. It is ſo far from proving a Debt from Kinnerſley to Hales, that it rather proves Hales indebted and becoming Security for the other. Well, then John Wells is called. He ſaith, that he knoweth not of any Money due from Kinnerſley to Hales, but that Kinnerſley owed him an Hundred Pound; that afterwards this Money was paid to his Attorney, by whom or how he could not tell. Mr. Simpſon, who is a Partner with Mr. Fowler, is then aſked concerning Thirty Pounds borrowed upon ſome Lottery Tickets of Mr. Fowler, and is aſked concerning this Money, how, where, and by whom it was diſcharged? He ſaith, that he was not at the Shop, and knoweth not by whom and how it was diſcharged. Mr. Kinnerſley, upon this, applies himſelf to one of the Gentlemen of the Jury, and interrogates him how this Money was paid. Mr. Fowler was hereupon ſworn to give Evidence. Upon his Oath, he ſaith, that he never knew of any Tranſaction in the Name of Hales; that he never ſaw him at his Shop. That as to Kinnerſley there was a Tranſaction of Money borrowed on Lottery Tickets, but he knoweth nothing of Hales's being concerned. Another Perſon is examined whether he ever gave a Note on Mr. Hales's Account, or at his Requeſt paid any Money? He ſaith, that he never did, nor knoweth that any other did. They tell you alſo, that the Witneſſes for the Proſecution have in a great meaſure proved the Denial of Mr. Kinnerſley of his knowing of the Indorſement: But they call themſelves for further Proof, Evidence of it. They call Mr. John Hayes, who ſaith that he was preſent at the Examination of Mr. Kinnerſley before Sir Richard Hopkins; that at that Time the Defendant Kinnerſley owned his writing the Body of the Note, but at the ſame time ſaid, that how the Indorſement came there he could not tell. He tells you that the Caution that was given to the Defendant Kinnerſley, was after this Declaration made by him; that then there was an Admonition that he ſhould be cautious in the Anſwers that he gave. One Andrew Grants likewiſe was preſent at that Examination. He ſaith, that that was all that paſſed at that Time, and that he was not ſtopped by Mr. Mitford, but only a reaſonable Caution given him that he ſhould not be too much in an Hurry, or the like. This is the Subſtance of the Defence made by the Counſel for both the Defendants. It is the Right of the Counſel for the King to reply. They ſay, that there hath been no Evidence of Tranſactions between Kinnerſley and Hales to the Amount of any ſuch Sum as the Note is for; that if the Note was given with a Deſign to defraud, both muſt be equally guilty; and that it is a very extraordinary Thing that this Note ſhould be written by Mr. Kinnerſley as a Promiſſory Note for ſuch a Sum payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. when it doth not appear, on the Defendant's Part, that there was any Correſpondence between Edwards and Kinnerſley, and on their Side it hath been proved that there was no ſuch Correſpondence; that it was very extraordinary if this Note was given for a Debt due, that it ſhould be taken in the Name of one with whom they had no Money-dealings whatſoever, and over whom they could not be ſuppoſed to have any Power; that this therefore ſeems to be only to give a Credit to the Note; that it could not be of any Uſe whatſoever without having the Name of ſome Perſon of Circumſtance and Condition to it who would be obliged to pay the Note; that this Note muſt have been thrown upon Mr. Edwards, appears (they ſay) from the Declaration of Kinnerſley, that he was an undone Man. If then it was of any Uſe to borrow Money upon or in any other Way, it muſt be from the Subſtance of Mr. Edwards, and not from the Poverty and Deficiency of Kinnerſley. They inſiſt upon that Circumſtance, and the Declaration of Kinnerſley, that he knew of that Indorſement, though how it came there, he ſaid that he knew not. And further they ſay, that as the Name was Mr. Edwards's own Hand-writing, if that the Word ffree was wrote upon the Paper, it muſt be before the writing of the Body of the Note. It cannot be imagined that the Words were not there before. It cannot be ſuppoſed that Mr. Edwards would ſet his Name to the Word ffree, or to any other Word on the Back of a Note promiſing the Payment of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, within ſix Months, to him or his Order. They inſiſt, therefore, that this Name and the Word ffree were upon the Paper before the Note was wrote, and that this is a ſtrong and reaſonable Evidence that Kinnerſley muſt be privy to the Name Edwards, and the Indorſement at that Time. After that, Mr. Kinnerſley deſired to be heard, and he was indulged: But as to that you have been informed, that in Indictments for Miſdemeanours, whatever the Defendant ſaith for himſelf, it will have no further Validity than as the Counſel inſiſt, and Evidence is brought for him. The Circumſtance, therefore, is very different from what is allowed when Perſons are proſecuted in capital Caſes. However, you have heard how he hath declared in the moſt ſolemn Manner his Innocence. You are to conſider whether that is of any Validity, unleſs there was Evidence of ſuch a Debt due from the Defendant Kinnerſley to Hales the other Defendant, whether you will take it upon his Word. This being the Evidence on both Sides, the firſt Queſtion is, whether the Indorſement is forged, becauſe, till you determine that it is a forged Indorſement, there can be no Proſecution for the Publication of it. If it be a true Indorſement, no Perſon can be guilty of the Publication, much leſs can Mr. Kinnerſley, who did not deliver the Note: That therefore lieth upon the Defence of Mr. Hales, which is not made but by the Defence of Kinnerſley. You are to conſider then the Opportunity that the Defendant might take hold of from the receiving of Franks for ſeveral Years from Mr. Edwards; and you will conſider whether there is any clear Proof, or ſo much as the Colour of it, that Mr. Edwards was privy to an Indorſement of this Nature, or there was any Occaſion for ſuch an Indorſement. If no ſuch Money was indeed due, to what Purpoſe ſhould the Note be indorſed? Upon the beſt Obſervations that I can make, I ſee not any Evidence to raiſe a reaſonable Preſumption from, that this was a fair and juſtifiable Indorſement. If it was not an Impoſition on Mr. Edwards, becauſe it makes him liable as an Indorſer for the Sum mentioned in the Note, if you ſhould find that, yet you are to conſider whether it is fair to make uſe of another's Name in a Note; for Mr. Kinnerſley, who by his own Confeſſion is a poor, undone Man, and whoſe Living is under a Sequeſtration, to make a Note indorſed by another Perſon who can never be reimburſed by this Perſon who ſubſcribed the Note, it is a very extraordinary Way; though they ſay that it is an innocent Way of raiſing Money, for a Perſon in Cuſtody, or liable to it, to make uſe of the Name of a ſubſtantial Perſon in ſuch a Note, whoſe Credit muſt be at Stake for the Money. And then as to the Nature of the Note: If it was only a Promiſſory Note for ſo much Money payable to Samuel Edwards, Eſq. it was not of ſuch Conſequence, for then he was not liable: But he is liable to the Payment only upon the Indorſement of ſuch a Note. Why then, Gentlemen, you are to conſider, whether this Note, when Mr. Kinnerſley had wrote it, could be of any Uſe in the World unleſs it was indorſed afterwards. Why then this Note is either a Preparation to obtain Mr. Edwards's voluntary Indorſement for a Security, or an Impoſition upon him. Hath any Evidence been produced to ſhew a Probability that Mr. Edwards would give him that Liberty to tranſfer his own Inſufficiency and Poverty upon him, and make him liable to Mr. Edwards, which can have no Effect but by an Indorſement; doth not Mr. Kinnerſley put it into the Power of Hales to negociate this Note? Therefore I muſt inform you, if two Perſons contrive together to draw ſuch a Note, and make uſe of it, both Perſons concerned in the Tranſaction, in my Opinion, will be guilty. Forgery is an intire Fact. Though one Perſon doth one Part, and another the other, both are equally guilty. Gentlemen, it is material, as hath been obſerved, to conſider when this Indorſement was made; and if it was a forged Indorſement, you will conſider when it will appear to have been indorſed. You have been truly told that this can be only known by Circumſtances: Therefore you are to conſider, whether the Name of Samuel Edwards can be ſuppoſed to be ſet there after the Note was wrote. Well then, what is the proper and natural Way of underſtanding this Tranſaction? If there be the Name of a Perſon on any Paper, where there is Room for making an Alteration, what is natural? Why, to tranſact on the other Side what is neceſſary to ſupply and make that complete, without which the Name would be to no Purpoſe. Therefore, that is a material Conſideration; if it is impoſſible that the Name could be wrote after the making of the Note, whether that be not a reaſonable Preſumption that he ſaw this Indorſement when he wrote this Note. Suppoſe the Words only ffree Samuel Edwards, it was not proper to write this Note on the Back of it. If this Indorſement was made without his Privity, how came he to know of it when he came to Mr. Bird? And upon Mr. Bird's telling him that he had a Note of his left with him, immediately anſwer'd, 'I know that you have; it is for ſo much, payable in three Months to Mr. Edwards, but how it came indorſed by him I know not;' when Mr. Bird ſwears that he had not then acquainted him with the Indorſement, nor ſhewed him the Note at that Time. No Evidence hath been produced to ſhew how he came to know that it was indorſed. He declared, indeed, that he knew not how it came to be indorſed: But you are to conſider, whether that Part wherein he declares his Knowledge is to be regarded, or what he declares he knows not of. A Declaration of this Nature will be taken moſt ſtrongly againſt him. Conſider, therefore, whether this latter Part of his Declaration be ſufficient to diſcharge him. If he knew that it was indorſed, you ſhould have ſome Evidence upon what Account it was. As to the reſt, as to the Character, his Coat, or the like, you are to try him upon the ſame Law with Hales. I know not why the Habit he wears ſhould exempt him from the common Rules of Proof. As to the particular Circumſtance of his Uſefulneſs depending on his Credit, that is left to you. But the ſame Law is made for one that is for another: You are therefore to conſider of it. If this be a fair Indorſement you muſt acquit both. If you are ſatisfied that it is not, but the Indorſement is a forged Indorſement, whether either, and which of the Defendants ſeems to be guilty. You are to conſider the Nature and Circumſtances of the Tranſaction, and whether there appears any thing to diſtinguiſh the one from the other, and accordingly give your Verdict againſt the one or the other. If you deſire it, the Note will be given to you.

Jury. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will take the Note up with us.

Mr. Kinnerſley. I deſire to be heard——

L. C. Baron. Not in caſe of a Miſdemeanour. I know not any Inſtance in which it hath been allowed.

Mr. Kinn. I beg leave, my Lord. I take the Lord to witneſs——

L. C. Baron, All I can ſay is, if you have a mind to aver or affirm any thing, the Court would rather be irregular than abridge you of any thing.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, it never was allowed; after your Lordſhip has ſummed up the Evidence, and the Jury going out; it is ſtrange Mr. Kinnersley will behave ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it, my Lord, to be allowed?

L. C. Baron. The Gentlemen have inſiſted upon it. You cannot be heard.

Mr.

Mr. Kinnersley. By the living God, I know nothing of it!

Clerk of Arraigns. [Calling over the Jury] Are you all agreed in your Verdict?---Jurymen. All.

Clerk. Who shall speak for you?---Jurymen. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How say you, Is William Hales Guilty of the Misdemeanour wherewith he stands charged, in forging an Indorsement on a Promissory Note for Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Esq. and publishing the same knowing it to be forged; or Not Guilty?---Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. How say you, Is Thomas Kinnersley Guilty of the said Misdemeanour wherewith he stands charged, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

VII. The Trial of William Hales, for a Misdemeanour, in obtaining from Thomas Bird the Sum of Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds by false Tokens, &c.

The Jury called over again.

Clerk. OYEZ, OYEZ. If any one can inform, &c. &c.

Indictment.] William Hales stands indicted by the Name of William Hales, &c. for falsly and deceitfully obtaining the Sum of Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds of Thomas Bird by a false Token, viz. a Promissory Note, in these Words following:

Aug. 16, 1727.

I promise to pay to Samuel Edwards, Esq. or his Order, within three Months after Date, the Sum of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, for Value received, Thomas Kinnersley.

On which Note there is the following Indorsement,

Pray pay to the Order of for Value received,

Samuel Edwards.

to the great Damage of Samuel Edwards, Esq. &c. To this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, this is an Indictment against the Prisoner William Hales only. It sets forth that he, having in his Possession a certain Writing purporting to be a Promissory Note made in the Name of Thomas Kinnersley, wherein the said Thomas Kinnersley is supposed to promise to pay the Sum of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds to Samuel Edwards, Esq. within three Months, with a forged Indorsement of Mr. Edwards on that Note, did, in March last, falsly and deceitfully obtain of Mr. Thomas Bird, the Sum of Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds by that false Token. This is laid to be contrary to the Statute in that Case made, to the Damage of Samuel Edwards, Esq. &c. to the Breach of his Majesty's Peace, and to the ill Example of his Majesty's Subjects in like Case offending.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, this is an Indictment against Mr. William Hales, for obtaining a Sum of Money by the false Token of this Note. For this we will only call Mr. Bird.

Mr. Bird called and sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Bird, look upon the Note, and give an Account who brought it to you, and what Money you paid upon it?

Mr. Bird. Mr. William Hales brought it to me on March 20th, last.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he say?

Mr. Bird. He said, that at the Request of a Gentleman, I was to lend him Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds upon that Note.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he produce the Note?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir, I had it then of him.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it then indorsed as it is now?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir, in the Manner as now.

Mr. At. Gen. How much Money did you deliver him upon it?

Mr. Bird. Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds.

Lord Chief-Baron Pengelly. Did you deliver it, when he delivered you this Note?---Mr. Bird. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Should you have let him have this Money if he had not produced this Note?—Mr. Bird. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it paid in?--Mr. Bird. In one or more Bank Notes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. I submit this, my Lord: They have laid this Indictment but singly for obtaining Money, whereas in the former they layed doubly for obtaining Money, or other valuable Things. It lieth therefore upon them to prove that this Mr. Hales did receive in Money. Though I know that generally Bank Notes are received as so much Money, yet I know not that according to Law they are reckoned Money. They should therefore have laid it for Money or other valuable Things, it being two Bank Notes, and not Money: And in this manner, I suppose, in case of a Tender of Money, it is not, as I apprehend, thought that a Tender of Bank Notes is a sufficient Plea: The Consequence then is, that the giving of Seven Hundred and Fifty Pounds, and the giving of such Notes is not tantamount. They ought to indict him as the Fact really was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know, Mr. Bird, of the receiving of this Money? Did he complain of his not receiving of this Money?---Mr. Bird. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Did he pay back any of the Money?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir, Four Hundred Pounds.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Was it upon the Account of those Bank Notes?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir.

Lord Chief-Baron. Then when he paid you back that Money, did he complain that he had not received it?---Mr. Bird. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Pray, Sir, did he say that he had received it?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir.

Lord Chief-Baron. Mr. Serjeant Eyre, I suppose you do not insist upon it as necessary that he should receive so much Money of Mr. Bird. If he received the Produce of those Notes it was sufficient.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, I apprehend that though he did receive the Money from the Bank for those Notes, he received not the Money from the Hands of Mr. Bird. He received, indeed, what I should have taken for Money. Especially as the Act of Parliament hath added, or any valuable Thing, as Jewels or the like. I think it should have been so laid. I observe the Words used are, by Colour or Means of a false Token. I would ask, Suppose Mr. Bird had ordered him to receive it of his Cashier, or sent the Note to his Goldsmith, whose Payment would it have been? Suppose he had sent him to the Bank to receive that Money before he delivered up the Note, certainly he had obtained the Money by Colour or Means of that Note.

——— My Lord, I admit that if it had been paid by his Servant or by his Cashier upon a Note drawn upon him for it, I take it that it might have been laid either Way.

Mr. Serj. Whit. The Bank in that Respect are but Cashiers for the Gentlemen that have their Notes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. The other Indictment laid it doubly.

Judge Reynolds. Though they might do that by Way of Caution, yet it might have been laid the other Way as this is.

Lord Chief-Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, you are to consider whether the Indorsement on this Note was a forged Indorsement: For if it was not forged, the Defendant cannot be said to obtain the Money by a false Token. And further you are to consider, as he obtained this of Mr. Bird by this false Token, whether it ever came to his Hands or not. You are to consider upon the Evidence that he never complained that he had not received the Money for those Bills, but, on the contrary, paid back Four Hundred Pounds, Part of the Money, whether he would have paid it if he had not received the Money. Therefore, if you apprehend that Indorsement of the Note was not a forged Indorsement, or that the Money was not paid, you are to acquit him. But if you judge that the Indorsement upon the Note was forged, and the Money paid, whether it was paid by Mr. Bird in Money, or in Bills upon which he afterwards received Money, I think that that makes no Difference.

Jury called over.

Clerk. Are you all agreed in your Verdict?---Jury. Agreed.

Clerk. Who shall speak for you?---Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How say you, Is William Hales Guilty of the Misdemeanour whereof he stands indicted in obtaining a Sum of Money by this false Token, or Not Guilty?—Foreman. Guilty.

VIII. William Hales and Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk, were indicted for a Misdemeanour, for fraudulently Forging a Promissory Note, &c. in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Esq. for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, and publishing the said Note, knowing the same to be forged.

Jury called and sworn over again.

Clerk. OYEZ! Oyez! If any Man can inform, &c.

Indictment.] Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales and Thomas Kinnersley stand indicted by the Name, &c. for fraudulently forging a Note or a Writing, purporting to be a Promissory Note, on the second of March, in the first Year of his Majesty's Reign, in the Words following:

I promise to pay to Mr. Thomas Kinnersley, or his Order, within six Months after Date, the Sum of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, for the Value received, Samuel Edwards.

and knowingly and wittingly publishing of this as a true Writing, knowing it to be so forged and counterfeited.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment against the two Prisoners William Hales and Thomas Kinnersley. This Indictment sets forth, that they being Persons of ill Fame, and intending to deceive Mr. Edwards, &c. on the second of March, in the first Year of his Majesty's Reign, did forge a Writing purporting to be a Promissory Note, &c. The Indictment further sets forth, that the Defendants did likewise produce and publish this Promissory Note of Mr. Edwards's for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds; that knowing this to be a forged Note, they did publish the said Note for a true one. It is laid in other Words, that they forged a Note of Samuel Edwards's, whereby he is supposed to promise to pay to Thomas Kinnersley, within six Months, the Sum of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, &c. To all these Facts they both have pleaded Not guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel for the King. Gentlemen, this is an Indictment against both the Defendants, for forging a Promissory Note in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Esq. for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable to Thomas Kinnersley, or Order, within six Months after Date, and also for publishing the same. And, Gentlemen, though it is laid several Ways in the Indictment, the Note is one and the same. There are not several Notes. Gentlemen, it will appear to you that this Forgery of this Note was by the same Opportunity taken by Mr. Hales, in conjunction with Mr. Kinnersley, that the former was. It hath been observed already, that in Cases of this Kind Facts are to be proved only by Circumstances. Plain and positive Proof is not to be expected: But such Circumstances speak the Truth often more plainly than the other Way of Proof doth. As to Mr. Hales, Mr. Edwards being too obliging to him, he made use of it to much the same Purpose as in the former Case. But it was not now to indorse, but to make a Promissory Note for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable by Mr. Edwards to Mr. Kinnersley, within six Months after Date, and dated March 30, 1728. And, Gentlemen, this Note is signed on the Back with the Hand-writing of Thomas Kinnersley. The Manner

Manner of this Forgery will appear to have been like the other: But it will appear on the very Face of it manifeſtly a Forgery. Gentlemen, the Note is wrote on a very ſmall Piece of Paper, which appears plainly to have been cut off from another Paper. And, Gentlemen, the Words, for the Value received, are not wrote upon the Line with the other Words, but a little below the Line. The Words for the appear done in the ſame Manner as in the former Note that before came under your Conſideration. Here is a ff ſuch as before, and as Mr. Edwards always uſeth, then an r which appears to be of the ſame Hand, then an o crowded in between them which ſeems not of the original Writing. One of the ee's is made to ſerve for the firſt Stroke of the y, and a long Stroke between the two ee's, then the other e makes up the Word ye. Then Value received is wrote in another manner of Hand. This ſeems to be the Nature of the Forgery; and none can doubt it a Forgery that inſpects it. This appears to be done from a Frank Cover obtained from Mr. Edwards. And this is ſomething remarkable: It is ſomething odd that for the Value received ſhould be wrote on another Line. It is plain that the Words are ſet thus odd becauſe of the Word wrote before, and that the ff beginning another Line may make the better Appearance. This Note is made payable to Mr. Kinnerſley. He was an abſolute Stranger to Mr. Edwards as it appeared in the former Caſe. There was no Dealing between Mr. Edwards and Mr. Kinnerſley, nor no Colour of any ſuch Dealing, by which a Debt of ſuch a Sum as this ſhould become due from Mr. Edwards to Kinnerſley. But, Gentlemen, this Note thus made for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable within Six Months from Mr. Edwards to Kinnerſley, without any Dealings between them to give a Foundation for it, in the manner I have ſhewed you, which is ſufficient to make it appear to any a Forgery, is indorſed by Mr. Kinnerſley. That will appear a clear Evidence of the Forgery being by Mr. Kinnerſley. No Man in his Senſes would do this. If a forged Note for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds was made in the Name of any Perſon, and appeared in all theſe Circumſtances of a plain Forgery, no Man in his Senſes, and deſigning to act a fair Part, would make an Indorſement thereto. No other Purpoſe, therefore, ſeems aimed at in the indorſing but to ſet the Note a going. If ſuch a Note was offered to a fair and honeſt Man to indorſe would he not ſtartle at it? Would he ever have indorſed it? Therefore, this Indorſement is a ſtrong Evidence againſt him. The Uſe made of this Note, thus forged and indorſed, was this: It being in the Hands of Mr. Hales, Mr. Hales wanting a Sum of Money applied to one Mr. Thrup, deſiring him to lend him his Note of Four Hundred Pounds. Upon his doing this with Difficulty, Mr. Hales depoſited this Note as a Security for his Money, and hereupon this Note continued in the Hands of Mr. Thrup. Gentlemen, upon the Diſcovery that was made of another Forgery, whereupon Mr. Hales was apprehended, there was a Suſpicion: Hereupon Mr. Edwards, being informed that this Note was in the Hands of Mr. Thrup, inquired of him about it. The Thing upon this appeared, and Mr. Kinnerſley thereupon was apprehended and carried before Sir Richard Hopkins. At firſt he ſeemed willing to make a Diſcovery; afterward he went back, and denied (I think) what he ſeemed before to have owned: That will be proved to you. I think that this will appear plainly to have been a Forgery, and to have been done by Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnerſley.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, we will go on in the ſame Method as before, by calling two or three Witneſſes.

Thomas Maddox and Anne Clarke were called, ſworn, and depoſed as before.

As alſo Mr. Booth. Vide p. 78.

Mr. Charlton Thrup called and ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Look, Sir, on that Note, and tell us when you firſt ſaw it before.

Mr. Thrup. On May the 22d.

Mr. At. Gen. Who brought it to you?

Mr. Thrup. Mr. Hales.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay to you?

Mr. Thrup. He brought it to me, and deſired me that I would give him on it three Notes of five hundred Pounds. I refuſed him at firſt, alledging that it was not for my Credit. At length I put into his Hand a promiſſory Note for four hundred Pounds payable within ſix Months.

Mr. At. Gen. Look on that Note, and ſee whether it now is in the ſame Caſe that it then was. Was the Indorſement then upon it?

Mr. Thrup. I cannot ſay: For I took no Notice of the Indorſement till I delivered it to Mr. Booth at the Requeſt of Mr. Edwards.

Mr. At. Gen. In whoſe Cuſtody was it till you delivered it to Mr. Booth?

Mr. Thrup. In mine, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you make any Alteration in it?

Mr. Thrup. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. And when you gave it to Mr. Booth you minded the Indorſement. Did you not?

Mr. Thrup. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you not to mind it before? What Security was Mr. Edwards's Note if it had not been indorſed?

Mr. Thrup. I had ſuch an Opinion of Mr. Hales that I ſuſpected nothing, and therefore gave him the Note; I did not think he would have been guilty of ſo vile an Action.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it that you delivered this Note to Mr. Booth?

Mr. Thrup. It was in September laſt.

Mr. At. Gen. How much had you lent upon it?

Mr. Thrup. Four Hundred Pounds, Sir.

Mr. Lacy. What is become of that Note?

Mr. Thrup. I know not, Sir. I am not yet poſſeſſed of it: But I believe it to be in the Hands of Mr. Maddox of the Bank.

Mr. John Spicer ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know Mr. Edwards's Hand-writing?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Look on that Note, and tell us what of it you take to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Spicer. The Name is his and the ff. And I think the plaineſt ffree that I have ſeen is remaining.

Mr. At. Gen. Is the o Mr. Edwards's?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir; it hath been ſomething elſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it Part of the original Word?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir, to the beſt of my Judgment it is altered. It is ſo crouded between the Letters, that it ſeems as if it was Part of them.

Mr. At. Gen. Look on the r. Whoſe is that?

Mr. Spicer. I believe it to be Mr. Edwards's.

Mr. At. Gen. And you obſerve two ee's. Do you not?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir. One of the ee's is brought to make Part of the y, which with the other e makes the y.

Mr. At. Gen. How doth Mr. Edwards write his Franks?

Mr. Spicer. Free with a double f, as it is here ffree Samuel Edwards.

Mr. At. Gen. In what manner are you concerned for Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Spicer. I am a Clerk in his Office.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Years in his Service?

Mr. Spicer. I have been his Clerk between ten and eleven Years: But I have been in all in his Service about twenty-four Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know that he had any Money Tranſactions with either Mr. Hales or Mr. Kinnerſley?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir, none at all.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever know him give ſuch Notes?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir. I never knew him give any Notes for Time, nor ever give any Note but when he wrote himſelf the whole Note.

Mr. John Williams called and ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Williams, look upon the Hand at the Bottom of that Paper. Whoſe do you take that to be?

Mr. Williams. It is very like Mr. Kinnerſley's.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ever ſeen him write?

Mr. Williams. Yes, Sir, I have his Writing here.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you?

Mr. Williams. I am his Church-warden.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you ſeen him write? Look upon that Paper, and tell us whether you believe it his Hand-writing or not?

Mr. Williams. The Letters have a certain Cut very like his Hand-writing.

Judge Reynolds. Upon your Oath, Do you or do you not believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Williams. I think that it is very like his Hand, my Lord.

Judge Reynolds. Is it ſo like that you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord, I believe it to be his.

Judge Reynolds. You are not called to ſwear, whether you ſaw him write it, or can ſay poſitively whether it is his Hand-writing; but whether from his Manner of Writing that you have ſeen, you believe, or do not, that it is his Hand-writing?

Mr. Williams. Yes, to the beſt of my Belief it is his.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Pray, Sir, how often have you ſeen him write?

Mr. Williams. Three or four Times.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. How long ſince?

Mr. Williams. Laſt Year.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Do you remember his Hand for the Compaſs of a Year, ſo as to take it upon you, upon your Oath, to ſay that you judge it his Hand?

Mr. Williams. Doth it depend upon my Judgment?

Judge Reynolds. Yes, it doth. Look on it.

Mr. Williams. It is more like his Hand than any other's that I ever ſaw.

Judge Reynolds. But is it ſo like that you really believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. John Lincoln called and ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir, pleaſe to look on that Paper. Have you ever ſeen Mr. Kinnerſley write his Name?

Mr. Lincoln. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Frequently, or only once?

Mr. Lincoln. Several Times, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. You ſay that you have ſeen him write ſeveral Times. Upon your Oath, according to the beſt of your Judgment, do you take that to be his Hand or not?

Mr. Lincoln. There is a great deal to be ſaid on that Subject.

Judge Reynolds. Yes. But little needs to be ſaid about it. Is it ſo like that you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Lincoln. Yes, my Lord it is.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Then, my Lord, having proved that this is his Hand-writing, we deſire that it may be read againſt both the Defendants.

Note read.] I Promiſe to pay to Mr. Thomas Kinnerſley, or his Order, within ſix Months after Date, the Sum of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, for ye Value received,

March 30, 1728. Samuel Edwards.

Indorſement. Thomas Kinnerſley.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. The Gentlemen of the Jury ſhould ſee it now.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire that the Jury may ſee it now. And, Gentlemen, you will obſerve, if you caſt your Eye upon the Note, that there is this one Obſervation that may be added to the others that were made, that the Note is all written with a Secretary e, but the e in for ye, which plainly ſeems to anſwer to Mr. Edwards's Hand, and ſhew that that is an old e.

Mr. Thomas Bird ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir, whoſe Hand is that?

Mr. Bird. Mr. Kinnerſley, Sir, owned that to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. At. Gen. Was it ſhewed by you to Mr. Kinnerſley at that Time when he owned it?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Kinnerſley. And did I own it, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Why you owned it in Court. This is the old Note.

Mr. Kinnerſley. I beg your Pardon, Sir; I did not underſtand that.

Mr. At. Gen. Give that Note to the Jury to compare it with the other Note that is now before them.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Mr. Lincoln, thoſe Receipts which you produced, did Mr. Kinnerſley actually write them?

Mr. Lincoln. I ſaw him write them all.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Shew them to the Jury.

Judge Reynolds. Gentlemen of the Jury, in that Book you will find ſome Receipts wrote by Mr. Kinnerſley, which Mr. Lincoln ſwears that they are his Hand; that he ſaw him write them all.

Mr. At. Gen. The next Witneſs that we will call is Thomas Bab.

Bab not appearing nor Thomas Brooks, who was next called, Sir Richard Hopkins was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Richard, we must trouble you to give an Account upon what Account Mr. Kinnersley was brought before you, and what he said?

Sir Richard Hopkins. He was brought before me about two Notes, one of Twelve hundred and sixty Pounds, and this Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he was before you, was there any particular Mention made of this Note of sixteen hundred and fifty Pounds?

Sir. Richard Hopkins. It was given to me to examine Mr. Kinnersley about it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Richard, can you recollect whether that is the Note?

Sir Richard Hopkins. I made no Mark upon it: But I verily believe that this was the Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it shewed to Mr. Kinnersley?

Sir Richard Hopkins. This Note was put into my Hand to examine Mr. Kinnersley upon. I looked upon it, and it seemed to me to be a Forgery. Before I could say any thing to Mr. Kinnersley about it, I saw one Mitford there. Before Mr. Kinnersley could answer what I had not fully asked him, 'Hold, Sir (said he), say nothing; this is not your Hand.' I thought this very odd Treatment of a Justice of Peace. I said then to Mr. Kinnersley, Is this your Hand or not? He said, No; I had the other Note in my Hand, I desired him therefore to recollect himself; for I thought that they seemed clearly to be the same Hand.

Mr. Strange. I think he owned the one to be his Hand-writing, and the other not. I ask, Whether that which he did own, was owned before that Mr. Mitford interrupted him, or after?

Sir Richard Hopkins. It was before. Upon that Mr. Mitford interrupted him.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Upon the Question, when Inquiry was made whether he had had any Dealings with Mr. Edwards, what did he say?

Sir Richard Hopkins. Both Mr. Edwards and I asked him, whether he ever had had any Dealings with Mr. Edwards? To which he replied No, he never had had any, nor ever to the best of his Knowledge had seen him before. I then asked him how he came to draw that Note payable to Mr. Edwards, when there never had been any Dealings between him and Mr. Edwards? He answered, That he did it at the Request of Mr. Hales, to whom he was indebted in that Sum, and more.

Judge Reynolds. The first Question I suppose was general, whether there had been any Dealings between them? Afterwards, when the Notes were shewn him, he owned the one, and denied the other. Was it not so?

Sir Richard Hopkins. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness that we shall call is Thomas Bab, to shew that there was a private Correspondence and several Meetings between Kinnersley and Hales.

Thomas Babb was called and sworn, and deposed as before.

Mr. Kinnersley. Sir, did we ever call for Pen, Ink and Paper?

Mr. Bab. No, Sir, never.

Mr. Brooks called and sworn, deposed as before.

Mr. Kinnersley. There could not be much done at Night without a Candle.

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir; but you had been there a considerable Time before.

Mr. Wright called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Was you present, Sir, at the Examination of Mr. Kinnersley before Sir Richard Hopkins?---Mr. Wright. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. When Mr. Edwards asked him, whether there had been any Dealings between them, what did he reply?

Mr. Wright. He replied, that there never had been any Dealings between them, and that he never had seen him till that Time.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Did you observe any Interruption?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Kinnersley was saying, I will tell you all if you will give me leave. Mr. Mitford laid his Hand upon him and said, Hold your Tongue, be careful what you say.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. I ask whether he had there related any thing as to the Note now in question before the Interruption?

Mr. Wright. He had declared that that Note was not his.

Mr. Kinnersley I beg leave to speak, my Lord. Both Sir Richard Hopkins and that Gentleman have made a Mistake. Mr. Edwards asked me, How oft have you visited Mr. Hales in Newgate? Upon this it was that he said, Hold your Peace.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What was the Question that was asked Mr. Kinnersley, when you say that Mr Mitford interposed?

Mr. Wright. I cannot say what was the Question that was asked immediately before.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. But you say, that it was after that he had denied this Note?---Mr. Wright. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Kinnersley. I would only ask, Sir, whether Sir Richard Hopkins desired me to hold my Tongue as well as Mr. Mitford?

Judge Reynolds. Did he bid Mr. Kinnersley make no Discovery?

Mr. Wright. No, my Lord.

Mr. Kinnersley. No, my Lord: But he bade me take the Gentleman's Advice. I appeal to Sir Richard.

Sir Richard Hopkins. The Gentleman hath appealed to me. I take it that the Question is, Whether I advised him to take the Gentleman's Advice? It would be very strange that I should reprove Mr. Mitford for Misbehaviour, and yet should at the same Time advise you to take his Advice.

Mr. Wright. Sir Richard asked Mr. Bird, whether Mr. Kinnersley owned that he knew of the Notes being indorsed that was in his Hands? He said that he did. Then he was asked when and how he knew this? This was before Mr. Mitford interposed.

Judge Reynolds. You have appealed to Sir Richard Hopkins, that he advised you to take the Gentleman's Advice. Sir Richard denies this.

Mr. Kinnersley. But he cannot deny that he said, Take your Friend's Advice.

Mr. John March called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Was you present, Sir, at the Examination of Mr. Kinnersley before Sir Richard Hopkins?---Mr. March. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Pray, will you give us an Account of all that past there at that Time.

Mr. March. My Lord, I was attending upon Mr. Richard Hopkins as his Clerk, when Mr. Kinnersley was brought before him with relation to these Notes. When the first Note was produced, he was asked, whether that Note was his Hand-writing or not? To which he answered, That it was. When that was gone through, the second Note was produced, being a promissory Note made in the Name of Mr. Edwards payable to Mr. Kinnersley. When that Note in the Name of Mr. Edwards was produced, we perceived on the Back of it the Name of Mr. Kinnersley wrote. Mr. Kinnersley having denied this Note, Sir Richard, upon comparing the Name on the Back of this Note, with the other Note which he had owned to be his own Hand-writing, said to him, 'I would have you, Sir, consider very well whether you did not write that too; for it is very like that 'which you have owned.' Upon that Mr. Mitford interposed.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. What was it that Mr. Mitford did say?

Mr. March. Mr. Mitford upon that said, 'Mr. Kinnersley, I would not have you answer that Question;' or to that Purpose.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Sir Richard Hopkins advise him to take his Friend's Advice?---Mr. March. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he reprove Mr. Mitford for interposing?

Mr. March. Yes, Sir. He desired him to be quiet, and told him that he would ask whatever Questions were desired, but desired that he would not interrupt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was his denying of the Note before or after the Interruption?

Mr. March. He had first interrupted during the Examination on the first Note, and he afterwards interposed during that on the second Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well. But I ask you as to the second Interruption, whether it was before or after his denying his Hand?

Mr. March. It was after.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. You was saying, Sir, that Sir Richard bade him recollect himself, and consider well whether this was not his Hand too, for that it was very like that Note which he had owned to be his own Hand-writing. Had not Mr. Kinnersley before that said, that he did not sign that Note?

Mr. March. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. We rest it here, my Lord, and leave the Consideration hereof to the Jury.

Mr. Mather. I would ask, whether Mr. Mitford's Advice was not that he should not speak too fast?

Mr. March. No, Sir; it was that he should not answer to that Question.

Mr. Kinnersley. They contradict one another; and Mr. Bird will swear any thing.

Judge Reynolds. You may prove that to be his Character if you can: But without that you ought not to aver it.

Mr. Bird. It is well known, my Lord, what my Character is. I have Persons of good Credit that have known me these twenty-six Years: I have never falsified my Word.

Mr. Lacy. My Lord, I have nothing material in my Instructions; and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordship.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, I am Counsel for Mr. Kinnersley. I admit that they have proved that there was an Intimacy between them. It is detrimental to my Client that there was such an Acquaintance when the one was Parishioner formerly to the other, and that this Acquaintance was kept up to the last: But it doth not follow that they are to be considered as one: If Mr. Hales be never so guilty, it doth not appear that Mr. Kinnersley is guilty. As to this Indictment, the Charge is forging a Note in the Name of Mr. Edwards, and indorsing the same. It is admitted that Mr. Kinnersley had no Acquaintance with Mr. Edwards: But on the other hand it is pretty plain, by the Evidence that hath been given, that there was an Acquaintance between Mr. Edwards and Mr. Hales. They were near Neighbours: Mr. Edwards hath indulged him with Franks for several Years. Mr. Hales is a Man under Misfortunes for many Years, hath had a Commission of Bankruptcy awarded against him: It is very natural for such Persons to deal rather in another Person's Name than in his own; if therefore there be an Intimacy between Mr. Hales and Mr. Edwards, Mr. Hales should apply to Mr. Edwards, and he upon his Request should give him such a Note, I do not wonder that any Gentleman of Character should indorse such a Note signed by a Person of such Figure. It doth not seem very unnatural, that after their long Acquaintance a Note payable to Mr. Kinnersley, in Trust for Mr. Hales, should be indorsed by Mr. Kinnersley: This may be supposed the Case, if actually he did indorse the Note. I do not see why he may not be supposed as easily imposed upon as the other Gentleman, viz. Mr. Thrup. It is not so plain a Fallacy as that Mr. Thrup, who is a Gentleman in Business, could discern it. Why must we suppose then that Mr. Kinnersley must discern it? If then Mr. Hales is guilty of the Forgery, it doth not follow that Mr. Kinnersley must be so. As to the other Point, it is no Wonder that there should be the Name of Mr. Kinnersley on the Back of the Note: Any that would forge a Note will not scruple to forge an Indorsement. It is as like as possible, that the Man that would forge a Note in Mr. Edwards's Name for such a Sum, may be as easily supposed to forge an Indorsement on this Note. How have they proved that it was indorsed by Mr. Kinnersley? Two or three Gentlemen have been produced as Witnesses, that have seen his Hand several Times, and from the Similitude of the Letters they believe it to be his Hand: But there is such Evidence to be every Day given of one Man's writing like another, that a Similitude of Hands is not to be wondered at. It is not to be wondered at that he that would be guilty of forging the whole Note would indorse it: Whether there is any Difference in the Hand between the Writings that have been produced and this Note and Indorsement, must be left to the Jury.

Judge Reynolds. Have you any Witnesses?

Mr. Kinnersley. I beg a Word, my Lord.

Judge Reynolds. Not till we have heard the whole that the Counsel say.

Mr. Mather. I take Notice, my Lord, that there hath been a Variance among the Witnesses as to what past at his Examination before Sir Richard Hopkins. The only Caution that was given him was, that he should not be too rash in his Answers, as your Lordship hath (I believe) thought him very rash in his Conduct here. We shall only call Witness as to this.

Rev. Mr. John Hayes called and sworn

Mr. Mather. Mr. Hayes, please to give my Lord and the Jury an Account what passed as to this Note of Sixteen hundred and fifty Pounds?

Mr. Hayes. When this Note was produced before Sir Richard Hopkins, and shewed to Mr. Kinnersley, upon shewing him the Name on the Back of the Note, he absolutely denied it to be his Hand.

Mr. Mather. Did you hear Mr. Mitford interrupt?

Mr. Hayes. I remember that there was a Diſpute between Sir Richard Hopkins and Mr. Mitford. There were Minutes taken of Mr. Bird's Examination: Upon the reading of theſe Minutes, Mr. Mitford apprehended them not to be rightly taken according to the Evidence that was given. Upon this Mr. Bird was re-examined, and then there was another Queſtion propoſed concerning Mr. Kinnerſley's going to Newgate to viſit Mr. Hales. Then Mr. Mitford again interpoſed.

Mr. Mather. Was that the Reaſon of the Interruption?

Mr. Hayes. Yes, Sir, I believe it was.

Mr. Mather. Was there ſome other Part in which he had alſo interpoſed?—Mr. Hayes. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ward called and ſworn.

Mr. Mather. Sir, was you preſent at the Examination of Mr. Kinnerſley before Sir Richard Hopkins?

Mr. Ward. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Mather. Give us an Account of the Interruption by Mr. Mitford.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Kinnersley was examined as to the Note of twelve hundred and ſixty Pounds: Mr. Kinnersley being examined as to that, there happened ſome Words to paſs between him and Mr. Bird: After ſome Heſitation and Diſpute, he having acknowledged that Note, it was put down in the Minutes. After that he was examined as to this Note of ſixteen hundred and fifty Pounds: Upon his denying that it was his Hand, Mr. Kinnersley was aſked ſome Queſtion by Sir Richard Hopkins concerning ſomewhat that he had formerly ſaid; whereupon he deſired to be examined in the Court of Aldermen. Mr. Mitford hereupon deſired him not to deſire this.

Mr. Mather. My Lord, the Reaſon that we bring this Witneſs is to ſhew, that he had confeſſed all that he could at that Time, and there was Reaſon therefore for Mr. Mitford to interpoſe for the preventing Mr. Kinnersley's making a Diſcovery.

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, when this Note was ſhewed me before Sir Richard Hopkins, it was the firſt Time that I ever ſaw it: I therefore denied it to be my Hand; but by looking upon it more cloſely, I own that it is like my Hand. Though none can oblige me to ſay any Thing, I would be content to be examined; and therefore have, though not regarded, ſolemnly averred that I was not privy to his getting of that Note or Money. As to the other Note, I owed him at that Time the twelve hundred and ſixty Pounds; I gave him that Note for it, and would not with that Solemnity ſay that it is not mine. He hath got it ſome other Way indorſed: But as to this Note it is not my Hand. Had Mr. Hales brought Mr. Edwards's Note to me, and deſired me to indorſe it; though I own that I think that it hath the Marks of Forgery, yet if Mr. Thrup and others were impoſed upon, why might not I? Why ſhould I ſuſpect him more than others? I own that I had a great Confidence in him. Suppoſing this, will you condemn me for an unjuſt Thing? I take God to witneſs, that I never ſet my Hand to that Note, nor never took any Money. I beg Pardon, I will ſay one Word more: The Gentleman hath taken notice rightly that I have ſpoken raſhly; it is an Oppreſſion, and the Wiſe Man ſaith, that Oppreſſion will make a wiſe Man mad, which is worſe than raſh.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he hath intimated that this is an unjuſt and oppreſſive Proſecution: I ſubmit it. Proper Evidence hath been given, and he hath replied to it by his Counſel. The Counſel ſuppoſe, that if the whole Note was Mr. Hales's Hand-writing, it was very likely that he would not ſcruple the Indorſement. Mr. Kinnersley himſelf ſeems to admit, that for aught he knows he might have indorſed ſuch a Note; but the Turn that he gives it is this: If ſuch a Note was wrote in the Name of Mr. Edwards payable to him, he might indorſe it, being brought by a creditable and honeſt Perſon. If a Note was made payable to him by a Gentleman of ſuch Figure and Character, and ſo brought to him, he thinks that he might indorſe it, and would ſo have done: But it is impoſſible that it could be fairly done; there muſt be ſomething fraudulent in it. The Evidence on the Side of the King ſhews, that there muſt have been a Conſpiracy between theſe two Perſons to defraud ſeveral Perſons: As the other Note was, without any Colour for it, made payable to Mr. Edwards, his Name being indorſed upon it, he being a Perſon of Ability to credit the Note: So this ſecond, on the other hand, without any Foundation alſo, becauſe no Colour of Dealings between them, is made in the Name of Mr. Edwards, payable to Mr. Kinnersley, and Mr. Kinnersley's Name indorſed. Why ſhould Mr. Kinnersley's Name be put to it, but only to give a Currency to this Note? When a Note is made payable to any Perſon, it cannot be negociated by any other without his Hand being put to it: His Hand therefore was not ſo much to give a Credit to the Note, he being a Man of no Subſtance, as to give a Currency to the Note, it being in his Name. When that appears to you, it is (I think) ſufficient to convince your Judgments that Mr Kinnersley is a Partner in this Forgery, otherwiſe would not have indorſed this Note in theſe Circumſtances.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. My Lord, it is very extraordinary for a Perſon to pretend ſuch a Note belonging to him, that never had had any Dealings with Mr. Edwards. What Proof hath he given that he did not indorſe it? What Colour is there to ſay that this is a raſh Proſecution?

Mr. Kinnersley. My Lord, I beg a Word. I ſay not that it is raſh, as to the whole Proſecution; but I never was privy to any Wickedneſs in this Note, nor in any other: If I had, I would never have appeared here in my Gown. My Character ought not to exempt me if I am guilty; I ought to abſtain from all Appearance of Evil: When I have forfeited that Character, I deſire to live no longer among Mankind. I aſked Mr. Hales on what Account I was ſent for, and whether there were any Note of mine? He ſaid, Yes; there was a Note of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds payable by Mr. Edwards. Is it (ſaid I) a true Note? Is it wrote by Mr. Edwards? He ſhook his Head and ſaid, juſt as true as the other. I aſked him whether it was indorſed? To which he replied, Yes. Had I known, my Lord, that the Note was indorſed, I need not have aſked Mr. Hales. He is ready to do me Juſtice, though he muſt thereby take it upon himſelf. Your Lordſhip knows that I have no ſuch Character in Suffolk.

Judge Reynolds. We ſhall not need, Mr. Kinnersley, to go to Suffolk for your Character *.

Judge Reynolds. Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales, late of London, Goldſmith, and Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk, ſtand indicted for forging a Note under the Hand of Mr. Samuel Edwards, for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable within three Months to Thomas Kinnersley, or Order, after the Date thereof, for Value received: And another Part of the Indictment chargeth them with publiſhing the ſame. To this Indictment they have pleaded Not Guilty: The Queſtion you are now to determine. Gentlemen, the Foundation of this which hath been inſiſted on by the Counſel on the Side of the Proſecution is, that theſe Gentlemen, or rather the one of them, Mr. Hales, having an Acquaintance with Mr. Edwards, and being indulged by him the Liberty of applying to him for Franks, they have made a wrong Uſe of this, and by converting ſome of the Letters of the Word ffree into for the, and by adding ſome other Words, they have now formed it into a negociable Note for the Sum of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, payable within ſix Months to Mr. Kinnersley, or his Order: And then Mr. Kinnersley, to give a Circulation to the Note, and make it negociable, hath, in Combination with Mr. Hales, indorſed his Name: Mr. Edwards is reſponſible to any body to whom this Note is transferred over. Gentlemen, to make out this to be the Caſe, they have firſt endeavoured to ſhew that Mr. Hales, for ſome Time, on ſeveral Pretences, procured a Number of Superſcriptions to be written for Franks by Mr. Edwards, who is a Member of Parliament, and particularly ſome Superſcriptions in ſuch Circumſtances as were moſt accommodated to ſerve a Deſign of this Nature. And to this End they have produced Thomas Maddox, a Servant of Mr. Edwards's. He ſaith, that Mr. Hales, living near Mr. Edwards in Duke-ſtreet, in Weſtminſter, hath ſeveral Times applied to him for Frank Covers to ſend News into the Country; that Mr. Edwards hath given him ſeveral for that Purpoſe, but generally wrote the whole Superſcription himſelf, purſuant to the Directions that were given him; that in July laſt there came a Parcel of Franks, ſix of them, whereof five have been produced, to be franked, but without any Direction to whom to ſuperſcribe them. Mr. Edwards was deſired to frank them without any Superſcription: Mr. Edwards refuſed to frank them, unleſs directed to whom to ſuperſcribe them: Thus theſe Covers, upon that, were not done at that Time. But then to ſhew you what paſt afterwards upon Occaſion of theſe Blanks ſent to be franked, Anne Clarke, a Servant alſo to Mr. Edwards was called. She ſaith, that ſome time after this, Mr. Hales's Servant came again over to Mr. Edwards's Houſe, and told her that Mr. Edwards having refuſed to frank his Maſter's Covers without Superſcriptions, he had brought from his Maſter a Paper of Directions what Superſcriptions he deſired Mr. Edwards to put to them. That Paper of Directions hath been produced, and hath been ſworn by Mr. Booth to be Mr. Hales's own Hand-writing. They were very ſhort Directions:

Two to Mr. Levett, of Huntington.
Two to John Pratt, Eſq. at Briſtol.
Two to Stephen Miſford, Eſq. Exeter.

And they would infer, that as theſe Superſcriptions were very ſhort, and ſo would not take up much Room, a vacant Space would have been left ſufficient to write any thing of this Nature. That is the Reaſon of their producing an Account of this Tranſaction, which doth not immediately affect this Cauſe, but only as they are inclinable to believe that ſome ſuch Frank may have been made uſe of to ſuch an End as theſe ſeem to have been deſigned for. And then, Gentlemen, to ſhew you the Uſe which they made hereof, the Note upon which this Indictment is immediately founded. The Note is in theſe Words,

I promiſe to pay to Mr. Thomas Kinnerſley, or his Order, within ſix Months after Date, the Sum of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, for the Value received,

March 30, 1728. Samuel Edwards.

And on the Back it is indorſed with the Name Thomas Kinnersley. Gentlemen, they have inſiſted upon it that the Note itſelf carries the evident Marks of Forgery upon it. They ſay that this is ſo plainly derived from the frank Cover of a Letter, that the Word ffree is not wholly covered, but that ſtill ſome of it appears; that the Stile is unuſual for the Value received. The in a large Hand, and then afterwards Value received, the ee's of a Round Hand, whereas all the other ee's are of a quite different Figure, in a Secretary Hand. Other Obſervations they have alſo made, which you that have viewed the Note can eaſily judge of. They then apply themſelves to bring Evidence as to Mr. Hales, the one of the Defendants: And for that Purpoſe they have produced Mr. Charlton Thrup. He ſaith, that on May 22d laſt this Defendant, Mr. Hales, brought this Note to him, deſiring him to lend him three Five Hundred Pound Notes upon it; that he, not caring to have his Credit engaged to ſuch a Degree, refuſed to do it; but upon his Importunity, did at laſt conſent to give him a promiſſory Note of Four Hundred Pounds upon the Security of this Note, which Mr. Hales thereupon then depoſited in his Hands; that it was a Note for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, ſigned by Mr. Edwards, payable to Kinnersley, and indorſed. He ſaith, indeed, that he did not then obſerve the Indorſement. Seeing this Note ſigned with Mr. Edwards's Hand, and knowing him to be a Man of great Sufficiency, he was not ſo attentive to the other. He ſaith, that he kept this Note in his Hand till after that Mr. Hales was taken up, and then he delivered it by the Direction of Mr. Edwards to Mr. Booth; that before it

* In Trinity Term 5 Geo. there was an Information againſt this Mr. Kinnerſley and one Moore, as being evil-diſpoſed Perſons, in order to extort Money from my Lord Sunderland, did conſpire together to charge my Lord with endeavouring to commit Sodomy with the ſaid Moore; and that in Execution of this Conſpiracy, they did, in the Preſence and Hearing of ſeveral Perſons, falſely and maliciouſly accuſe my Lord, that he conatus fuit rem veneream habere with the Defendant Moore, and ſo to commit Sodomy. Kinnerſley only appeared, and pleads to Iſſue, and is found Guilty; and ſeveral Exceptions were taken in Arreſt of Judgment, ſee Strange's Reports, Vol. I. p. 193. but the Court over-ruled them all. Whereupon Judgment was given for the King, and afterwards the Court proceeded to Sentence, and told the Defendant Kinnerſley, nothing but his being a Clergyman protected him from a Corporal Puniſhment; they fined him 500*l.* a Year's Impriſonment, and to find Sureties for his good Behaviour for ſeven Years. In Eaſter Term, 5 Geo. Moore was convicted and ſentenced to ſtand in the Pillory, ſuffer a Year's Impriſonment, and to find Sureties for ſeven Years. And this Term, Kinnerſley, on Affidavits of his being indiſpoſed, moved the Court that he might be admitted to the Benefit of the Rules. Sed per Curiam, we never do it for one in Execution, which differs from the Caſe of a Perſon committed for High Treaſon, who have been bailed on account of Illneſs. Ibid. 196.

went out of his Hands, he observed the Indorsement. He swears also, that it received no Alteration in the intermediate Space between its coming into his Hands and its going out: It must be therefore indorsed before. He saith, that as to his own Note, he knoweth not what is come of it, but believes that it is in the Hands of Mr. Maddox, at the Bank. To shew that this is a forged Note they have called Mr. Spicer, who hath been above twenty Years concerned for Mr. Edwards; about ten or twelve as his Clerk. He saith that the Name is Mr. Edwards's, and that the ff is also his; that it is his Master's constant Custom, when he franks a Letter, to write the Word ffree, and not frank over his Name, in the Manner wherein this originally stood, and that always with a ff. He saith, that he likewise thinks that the r is his Master's Hand-writing, but that the o is since crouded in between those Letters. He thinks that there are plain Footsteps, which shew that the first of the two ee's, which joined to form the Word ffree, hath been made use of to form the first Part of the Head of the y, and the other Stroke being drawn between that and the other e it forms the Word ye, but then it doth not stand as usual over the y. And then he observes that he the rather believes this to be his Master's e, for that he always writes such an Hand, and all the rest here are in quite another Hand. And he saith, that he believes, that being acquainted with his Master's Affairs, he should have known of it, if that there had been any such Transaction of his Master's, and that this Note too is of a quite different Form from any that his Master ever delivered, and in a Manner wherein his Master doth not usually transact his Affairs: For that, as he is a Man of great Credit, he never knew him give a Note for Time; and in the next Place he is so very cautious, that he never knew him give a Note but that he wrote the whole Body of it with his own Hand, whereas the Body of this Note is not his own Hand, and therefore contrary to the Method that he usually observes. Thus far the Evidence is produced, in order to charge Mr. Hales, the one of the Defendants: But then in order to prove Mr. Kinnersley a Partner in this Transaction, they have afterwards observed upon the Indorsement, that this Note being made payable to Mr. Kinnersley, it could be of no Use till indorsed by him to give it a Currency. They have shewed the Hand upon the Back, and in order to prove his Name wrote there to be his Hand, as in Cases of this Nature nothing but an Observation of the Similitude of Hands can be expected, they have called on those that have seen his Hand, to give their Opinion thereof. The first Man expresseth himself with a great deal of Caution, seeming to apprehend at first that he was called to swear positively that it was his Hand: He saith, that he hath seen him write several Times, particularly at least three or four Times the last Year; that this is so like that he verily believes this to be his Hand, and cannot alter his Judgment as to it. To the same Purpose they have also produced another Person, one Mr. John Lincoln: He saith, that he hath seen him write several Times, and put his Name to Receipts in a Book; and that he cannot believe but that this is his Hand-writing. Some of you having desired to see and compare with this Note the other Note which was formerly proved, it hath been again proved; and as the Person aforementioned produced several Receipts which he saw him write, you have had them also to look upon: Which how far it will help you in forming a Judgment you are to judge. Further, they say, that Mr. Kinnersley was a Stranger to, and had no Transactions with Mr. Edwards. They have called several Persons that were present at the Examination of Mr. Kinnersley before Sir Richard Hopkins, as well as Sir Richard himself, who all say that Mr. Kinnersley himself owned this, and was going to say something further, had he not been interrupted by Mr. Mitford. Sir Richard Hopkins hath been produced. He saith, that in the latter End of September last, Mr. Kinnersley was brought before him, charged with two Notes, viz. one of Twelve Hundred and Sixty Pounds, and this Note of Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds; that they entered into the Examination of the first Note, which he owned very frankly to be his Note, written with his own Hand; that they then entered upon the other Note, which he verily believes to be the same that hath been here produced; that Mr. Kinnersley having denied this Indorsement to be his Hand, he desired him to recollect whether this Indorsement was not his Hand too, for that he observed a very great Likeness of the Hand between that and the Note which he had owned to be his Hand-writing, and delivered the Note to the Defendant Kinnersley to look upon; that upon this Mr. Mitford came up to him, and said, 'Answer nothing: This not your Hand-writing.' He saith, that upon this Mr. Kinnersley said the same Thing, that this was not his Hand-writing. He saith, that he asked him, whether he had had any Dealings with Mr. Edwards? That he replied that he had not, and that till this Time he was an utter Stranger to his Person. He saith, that Mr. Mitford and he had some high Words upon this Occasion; he reproving him for interposing when he apprehended that a further Discovery might have been made. They next endeavour to shew, that there was a Correspondence carried on in a private Manner between the two Defendants. In order to shew this, they have produced several Persons at whose Houses they have met: One of them is Thomas Bab; he saith that he keeps Peel's Coffee-house, in Fleet-street; that the latter End of last Summer Mr. Hales very frequently came thither, and would sometimes be there for an Hour or two; that he often asked whether the Minister had been there to ask for him, not asking for Mr. Kinnersley by Name, they knowing whom he meant, having often seen them there together; that when Mr. Kinnersley came in, they used to retire into a private Room, and stay there together for some Time; that one Time Mr. Hales observed Mr. Kinnersley going down Fleet-street, went out and went after him; that sometimes they went away together, sometimes asunder; sometimes one went out at the one Door into Fleet-street, and the other at the other into the Passage to Fetter-lane. He saith, that this their Resort to his House was till about a Month before that Mr. Hales was taken up, and was then discontinued. Mr. Kinnersley asking him, whether they ever called for Pen, Ink and Paper? To this he replied, No. Of the same Nature is the Evidence of Thomas Brooks; he saith, that he keeps a Coffee-house at Downing-street, in Westminster; that Mr. Kinnersley used to come to his House, send for a Porter, and give him a Note to Mr. Hales, who thereupon hath come thither to him, and they have gone together by themselves to the further End of the Room; that this they did several Times, and stayed together sometimes several Hours. He saith, that once particularly they staid there till it was so dark that he asked his Servant why he had not carried the Gentlemen a Candle; who said that he had carried them one, but they refused it. Gentlemen, they have then again had Resort to the Examination before Sir Richard Hopkins: They have, as to this, called Mr. Wright. He saith, that he was present at that Examination; and that Mr. Kinnersley, being pressed to answer several Questions put to him, was in some Emotion, and said, I will tell you all, give me leave; seeming desirous to take Time to digest his Thoughts: That then one Mr. Mitford came up to him, and bade him hold his Tongue, or he would do himself some Mischief, or Words to that Effect. He being examined as to some Particulars that Mr. Kinnersley affirmed to have passed between Sir Richard Hopkins and Mr. Mitford, and that Sir Richard advised him to take his Friend's Advice, he denieth this, as doth also Sir Richard Hopkins himself, to whom Mr. Kinnersley hereupon appealed. He saith, that he thinks that this Interruption was after that having owned the other Note to be his Hand-writing, he had denied this Indorsement to be his, whereas Sir Richard thought it before, and designed to prevent his answering him on that Head. They have also produced Mr. March, who is Sir Richard Hopkins's Clerk; he gives you much the same Account. He saith, that Mr. Kinnersley having owned the other Note, and denied this Indorsement to be his Hand, Sir Richard observing the Likeness of the Hand, advised him to recollect himself, and consider well whether that Indorsement was not his Hand too as well as the other Note, for that the Hands were very like; that Mr. Mitford upon that interposed, and said, 'I would have you cautious, and not answer that Question.' He denies that Sir Richard advised Mr. Kinnersley to take his Friend's Advice; but on the contrary saith, that Sir Richard was a little warm, and reprehended him for his interposing, as being an Interruption of Justice. This is the Evidence that hath been laid before you as to this Note, both to prove the Forgery of this Note, and to shew the Use that was made of it both by Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnersley, who is charged with the indorsing this Note in order to make it current. They are called upon to make their Defence: Mr. Hales stands mute, and saith nothing. The Facts bear very hard upon him, he being supposed to procure these Franks: It behoved him therefore to give some Account how he came by this Note. So as to that I apprehend that there is no Difficulty, Mr. Hales making no Defence. But the Question is, How far Mr. Kinnersley is proved to be concerned? His Counsel have endeavoured to soften the Evidence, or make it not applicable to Mr. Kinnersley. They own that there was a Familiarity between him and Mr. Hales: But then they say, that there was also a Familiarity between Mr. Hales and Mr. Edwards: They say therefore, that Familiarity with Mr. Hales is not a criminal Thing. In itself it is not: But the Question is, Whether a criminal Use hath been made of it? They suppose it to be a forged Indorsement; but say, that the same Person that forged the Note might also forge the Indorsement: And they say, that supposing it to be Mr. Kinnersley's Hand-writing, it may be well supposed that he was easily imposed upon. And they would also have it believed, that this is an usual Thing for one Person to indorse another's Notes among common Acquaintance. But how were they common Acquaintance, when Mr. Kinnersley hath acknowledged that he had never seen Mr. Edwards in his Life till after this? They say, that it may be the easier supposed that Mr. Kinnersley did thus give Credit to this as a true Note, and not take it to be a Forgery, since Mr. Thrup, who is a Man in Business, was imposed upon by it, and lent Four Hundred Pound upon it. They have called also some Evidence, not directly to controvert the Fact, but to contradict some Things given in Evidence, relating to the Examination taken before Sir Richard Hopkins. To this Purpose they have called Mr. John Hayes. He saith, that whether this Indorsement was his Writing was not the Question proposed to Mr. Kinnersley, when Mr. Mitford interposed, he having before denied that; but that there was another Question, that was then proposed to him to answer; Whether and how often he had been to visit Mr. Hales in Newgate? And he saith, that as to that it was that Mr. Mitford interposed, and advised him not to answer to that Question. They have called also Mr. Ward, who was present at the same Time, and gives you much the same Account. He apprehends that there was a Dispute about the Minutes that were taken of what had passed, and that Mr. Kinnersley was in a Passion, and desired to be examined in the Court of Aldermen; and that then Mr. Mitford interposed, and advised him not to desire this; that the Interruption was upon that extravagant Offer of his, and that upon that possibly Sir Richard might advise him to take his Friend's Advice, that is, to be clear and not so rash in answering the Questions put to him. Mr. Kinnersley himself hath laid before you what he thought proper. The Witnesses that were called (you have doubtless observed) as to that Examination, both of them say, that he had denied it before the Interposure. Mr. Kinnersley speaks himself and seems to say, that he doth not know but that it may be his Hand, though how it came to be obtained he cannot well tell. Indeed it is an extraordinary Thing how his Name should be obtained on the Back of a Note signed by Mr. Edwards. Gentlemen, if any other Particulars, material for their Defence, have slipped me, you have heard them, and they ought to have their Weight. The Question is, Whether and how far he is a Party in this Transaction? If he be a Party, though he doth but the one Part, he is equally guilty: Every Man that takes Part of these Things is equally guilty of the whole, and stands undefended. The Note then must be taken for a forged Note, and probably in the Manner that they have shewn. The Thing in Question is, How far Mr. Kinnersley is concerned? The Name Kinnersley, you see, is upon it: If his Name had not been upon it, the Note had been of no Avail; for there having been no Transactions between them, he could not have demanded the Money. But the main Business was to indorse it, that other Persons that knew not but there might have been such Transactions between them, might credit it, and lend Money upon it. Whether the Proof that is given you that this is his Hand, coupled with his own Apprehension that it is very like his Hand, will satisfy you of it, you must judge. If you judge that it is his Hand, the next Question before you will be, How far it could be put to a Note of Mr. Edwards's? It is plain that there could be no Foundation for it: If then you think it satisfactorily proved that his Hand was put on the Back of this Paper by him, knowing it to be a Note of such Value, and there be no Reason given you for it, you must look on him as a Party; but if you ſuppoſe it put to the Back of the Note without his Privity, in that View of the Thing you muſt acquit him.

(Jury called over.)

Clerk. Are you all agreed in your Verdict?——Jury. Agreed.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?——Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How ſay you: Is William Hales guilty of the Meſdemeanour wherewith he ſtands charged, in forging a Note for Sixteen Hundred and Fifty Pounds, and indorſing the ſame, and in publiſhing the ſame as a true Note and Indorſement, knowing it to be ſo forged and counterfeited, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk. How ſay you, Is Thomas Kinnerſley, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, we deſire that Mr. Kinnerſley, may be now committed.

Judge Reynolds. Whence was he brought hither?

Mr. Strange. From the Compter.

Judge Reynolds. Well, now that he is convicted, he muſt be committed.

Mr. Kinnerſley. Whither, my Lord?—Judge Reynolds. To Newgate.

Mr. Kinnerſley. But, my Lord, there are two Writs againſt me which fix me to the Compter.

Judge Reynolds. They will follow you doubteſs to Newgate.

Mr. Kinnerſley. But, my Lord, the Order of the Lord Chief-Juſtice was, that I ſhould be committed to the Compter till diſcharged.

Judge Reynolds. Your being ordered to Newgate, is a Diſcharge from the Compter.

Mr. Kinnerſley. I bleſs God that I go back innocent of the Charge againſt me.

Judge Reynolds. If you do in your own Apprehenſion, it is not ſo in the Apprehenſion of the Jury.

Mr. Kinnerſley. My Lord, I thought I had cleared that Matter. If Mr. Hales had brought me that Note to ſign, I believe that I ſhould have ſigned it: But I ſhould not have done it, if I had known that Mr. Edwards's Name was fraudulently obtained to it. May I never ſee the Face of Almighty God, if I was ever privy to any of Mr. Hales's Forgeries! If your Lordſhip pleaſe to direct me to Newgate, I deſire it may be immediately, for I am ill, having been here ſo long.

Judge Reynolds. It will be preſently, for the Court is going to adjourn.

IX. The Trial of William Hales, for fraudulently forging and counterfeiting a Writing, purporting to be a Promiſſory Note of Samuel Edwards, Eſq. to Samuel Lee, for Four Thouſand Seven Hundred Pounds.

The Jury called over and ſworn.

Clerk. OYEZ. OYEZ. If any one can inform, &c. Indictment.] Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales ſtands indicted by the Name of William Hales, of London, late Goldſmith; for that on the firſt of Auguſt, in the ſecond Year of his Majeſty's Reign, he did fraudulently forge and counterfeit a Writing, purporting to be a promiſſary Note, in theſe Words following,

March 30, 1728.

Six Months after Date, I promiſe to pay to Samuel Lee, or his Order, the Sum of Four Thouſand Seven Hundred Pounds, for ye Value received, and that he did knowingly and wittingly publiſh the ſame as a true Note, knowing the ſame to be ſo forged and counterfeited.

Samuel Edwards.

Mr. Strange. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt Mr. William Hales, for forging a Note in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Eſq. and publiſhing the ſame. It ſets forth, that on the firſt of Auguſt, in the ſecond Year of his Majeſty's Reign, he forged a Note in theſe Words following, &c.

And it further ſets forth, that the Defendant publiſhed the ſaid forged Note as a true Note of Mr. Edwards's, knowing the ſame to be forged and counterfeited.

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am Counſel in this Cauſe for the King. Gentlemen, this Matter is of the ſame Nature with ſome former Indictments: I ſhall therefore take up but little of your Time. It appears, Gentlemen, to us, that this is the Effect of ſome Frank Covers, that Mr. Hales hath fraudulently obtained of Mr. Edwards. I need not now acquaint you, that Mr. Edwards did for ſome Time indulge Mr. Hales with Frank Covers, which Mr. Hales pretended that they were deſigned for ſending News into the Country. This Note, Gentlemen, is even a groſſer Forgery than the others can be ſuppoſed to be. Here is a Sum of Four Thouſand Seven Hundred Pounds, which Mr. Edwards is ſuppoſed to promiſe to pay within ſix Months after Date to Samuel Lee. This Lee we have inquired into the Character of. He is one that is worth nothing: He is a ſea-faring Man, and his Wife was Nurſe to Mr. Hales's Children: This Man is not very likely to have a promiſſory Note for Four Thouſand Seven Hundred Pounds. Gentlemen, when you come to look upon this Note, you will ſee on it the plaineſt Marks of Forgery that can be. When you come to look upon it, you will plainly ſee that ffree Samuel Edwards ſtill remains viſible. There is the double f which Mr. Edwards generally uſeth, which we ſhall prove by Witneſs. And then between the ff and the r there is an o ſtruck in, which you will plainly ſee is not the ſame Writing with the ff, nor the ſame with Samuel Edwards. And then to make out the ye you will ſee the two ee's are contrived to make a y with a Stroke at the Bottom of the e, but that ſtill the two ee's ſeem viſible, and to be wrote by the ſame Party that wrote the ff. I will appeal herein to your own Eye-ſight. Then there is a Dot at the End of the y, and then Value received. You will ſee a conſiderable Depth beneath, and that it muſt be cut off from ſomething elſe. How it was, it concerns Mr. Hales to ſhew. As to the Method wherein this came to be diſcovered, it is ſufficient to tell you, that this had been occaſioned by the Diſcovery of a Note forged in the Name of Mr. Gibſon, an Apprehenſion and Commitment of Mr. Hales; that this gave occaſion for ſeveral Perſons to inquire into the Validity of thoſe Notes which they had received from Mr. Hales. As upon Inquiry ſeveral other Notes that have been before you were diſcovered, ſo at length it came to be diſcovered, that Mr. Hales had delivered to Sir Biby Lake this promiſſory Note, made in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Eſq. payable within ſix Months after Date to Samuel Lee, for Four Thouſand Seven hundred Pounds. It was upon this Occaſion that it came to be delivered to Sir Biby Lake: Mr. Hales had been harraſſed with ſeveral Judgments againſt him: To keep off the evil Day as long as poſſible, it was neceſſary to procure ſome ſubſtantial Perſon to be Bail for him; Sir Biby Lake was applied to, being a very ſubſtantial Gentleman. It being on a Writ of Error, and for a conſiderable Sum, that he was deſired to be Bail for Mr. Hales, he made a Scruple, and refuſed it at firſt: At length to induce him to it, Mr. Hales ſaid to him, Sir, you ſhall be at no manner of Riſk; I have a promiſſory Note for Four Thouſand and Seven Hundred Pounds, which is made by Mr. Edwards, who is a ſubſtantial Man, payable within ſix Months: This will be an ample Security, if an Execution ſhould come upon you for the affirming of this Judgment. Upon this Sir Biby Lake was induced to be his Security; thus he came to have this Note delivered to him. Gentlemen, when we ſhew you, as we muſt, it being a freſh Caſe, how he had Franks from Mr. Edwards, the Method wherein he hath made this Uſe thereof, and then that this Note was thus delivered to Sir Biby Lake; and you have conſidered the ſeveral Circumſtances of the Caſe, it will appear both that this is a forged Note, and by whom it was forged; that Mr. Hales was the Perſon on whom it muſt be charged.

Mr. Strange. Gentlemen, I would obſerve to you, which you will plainly ſee, that here is Mr. Edwards's double ff, and then an o crouded in between that and the r; and that there not being ſufficient Room, therefore the Word Pound is crouded in, in a narrow Manner, and then follows the ff, ſo that it is not poſſible to ſuppoſe that if any Gentleman had wrote it before the ff was wrote, he would have crouded the Word Pound into ſo narrow a Room. But there was then a Neceſſity for it.

Thomas Maddox, Anne Clarke, and Mr. Booth were called, ſworn, and depoſed as before; and the Note of Directions was again read.

(Mr. Spicer ſworn.)

Mr. Strange. Pleaſe to look on that Note, and tell us how much thereof you take to be Mr. Edwards's?

Mr. Spicer. The Name is his, the ff and the r is alſo his. The o ſeems not to be of the ſame Ink, and is afterwards crouded in. The y is not his.

Mr. Strange. What is Mr. Edwards's Way of franking?

Mr. Spicer. Free Samuel Edwards. Free he uſually writes with a ff.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know him in franking, make uſe of the Word Frank?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir.

Mr. Strange. How long have you been acquainted with him?

Mr. Spicer. About twenty-four Years, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever know him any ways concerned with Samuel Lee?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Do you know him?——Mr. Spicer. No, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Do you think, that being acquainted with Mr. Edwards's Concerns, you ſhould have known if there had been any Money Concerns between them?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir, I believe that I ſhould.

Mr. Strange. What further Reaſons have you to believe this not to be his Note?

Mr. Spicer. I can never believe this to be his Note, for he never gives any promiſſory Note for Time, nor any Note at all, without writing the whole Note with his own Hand.

(Sir Biby Lake called and ſworn.)

Mr. Serj. Whitaker. Sir, pray pleaſe to give us an Account, when you ſaw that Note firſt, upon what Occaſion it was brought to you, and by whom it was delivered to you?

Sir Biby Lake. About this Time Twelvemonth Mr. William Hales ſent Mr. Kinnerſley to me at my Houſe in Croſby Square, who told me that Mr. Hales was arreſted upon account of a Bond given by him, and Mr. Robert Hales, to Dr. Mapleton of Canterbury; that the Doctor having arreſted Mr. William Hales, he deſired that I would be Bail for him. I deſired Mr. Kinnerſley to meet me in the Evening: We then went to the Judges Chambers, and gave Bail to the Action. I thought, that there being no Difficulty in the Gentleman's Appearance, there would be no Damage in doing that for a Friend. Afterwards Mr. Hales came himſelf to me, and deſired me that I would be Bail again for him. I told him that it was ſomewhat extraordinary; but that however I would meet him at Mr. Turner's at Staples Inn, to conſider what to do. He came to me there about Four or Five, and brought a Gentleman with him, who he told me was his Attorney. At firſt, he told me not: But afterwards, we underſtood that it was to a Writ of Error that I was deſired to be put in Bail. I was then told by Mr. Turner, that if I was Bail to that, I muſt pay the Money if they did not. Upon this, I told Mr. Hales that I cared not to be Bail in ſuch a Matter as this, unleſs he would give me good Security. He told me that he was going to Peel's Coffee-houſe, deſired that I would conſider of it, and come to him again. I ſtaid to conſult Mr. Turner, and told him that I would not be Bail except Mr. Hales would give me good Security. I then went to Peel's Coffee-houſe, and there found Mr. Hales and Mr. Kinnerſley together. I took Mr. Hales to another Part of the Room, and told him, that I would not endanger myſelf and my Family ſo far as to engage for ſuch a Sum, it being about Fifteen Hundred Pounds, unleſs he would give me good Security. Upon this he put his Hand in his Pocket, took out his Pocket-Book, and took out of it this Note. He looked upon it, and ſaid, that it was a promiſſory Note for Four Thouſand and odd Pounds, and was payable within two or three Months after. He put it into my Hand: I looked upon it, and thought it was very good Security to me for ſuch a Sum. He deſired that I would keep it in my own Hand till the Money that I was Security for was paid; but ſaid, that he would pay the Money long before I could be called upon: I thought I had ſufficient Satisfaction, Satisfaction, and went thereupon before the Lord Chief-Justice Raymond, and gave Bail to the Writ of Error.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Sir, I would desire you to look on the Note, and on the Back of it, and tell us whether it hath had any Alteration?

Sir Biby Lake. None, Sir, that I know of. But I must give you a particular Account of one Thing. It was not all the Time in the same Custody. Before I came there, my Servant went and waited for me with my Horse in Holborn, I being going out of Town. Going therefore to Mr. Turner's, I desired him to lay it by for me in his Drawer, where he hath other Papers of mine. Accordingly he did lay it up; and from that Time it was (I suppose) in Mr. Turner's Custody, till after the Time that Mr. Hales was taken up. When that happened, Mr. Harle of the Million Bank sent me Word thereof. Upon that, when I came in, I went to Mr. Harle, and told him that I had such a Note of Mr. Edwards's in my Hand; and (said I) hearing that you have a Suspicion that the Note that is in your Hands is a bad Note, I have some Reason to desire you to go to Mr. Edwards, and acquaint him, that I have such a Note in Mr. Turner's Custody, who is now in Derbyshire. All that I could then do, was to desire Mr. Turner's Clerk to send to him for the Key, that we might take out the Note and shew it. The Clerk did so; and after some Time had the Key sent him, took out the Note, and I desired him to carry it to Mr. Edwards. It was the same Day that the Note became due.

Mr. Turner called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Mr. Turner, pray please to look upon that Note, and give us an Account when you first saw it?

Mr. Turner. I believe it was one Day in the Beginning of July last, about five or six o'Clock in the Afternoon: I cannot be particular as to the Day, but I believe that it was the same Day that Sir Biby Lake gave Bail to the Writ of Error. He then brought me the Note to lay by for him. I verily believe this to be the same Note.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Hath it had any Alteration since?

Mr. Turner. No, Sir. He desired me to put it for him in a Drawer, where I had other of his Papers: Accordingly I did: I went out of Town in August. Afterwards my Clerk sent me Word, that Sir Biby Lake desired that I would send up the Key of the Drawers, in order to his Notes being taken out. Upon that I sent up the Key to my Clerk, directed him in which Drawer the Note was, desired that he would take it out, and carry it to Sir Biby Lake.

Mr. More called and sworn.

Mr. Strange. Do you remember, Sir, to have received a Key from Mr. Turner?---Mr. More. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Strange. Did you thereupon find this Note in the Drawer?

Mr. More. Yes, Sir; in the Drawer of the Desk.

Mr. Strange. Did you make any Alterations in it?

Mr. More. No, Sir; I took it out, and carried it to Mr. Edwards.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Spicer, you are acquainted with Mr. Edwards's Way of Dealing. When he gives a Promissory Note, doth he write the whole Note?

Mr. Spicer. Yes, Sir; I never knew him give any but that he wrote the whole Note.

Mr. Strange. Doth he use to give Notes for Time?

Mr. Spicer. No, Sir, never.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, we now desire that the Note may be read.

Note read. March 30, 1728.

Six Months after Date, I promise to pay to Samuel Lee, or his Order, the Sum of Four Thousand Seven Hundred Pounds, ffor the Value received,

Samuel Edwards.

Indorsed Samuel Lee.

Mr. Strange. You will observe, Gentlemen, the Word ffrte is legible still, and observe how the Word Pounds is crouded in.

Mr. Bird called and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Sir, do you know Mr. Samuel Lee?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. What is he?---Mr. Bird. A sea-faring Man.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Do you know his Wife?---Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Did she nurse a Child for Mr. Hales?

Mr. Bird. Yes, Sir; two for several Years.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Is he a Man of Worth?

Mr. Bird. No, Sir; he is not worth five Pounds in the World.

Mr. Serj. Raby. What say you to this, Mr. Hales? You see that they have given an Account of the Method that you took to procure Frank Covers. This Note they say, that you published as a true Note, how should it come to pass, that such a poor Person as this Lee is should indorse over such a Note to you?

Mr. Hales. Mr. Lee gave it me, there being Monies due to me.

Mr. Serj. Raby. If you can prove any Transaction between you and that Lee, to induce the Jury to believe that it was given you upon that Consideration, it will be proper now to do it.---Mr. Hales. He is gone abroad.

Mr. Serj. Raby. Is there any Person that can be Witness of any such Transaction?---Mr. Hales. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Raby. Gentlemen of the Jury, William Hales of London, late Goldsmith, stands indicted for forging a Note for Four Thousand and Seven Hundred Pounds, payable within six Months after Date to Samuel Lee, or Order, in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Esq. and for publishing the same as a true Note. You see, Gentlemen, that there have been several Witnesses produced to shew how he got Possession of Frank Covers, on Pretence of sending News into the Country; and that he sent a Paper of Directions for some, which Directions were very short, and so convenient for the writing in the intermediate Space over the Name, such a Note as this. And they have sworn that these Directions are his Hand, which were sent over by his Servant to Mr. Edwards for Franks. Now to shew you that this Note was published by this Man as a true Note, and that he is guilty hereof, Sir Biby Lake hath appeared. He tells you, that there were two several Applications to him to be Bail for Mr. Hales; that he complied readily with the one, but the other he made more Scruple of, because it was more dangerous; it being to a Writ of Error, and for about Fifteen Hundred Pounds. He was therefore more cautious, and would not do it without Security. He tells you, that upon this, this Note was offered and deposited in his Hands by the Prisoner. This, if you are satisfied of it, fixed the Note upon the Prisoner. It appears hereby, that it was in the Hands of the Prisoner. He cannot shew you how he came by it: That then is a strong Proof to fix the Charge in this Indictment upon him. Where a forged Note is found in a Person's Possession, and it appears that he offered it as a true one, and cannot give an Account how he came by it, that fixeth the Charge of forging it upon him. This Note was published in the City of London, and therefore the Forgery in the Indictment is fixed there: For it is impossible to know certainly where a Note is forged, since no one calls Evidence to see him forge a Note. Thus it appears to have been in his Custody, and it cannot otherwise be proved. Other Witnesses have been produced, to shew that the Note hath not been altered since it was delivered by him. Mr. Turner tells you, that he received it from Sir Biby Lake the Day that he received it from Mr. Hales, and laid it by for him in his Drawer; so that from the Time that it was published, it continueth in the same State that it then was. Other Circumstances have been laid before you, as the Manner of Mr. Edwards's making out any Notes. He doth not give out any Promissory Note made for Time, nor doth he ever give out any whatsoever but such as are all of his own Hand-writing. Another Circumstance that hath been laid before you, relates to the Person to whom this Note is made payable. It looks like a Contrivance to have it all in his own Management, in the Hands of his Servant, and within his own reach; that this Note should be made payable to a poor Man, whose Wife was Nurse to Mr. Hales's Children, and the Witness believes him not to be worth five Pounds in the World. How should he be intituled to this Bill for such a Sum, which he might have indorsed to any other Person? No one sure would trust such a Note with such a Person. He could not be possessed of it in his own Right, and no other Person would intrust a Man, not worth five Pounds, with a Note of this Value. This Circumstance they offer to your Consideration: And they take Notice of some Letters which shew that there was originally ffree, which is now turned into for the before Value received. It appears that it was ffree Samuel Edwards: And it is almost legible notwithstanding the Alteration that hath been made. He hath said nothing in his Defence to shew how he came by that Note. He saith that Lee gave it him. Is it likely that a Man not worth five Pounds in the World should give out such a Note as this? Though there is no direct Evidence of his forging it, that makes no Alteration: If he directed it to be done, it is the same Thing as if he did it himself; nor doth it appear that any but himself is concerned therein. He having published it, is guilty not only of the Publication, but of the forging of it: If you believe it to be a forged Note, he is guilty of the Forgery. His publishing of the Note is a sufficient Evidence of it. If a Man had received such a Note, he would readily say, I received it of such a Person on such an Occasion: But there hath been no Evidence of this Nature given. If you ask a Man, how he came by this or that Thing, he saith another gave it him: That may be said in every criminal Case; it is often said, but never regarded except proved. You are then to consider all these Circumstances, and to judge thereupon whether it is a forged Note; whether it is likely that Lee should have a Note of this Value, and that there should be any Reason for his delivering such a Note? There have been no Pretence of any Transactions between this Lee and Mr. Edwards, nor any Colour of Proof on what Consideration the Gentleman should write such a Note payable to such a Man, and give it him. Gentlemen, here is as full and plain Proof as can be expected, if the Evidence swear true; so I leave it to you.

Clerk. Are you all agreed in your Verdict?---Jury. Agreed.

Clerk. Who shall speak for you?---Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. How say you, Is William Hales Guilty of the Misdemeanour whereof he stands indicted in forging a Note in the Name of Samuel Edwards, Esq. for Four Thousand Seven Hundred Pounds, and publishing the same, or Not Guilty?---Foreman. Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, the Note being found to be forged, we desire that Sir Biby Lake may deliver it to Mr. Edwards.

Sir William Thompson. That is but common Justice.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, there is another Indictment: But we will not trouble your Lordship with that; therefore the Jury may be discharged.

Mr. Serj. Whit. My Lord, we think it proper to take notice, that upon the three Indictments whereof he hath been found guilty on the Statute of King Henry VIII. for obtaining Money by false Tokens, there can be no Fine in the Case: We must therefore crave corporal Punishment.

Sir. William Thompson. The Question is, What corporal Punishment? To be sure he will be pilloryed.

Mr. Serj. Whit. The Pillory, my Lord, is nothing. The Gentleman hath endeavoured to get many Thousand Pounds of several Gentlemen: Now he is only to look through a wooden Casement, and this is to make Recompence. We humbly hope, that according to the Words of the Act of Parliament, some Punishment will be ordered, not only ignominious but corporal Punishment, as the Words are very extensive.

Sir William Thompson. The Court to be sure will order Imprisonment, as well as the Pillory, and Security afterward.

Mr. Serj. Whit. But should not the Punishment left to the Discretion of the Court be extended to something further?

Sir. William Thompson. I am not for extending it to Torture. I know not any Precedent; nor would I begin any Thing of that Nature. The King himself is limited by our Law.

Mr. Serj. Whit. The Penalty seems left to the Discretion of this Court.

Sir William Thompson. I would not extend it. I do not know but that the Parliament may think of something else afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Whit. Well, Sir, I have laid it before you. I submit it.

The Judgment of the Court.

That Willam Hales and Thomas Kinnersley should stand twice in the Pillory; once in Fleet-Street, at the End of Fetter-Lane, and once at the Royal-Exchange, in Cornhill.

That Hales should pay a Fine of fifty Marks, suffer five Years Imprisonment, and give Security for his good Behaviour for seven Years afterwards. And

That Kinnersley ſhould pay a Fine of Two Hundred Pounds (an Hundred on each Indictment), ſuffer two Years Impriſonment, and give Security for his good Behaviour for three Years longer.

Mr. Hales begged that two Years of his Impriſonment might be remitted on account of his Age; but it was not granted.

February 11 following, Hales and Kinnersley ſtood in the Pillory at the Royal-Exchange in Cornhill.

February 15. They both ſtood again in the Pillory at Fetter-Lane End, in Fleet-Street. Kinnersley ſtood both Times in his Canonical Habit, thinking to draw Compaſſion and Reſpect from the Populace, but it had the contrary Effect.

Feb. 18th following, died in the Preſs-Yard in Newgate the ſaid William Hales; and April 7, 1729, died in the ſame Place, of a Fever, Thomas Kinnersley, Clerk.

Forgery is now made Felony, without Benefit of Clergy; as is likewiſe the publiſhing any forged Deed, Will, Bond, Note, Indorſement, &c. knowing them to be forged, by the Stat. 2. Geo. II. and 7 Geo. II. which ſee for the ſeveral particular Caſes there mentioned.

X. Proceedings againſt John Huggins, Eſq. Warden of the Fleet, Thomas Bambridge, Eſq. Warden of the Fleet, Richard Corbet, one of the Tipſtaffs of the Fleet, and William Acton, Keeper of the Marſhalſea Priſon.

A Report from the Committee of the Houſe of Commons appointed to enquire into the State of the Gaols of this Kingdom, ſo far as relates to the cruel Uſage of the Priſoners; which occaſioned the following Trials.

Jovis, 20 Die Martii, 1728.

MR. Oglethorpe, from the Committee appointed to inquire into the State of the Gaols of this Kingdom, made a Report of ſome Progreſs which the Committee had made in their Inquiry into the State of the Fleet Priſon, with the Reſolutions of the Committee thereupon; and he read the Report in his Place, and afterwards delivered the ſame in at the Table, viz.

The Committee find, That the Fleet Priſon is an ancient Priſon, and formerly uſed for the Reception of the Priſoners committed by the Council-Table, then called the Court of the Star-Chamber, which exerciſed unlimited Authority, and inflicted heavier Puniſhments than by any Law were warranted.

And as that aſſumed Authority was found to be an intolerable Burden to the Subject, and the Means to introduce an Arbitrary Power and Government, all Juriſdiction, Power, and Authority belonging unto, or exerciſed in the ſame Court, or by any the Judges, Officers, or Miniſters thereof, were clearly and abſolutely diſſolved, taken away, and determined, by an Act made in the ſixteenth Year of the Reign of King Charles the Firſt.

And thereby the Committee apprehend all Pretences of the Warden of the Fleet to take Fees from Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Temporal Peers, Baronets, and others of lower Degree, or to put them in Irons, or exact Fees for not doing ſo, were determined, and aboliſhed.

That after the ſaid Act took Place, the Fleet Priſon became a Priſon for Debtors, and for Contempts of the Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, and Common-Pleas only, and fell under the ſame Regulations as other Gaols of this Kingdom.

That by an Act of the 22d and 23d of King Charles the Second, the future Government of all Priſons was veſted in the Lords Chief-Juſtices, the Chief-Baron, or any two of them, for the Time being; and the Juſtices of the Peace in London, Middleſex, and Surry; and the Judges for the ſeveral Circuits; and the Juſtices of the Peace, for the Time being, in their ſeveral Precincts: And purſuant thereunto, ſeveral Orders and Regulations have been made, which the preſent Warden of the Fleet hath not regarded or complied with, but hath exerciſed an unwarrantable and arbitrary Power, not only in extorting exorbitant Fees, but in oppreſſing Priſoners for Debt, by loading them with Irons, worſe than if the Star-Chamber was ſtill ſubſiſting, and contrary to the great Charter, the Foundation of the Liberty of the Subject, and in Defiance and Contempt thereof, as well as of other good Laws of this Kingdom.

It appears by a Patent of the third Year of Queen Elizabeth, recited in Letters Patents bearing Date the nineteenth Year of King Charles the Second, That the Fleet Priſon was an ancient Priſon, called Priſona de le Fleet, alias, The Queen's Gaol of the Fleet; and that certain Conſtitutions were then eſtabliſhed by Agreement between Richard Tyrrell, Warden, and the Priſoners of the Fleet, and a Table of Fees annexed, in which the Fees to be paid by an Archbiſhop, Duke, Marquis, Earl, or other Lord Spiritual or Temporal, are particularly mentioned, and the Fine aſcertained which they are to pay for the Liberty of the Houſe and Irons; and that theſe Conſtitutions and Orders were confirmed by the ſaid Letters Patent of King Charles the Second: Which Letters Patent grant the Office of Warden of the Fleet, and of the Keeper of the Old Palace at Weſtminſter, the Shops in Weſtminſter-Hall, certain Tenements adjoining to the Fleet, and other Rents and Profits belonging to the Warden, to Sir Jeremy Whitchcot and his Heirs for ever. And the ſaid Sir Jeremy rebuilt the ſaid Priſon at his own Expence, as a Conſideration for the Grant thereof. But the ſaid Priſon, and the Cuſtody of the Priſoners, being a Freehold, and falling by Deſcent or Purchaſe into the Hands of Perſons incapable of executing the Office of Warden, was the Occaſion of great Abuſes, and frequent Complaints to Parliament, till at length the Patent was ſet aſide.

And a Patent for Life was granted to Baldwyn Leighton, Eſq. in Conſideration of his great Pains and Expences in ſuing the former Patentees to a Forfeiture; and he ſoon dying, John Huggins, Eſq. by giving 5000*l.* to the late Lord Clarendon, did, by his Intereſt, obtain a Grant of the ſaid Office for his own and his Son's Life.

That it appeared to the Committee, That in the Year 1725, one Mr. Arne, an Upholder, was carried into a Stable which ſtood where the ſtrong Room on the Maſter's Side now is, and was there confined (being a Place of cold Reſtraint) till he died, and that he was in good State of Health before he was confined to that Room.

That the ſaid John Huggins growing in Years, and willing to retire from Buſineſs, and his Son not caring to take upon him ſo troubleſome an Office, he hath for ſeveral Years been engaged in continual Negotiations about the Diſpoſal of the ſaid Office, and in Auguſt laſt concluded a final Treaty with Thomas Bambridge and Dougal Cuthbert, Eſqrs. and for 5000*l.* to be paid unto him, obliged himſelf to ſurrender the ſaid Patent for his and his Son's Life, and procure a new Patent for the ſaid Bambridge and Cuthbert, which the ſaid Huggins did accordingly obtain, and Cuthbert paid in Money, or gave good Security to pay 2500*l.* for one Moiety of the ſaid Office of Warden; and Bambridge gave Land and other Security, which the ſaid Huggins was then content with, for 2500*l.* being for the other Moiety of the ſaid Office.

That Mr. Huggins being examined touching an Inſtrument ſigned by him in November 1724, appointing Richard Corbett, one of the five Tipſtaffs of or belonging to the Fleet Priſon, acknowledged that he had no Power by Virtue of any Patent from the Crown to conſtitute ſuch Tipſtaff but that when he came to his Office he found that ſuch an Officer had been ſo conſtituted, and he took that for a Precedent to do the ſame.

That ſince the ſaid Thomas Bambridge has acted as Warden, the Books belonging to the Office of the Warden have been very negligently kept, and the Diſcharges not duly entered, to the great Prejudice of many of his Majeſty's Subjects; and he hath not regularly taken Charge of the Priſoners committed to his Care by his Patent; and hath not, as he himſelf confeſſeth, ever had any authentick Liſt of the Priſoners in the Rules delivered him, ſo he cannot have executed the Truſt of keeping his Priſoners in ſafe Cuſtody, when he did not know who or where they were.

The Commiteee find that the ſaid Thomas Bambridge, who for ſome Years acted as Deputy-Warden of the Fleet, and is now actually Warden of that Priſon, hath himſelf been aiding and aſſiſting in an Eſcape: That he cauſed a private Door to be made through the Walls of the Priſon out of the Yard where the Dogs are, the Key of which Door was kept by himſelf, and he with his own Hands opened the Door and let out Boyce, the Smuggler, charged at the King's Suit with upwards of 30,000*l.* and was afterwards ſeen at Iſlington, and hath been ſeveral Times let out of the Priſon by Bambridge.

The Committee find that the ſaid Bambridge hath by himſelf and his Agents often refuſed to admit Priſoners into the Priſon, though committed by due Courſe of Law; and in order to extort Money from them, hath often, contrary to an Act of the Twenty-ſecond and Twenty-third of King Charles II. without their free and voluntary Conſent, cauſed them to be carried away from the Priſon Gate unto a publick Victualling or Drinking-Houſe, commonly called a Spunging-Houſe, belonging to him the ſaid Bambridge as Warden, and rented of him by Corbett his Tipſtaff, and hath there kept them at exorbitant Charges, and forced them to call for more Liquor than they were inclined to, and to ſpend more than they were able to afford, to the defrauding of their Creditors, and the diſtreſſing of their Families, whoſe Subſtance they are compelled there to conſume; and for the more effectual making them ſtretch their poor Remains of Credit, and to ſqueeze out of them the Charity of their Friends, each Priſoner is better or worſe treated according to his Expences, ſome being allowed a handſome Room and Bed to themſelves, ſome ſtowed in Garrets, three in one Bed, and ſome put in Irons.

That theſe Houſes were further uſed by the ſaid Bambridge, as a Terror for extorting Money from the Priſoners, who on Security given have the Liberty of the Rules; of which Mr. Robert Caſtell was an unhappy Inſtance, a Man born to a competent Eſtate, but being unfortunately plunged in Debt, was thrown into Priſon; he was firſt ſent (according to Cuſtom) to Corbett's, from whence he by Preſents to Bambridge redeemed himſelf, and, giving Security, obtained the Liberty of the Rules; notwithſtanding which he had frequently Preſents, as they are called, exacted from him by Bambridge, and was menaced, on Refuſal, to be ſent back to Corbett's again.

The ſaid Bambridge having thus unlawfully extorted large Sums of Money from him in a very ſhort Time, Caſtell grew weary of being made ſuch a wretched Property, and reſolving not to injure farther his Family or his Creditors for the ſake of ſo ſmall a Liberty, he refuſed to ſubmit to further Exactions; upon which the ſaid Bambridge ordered him to be recommitted to Corbett's, where the Small-Pox then raged, though Caſtell acquainted him with his not having had that Diſtemper, and that he dreaded it ſo much, that the putting him into a Houſe where it was would occaſion his Death, which, if it happened before he could ſettle his Affairs, would be a great Prejudice to his Creditors, and would expoſe his Family to Deſtructioon; and therefore he earneſtly deſired that he might either be ſent to another Houſe, or even into the Gaol itſelf, as a Favour. The melancholy Caſe of this Poor Gentleman moved the very Agents of the ſaid Bambridge to Compaſſion, ſo that they alſo uſed their utmoſt Endeavours to diſſuade him from ſending this unhappy Priſoner to that infected Houſe: But Bambridge forced him thither, where he (as he feared he ſhould) caught the Small-Pox, and in a few Days died thereof, juſtly charging the ſaid Bambridge with his Death; and unhappily leaving all his Affairs in the greateſt Confuſion, and a numerous Family of ſmall Children in the utmoſt Diſtreſs.

It appeared to the Committee, That the Letting-out of the Fleet Tenements to Victuallers for the Reception of Priſoners hath been but of late practiſed, and that the firſt of them Lett for this Purpoſe was to Mary Whitwood, who ſtill continues Tenant of the ſame, and that her Rent has from 32*l. per Ann.* been increaſed to 60*l.* and a certain Number of Priſoners ſtipulated to be made a prey of, to enable her to pay ſo great a Rent; and that ſhe, to procure the Benefit of having ſuch a Number of Priſoners ſent to her her House, hath, over and above the increased Rent, been obliged to make a Present to the said Bambridge of Forty Guineas, as also of a Toy, (as it is called) being the Model of a Chinese Ship, made of Amber, set in Silver, for which Fourscore Broad-Pieces had been offered her.

This is the first Method of extorting Money from the unhappy Prisoners; and when they can no longer bear the Misery and Expence of a Spunging-House, before they can obtain the Privilege of being admitted into the Prison, they are obliged to comply with such exorbitant Fees as the said Bambridge thinks fit to demand, which, if they do not, they are sure, under various Pretences, of being turned down to the Common-Side, if not put in Irons and Dungeons; and this has been done to those who were willing and offered to pay the Fees established by the Regulation made by the Judges of the Common-Pleas in Trin. Term 1727, which ought to have been hung up in some publick Place in the Prison, to which the Prisoners might have free Access, but was secreted by the said James Barnes, pursuant to Orders of the said Bambridge; which Table of Fees seems to be unreasonable, because it obliges Men who are committed for not being able to pay their Debts, to pay such Sums of Money as their Circumstances render them altogether unable to comply with.

And notwithstanding the Payment of such large Fees, in order to extort further Sums from the unfortunate Prisoners, the said Bambridge unjustly pretends he has a Right, as Warden, to exercise an unlimited Power of changing Prisoners from Room to Room; of turning them into the Common-Side, though they have paid the Master's Side Fee; and inflicting Arbitrary Punishments by locking them down in unwholsome Dungeons, and loading them with torturing Irons; some Instances of which follow; viz.

Jacob Mendez Solas, a Portuguese, was, as far as it appeared to the Committee, one of the first Prisoners for Debt that ever was loaded with Irons in the Fleet; The said Bambridge one Day called him into the Gate-House of the Prison, called the Lodge, where he caused him to be seized, fettered, and carried to Corbett's, the Spunging-House, and there kept for upwards of a Week, and when brought back into the Prison, Bambridge caused him to be turned into the Dungeon, called the Strong Room of the Master's Side.

This Place is a Vault like those in which the Dead are Interr'd, and wherein the Bodies of Persons dying in the said Prison are usually deposited, till the Coroner's Inquest hath passed upon them; it has no Chimney nor Fire-place, nor any Light but what comes over the Door, or through a Hole of about Eight Inches square. It is neither paved nor boarded; and the rough Bricks appear both on the Sides and Top, being neither wainscotted nor plastered: What adds to the Dampness and Stench of the Place is, its being built over the Common-Sewer, and adjoining to the Sink and Dung-hill where all the Nastiness of the Prison is cast. In this miserable Place the poor Wretch was kept by the said Bambridge, manacled and shackled for near Two Months. At length, on receiving Five Guineas from Mr. Kemp, a Friend of Solas's, Bambridge released the Prisoner from his cruel Confinement. But though his Chains were taken off, his Terror still remained, and the unhappy Man was prevailed upon by that Terror, not only to labour gratis for the said Bambridge, but to swear also at Random all that he hath required of him: And the Committee themselves saw an Instance of the deep Impression his Sufferings had made upon him; for on his surmising, from something said, that Bambridge was to return again, as Warden of the Fleet, he fainted, and the Blood started out of his Mouth and Nose.

Captain John Mackpheadris, who was bred a Merchant, is another melancholy Instance of the cruel Use the said Bambridge hath made of his assumed Authority. Mackpheadris was a considerable Trader, and in a very flourishing Condition until the Year 1720, when being bound for large Sums to the Crown, for a Person afterwards ruined by the Misfortunes of that Year, he was undone. In June 1727 he was a Prisoner in the Fleet, and altho' he had before paid his Commitment-Fee, the like Fee was extorted from him a second Time; and he having furnished a Room, Bambridge demanded an extravagant Price for it, which he refused to pay; and urged, that it was unlawful for the Warden to demand extravagant Rents, and offered to pay what was legally due: Notwithstanding which, the said Bambridge, assisted by the said James Barnes and other Accomplices, broke open his Room, and took away several Things of great Value, amongst others, the King's Extent in Aid of the Prisoner (which was to have been returned in a few Days, in order to procure the Debt to the Crown, and the Prisoner's Inlargement), which Bambridge still detains. Not content with this, Bambridge locked the Prisoner out of his Room, and forced him to lie in the open Yard, called the Bare. He sat quietly under his Wrongs, and getting some poor Materials, built a little Hut to protect himself, as well as he could, from the Injuries of the Weather. The said Bambridge seeing his Unconcernedness, said, Damn him! he is easy. I will put him into the Strong Room before To-morrow; and ordered Barnes to pull down his little Hut, which was done accordingly. The poor Prisoner being in an ill State of Health, and the Night rainy, was put to great Distress. Some time after this he was (about Eleven o'Clock at Night) assaulted by Bambridge, with several other Persons his Accomplices, in a violent Manner; and Bambridge, though the Prisoner was unarmed, attacked him with his Sword, but by good Fortune was prevented from killing him; and several other Prisoners coming out upon the Noise, they carried Mackpheadris for Safety into another Gentleman's Room; soon after which Bambridge coming with one Savage, and several others, broke open the Door, and Bambridge strove with his Sword to kill the Prisoner: But he again got away, and hid himself in another Room. Next Morning the said Bambridge entered the Prison with a Detachment of Soldiers, and ordered the Prisoner to be dragged to the Lodge, and ironed with great Irons; on which he desiring to know for what Cause, and by what Authority he was to be so cruelly used? Bambridge replied, It was by his own Authority, and Damn him he would do it, and have his Life. The Prisoner desired he might be carried before a Magistrate, that he might know his Crime before he was punished; but Bambridge refused, and put Irons upon his Legs which were too little, so that in forcing them on, his Legs were like to have been broken; and the Torture was impossible to be endured. Upon which the Prisoner complaining of the grievous Pain and Straitness of the Irons, Bambridge answered, That he did it on Purpose to torture him: On which the Prisoner replying, That by the Law of England no Man ought to be tortured; Bambridge declared, That he would do it first, and answer for it afterwards; and caused him to be dragged away to the Dungeon, where he lay without a Bed, loaded with Irons so close rivetted that they kept him in continual Torture, and mortified his Legs. After long Application his Irons were changed, and a Surgeon directed to dress his Legs, but his Lameness is not, nor ever can be cured. He was kept in this miserable Condition for three Weeks, by which his Sight is greatly prejudiced, and in danger of being lost.

The Prisoner, upon this Usage, petitioned the Judges, and after several Meetings, and a full Hearing, the Judges reprimanded Mr. Huggins and Bambridge, and declared, That a Gaoler could not answer the Ironing of a Man before he was found guilty of a Crime; but it being out of Term, they could not give the Prisoner any Relief or Satisfaction.

Notwithstanding this Opinion of the Judges, the said Bambridge continued to keep the Prisoner in Irons till he had paid him Six Guineas; and to prevent the Prisoner's recovering Damages for the cruel Treatment of him, Bambridge indicted him and his principal Witnesses at the Old Bailey, before they knew any Thing of the Matter; and to support that Indictment, he had recourse to Subornation, and turned two of his Servants out of Places which they had bought, because they would not swear falsly that the Prisoner had struck the said Bambridge, which Words he had inserted in Affidavits ready prepared for Signing, and which they knew to be false. As soon as they were apprized of it, they applied to the Lord-Mayor, who ordered the Grand-Jury down to the Fleet, where they found that Bambridge was the Aggressor. But the Bill against the Prisoners being already found, the second Inquiry was too late.

The Prisoners being no longer able to bear the Charges of Prosecution, which had already cost 100*l.* and being softened by Promises, and terrified by Threats, submitted to plead Guilty, on a solemn Assurance and Agreement made with Bambridge before Witnesses, of having but One Shilling Fine laid upon them; but so soon as they had pleaded Guilty, Bambridge took Advantage of it, and has continued harrassing them and their Securities ever since.

The Desire of Gain urged the said Bambridge to the preceding Instances of Cruelty; but a more diabolical Passion, that of Malice, animated him to oppress Captain David Sinclair in the following Manner.

At the latter End of June or Beginning of July last, the said Bambridge declared to the said James Barnes, one of the Agents of his Cruelties, That he would have Sinclair's Blood; and he took the Opportunity of the first Festival Day, which was on the first of August following, when he thought Captain Sinclair might, by celebrating the Memory of the late King, be warmed with Liquor so far as to give him some Excuse for the Cruelties which he intended to inflict upon him. But in some measure he was disappointed; for Captain Sinclair was perfectly sober, when the said Bambridge rushed into his Room with a dark Lanthorn in his Hand, assisted by his Accomplices James Barnes and William Pindar, and supported by his usual Guard, armed with Muskets and Bayonets, and without any Provocation given, run his Lanthorn into Captain Sinclair's Face, seized him by the Collar, and told him he must come along with him: Captain Sinclair, though surprized, asked for what, and by what Authority he so treated him? Upon which Barnes and the rest seized Captain Sinclair, who still desiring to know by what Authority they so abused him? Bambridge grossly insulted him, and struck him with his Cane on the Head and Shoulders, whilst he was held fast by Pindar and Barnes. Such base and scandalous Usage of this Gentleman, who had in the late Wars always signalized himself with the greatest Courage, Gallantry, and Honour in the Service of his Country upon many the most brave and desperate Occasions, must be most shocking and intolerable; yet Captian Sinclair bore it with Patience, refusing only to go out of his Room unless he was forced; whereupon the said Bambridge threatened to run his Cane down his Throat, and ordered his Guard to stab him with their Bayonets, or drag him down to the said Dungeon, called the Strong Room; the latter of which they did, and Bambridge kept him confined in that damp and loathsome Place, till he had lost the Use of his Limbs and Memory, neither of which has he perfectly recovered to this Day. Many aggravating Cruelties were used to make his Confinement more terrible; and when Bambridge found he was in danger of immediate Death, he removed him, for fear of his dying in Duress, and caused him to be carried in a dying Condition from that Dungeon to a Room where there was no Bed or Furniture; and so unmercifully prevented his Friends having any Access to him, that he was four Days without the least Sustenance.

It appeared to the Committee by the Evidence of a Surgeon and others, who were Prisoners in the House, that when Captain Sinclair was forced into that loathsome Dungeon he was in perfect Health.

Captain Sinclair applied for Remedy at Law against the said Cruelties of Bambridge, and had procured a Habeas Corpus for his Witnesses to be brought before the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, when the said Bambridge, by Colour of his assumed Authority as Warden, took the said Writs of Habeas Corpus from the Officer whose Duty it was to make a Return of them, and commanded him to keep out of the Way, whilst he himself went to the Old Bailey, and immediately indicted Captain Sinclair, and such of his Witnesses as he knew he could not deter by Threats, or prevail with by Promises to go from the Truth.

Captain Sinclair had Temper enough to bear patiently almost insupportable Injuries, and to reserve himself for a proper Occasion, when Justice should be done him by the Laws of the Realm.

But the said Bambridge has forced others by Wrongs and Injuries beyond human Bearing, to endeavour the avenging Injuries and Oppressions which they could no longer endure.

And it appeared to the Committee, that the said Bambridge, in order to avoid the Punishment due to these Crimes, hath committed greater, and hath not only deny'd Admittance to the Sollicitors, who might procure Justice to the injured Prisoners, and in open Defiance to the Law, disobey'd the King's Writs, but hath also seduced some by indulging them in Riot, and terrified others with fear of Duress, to swear to and subscribe such false Affidavits as he thought fit to prepare for them, on several Occasions; in all which Wrongs and Oppressions John Everett also acted as one of the said Bambridge's wicked Accomplices.

That

That the ſaid Bambridge being asked by the Committee, By what Authority he pretended to put Priſoners into Dungeons and Irons? Anſwered, That he did it by his own Authority as Warden, to preſerve the Quiet and Safety of the Cuſtody of the Priſon.

But it appeared to the Committee by the Examinations of many Witneſſes, that before the Time when Gybbon and the ſaid Bambridge acted as Deputy-Wardens under Mr. Huggins, the Quiet and Safety of the Cuſtody were very well preſerved without the Uſe of Irons or Dungeons.

That the two Dungeons, called The Strong Room on the Maſter Side, and The Strong Room on the Common Side, were both built within theſe few Years; and that the old Method of puniſhing drunken and diſorderly Perſons was putting them in the Stocks; and the Puniſhment of thoſe who had eſcaped, or attempted to eſcape, was putting them upon a Tub at the Gate of the Priſon, by way of publick Shame, or ſecuring them without Irons, in their proper Rooms for ſome Days.

And that the ſaid Dungeons were built in Defiance of, and contrary to the Declaration of the Lord King, when Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common-Pleas; who, upon an Application made to him on Behalf of the Priſoners of the Fleet, when Mr. Huggins and Gybbon urged that there was Danger of Priſoners eſcaping, DECLARED, that they might raiſe their Walls higher, but that there ſhould be no Priſon within a Priſon.

That upon the ſtricteſt Inquiry, the Committee could not find that any Priſoners in the Fleet for Debt had been put in Irons before the ſaid Mr. Huggins had the Office of Warden.

That it is not the only Deſign of the ſaid Thomas Bambridge to extort Money from his Priſoners, if they ſurvive his inhuman Treatment, but he ſeems to have a farther View, in caſe it cauſes Death, of poſſeſſing himſelf of their Effects. One remarkable Proof of which the Committee think proper here to inſert, viz.

Mr. John Holder, a Spaniſh Merchant, was a Priſoner in the Fleet, and had a Room which he fitted up with his own Furniture, and had with him all his Books, Accounts and Writings, and other Effects, to the Value of about 30,000*l.* which he declared by Affidavit, upon the following Occaſion:

The ſaid Thomas Bambridge, by Force, turned the ſaid Mr. Holder over to the Common Side, and took Poſſeſſion of his Room, in which all his Effects were.

Mr. Holder remonſtrated ſtrongly againſt this Uſage, and Bambridge refuſing to reſtore him to his Room, or Poſſeſſion of his Effects, he made a proper Affidavit in order to apply to the Judges for Relief, and declared that he feared his Effects might be imbezzled whilſt he was thus unjuſtly forced from them, and that he feared Bambridge's cruel Treatment of him would be the Cauſe of his Death: The Miſeries of the Common Side, which he dreaded, had ſuch an Effect upon him (being a Man of an advanced Age, and accuſtomed to live in Eaſe and Plenty), that it threw him into ſuch a Fit of Sickneſs as made his Life deſpaired of, and in his Illneſs he often declared, That the Villain Bambridge would be the Occaſion of his Death. Which proved true; for Bambridge finding Mr. Holder like to die in the Dureſs which he had put him into, (for his own Sake, to avoid the Puniſhment inflicted by Law upon Gaolers who ſo inhumanly deſtroy their Priſoners) permitted him to be carried back to his Room, where in a few Days he died of the ſaid Sickneſs, contracted by the ſaid forcible Removal of him to the Common Side by Bambridge, as aforeſaid.

Mr. Holder by his laſt Will appointed Major Wilſon and Mr. John Pigott Truſtees for his Son, a Youth of about thirteen Years of Age, who had accompanied him in the Time of his Confinement.

This young Gentleman, after his Father's Death, locked up his Effects in ſeveral Trunks and Boxes, and delivered the Keys thereof to Mr. Pigott as his Truſtee, who locked up the Room and took the Key with him; but the ſaid Thomas Bambridge cauſed the ſaid Room to be broke open by Thomas King, another of his Accomplices, and cauſed the ſaid Effects to be ſeized, after that he, Bambridge, had forced Mr. Pigott out of the Priſon, (though a Priſoner in Execution) and locked down Major Wilſon (the other Truſtee) in the Dungeon, to prevent their taking any Inventory in Behalf of the Heir at Law, then an Orphan.

Theſe evil Practices of letting out Priſoners, extorting exorbitant Fees, ſuffering Eſcapes, and exerciſing all Sorts of Inhumanity for Gain, may in a great meaſure be imputed to the Venality of the Warden's Office; for the Warden who buys the Privilege of puniſhing others, does conſequently ſell his Forbearance at high Rates, and repair his own Charge and Loſs at the wretched Expence of the Eaſe and Quiet of the miſerable Objects in his Cuſtody.

Upon the whole Matter the Committee came to the following Reſolutions, viz.

Reſolved, That it appears to this Committee, That Thomas Bambridge, the Acting Warden of the Priſon of the Fleet, hath wilfully permitted ſeveral Debtors to the Crown in great Sums of Money, as well as Debtors to divers of his Majeſty's Subjects, to eſcape; hath been guilty of the moſt notorious Breaches of his Truſt, great Extortions, and the higheſt Crimes and Miſdemeanours in the Execution of his ſaid Office; and hath arbitrarily and unlawfully loaded with Irons, put into Dungeons, and deſtroyed Priſoners for Debt under his Charge, treating them in the moſt barbarous and cruel Manner, in high Violation and Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom.

Reſolved, That it appears to this Committee, That John Huggins, Eſq. late Warden of the Priſon of the Fleet, did, during the Time of his Wardenſhip, wilfully permit many conſiderable Debtors in his Cuſtody to eſcape, and was notoriouſly guilty of great Breaches of his Truſt, Extortions, Cruelties, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanours in the Execution of his ſaid Office, to the great Oppreſſion and Ruin of many of the Subjects of this Kingdom.

XI. The Trial of John Huggins, Eſq. Warden of the Fleet Priſon for the Murder of Edward, Arne, at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old-Bailey, May 21, 1729, before Mr. Juſtice Page, Mr. Baron Carter and others his Majeſty's Juſtices *.

Clerk. Thou the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King

* Theſe Trials of Huggins, Bambridge and Acton, were all taken in Short-Hand by Mr. Luke Kenn, (Clerk to the Committee appointed to inquire into the Gaols of the Fleet, Marſhalſea, &c.) who in his Life-time aſked Two Hundred Pounds for the Copy of them.

and thée, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death; therefore, if thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thy Time to speak is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Then the Jury ſworn were as follow, viz.

Philip Foulhard,	John Milward,	Martin Wardell,
John Filkebrown,	Daniel Town,	Richard Pitt,
Peter Sejourney,	Thomas Clayton,	John Price,
Thomas Gregg,	John Hoar,	James King.

Clerk. John Huggins hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner (and was going on).

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, the Diſtance is too great to be heard: I deſire I may come to the Inner Bar; for, my Lord, when any Inconvenience happens, it is the conſtant Rule to admit the Priſoner to come there: It was done in the Caſe of Sanders and Clifton.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Whenever the Court conceives an Inconvenience, it has been allowed; but I cannot allow it till then.

Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Priſoner; he ſtands indicted by the Name of, &c.

(Prout the Indictment mutatis mutandis.)

Mr. Huggins. I muſt deſire, my Lord, to have the Indictment read in Latin. (Which was accordingly done.)

Mr. Holland. (Member of Parliament for Chippenham). My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King; and this is an Indictment againſt John Huggins, for aiding and abetting James Barnes in the Murder of Edward Arne; that John Huggins was Warden, and one James Barnes was then his Agent, who did in November, in the 11th Year of his late Majeſty, make an Aſſault upon Edward Arne, and took Arne involuntarily, and confined him in the Strong Room (without the Comfort of Fire, Cloſe-ſtool, or other Utenſil), built near the Place where Excrements are thrown out, a Place very unwholeſome, and moſt dangerous to the Health; that Arne fell ſick in the ſaid Room, and languiſhed till the 7th of December, and then died; that Huggins, through his cruel Diſpoſition, being an Oppreſſor of the Priſoners, did, &c.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, James Barnes, who ſtands indicted for the Murder of Edward Arne, is fled from Juſtice; and John Huggins, the Priſoner at the Bar, alſo ſtands indicted for aiding and abetting in the ſaid Fact. He was then Warden of the Fleet, and had the Cuſtody and Care of the Priſoners then committed to his Charge; therefore it will be neceſſary to let you know what Bounds the Law ſets to Gaolers, and to Priſoners. The Law ſets Fences to them both: The Gaoler is to be protected in his Duty, ſupported and maintained in it; and it is juſtifiable, if, in Defence of himſelf, he deſtroys a Man, and commits an Act of Felony: On the other hand, if by any unneceſſary Tyranny, or Reſtraint, any of the Priſoners come by an untimely Death, it is Murder in the Gaoler; and this laſt is principally neceſſary for your Attention.

Edward Arne, on the 12th of May, 1725, was committed upon Meſne Proceſs; he was a quiet, peaceable, and inoffenſive Man, and continued ſo till September in that Year; the Gentleman at the Bar, not content with the ſame Security that his Predeceſſors had, took it in his head to make a Strong Room, which was built about three Months before the Death of Edward Arne; it was like a Vault, built over the Common Sewer, near a Layſtall, where the filthy Matter was lodged, nothing but Bricks and Mortar, not tiled or pointed; and in this Condition, about September, one Barnes, Servant of the Defendant, came to the ſaid Arne, as he was ſitting in the Cellar, ruſhed upon him, and took him away to the Dungeon, a Place where Nobody had been put in before; in this ſaid Place of Reſtraint he was confined, though he was in a quiet Condition: There was no Fire, nor Fire-place, no Light but through a Hole over the Door, and a little Hole by the Side, big enough to put a Quart Pot in at; there was not the Want only of Fire, or Fire-place, but there was no Chamber-pot, no Convenience for the Eaſe of Nature, ſo that it muſt fall, and he converſe with it: The Place was ſo moiſt, that Drops of Wet run down the Wall. The Man immediately loſt his Voice, his Throat was ſwelled, and his Cloaths rotted with the Dampneſs of the Place, and the poor Man having a Feather-bed crept into it, and the Feathers ſtuck cloſe to him, and in this Condition he lay; but one Day, the Door being open, he got out, and run into the Common Hall; he looked, Gentlemen, more like a feather'd Fowl, than an Human Creature. This was repreſented to Mr. Huggins, who generally lived in the Country, and did not come to the Gaol ſo often as he ought; but at one Time, when he was at the Priſon, he ſaw the Man, and the poor Man juſt ſaw him, his Eye fell, the Door was cloſed, and he died: The Warden, Gentlemen, had the Door ſhut, and ordered him to be locked up, and he continued ſo locked up from September till the 20th of October; and it is wonderful to think (if he had not been a Man of a very ſtrong Frame) how he could have continued there ſo long. It moved the Compaſſion of his Fellow-Priſoners, who applied to have him releaſed out of that Place, but that not being done, a little Care was taken to attend him. Gentlemen, at the Time when Mr. Gybbon was Deputy, ſome of the Priſoners aſked him, Why he did not take care of Arne, for the Man cannot ſpeak? And Anſwer was made by Barnes, let him die and be damned; and this was in the Preſence of the Warden. Gentlemen, I muſt obſerve to you, that for Security of the Lives of Priſoners, the Coroner's Inqueſt ought to ſit upon them, to ſee if any Marks could be found to give an Information of the Cauſe of Death, but this was not done: This is the Subſtance of the Evidence, which cannot be aggravated.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Sir Philip Yorke, afterwards Earl of Hardwick and Lord Chancellor.) My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King, and this Proſecution is the Effect of a uſeful, compaſſionate Inquiry concerning the Gaols, ſo it was found neceſſary to bring the Cauſe before you, that Gaolers may be puniſhed, who have Opportunity, and have endeavoured to oppreſs the unfortunate Perſons under their Charge and Power. It is neceſſary there ſhould be Gaols and Priſons, and that Perſons ſhould be under Confinement; but not for Gaolers to have it in their Power to commit Oppreſſions and Cruelties, to the Loſs of the Lives of his Majeſty's Subjects; if the Evidence be true, which ſhall be offered to you, this will appear to be an Inſtance of the utmoſt Oppreſſion, and the utmoſt Cruelty. Mr. Huggins was Warden of the Fleet Priſon, and had the Care and Cuſtody of the Priſoners, and ought perſonally, or by his Deputy, to take care of them, and ſo is anſwerable for them: Mr. Edward Arne came a Priſoner in May 1725, and continued there till he died. At his firſt coming in, he lodged with one Robert Shaw; but ſome Difference happening between them, he was turned out of that Room, and lay in the Common Hall. This unhappy Man was ſaid to be diſordered in his Senſes, which his Oppreſſion might reaſonably occaſion; he was an inoffenſive, quiet Man: But about this Time there was a new Scheme of having a Priſon within a Priſon, and was the Occaſion of their committing Oppreſſions upon the Priſoners. This Strong Room was then erected in the manner of a Vault, commonly called a Dungeon; there was no Window, no Chimney; it was built with bare Brick and Mortar: Upon what Occaſion it was built, the Priſoner will give you an Account, if he had any Authority for building it. Gaolers are to take care of Priſoners, but not to build Dungeons to put them in; the Walls were not dry, but very damp and unwholeſome, as uſually ſuch Places muſt be. While Arne was ſtanding in the Cellar inoffenſively, Barnes, who was intruſted with the Care of the Priſoners, ſeized him and put him in this Place, and he was there put without any manner of Proviſion to ſuſtain Life; there was a little Hole where you might put a little Drink through, ſometimes he had an Opportunity of having ſome, and ſometimes none. Under this Reſtraint this Perſon was kept, without any Convenience to eaſe Nature; the Deſcription is ſuch that muſt move every body to Compaſſion. His Bed was dragged in with him, and he ripped it open and crept into it to keep himſelf warm, and the Feathers ſtuck to him by reaſon of his being beſmeared with his own Ordure, which he had not Opportunity of doing out of the Place. During the whole Time whilſt Arne was confined, Mr. Huggins, who was then Warden, came twice, though he ought to have come oftener, and his Duty required him ſo to do: Mr. Huggins looked upon him there, and ſaw him lie in that Condition, in the Place built by his own Order; but the Priſoner, ſo far from giving him any Relief, or removing him out of that Confinement, ordered the Door to be locked up in his Preſence, he being Warden, and by his Authority. This affecting Condition the poor Man was in, and in the Circumſtance he was in, he ought to have relieved him. Several Applications were made to Gybbon, and other the Servants of the Warden, to deſire this unhappy Man to be releaſed: Letters were ſent to ſhew his miſerable Condition, that he was not likely to live, and to deſire that he might be put under a proper Cuſtody; but nothing was done. At that Time even the Priſoner ſaw him languiſh; his Speech was loſt, and then he languiſhed, and continued in the Dungeon till the Time of his Death; this will appear clearly by the Evidence, that he died in Dureſs, and that the Diſtemper there contracted was the Occaſion of his Death. The next Conſideration is, who, and what was the Occaſion of his Death: It is the Duty of a Gaoler to have a Coroner's Inqueſt to inquire into the Death of a Priſoner, for his own Juſtification, who, by having the Cuſtody of, and the Power over his Priſoners, may deſtroy them; therefore, if there was no particular Reaſon, why ſhould it not have been done? Tho' he cannot pretend to ſhew a particular Order why he did not. When I conſider, that nothing could be done but by his Authority, nothing done but by his Direction, that was his particular Order.

If he, who was the principal Gaoler, who had the Authority to confine him, and to diſcharge him from an improper Confinement, who ſaw him there, did not releaſe him, but inſtead of that ſuffered him to be locked up, he is guilty of his Death. In point of Law, if a Priſoner dies in Dureſs of the Gaoler by hard Confinement, in a cruel Manner, unneceſſary to the Gaoler's ſafe Cuſtody, it is Death by Law; if the Gaoler is not anſwerable for the Act, what needs the dead Perſons to be inquired after by a Jury? Juſtice ought to be done, let it fall on whom it will; and I do not doubt, but the Jury, for the Sake of their Oaths, will find him Guilty.

Mr. Bigrave. They generally were.
Mr. Juſtice Page. What where the Dimenſions of this Room?
Mr. Bigrave. The Room is eight Foot wide, eleven Foot long, and nine Foot high.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did not Hopkins from Time to Time acquaint Mr. Huggins with the Tranſactions of the Gaol?
Mr. Bigrave. He was Clerk of the Inquiries to the Warden of the Fleet.
Mr. Att. Gen. So he choſe to be Deputy to Mr. Gybbon?
Juryman. My Lord, I deſire the Witneſs may be aſked if the Room was boarded or floored.
Mr. Bigrave. I did not obſerve it till Mackpheadris's Time.
Mr. Att. Gen. How were the Sides of it?
Mr. Bigrave. Brick and Mortar.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was you not in the Room till after Arne died?
Mr. Bigrave. No.
Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I ſhall follow the Gentleman ſtep by ſtep, and deſire Mr. Bigrave may be aſked, if the Bonds were not made up by Mr. Gybbon's Direction, and he took the Advantage of them?
Mr. Bigrave. He always did, and I filled up ſeveral by his Order.
Mr. Huggins. Did he receive all the Advantage and Benefit of the Office to his own Uſe?
Mr. Bigrave. I took it ſo.
Mr. Att. Gen. Can you take upon you to ſay that Mr. Huggins had no Part?
Mr. Bigrave. I can't ſay.
Mr. Huggins. Was not Gybbon appointed my Deputy?
Mr. Bigrave. I found Mr. Gybbon Deputy, when I came there, but can't ſay, whether he was appointed by Writing or not.
Mr. Huggins. Did he pay no Salary?
Mr. Bigrave. I heard he paid 400 l. per. Ann. and I always apprehended Mr. Gybbon had the whole Account.
Mr. Huggins. I deſire he may be aſked, whether the Bonds were not filled up by Mr. Gybbon?
Mr. Bigrave. Always.
Mr. Huggins. Returns of Writs were made in my Name; I deſire he may be aſked, whether he did not receive Direction from Mr. Gybbon to make Returns?
Mr. Bigrave. I did receive Directions from him, for in 1727, I had ſome difficulty in making a Return of a Languidus, and then made Returns in Writing, and I received two Rule Fees, and 1*s.* out of each was due to the Warden, which I allowed and paid to Mr. Gybbon, and had a Receipt under his Hand for it.
Mr. Huggins. Were Warrants in my Name for Priſoners eſcaping?
Mr. Bigrave. The Warrants were generally left in the Publick Office, and ſigned and ſealed in Blank, and that they were filled up by Mr. Gybbon, and ſigned and ſealed by Mr. Huggins.
Mr. Huggins. In whoſe Name were the Warrants returned?
Mr. Bigrave. The Warrants were returned in the Name of Mr. Huggins, but by the Direction of Mr. Gybbon.
Mr. Huggins. Was Barnes my Servant or Mr. Gybbon's?
Mr. Bigrave. He was allowed to be Servant to Mr. Gybbon.
Mr. Juſtice Page. I will aſk a Queſtion or two.
Mr. Huggins. I muſt beg Leave, my Lord, to aſk one Queſtion more, and then will make ſome Obſervations upon the Evidence.
Mr. Juſtice Page. It is not proper to break in upon the Evidence to make any Obſervations now.
Mr. Huggins. This is the grand Point.
Mr. Juſtice Page. Whether it is or no, that will come anon. If you inſiſt upon making your Remarks now you ſhall; but I think it will be to your Prejudice, for by that you will be precluded from making your Remarks upon the Cloſe of the Evidence.
Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I will then ſubmit.
Mr. Juſtice Page. If you will aſk Mr. Bigrave any more Queſtions, you may proceed.
Mr. Huggins. Did you hear of any Ill-uſage from me to this Man (meaning Mr. Arne)?
Mr. Bigrave. I remember Mr. Arne was there, though I knew no ſuch Man, and heard he was in the Strong Room.
Mr. Huggins. Did you hear of any Alteration that was made in the Strong Room while Mr. Arne was there?
Mr. Bigrave. I never heard of any Alteration during that Time.
Mr. Huggins. Did not Gybbon keep two diſtinct Offices in one and the ſame Houſe?
Mr. Bigrave. In the Year 1725 he did.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray diſtinguiſh nicely as to Barnes, Huggins, and Gybbon, whether Barnes was not imployed as Watchman while Huggins was Principal, and Gybbon Deputy-Warden?
Mr. Bigrave. He was.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who put you into your Office?
Mr. Bigrave. Mr. Huggins put me into the Place, and I made an Agreement, and was to have One Shilling paid me out of each Day-Rule.
Mr. Baron Carter. Who made the Agreement?
Mr. Bigrave. I made the Agreement with Mr. Huggins, and paid 700*l.* to Mr. Huggins and Fifty Guineas.
Mr. Baron Carter. Who put Mr. Barnes in?—Mr. Bigrave. Mr. Gybbon.
Mr. Baron Carter. How do you know?—Mr. Bigrave. I heard ſo.

Call Richard Biſhop.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What are you?
Mr. Biſhop. I was Tipſtaff to Mr. Huggins, preſently after Huggins came to his Office, and paid him 200*l.* for it.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was Deputy then?
Mr. Biſhop. There was no Deputy-Warden, only Mr. Dickſon, Clerk of the Papers.
Mr. Sol. Gen. When did Gybbon come there?
Mr. Biſhop. In the Year 1724.
Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did Arne become a Priſoner?
Mr. Biſhop. In 1724 or 1725, I brought him down from the Judges Chambers, and put him at the Vine as uſual.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you not bring him into the Priſon?
Mr. Biſhop. Becauſe he thought to give Security.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Was not that a Spunging-houſe?
Mr. Biſhop. Yes.
Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he continue there?
Mr. Biſhop. About two Months.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did he lie, when he went into the Gaol?
Mr. Biſhop. When he went into the Gaol, I did not trouble myſelf about it.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the building the Strong Room?
Mr. Biſhop. I do remember its being built in 1725.
Mr. Sol. Gen. What Sort of a Place is it?
Mr. Biſhop. I have ſeen the Outſide, but never ſaw the Inſide; I believe it is built over the Common-Sewer, and but a little Way from the Dunghill; the Aſhes and Dirt of the Houſe is flung down there.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Arne there?
Mr. Biſhop. I ſaw him once in the Long Room out of his Cloaths, before he was brought into the Strong Room, and I complained to Mr. Gybbon, and ſaid he ought to be ſent to Bethlem, but he put him in the Strong Room.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell of any Complaints made about Arne's being put there?
Mr. Biſhop. I did apply to Mr. Gybbon, and ſaid it was better to keep him in his own Room, for if a Wiſe Man was put there it would make him mad; and it would have made me mad if I had been put there myſelf; and I heard Mr. Gybbon ſpeak to Mr. Hopkins to acquaint Mr. Huggins, that as Mr. Taylor was one of the Governors of Bethlem, and Mr. Huggins's Friend and Acquaintance, he might eaſily get him in there.
Mr. Huggins. It was no Part of the Office of Warden of the Fleet; but I might, by a friendly Office, uſe my Intereſt with Mr. Taylor, and that would ſhew me more a humane Man, than one guilty of Cruelty.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Huggins in the Gaol, during the Time Mr. Arne was in the Strong Room?
Mr. Biſhop. I ſaw Mr. Huggins there ſeveral Times, but can't ſay whether then or not when Mr. Arne was in the Strong Room.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he any way abuſive?
Mr. Biſhop. I never heard that Arne was any way abuſive, or needed any ſuch Reſtraint.
Mr. Sol. Gen. What was James Barnes?
Mr. Biſhop. He was to take up People that the Warden directed him to take up, and acted as Watchman in the Gaol, and was Servant under the Warden.
Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was Arne put in the Strong Room?
Mr. Biſhop. He came into the Priſon before the Strong Room was built.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when it was built?
Mr. Biſhop. It was built in 1725, I believe at the latter Part of the Summer Seaſon.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the Time while Arne was there?
Mr. Biſhop. I do.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Thing of Conſequence done in the Gaol, without the Direction of Mr. Huggins?
Mr. Biſhop. Nothing of Conſequence was done without his Direction; but the common Buſineſs of the Gaol was done by Mr. Gybbon's Direction.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever ſpeak to Mr. Huggins in relation to Arne's Confinement?
Mr. Biſhop. I believe I might ſpeak to Mr. Gybbon, and I believe I might ſpeak to Mr. Huggins, for I frequently did ſpeak to him about Buſineſs.
Mr. Sol. Gen. What Condition was Mr. Arne in, when brought to the Fleet?
Mr. Biſhop. I think he was in his Senſes, he was inoffenſive, and I think there was no Occaſion to confine him; I ſaw him ſeveral Times walking about about the Yard, and if he had been confined to his own Room any-body might have looked after him, even if it had been a Child.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he any Bed whilſt in the Strong Room?

Mr. Biſhop. I think he had no Bed there, it was a dark Place, I could not ſee into it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Huggins uſe to come there after Gybbon was Deputy?

Mr. Biſhop. I ſaw Mr. Huggins there ſeveral times after Mr. Gybbon was Deputy-Warden, and Huggins uſed to give Directions, during the Time Gybbon was his Deputy, and Hopkins uſed to bring Orders to Mr. Gybbon from Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what condition of Health was Mr. Arne when he was brought in?

Mr. Biſhop. He was in a good Condition of Health, and in his Senſes; and I believe, being put in the Strong Room in the Fleet, would have killed any-body, and that that forwarded Arne's Death, and he would not have died ſo ſoon if he had not been there.

Mr. Huggins. When you ſpoke to Mr. Gybbon to apply to me to make Intereſt to the Governor of Bethlem, whether it was Quatenus-Warden, or only as I was ſuppoſed to have Acquaintance or Intereſt?

Mr. Biſhop. It was to apply to you as Warden.

Mr. Huggins. Was there not Women Priſoners, and Men's Wives in the Gaol? —— Mr. Biſhop. Yes.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, It was very unfit for a Man to go naked about where there were Women, and it was fit he ſhould be confined ſome where. Whoſe Servant was James Barnes?

Mr. Biſhop. Mr. Gybbon's.

Mr. Juſtice Page. At the Time, when he run about naked, was there no other Room that he could have been put in?

Mr. Biſhop. There certainly were other Places where he might have been put.

Mr. Juſtice Page. How often have you ſeen him naked?

Mr. Biſhop. I ſaw him naked but once.

Mr. Baron Carter. You ſaid Gybbon gave ſome Directions, and Huggins gave ſome Directions; now during the Time that Gybbon acted, did the Priſoner, Mr. Huggins, give any Directions as to the moving of Priſoners?

Mr. Biſhop. My Lord, I never meddled with what was done in the Inſide of the Priſon, ſo can't inform you.

Call Mr. John Cotton.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Officer are you belonging to the Fleet?

Mr. Cotton. Clerk of the Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray ſee what Time Arne was committed?

Mr. Cotton. He was committed the 12th of May, 1725, at the Suit of John Martin and others upon Meſne Proceſs.

Mr. Huggins. I deſire he may ſee, when Barnes became a Priſoner?

Mr. Cotton. In Hillary, 1724.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is not Barnes ſtill a Priſoner, and what is become of him?

Mr. Cotton. He was a Priſoner, and had the Liberty of the Gate; and when the Order of the Houſe of Commons came for taking him into Cuſtody, he ran away, and Corbet has endeavoured to find him out, but could not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Arne charged in Execution?

Mr. Cotton. No, he was not.

Call Mr. Thomas Farrington.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Edward Arne?

Mr. Farrington. I did, and the firſt Time, that he came into the Priſon, it was between the 20th and 28th of June, 1725. He was ſome time at the Vine before.

Mr. Att. Gen. What State of Health was he in?

Mr. Farrington. When he came into the Fleet Priſon he was in a good State of Health, and free from any Sort of Deliriouſneſs, and I never ſaw him do any Thing amiſs to Man, Woman, or Child.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember his being confined in the Strong Room?

Mr. Farrington. I do remember his being confined in September, and that he died in October.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the firſt Time you knew of his Confinement?

Mr. Farrington. The firſt time I ever heard of his being confined, I heard he was carried into the Strong Room by Barnes, by the Directions of Gybbon, Deputy-Warden to the Priſoner at the Bar, and he had lain before that in Number VII. with Robert Shaw, and upon ſome Difference, being turned out of that Room, he then lay in the Common-Hall, upon a Bed of his own, which he laid upon Part of a broken Table-Bedſtead.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the firſt Time you ſaw Arne in the Strong Room?

Mr. Farrington. I ſaw him the very Day he was put in.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of a Place is it?

Mr. Farrington. It is a Room arched over like a Vault, and had been new erected about ſix Weeks, and the Walls were very damp and wet, you might ſtrike off the Drops with your Hand like the Dew on the Top of the Graſs in a Morning; there was no Wainſcot nor Plaſtering, there were ſome Boards at the Bottom, but whether intirely boarded I can't tell. It was a Vault arched over, and when Arne was carried in not tiled; there was a Window over the Door three Quarters of a Yard long, and another on the Side of the Door ſeven or eight Inches long, and four wide, and no Fire-place, and the Common-Sewer runs under it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſupply'd him with Victuals?

Mr. Farrington. I ſaw Mr. Louden give him Victuals.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who kept the Key of the Room?

Mr. Farrington. Barnes.

Mr. Att. Gen. From the Time that Mr. Arne came into the Priſon, which was between the 20th and 28th of June, till he was put in the Strong Room, What State of Health was he in?

Mr. Farrington. He continued in a good State of Health, till a little before he was put in the Strong Room, and then he grew ſomewhat diſordered; and from the Time he was put in the Strong Room, he altered every Day, grew hoarſe, and at laſt could not ſpeak, and he grew weaker and weaker every Day; about the Beginning of October loſt his Voice, he grew then delirious, and ript open his Bed, and crept into the Feathers, and one Day came to the Chapel with Excrement and Feathers ſticking about him like a Magpye, being forced to eaſe Nature in that Place; and after that, I ſaw the Priſoner at the Bar, and Hopkins, looking into the Strong Room (the Door being open) upon Arne, and Arne was lying in the Bed ript open, and covered much about as high as his Navel.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear Arne ſpeak?

Mr. Farrington. He was very hoarſe, and could not ſpeak, but lifted up his Eyes, and looked at Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Huggins then ſee him?

Mr. Farrington. Mr. Huggins muſt ſee him, if he was not blind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them ſpeak?

Mr. Farrington. Mr. Huggins and Hopkins whiſpered, but I did not hear what they ſaid; but Huggins ſhook his Head, then Barnes ſhut the Door, and Huggins and Hopkins were then going away.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after was it before Arne died?

Mr. Farrington. About fourteen Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee Arne between this Time of Huggins being there and his Death?

Mr. Farrington. I ſaw him the Morning before he died, and at that Time he was ſo weak, he could not ſtir any Way, but there lay gaping for Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occaſion of his lying in that languiſhing Condition?

Mr. Farrington. Arne's Confinement was the Occaſion. I was in the Strong Room three Days myſelf with one Smith, my Legs were ſo ſwelled, that the Small was as big as my Thigh, and I never knew a Day's Sickneſs till that Time, and if I had continued a Week longer it would have killed me, and I was forced to buy Paper to eaſe Nature in, and fling it out of the Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is the Situation of that Room?

Mr. Farrington. Its Situation is at the furtheſt Part of the Priſon Northward, and there is a Sewer under it, into which runs the Water from the Pump to carry off the Excrements of the Priſon, which are emptied into it, and the Dunghil was then about ſix Yards from it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſtance is there between the Strong Room and the Dunghil now?

Mr. Farrington. About eight Yards, and all the Nuiſance of the Houſe is flung there, and there are very bad Smells.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occaſion of the Death of Arne?

Mr. Farrington. I think it was the Strong Room was the Occaſion of it, for it was enough to kill the ſtrongeſt Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Arne die there?

Mr. Farrington. He did, and Mr. Huggins always ſaid he had Authority to put Perſons in the Strong Room, or Irons, which I can prove under his Hand (and was going to pull out a Paper, which not being allowed as Evidence, he deſiſted). I ſaw Mr. Huggins a ſecond Time walking upon the Bare with Gybbon and Levinz, between the Hours of Eleven and One, a Week or Fortnight after which he was at the Strong Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did Mr. Huggins ſtand looking upon Mr. Arne in the Strong Room?

Mr. Farrington. About three, four, or five Minutes, and he then ſtood looking at the Door, as I now ſtand looking at the Council.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Arne let out of the Strong Room afterwards?

Mr. Farrington. I never heard that Arne was afterwards out of the Strong Room till he died.

Mr. Huggins. Did not you make ſome Affidavits by way of Complaint to the Court of Common Pleas? ——— Mr. Farrington. Yes.

Mr. Huggins. Pleaſe, my Lord, to aſk, Whether or not Mr. Arne was mentioned in that Complaint that he made?

Mr. Farrington. I never made but three Affidavits, two of which I have in my Hand in Print, but don't remember Mr. Arne's being mentioned in either of them.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, The Affidavits tend chiefly to the ſending of Coffins in.

Mr. Juſtice Page. If you intend to make any Uſe of thoſe Affidavits, they muſt be produced and read.

Call Mr. Richard Fulthorpe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Edward Arne?

Mr. Fulthorpe. I did, I was a Priſoner then myſelf, he was brought in the latter End of Auguſt, and I remember him a Priſoner before he was confined in the Strong Room; I being in the Cellar, one Barnes and two or three other Servants of the Wardens, took him by Violence and carried him there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you been in his Company, and had Converſation with him? ——— Mr. Fulthorpe. I had ſeveral Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he diſorderly?

Mr. Fulthorpe. He might be a little in Liquor, but he did nothing to offend any one, and gave no Diſturbance to the Company. He was carried by Barnes into the Strong Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of a Place is the Strong Room?

Mr. Fulthorpe. It is a Place like a Dungeon, with a Hole on the Side big enough to put in a full Pot of Beer.

Mr. Att. Gen. How big is the Room?

Mr. Fulthorpe The Room is about Half the Bigneſs of the Court where the Counſel ſit, and ſtands near the Dunghill, and the Sewer runs under it. I ſaw it opened.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was over the Common Sewer?

Mr. Fulthorpe. There was Boards laid looſe over.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was between the Common Sewer and the Boards?

Mr. Fulthorpe. Nothing. The Walls were green. It was not tiled in, and ſcarce been built above a Week, and was as wet as any Thing could be.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who put Arne into the Strong Room?

Mr. Fulthorpe. Barnes and ſome others, then Priſoners, who acted under the Warden, took him out of the Cellar, put him in there, and locked him up.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Huggins during the Time Arne was there confined?

Mr. Fulthorpe. I ſaw Mr. Huggins twice there. I ſaw him at the Strong Room; he went along with Gybbon and Hopkins, and Mr. Huggins laid his Hand upon the Door, and looked in, the Door being open.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was he there?

Mr. Fulthorpe. A Minute or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was there beſides?

Mr. Fultborpe. Several belonging to the Fleet. I believe Barnes was there.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long before the Death of Arne?

Mr. Ful. About a Month.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Contition was Arne in at the Time he was put in there?---Mr. Ful. When he was put in there, he was a little out of the way when fuddled, but when ſober as well as any Man; when I came to the Door, there uſed to be a Smell enough to ſtrike one down.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was Arne in the ſtrong Room, before you ſaw him there?---Mr Ful. I went the next Morning, and at ſeveral other Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was Arne there?---Mr. Ful. About ſix Weeks.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition was he in when Huggins looked upon him?---Mr. Ful. He was very ill when Huggins looked upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you think was the Occaſion of his Death?

Mr. Ful. The Confinement and the Dampneſs of the Room gave him his Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had Mr. Huggins ſpoke to have Arne taken out?

Mr. Ful. He had not, for the Door was ſhut, Mr. Huggins being then preſent.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be there?

Mr. Ful. I wanted to ſpeak to Mr. Huggins about Buſineſs, for the Payment of the Bill drawn upon Huggins by one Lewis.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came Arne to cut his Bed in Pieces, and creep into the Feathers?

Mr. Ful. It was occaſioned by his Confinement; there was no Fire there, and I believe the Confinement was the Occaſion of his Death.

Mr. Huggins. How often did you know him let out?

Mr. Ful. Two or three Times.

Mr. Huggins. How long was you a Priſoner after?

Mr. Ful. I was diſcharged by the Act of Grace.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be preſent at the Time Mr. Huggins looked into the Strong Room?

Mr. Ful. I waited for an Opportunity of ſpeaking to him about a Note.

Call Mr. Tudor Smith.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Edward Arne?

Mr. Smith. I knew Mr. Arne very well, and that he was in the Fleet Priſon. I remember the Time of his coming into the Fleet Priſon. I was with him in the Spunging-Houſe, and then he was carried into the Fleet Priſon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did he lie?

Mr. Smith. In the Room of one Robert Shaw, and continued there about a Fortnight or three Weeks; but upon ſome Quarrel was turned out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When Arne came out of the Room, was not his Bed turned out with him?

Mr. Smith. It was; upon which, he then lay in the Common-Hall for ſome Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Arne carried to the Strong Room?

Mr. Smith. I was in the Cellar, when he was carried to the Strong Room; Barnes took him away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was Barnes?

Mr. Smith. I apprehended him to be Mr. Huggins's Servant.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you ſee done by Barnes?

Mr. Smith. I did ſee Barnes come, and take Arne by the Collar, and he ſaid, He muſt go along with him. Arne ſaid, Where? Barnes replied, No matter where, you muſt go along with me; and the next Morning I ſaw Arne in the Strong Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What State of Health was he in, when carried there?

Mr. Smith. He was in an ill State of Health.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Sort of a Room was it?

Mr. Smith. It was newly built, very damp, and a nauſeous Place. I knowing him before, was under more than common Concern, and aſked Arne how he did? And he ſaid Barnes carried him there. I aſked him if he had a Bed? He ſaid he had no Bed; but the next Day a Bed was brought to him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he lie there?

Mr. Smith. A Month or ſix Weeks; I viſited him often.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Fire-place, any Candle, or any thing neceſſary to eaſe Nature in?

Mr. Smith. There was no Fire-Place, no Candle, nothing neceſſary to eaſe Nature in, and he was forced to do all that Nature required there; and many a Time, when I carried Drink, Meat, or Ale to him, I have been forced to hold my Noſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What place was there to let in the Air?

Mr. Smith. There was a Place over the Door with Iron Bars, three Foot in Length, and another Hole on the Side, about a Foot and Half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you give any Notice to Mr. Huggins of the Condition this Man was in?

Mr. Smith. Having been a Priſoner ſome Time, I applied for the Benefit of the Rules, and he received Twelve Pounds for the Liberty of the Rules, and Hopkins and Gybbon inſiſted upon Ten Guineas more; and I wrote four Letters of the Uſage I received, having paid ſeveral Sums of Money; which I ſent to Mr. Huggins by Robin the Porter, and did in one of them, of the 5th of October, mention Mr. Arne's Confinement.

Mr. Baron Carter. To what Purpoſe was that Letter?

Mr. Smith. It partly related to my own Buſineſs, and I mentioned that the Strong Room was a Place not fit for a Chriſtian to be in, and Mr. Arne lay in a very miſerable Condition; and ſeeing him in ſuch a Condition, I gave him an old Night-Gown, being in a Manner naked for want of Covering, he had ripped open his Bed, and had got into the Feathers.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you take any Notice in the Letter of his lying in the Feathers?

Mr. Smith. I had wrote in the Letter about ſeeing him in the Feathers, and directed the Letter to Mr. Huggins, at his Houſe in St. Martin's-Lane, and ſent it by Robin the Porter. I ſpoke to Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Juſtice Page. That was not material.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ever ſee Mr. Huggins in the Gaol?

Mr. Smith. I never did, but watched an Opportunity of ſeeing him.

Mr. Baron Carter. What Condition was Arne in?

Mr. Smith. It was a miſerable Scene; and I take it that it was the Cauſe of his Death; and that he periſhed by being in ſuch a Condition.

Mr. Hug. I deſire he may be aſked, my Lord, if ever I had come into the Fleet Priſon, he ſhould have ſeen me?---Mr. Smith. I believe I ſhould.

Mr. Huggins. Did you ever ſee me there?

Mr. Smith. I ſaw Mr. Huggins two or three Times, at the Time the Prothonotaries were there?

Mr. Huggins. I deſire he may be aſked, my Lord, if he received any Anſwer from me to the Letter?

Mr. Smith. I received no Anſwer from Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Hug. Did the Letter contain other Buſineſs?---Mr. Smith. It did.

Call Robert Saintclair, the Porter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that the Man, Robin?—Mr. Smith. It is the Man I ſent.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry any Letters for Mr. Smith?

Saintclair. I carried ſeveral Letters, and brought Anſwers back again to them; but by reaſon of the Diſtance of the Time, cannot remember the Delivery of the Letters, but gave the Anſwers to Mr. Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember about what Time?

Saint. I cannot ſay about what Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry any Letters from Mr. Smith to Mr. Huggins?

Saint. I carried ſeveral Letters to Mr. Huggins from Mr. Smith, and always returned an Anſwer to whom I delivered them.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I deſire he may be aſked, if he ever delivered a Letter from Mr. Smith to me?

Saint. I cannot ſay I ever ſaw Mr. Huggins at his own Houſe.

Call Thomas Paine.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Edward Arne?

Mr. Paine. I did, and remember his being put in the Fleet Priſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. What State of Health was he in when he came there?

Mr. Paine. He was in a good State of Health. I was in Company with him and Captain Bateman, who was at Cards, and Arne was at Play, and did not ſeem to be lunatick; and one James Barnes came into the Room whilſt I was in Company drinking with them, and Arne was doing nothing diſorderly, and Barnes forced him into the Strong Room, and I was then by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was Barnes?

Mr. Paine. Barnes was a Priſoner, and was made a Watchman by Gybbon, who gave him the Liberty of the Gate.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Buſineſs?

Mr. Paine. He was a Watchman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Servant did you look upon him to be?

Mr. Paine. I looked upon him to be a Servant of Mr. Gibbon's.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſee Mr. Huggins there?

Mr. Paine. I never ſaw Mr. Huggins there, but when the Prothonotaries were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sort of a Place was it before it was made ſo?

Mr. Paine. It was a Stable where the Cocks and Hens rooſted.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee it after it was converted into a Strong Room, before Mr. Arne was put into it?

Mr. Paine. I did; and the Walls were green; there was certainly a Dampneſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Sewer run under it?

Mr. Paine. I cannot ſay; but there was an ill Smell came both from the Neceſſary-Houſe and from the Dunghill.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition was Arne in, after he was put in by Barnes?

Mr. Paine. Arne grew outrageous, and tore his Clothes and Bedding.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition of Health was Arne in?

Mr. Paine. I never talked to him, but through the Hole in the Wall.

Mr. Att. Gen. How was he before he died?

Mr. Paine. I was diſcharged before he died.

Mr. Att. Gen. What kind of Alteration was there in his Voice?

Mr. Paine. He was a little hoarſer, and I could not ſee him, but only as I talked to him through the Hole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it a fit Place to confine a Priſoner in?

Mr. Paine. It was not a fit Place to confine Priſoners in without Danger of their Lives.

Mr. Hug. Was there a Court of Inſpectors or Governors of the Fleet?

Mr. Paine. There was ſuch.

Mr. Hug. Did they not ballot once a Month?

Mr. Paine. We once balloted for Steward and Inſpector.

Mr. Hug. Did not the Court of Inſpectors place Arne in the Strong Room?

Mr. Paine. The Inſpectors did not ſo much as viſit the Strong Room.

Mr. Hug. If any Complaint had been made, was not the Power veſted in the Court of Inſpectors to redreſs?

Mr. Juſtice Page. Mr. Huggins, that is not a proper Queſtion.

Mr. Hug. My Lord, I deſire he may be aſked then how long it was before Mr. Arne died that he left the Priſon?

Mr. Paine. I was diſcharged in September, about the 8th.

Mr. Hug. The 8th of September, my Lord, which was about ſix Weeks before Mr. Arne died.

Mr. Juſtice Page. When was the Strong Room built?

Mr. Paine. In Mr. Gybbon's Time.

Mr. Hug. My Lord, if Mr. Gybbon built the Strong Room, there is Reaſon to believe he paid for it.

Call John Bouch.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you belong to the Fleet?

Mr. Bouch. I did, I was Turnkey there.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the Strong Room built?

Mr.

Mr. Bouch. It was built in 1725, the latter End of the Summer, by the Direction of Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Att. Gen. During the Time that you belonged there, did not Mr. Huggins come frequently?

Mr. Bouch. He came now and then, not very often.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was Arne put in the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. He was put in about Auguſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know him before he was carried there?

Mr. Bouch. I knew him very well, and never ſaw any Ill offered by him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whoſe Order was he put in by?

Mr. Bouch. He was put in by the Order of Mr. Gybbon and Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he die in that Place?

Mr. Bouch. He did.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was he there?

Mr. Bouch. About a Month or ſix Weeks.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Huggins there during the Time Arne was in the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. I cannot ſay I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it over-look'd the building the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. Mr. Huggins, when he came to the Lodge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he there when the Building was a-raiſing?

Mr. Bouch. I cannot be certain, but I remember there was a Direction of the Court of Common-Pleas for Mr. Huggins to inſpect the Gaol, and that he came once a-Week after the Order from the Court of Common-Pleas.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Condition of the Room?

Mr. Bouch. The Room was newly built and green.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry any Letter to Mr. Huggins relating to Mr. Arne?

Mr. Bouch. I did carry a Letter from a Friend of Mr. Arne's, and he was ſo weak then that he could not ſpeak.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you carry it from?

Mr. Bouch. From the Fleet Priſon.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it about?

Mr. Bouch. It was about getting Arne his Liberty; a Gentleman gave me the Letter, and deſired me to bring an Anſwer as to Arne's having the Liberty of the Rules; and I went myſelf, and ſaw Mr. Huggins, and gave him the Letter; he opened it, and ſaid he would ſend an Anſwer by Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Mr. Bouch. It was in October, about a Week before Arne died.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did Arne die?

Mr. Bouch. He died in the Strong Room, I ſaw him two Days before he died; he was juſt as if dead then, and very weak and ill.

Mr. Att. Gen. What kind of a Place was the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. It was a very ſickly Place, becauſe of the Common Sewer running under it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Meſſage did Mr. Huggins ſend by Mr. Hopkins as to the Letter?

Mr. Bouch. Mr. Huggins ſent Word by Daniel Hopkins, that he would inform Mr. Arne's Friend what was to be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it built the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. One Fry, a Bricklayer, took Directions from Mr. Huggins, at Mr. Huggins's own Houſe, and I was preſent when Fry was there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who paid for the Building?

Mr. Bouch. I believe Mr. Huggins, for Fry was a Maſter Bricklayer, and I ſaw him there about Buſineſs after the Building was finiſhed.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to be there?

Mr. Bouch. I went there then to get a Place of Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was you Turnkey?

Mr. Bouch. I was not Turnkey till after Mr. Arne's Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſee him in the Strong Room?

Mr. Bouch. I ſaw him in the Strong Room twenty Times, for I was then endeavouring to get to be Turnkey.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who had you the Place from?

Mr. Bouch. From Mr. Huggins; and during the Time I was endeavouring for it, I ſaw Mr. Arne in the Strong Room.

Call James Tucker.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the Place that is called the Strong Room in the Fleet Priſon?

Mr. Tucker. I do, and was employed by the Bricklayer and Carpenter to make the Iron-work.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did you make out your Bill to?

Mr. Tucker. I made it out to Mr. Huggins, as Debtor.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who paid you?

Mr. Tucker. I made the Bill out in Mr. Huggins's Name, and was paid by Pindar, and a Receipt was given in full of that Bill.

Call Mrs. Eliz. Le Pointz.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Edward Arne?

Mrs. Le Pointz. I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember him a Priſoner in the Fleet, and his Confinement in the Strong Room?

Mrs. Le Pointz, I do; he had been confined two or three Days before I went to him; the firſt Time I ſaw him ſitting upon a Bench, and the next Time in his Feather-bed, and he was covered therein, and his Bed lay on the Floor.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition of Health was he in?

Mrs. Le Pointz. I never found him any Way diſtempered, only diſordered by the Cold and Dampneſs of the Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was not his Voice altered?

Mrs. Le Pointz. He had a ſhivering Hoarſeneſs upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Mrs. Le Pointz. He continued there ſeven Weeks, or thereabouts.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Condition was the Place in?

Mrs. Le Pointz. It was building in July, and I remember the finiſhing of it ſome Time in Auguſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was Mr. Arne put in?

Mrs. Le Pointz. He was put in as ſoon as it was finiſhed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe that was the Occaſion of his Death?

Mrs. Le Pointz. It was impoſſible to be otherwiſe; for the Building was ſo very green, that you might pull the Mortar from the Bricks with your Fingers, and it was impoſſible any body could be continued therein for ſeven Weeks without being killed by the Dampneſs of the Place; and I verily believe that Confinement was the Occaſion of Arne's Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever ſpeak to any body about his Releaſement?

Mrs. Le Pointz. Whilſt he was in this Place, I met with Mr. Hopkins, and ſpoke to him to acquaint Mr. Huggins, that it was impoſſible but that Arne muſt periſh, if continued in that Place; and if he did not ſpeak to Mr. Huggins, I would ſend to him myſelf; to which Hopkins replied, he would; and afterwards I met with him, and aſked him, whether he had ſpoke? He told me he had ſpoke to Mr. Huggins, who ſaid it was no Buſineſs of his.

Mr. Juſtice Page. That cannot be given in Evidence, for 'tis only Hearſay.

Mrs. Le Pointz. (Standing up again) I ſaw Mr. Huggins upon the Bare, with one Levings, a Quaker, then a Priſoner in the Houſe, and Mr. Gybbon, during the Time Arne was in the Strong Room.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Which Way did he come upon the Bare?

Mrs. Le Pointz. I cannot tell; there was then but two Ways, one by the Strong Room, and the other through the Houſe.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Whereabouts is the Strong Room?

Mrs. Le Pointz. The Strong Room was built near the Bare, and joins to the End of the Houſe; and I ſaw them walking together; and that he could not well come in or out without coming near the Strong Room.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What did you think was the Occaſion of his coming there?

Mrs. Le Pointz. To take a Survey of the Walls, which were then finiſhed, for that I ſaw him look up at them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did you know Mr. Huggins?

Mrs. Le Pointz. I knew him very well.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. When was this?

Mrs. Le Pointz. I take it to be ſome Time in October, about fourteen Days before Arne died: It was after the Fire happened in Bell-Savage Yard.

Thomas Levings *was called, and being a Quaker * refuſed to take an Oath, and therefore could not be admitted an Evidence.*

Mr. Huggins. It is a great while ago ſince this Matter happened; there is no Notice taken by the Courſe of the Evidence how this Matter has gone on, and therefore it was very difficult to anſwer particularly thereto; this I do ſolemnly affirm, That during the Time Arne was there, I never heard of his Name, that he died, or was in the Strong Room, till that I was in the Fleet to be examined. That I never was ſeen in the Fleet Priſon while Arne was in the Strong Room; and that no one of the King's Witneſſes has ſaid, that I uſed any hard Words about Mr. Arne. There was a Suggeſtion of my getting Arne into Bethlehem, it was no Part of my Office as Warden of the Fleet, but I might by a friendly Office uſe my Intereſt with Mr. Taylor; and that would ſhew me more a humane Man, than one guilty of Cruelty.

That ſome of the Priſoners, who were Witneſſes, were diſcharged the Priſon the 7th of September, ſo it was not likely that they ſhould be able to ſwear as to Arne's Death, who did not die till October.

As to Gybbon being Deputy, the firſt Evidence to be produced will be the Act for Inſolvent Debtors in 1725, to prove that Gybbon carried in a Liſt purſuant to that Act; and delivered it as Gaoler, and ſwore to it; and I muſt deſire, that Mr. Tanner may read the Clauſe in that Act of Parliament, where Gaolers are directed to make out a Liſt of Priſoners.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you would prove Mr. Gybbon Warden, you muſt prove what Conſideration he gave, and what Stile he bore.

Mr. Juſtice Page. Did the Commiſſioners in that Act take notice who was Deputy-Warden or not? Let it be Deputy, or how it would, they took no Notice of that. It would be no Evidence for the King.

Mr. Huggins. It will prove that Gybbon acted.

Mr. Juſtice Page. We ſhall ſee that when the Act of Parliament is read, I allow Gybbon did act in Fact.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he had a Mind to prove Mr. Gybbon Deputy, he muſt prove it by his Deputation.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. It is too early to offer this before the Deputation lies before us; therefore I ſubmit it, if it is not too ſoon to offer this in Evidence.

Mr. Juſtice Page. I cannot direct the Priſoner how he ſhould proceed; whether this may be of Advantage to him I cannot find. If he be charged from a particular Fact that did ariſe by Gybbon, why ſhould not Huggins; by the ſame Rule of Reaſon, juſtify himſelf by any other Act done by Gybbon?

Vide Act.] Then the Clauſe in the Act of Inſolvency in the Year 1725 was ordered to be read.

Mr. Juſtice Page. I do not ſee, upon reading of the Act, it affects any Thing that has been ſaid. I take it that the Officer acts, and makes Returns, and the Law does not ſay whether it is the Warden or the Deputy-Warden. Mr. Huggins, I dare to ſay you yourſelf will own it; and the Uſe that you would make of it is to ſhew, that he acted as Warden.

Mr. Huggins. Fulthorpe was diſcharged the 7th of September. I deſire Mr. Tanner may produce the Liſt, and that it may be read to ſhew that.

Mr. Juſtice Page. If Fulthorpe's Evidence was laid aſide, yet there are Witneſſes enough to prove, that they ſaw you there: However, I muſt take notice of what Fulthorpe ſaid; he ſaid, that Arne was a peaceable Man, and then gave a Deſcription of the Room; and ſaid, that the Floor was covered with a few Boards; and that he ſaw the Priſoner twice in the Fleet, and that he was there at one Time, and looked in at the Door, and then the Door was ſhut, and he went away. This Defence ſeems but trifling.

* In the Caſe of Bambridge (poſtea) the Appellant's Counſel called a Quaker, and inſiſted that this is a Civil Suit, in which he he might be a Witneſs. But the Chief-Juſtice ſaid, it was to this Purpoſe a Criminal Proceeeding, and therefore he could not be a Witneſs. Strange's Reports, Vol. II. p. 856.

Mr. Huggins. I intended it as to the Credit of the Witneſs.

Mr. Juſt. Page. The Man has ſworn honeſtly, and if it was ſtruck out of the Evidence it would not ſignify; and I muſt a little aſſiſt you, as no Counſel is allowed but in Caſes of High-Treaſon. You was going to ſhew the Act of the Deputy, without ſhewing what Authority was given to the Deputy. If you have any Inſtrument or Agreement by which you conſtituted Gybbon Deputy, you muſt produce it.

Mr. Hugg. My Lord, I cannot produce it, becauſe it is in the Hands of the Widow Gybbon, or ſome other Perſon; and we are at this Time in Equity.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Affairs of this Nature have always been done by Indenture—as the Sheriffs of London to their Under-Sheriff—and then you muſt have a Counterpart.

Mr. Hugg. My Lord, I never made any ſuch Indenture; I deſire Mr. Tanner may be aſked, who appeared as Warden upon the Inſolvent Act?

Mr. Tanner. Mr. Gybbon, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Do you believe he was Deputy or not?

Mr. Tanner. I looked upon Gybbon as a proper Officer.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Who do you think was Warden?

Mr. Tanner. I cannot ſay who was Warden.

Mr. Juſt. Page. I thought you would not have equivocated. You are a good Officer, but I ſhall never examine you as a Witneſs.

Call John Jeffreys, Keeper of the Compter. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Hugg. Mr. Jeffreys, pray acquaint the Court what Agreement was made betwen Mr. Gybbon and me.

Mr. Jeff. There was a Writing made, and I was a Witneſs to it, but did not know what it was.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Mr. Huggins, the Queſtions that you ask, you muſt firſt explain to the Court.

Mr. Hugg. I deſire Mr. Jeffreys may be asked, if he was preſent at the Agreement?----Mr. Jeffreys. I was preſent.

Mr. Hugg. Was there any Writing ſigned?

Mr. Juſt. Page. You muſt take care to produce the Writings if you examine to them.

Mr. Hugg. I have ſent a Man for the Receipt of 1000*l*.

Mr. Juſt. Page. I cannot comply for the ſame Title made under your Grant to be given in Evidence for the Grantor: It was a Title from you, and how you will do to prove this by Word of Mouth, I cannot ſee how it can be done; for when a Treaty comes into Articles and Writing, the Treaty by Word of Mouth is at an End without the Writing is produced.

Mr. Hugg. I was going to explain myſelf, and was over-ruled.

Mr. Juſt. Page. When once Articles are come to be a Conveyance, except it is to explain that Conveyance, and except it is to diſcover ſome Fraud even in the Conveyance when given, it cannot be ſpoke to.

Mr. Baron Carter being gone out of Court, now returned, and Mr. Juſtice Page took notice to him of what had paſſed in his Abſence.

Mr. Huggins's Aim is to ſhew, that Mr. Gybbon was ſole, intire, acting Warden; and that no Act of Gybbon's ſhould affect him; and had the late Act of Inſolvency read, and thought to have read the Schedule, but that could not be read. Mr. Huggins aſked who brought in that Schedule, and aſked Mr. Tanner, whether Mr. Gybbon brought in that Return as Deputy or not; who ſaid that he did not know who was Warden, but that Gybbon was the proper Officer: Now Huggins carrying this Matter further, would have Gybbon appear to be his Deputy, and has now called Jeffreys to prove that Deputation. Jeffreys ſays, that it was in Writing, and I could not allow Jeffreys to give in Evidence what was in Writing. Huggins ſaid in Anſwer, that there was no Counterpart, and that Gybbon's Widow had ſuch Appointment. I ſubmit it if it was not his Act and Deed, if Mr. Gybbon allowed of it.

Mr. Hugg. My Lord, it is only a Receipt.

Mr. Jeffreys. My Lord, it was a Receipt for 1000*l*. and no Agreement.

Mr. Hugg. Mr. Gybbon agreed with me for 500*l*. per Annum; and liking the Bargain made a Depoſit of 1000*l*. and this was all the Writing between us, and in it declared that he was to pay 900*l*. per Annum, on Condition of having the Rents of the Houſe and Shops in Weſtminſter-Hall, and required a Depoſit of 1000*l*. and a Parole of three Years may amount to a Leaſe or Demiſe.

Mr. Baron Carter. At ſix Months End Gybbon deſired to have it renewed, and came to the ſubſequent Agreement for 900*l*. per Annum for three Years. If the Court could ſee that Agreement, whether it do not amount to a Leaſe, there may be a Demiſe in it, but how far the Court will lay their Commands to produce it, we ſhall not now determine; it would be very hard to have it out of his Power, and not to admit him to give Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Law requires the beſt Evidence that is to be given; ſuppoſing that that Writing was loſt, he might be admitted to give Evidence that it was loſt. If it was in the Hands of any Officer of the Crown, and they wanted to be admitted to give Evidence as to the Contents, whether upon giving Evidence, that the Thing was in Being, and in the Hands of a third Perſon, they ſhould give Evidence Parole as to that.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Suppoſe a Man receive Money by falſe Tokens, but by ſome Accident it is got into other Hands, and he uſes all the Care and Art he can to get it, and proves that he cannot come at it, it would be hard to convict a Man, if he cannot come at the Writing. It is the ſame in Caſes of Life and Death, by Forgery and falſe Deeds.

Mr. Bar. Carter. I agree your Notion is right in Caſes of Civil Actions, for if he can't give ſuch Evidence as the Law gives againſt it, he has a Remedy at Equity; but in this Caſe, where a Man ſtands indicted for Murder, where can he have his Remedy? I am ſure we ſhould be guilty of Murder, if we inſiſted on it; Huggins ought to give an Account, that he can't come at ſuch Agreement.

Mr. Hugg. Mr. Jeffreys ſays, that he applied to Mrs. Gybbon, and Mrs. Gybbon told him, that it was in the Hands of one Wilſon, her Clerk in Court, and he could not tell whoſe Hands it was in.

Mr. Jeffreys. I have a Copy of that Writing, which has been in my Hands long before any Conteſt happened to Mr. Huggins, for it was written at the ſame Time the Receipt was given.

Mr. Juſtice Page. Is it a true Copy?

Mr. Jeff. I believe it to be a true Copy, and that there has been no Alteration made in it.

The Copy of the Writing read —— And it appeared to be witneſſed by Mr. Jeffreys, the 26th of June 1723.

Mr. Hugg. Have you had any Converſation with Mrs. Gybbon lately?

Mr. Jeff. Mrs. Gybbon came to me about fourteen Days ago.

Mr. Hugg. Was there any Talk of any ſuch Thing as a Leaſe or Articles of Agreement?

Mr. Jeff. There was no ſuch Word mentioned as a Leaſe or Articles of Agreement.

Mr. Hugg. Do you know of any Articles of Agreement?

Mr. Jeff. I don't believe there was any, for I was very converſant with Mr. Gybbon, but never heard him aſk after them.

Mr. Hugg. How long did Gybbon continue in that Office?

Mr. Jeff. Three Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you mean by that Office; did he continue to act for thoſe three Years?

Mr. Jeff. He did, and one Year longer, which I apply'd to Mr. Huggins for him to do.

Mr. Juſt. Page. You was preſent at the ſettling of the Account between Mr. Huggins and Mr. Gybbon: at the Bottom of the Account there are ſome Items that have no Sums to them; pray how did that happen?

Mr. Jeff. My Lord, it was not ſettled.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Was any Thing mentioned, who was to be at the Charge of Repairs during the four Years?

Mr. Jeff. Mr. Huggins made a Memorandum at the Bottom of the Paper.

Mr. Hugg. It was ſettled at the End of four Years.

Mr. Juſt. Page. The Repairs of the Priſon was left a Blank.

Mr. Hugg. I anſwer to that, my Lord, that it was ſettled at the End of four Years; Mr. Jeffreys was then preſent. Your Lordſhip ſeems to take it for a Leaſe of three Years.

Mr. Juſt. Page. It is neither the one, nor the other, either Leaſe or Agreement.

Mr. Hugg. My Lord, Jeffreys ſaid there was no other Agreement.

Call George Welland. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Hugg. When did Gybbon enter upon his Office?

Mr. George Welland. Mr. Gybbon entered at Chriſtmas, 1722, and I was concerned for Mr. Gybbon before, and by his Direction acted, and he always paid me my Fees, and I never received any Thing from Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Hugg. Who bore all Expences relating to the Gaol?

Mr. Well. Mr. Gybbon.

Mr. Huggins. How long did he act?

Mr. Well. Mr. Gybbon was in four Years and a Half.

Mr. Hugg. What do you know about Arne?

Mr. Well. I was there then, and Arne was committed about the Middle of May, and at the latter End of September, Hopkins was ſent into the Country to Shropſhire, and I acted till October, and I was requeſted by Mr. Gybbon to go to the Company of Upholders relating to Mr. Arne. He was brought in May, and put at the Vine, and made his Eſcape, and then grew diſordered in his Senſes. Some of the Priſoners come and brought a Bed of Mr. Howard's, and I ſaw him ſtark naked; and being deſired, he was put in the Strong Room at the Requeſt of the Priſoners.

Mr. Hugg. What was done upon your Application to the Company of Upholders?---Mr. Well. They took Care of him.

The Witneſs had a Book in his Hand, which he called a Check-Book.

Mr. Hugg. Pray give an Account, whether I gave any Direction relating to the Priſoners?

Mr. Well. I never ſaw Mr. Huggins there but twice, and that was, when the Prothonotaries were there.

Mr. Hugg. When had you that Book delivered to you?

Mr. Well. Two Days before Mr. Fitch died; the Book was brought into my Hands, which I continued to act in till Mr. Bigrave came in.

Mr. Hugg. By the Writing in that Book, I can prove Hopkins out of Town. When was Hopkins out of Town?

Mr. Juſt. Page. I will call Fulthorpe to clear up this Matter.

Fulthorpe was called again.

Mr. Juſt. Page. When was it you ſaw Mr. Huggins at the Fleet Priſon?

Mr. Fulthorpe. It was ſome time before I was diſcharged. It was about a Month before Mr. Arne died, and I likewiſe ſaw Mr. Farrington at the ſame Time. Mr. Hopkins was there, and then came in with Huggins.

Mr. Juſt. Page. How often did you ſee Mr. Huggins there?

Mr. Fulth. I ſaw him twice at the Priſon, but once at the Strong Room.

Mr. Juſt. Page. What Time of the Day was it you ſaw Mr. Huggins there?

Mr. Fulthorpe. It was between Eleven and Twelve, and there were there Mr. Huggins, Mr. Hopkins, and Barnes; and I ſaw Mr. Huggins walking upon the Bare, when Levings the Quaker was there, and I believe Mr. Gybbon with them.

Thomas Farrington was again called.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Who was at the Strong Room when you ſaw Huggins there?

Mr. Farrington. There were Mr. Huggins, Hopkins, and Barnes there.

Mr. Hugg. I beg Leave to obſerve, that Fulthorpe was diſcharged on the 7th of September, and whether I may not be allowed to examine Welland again, to know if Mr. Gybbon did not give all Orders, and to prove that the conſtant Uſage was not to have the Coroner ſit upon Bodies in Meſne Proceſs.

Mr. Juſt. Page. You may ask what Queſtions you think proper, for I will ſtay here till To-morrow Morning, to give you an Opportunity of going on with your Defence in your own way.

Mr. Hugg. I deſire then, my Lord, he may be asked, whether Gybbon did not give all Orders relating to the Priſoners?

Mr. Well. He did.

Mr. Hugg. Whether the Coroner was called in to ſit upon any Bodies, but in Execution?

Mr. Well. We never had the Coroner, but upon Execution.

Mr. Hugg. Whoſe Servant was Barnes?

Mr.

Mr. Welland. Mr. Gybbon's Servant, I saw Gybbon pay him Money.
Mr. Huggins. Did you ever see me and Barnes together?
Mr. Wel. I don't believe I ever did.
Mr. Hug. At whose Request was Arne put in the Strong Room?
Mr. Wel. At the Request of the Prisoners.
Mr. Justice Page. Name at whose Request he was put in.
Mr. Wel. I can't tell.
Mr. Justice Page. How came you to know it?
Mr. Wel. I was in the Lodge.
Mr. Justice Page. Was you then present?——Mr. Wel. I was.
Mr. Justice Page. Can't you name one of them?
Mr. Wel. No, none of them are now in Gaol.
Mr. Justice Page. Was not Farrington then a Prisoner?
Mr. Wel. He was.
Mr. Justice Page. How long is it since you was concerned in the Prison?
Mr. Wel. In Michaelmas 1722, and I know nothing of it before.
Mr. Justice Page. Was there not a Benefit to the Warden for Day-Rules?——Mr. Wel. Yes.
Mr. Justice Page. Who was the Money accounted to for?
Mr. Wel. It was accounted for to Bishop. The Clerk of the Papers always received the Money, and I have been there several Times at the Payment of Money.
Mr. Lee. Was it not usual to give Money for the Liberty of the Rules?
Mr. Wel. Mr. Gybbon made it a Custom to take Two Guineas for every Hundred Pounds, for the Liberty.
Mr. Lee. Do you know of any Money paid to Mr. Huggins?
Mr. Wel. I don't know any was.
Mr. Lee. Was you there when the Strong Room was built?
Mr. Wel. I was, and Arne was the first Person that was put in.
Mr. Lee. I ask you, whether it was all finished?
Mr. Wel. I believe it was floored.
Mr. Lee. Was it not an arched Vault?
Mr. Wel. It was a Kind of a Vault, and there was a Bench in it.
Mr. Lee. Where was it situated?
Mr. Wel. It was about three Yards from the Dunghill.
Mr. Lee. Had Arne a Bed there?
Mr. Wel. He had a Bed in it.
Mr. Lee. Was he not in a naked Condition?
Mr. Wel. He was in a naked Condition, which proceeded from his Madness.
Mr. Lee. Was that a Place fit for a Man in his Condition to be kept in?
Mr. Wel. It was.
Mr. Lee. Is there any Place so bad in the Prison?
Mr. Wel. There was a worse Place where I lay, called Julius Cæsar's Ward.
Mr. Lee. How could it be worse?
Mr. Wel. Because many People lay in it.
Mr. Lee. Whether Writs were not directed Deputato, or Locum Tenenti?
Mr. Wel. They were.
Mr. Lee. Who were the Writs returned by?
Mr. Wel. By Mr. Huggins.

Call John Browning. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Huggins. How long have you known the Fleet Prison?
John Browning. I have been a Prisoner there above twenty Years.
Mr. Huggins. When any body died in the Fleet, except in Execution, was there any Coroner's Inquest?
Mr. Browning. Never, but when in Execution. Mr. Dickson, who was Clerk of the Papers before Huggins came, told me so.
Mr. Huggins. My Lord, the Prison being very full, it being against the Time of an Insolvency, the Prisoners grew very riotous, and Mr. Gybbon could not come in, so that there was no Place but the Strong Room to put Arne in.

Call Mr. Samuel Green.

Mr. Huggins. What was the State of the Prison, and the Condition of it in 1725?
Mr. Green. I was had in in February 1724, and came out the latter End of June 1725, and I apply'd to Mr. Gybbon in February 1724 for a Room; Mr. Gybbon said he could not help me to one; then I apply'd to the Prisoners, and gave a Guinea and a Half to them for one.
Mr. Huggins. Was there a Court of Inspectors?
Mr. Green. Yes, and I was one of them, and every Prisoner that came in paid 5*s.* in order to apply to the Court of Common Pleas to regulate the Fees.
Mr. Huggins. You did place People in Rooms. Did you punish any Prisoners?-----Mr. Green. I can't say we did.
Mr. Huggins. Did the Warden dare to come in?
Mr. Green. He did not.
Mr. Justice Page. Could the Prisoners set open the Gates?
Mr. Green. They could not set open the Gates, because there was a Turnkey.
Mr. Huggins. Did Mr. Gybbon offer to come in?
Mr. Green. He did.

Call Mr. William Howard.

Mr. Huggins. Did you know Edward Arne?
Mr. Howard. Mr. Arne came in about three Weeks before I went out, and he was in the same Room where I was, and wanting some Goods, Arne offered me much more than I thought they were worth; for which Reason I did not apprehend him to be in his right Understanding.
Mr. Huggins. Did you desire him to bring some Friend?
Mr. Howard. I think I might desire him to bring some Friend.
Mr. Huggins. How much might he offer?
Mr. Howard. He offered me Nine Guineas, but I took Three, when I sold them to his Friends.

Call Mr. Daniel Woodcock.

Mr. Huggins. What do you know of Edward Arne?
Mr. Woodcock. He came into the Fleet Prison in 1725, and I was a Prisoner a Year and a Half before that, in July 1723, and continued there till September 1725: and I remember Arne's being there some time before I was discharged.
Mr. Huggins. Was you there when he was carried into the Strong Room?
Mr. Woodcock. I was.
Mr. Huggins. Was you in the Cellar, when he was taken from thence?
Mr. Woodcock. I was upon the Stairs, when he was carried into the Strong Room: He lay up and down in the Goal in the Common-Hall and Cellar, till he was carried into the Strong Room, and he was in it till I came away.
Mr. Huggins. Was you ever in the Strong Room?
Mr. Woodcock. I was.
Mr. Huggins. Do you remember the building of it?
Mr. Woodcock. I do.
Mr. Huggins. How near to the Laystall and Dunghill is it?
Mr. Woodcock. Within eight or ten Yards.
Mr. Huggins. Are there any Lights?
Mr. Woodcock. There is a Place to put in Drink at, on the Side of the Door.
Mr. Huggins. What is the Wall made of?
Mr. Woodcock. Lime and Brick, as other Walls are.
Mr. Huggins. How long was it finished before Arne was carried in?
Mr. Woodcock. I can't be certain.
Mr. Huggins. Did you see Arne let out at any time?
Mr. Woodcock. I saw him let out, and he run about stark Naked.
Mr. Huggins. Did you ever see him naked before he was put in there?
Mr. Woodcock. Nd.
Mr. Huggins. Did you ever see me at the Prison?
Mr. Woodcock. Yes, when the Prothonotaries were there.
Mr. Huggins. Did you think you should have known, when I came there?
Mr. Woodcock. It was as well known, as if the King had made a publick Entry.
Mr. Huggins. Was it not for the Prisoners Security to have Arne put there?------Mr. Woodcock. I think it was.
Mr. Huggins. Who sold Arne his Goods?
Mr. Woodcock. Captain Howard sold Arne his Goods.
Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I must observe that the Court of Inspectors punished Prisoners. Did not the Inspectors punish their own Prisoners?
Mr. Woodcock. Yes, they put them in the Stocks.
Mr. Huggins. Could Mr. Gybbon come into the Prison?
Mr. Woodcock. He could not.
Mr. Justice Page. Why then did you not all go out of Prison?
Mr. Huggins. Did not the Court of Inspectors dispose of Rooms?
Mr. Woodcock. I can't say.
Mr. Huggins. Did you see Barnes carry Arne to the Strong Room?
Mr. Woodcock. I saw Arne as he was going to the Strong Room with Barnes; and there was a Complaint made to the Court of Inspectors; but not about this Man, but about others.
Mr. Huggins. Was he a quiet Man?
Mr. Woodcock. I saw no other, than his running about like a Madman.
Mr. Huggins. How many Days was Arne in the Strong Room before you was let out of Prison?
Mr. Woodcock. I was let out about the 4th or 5th of September, there was an Application made to the Court of Common Pleas, and I made an Affidavit against Barnes.

Call Mr. Samuel Humphrys.

Mr. Huggins. Was not you Steward of the Court of Inspectors?
Mr. Humphrys. I was Steward for some considerable Time.
Mr. Huggins. When was the Court first erected, and upon what Occasion?
Mr. Baron Carter. Mr. Huggins, how can you apply this, I can't apprehend. Mr. Humphrys, what do you know of Arne or the Strong Room?
Mr. Humphrys. Mr. Arne was a Prisoner there, when I was there first.
Mr. Baron Carter. Where was he when he came first?
Mr. Humphrys. A Person of his Name came there, whom I knew, and I went with him to see Mr. Arne, and he lived intemperately. This Gentleman, after he had been there, had supplied him with Money, which he spent in Liquors; and after some time he was much altered in his way, and I saw him one Day walking with his Hat and Wig off in the Rain, and took Notice of it; and after that he proceeded to further Extremities, and took up a Brick-bat, and throwed it upon the Bare.
Mr. Justice Page. Do you believe he had any Design against any body?
Mr. Humphrys. I believe he had not.
Mr. Justice Page. Did he ever hit any body?
Mr. Humphrys. I do not know that he did, but we had apprehensions, that he might, after being in that Condition; he was an Object of great Compassion.
Mr. Huggins. What was his Behaviour?
Mr. Humphrys. His Behaviour was such, that he was not fit for a Bed-fellow.
Mr. Huggins. Do you know any Thing of his being put into the Strong Room?
Mr. Humphrys. Before he was put into that Place I was discharged.
Mr. Huggins. Do you remember that you saw me there?
Mr. Humphrys. I don't remember I saw you there, except when the Prothonotaries were there.
Mr. Huggins. Was that Room built when you was there?
Mr. Humphrys. According to the best of my Memory, that Room was built while I was there.
Mr. Huggins. Was it not a Stable before?
Mr. Humphrys. There was a Stable, but I don't apprehend it was built on that Spot.
Mr. Huggins. Was you present at any Time, when the Prisoners desired to have Arne put into the Strong Room?
Mr. Humphrys. I do not know it; it was after that I came away.
Mr. Huggins. Did Gybbon dare to come into the Prison without Leave of the Inspectors?
Mr. Humphrys. Mr. Gybbon was very unwilling to come in, and I believe the Reason was, he could not come in with any Safety. Mr. Gybbon sent one Day to some Gentlemen of the Master Side to know, if he might venture with Safety to the Fleet Prison, for that he had a mind to see the Repairs; upon which Answer was returned, that he might come in; and Mr. Gybbon came in, and I went about with him.
Mr. Huggins. I desire he may be asked, whether, if any Man was injured, would they not have complained of it?
Mr. Humphrys. I was there when Arne came in, and discharged before he was put in the Strong Room.

Call

Call Mr. Thomas Dean.

Mr. Huggins. Did you see me in the Prison during the Time Mr. Arne was there?

Mr. Dean. During the Time I was there, which was till the 12th or 14th of September, you was not there; I was discharged on the 7th, but stay'd a Week after.

Mr. Huggins. Was it the Opinion of the Prisoners that Mr. Arne should be confined?

Mr. Dean. It was.

Mr. Huggins. Who provided him Victuals?

Mr. Dean. One Mr. Louden found him in Meat and Drink, and he was allowed for it. I have seen Mr. Louden in the Room.

Mr. Huggins. Who kept the Key of the Strong Room?

Mr. Dean. I don't know who kept the Key.

Mr. Huggins. Did you see Arne there?

Mr. Dean. I have seen Arne in the Strong Room.

Mr. Huggins. When was he carried there?

Mr. Dean. He was committed to the Strong Room in July, or the Beginning of August.

Mr. Huggins. Did you see me with Gybbon?

Mr. Dean. I went round the Bare when Mr. Gybbon was in the Prison, and was upon the Bare with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not Gybbon's Servants come in?

Mr. Dean. They did, and Gybbon came to Chapel.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whereabouts is the Chapel?

Mr. Dean. The Chapel is within the Walls of the Prison.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Gybbon dare to venture to come to Chapel; how came he not to come at other Times?

Mr. Huggins. Please to ask, whether, if between the Hours of Ten and Twelve I had been there, I must not have been seen?

Mr. Dean. Captain Pattison and others went round the Prison with Mr. Gybbon.

Mr. Huggins. The Question is, If I had been there, whether you would not have seen me?

Mr. Dean. I should.

Mr. Huggins. Had not Arne a broken Constitution?

Mr. Baron Carter. Mr. Huggins, I cannot admit you to go into that Evidence; I don't know what Advantage it will be to you, you are going to prejudice yourself; for if he had a broken Constitution, there was less Reason to put him into the Strong Room.

Call Mr. John Louden.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, be pleased to ask Mr. Louden, whether he had the Care and Custody of Mr. Arne?

Mr. Justice Page. Answer that Question.

Mr. Louden. I knew Mr. Arne before he came to Prison, I had some Acquaintance with him; he came into Prison about the latter End of June, and some Gentlemen spoke to me to have Mr. Arne table with me, and he allowed me 5*s. per* Week; but the Gentlemen grew uneasy at his Dining with them, because that he was something out of Order; and some Time after growing worse, the Gentleman with whom he lay quarrelled with him, and I could not afford to board him any longer, he not being able to pay me; and after he was turned from my Table, some of the Upholders Company came and desired me to dine him as usual; and every Morning I carried him a Breakfast, and a Plate of hot Victuals and Drink, and I had the Key of the Room in two or three Days after he was put in.

Mr. Justice Page. How came you by the Key?

Mr. Louden. Sometimes it was Half an Hour, sometimes an Hour before I could find the Officer, and I said, if they would not let me have the Key, I would not furnish him with Victuals.

Mr. Justice Page. You had the Liberty of going in, could you let him out?

Mr. Louden. Though I had the Key, and had the Liberty of going in, I had no Power to let him out. He was never out, from the Time he was put in, but once, and that was when some Servants of the Upholders Company came to see him, and then Barnes locked him up again; and when he was out he was stark naked, and run into the Chapel with the Feathers all about him, and I went to take him to carry him in again, but he was very sturdy, and would not let me.

Mr. Huggins. In all the Time you had the Key, and the Custody of him, which was from the third Day after his going into the Room, till three Days of his coming out, did you see me in the Prison?

Mr. Louden. I did not.

Mr. Huggins. Do you think you should, if I had come?

Mr. Louden. Yes.

Mr. Huggins. If I had been in the House, should you have seen, or heard of it?---Mr. Louden. I should.

Mr. Huggins. Did any-body sit up with Mr. Arne?

Mr. Louden. There was somebody sat up with him a few Nights before he died.

Mr. Huggins. I submit it to you, my Lord, whether I shall produce the People of the Upholders Company that sat up with him.

Mr. Justice Page. That will be of no great Use to you.

Mr. Huggins. Was there a Court of Inspectors, who governed the Prisoners?---Mr. Louden. Yes, there was.

Mr. Huggins. Do you remember you saw Mr. Gybbon there then?

Mr. Louden. No.

Mr. Huggins. Did the Prisoners dispose of their Rooms?

Mr. Louden. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. I don't understand very well what way you propose to make your Defence; if Mr. Gybbon had the sole Power, then the Court of Inspectors could not; first Mr. Huggins is not concerned, because Gybbon was; and then he could not be concerned, because the Court of Inspectors was. Mr. Huggins I take to be Warden, and Gybbon Deputy-Warden.

Mr. Attorney-General. What kind of a Place is the Strong Room?

Mr. Louden. It is a Brick-wall, and arched over with Bricks, and the Floor is boarded, and at that Time a Bench went across the Room. There is a Hole over the Door, with four or five Iron Bars, and a Hole big enough to put a Quart-pot in by the Side; it was a new built Room, about six or eight Weeks before Arne was put in, there was no Chimney, Fire-place, nor any Convenience to ease Nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it not the Occasion of his Death?

Mr. Louden. It was possible it might. I believe it might do him Prejudice as to his Health.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did it hasten his Death?

Mr. Louden. I do not know but it might; I believe it did hasten his Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who gave you the Key?

Mr. Louden. The Turnkey; and I restored it to him again.

Mr. Att. Gen. As you came to take charge of it, did you always keep the Key?---Mr. Louden. Sometimes I had it, and sometimes they had it.

Mr. Justice Page. Do you believe you could have lived there six Weeks, if you had been put in that Room?

Mr. Louden. I don't believe I could.

Call Morgan Gwyn.

Mr. Huggins. Was you a Prisoner all the while Mr. Arne was there?

Mr. Gwyn. Yes.

Mr. Huggins. Did you see me in the House during that Time?

Mr. Gwyn. I did not hear that you had been in the House all the Time he was a Prisoner there, nor did I see you.

Mr. Huggins. Do you think if I had come, you should have seen me?

Mr. Gwyn. I do think I should.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I have Witnesses to prove that I was in Hampshire from the Beginning of September till the Middle of September; that one Part of the Time that Hopkins and myself are said to be at the Strong Room I was out of Town, and another Part that Hopkins was out of Town.

Call William Huggins.

Mr. Justice Page. You are Son to the Prisoner?

William Huggins. I am, my Lord; I have a House in Hampshire, and I remember by several Circumstances, that my Father came there the 1st of September, and continued till the 14th or 15th.

Mr. Huggins. Was I from your House during that Time?

William Huggins. Neither my Father nor myself were; that being the long Vacation, my Father was absent from his Business, and was out of Town at Sir George Oxenden's.

Call Richard Smith.

Mr. Huggins. I desire he may be asked, my Lord, whether he saw me in Hampshire, in 1725, at my Son's?

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I saw Mr. Huggins in Hampshire about the 14th or 15th of September in that Year; and he was likewise there some Time in August.

Mr. Justice Page. Was Mr. Huggins twice there in that Summer?

Mr. Smith. He was there for a great many Days at one Time.

Mr. Justice Page. Did he go up to London, and come down again?

Mr. Smith. I cannot say whether he did or not.

Mr. Justice Page. Did he come up and down several Times?

Mr. Smith. He was constantly there for some Days.

Mr. Justice Page. What are you?

Mr. Smith. I am Tenant to the Estate which Mr. Huggins purchased.

Call Robert Knight.

Mr. Huggins. Do you know of my being at my Son's House in Hampshire, in 1725?

Mr. Knight. You was there between the 4th and 11th of September, and staid fifteen Days.

Mr. Huggins. When did I return?---Mr. Knight. The 15th.

Mr. Huggins. Was I there in August too?

Mr. Knight. You was there between the 9th and 14th, and stayed seven Days.

Call Charles Bird.

Mr. Huggins. Do you know of my being at my Son's House, in Hampshire, in 1725?

Mr. Bird. You was there in August, 1725, about the 7th, but cannot say how long you stayed there; then you came down on the 1st of September, and returned the 15th of the same Month.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I went from thence into Berkshire.

Call James Green.

Mr. Huggins. Did you see me in Hampshire at my Son's in 1725?

Green. I was a Servant then, and lived in Hampshire at the same Time; and you came there on the first of September, and continued till the Eleventh; and in the same Year you was there in August.

Call John Tucker.

Mr. Huggins. Who are you Servant to?

Tucker. To Sir George Oxenden.

Mr. Huggins. Was I any Time in Berkshire in 1725?

Tucker. You was there in September, 1725; and on the 17th I carried you from Wittenham, in Berkshire, to Henley upon Thames.

Mr. Huggins. Did you carry me any further?---Tucker. No.

Mr. Justice Page. When did Mr. Huggins come there?

Tucker. I did not mind that; I know the Time when I carried him from thence, but cannot tell when he came there.

Sir George Oxenden.

Sir George Oxenden. My Lord, Mr. Huggins said he came from his Son's about the 15th of September, and came to Henley about the 17th. I remember very well that Mr. Huggins was at my House in Berkshire, because Sir Cecil Bishop being there (it was the Day before or after Watlington Fair, which was the 18th), Mr. Huggins offered to purchase a little Farm of him, which Mr. Huggins said he would make a Present of to his Son, which, I thought, was a kind, good-natur'd Act: He went away on the 17th or 18th, and I rather believe it was the 18th, because on that Day I went to Watlington Fair.

Mr. Justice Page. How long did Mr. Huggins stay at your House?

Sir George Oxenden. Mr. Huggins was not there above two Days, and said that he came out of Hampshire.

Call Daniel Hopkins.

Mr. Huggins. I must observe, my Lord, the Witnesses said, that Mr. Hopkins was with me, that he was present at the Strong Room.

Mr. Justice Page. Mr. Hopkins, pray when did you go out of Town?

Mr. Hopkins. I went in the Oxford Coach on Monday, the 27th of September, 1725, and got to Oxford that Night; and on Tuesday took the Worcester Coach to Moreton in the Marsh, and went from thence to a Place called Barton, to one Mr. Oakley's, a Relation's.

Mr. Huggins. When did you return?

Mr. Hopkins. I came back on the 14th of October in the same Year.

Mr. Huggins. I desire, my Lord, he may be asked, if ever he saw me in the Prison in the Month of September?

Mr. Hopkins. No, nor in October; for you was not come back on the 19th.

Mr. Huggins. Was you at the Door of the Strong Room with me?

Mr. Hopkins. No, I was there by myself.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Mr. Farrington?—Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Don't you remember that he was there with you?

Mr. Hopkins. I don't remember any Company was there then.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was Barnes there?——Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Who opened the Door?

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you see Mr. Arne?

Mr. Hopkins. I saw him there; he was naked; he had something about him white, but I cannot say what.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Had you no Discourse about this Man?

Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did not Mr. Gybbon send you to Mr. Huggins about Arne?———Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. When you was at the Door, Did you not whisper to any one?——Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Whose Servant was Barnes?

Mr. Hopkins. He was Servant to Gybbon.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Who named him a Watchman?

Mr. Hopkins. He was a Watchman when I came there; and I saw Gybbon pay him several Times.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Who was you appointed by?

Mr. Hopkins. I was recommended to Mr. Gybbon by Mr. Huggins.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did you do any Business for the Prisoner?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes, and attended him constantly at his House every Morning; but I never had any Thing for that Trouble.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did you buy your Place?—Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did you take all those Journeys to Mr. Huggins for nothing?

Mr. Hopkins. He had seldom any thing to do for me; I was in the Morning generally with him about seven o'Clock, and left him by nine.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Do you know Mrs. Le Pointz?—Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Had you no Discourse with her about Arne as to his Condition?——Mr. Hopkins. I do not remember I had.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Mr. Hopkins, pray consider with yourself, and answer directly, whether or no Mrs. Le Pointz did not desire you to speak to Mr. Huggins about Arne, and you said you would, and that you came to her after, and told her, that you had spoke to Mr. Huggins, and that he said it was no Business of his? Pray consider, and recollect yourself.

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot recollect it.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How did Arne come into the Strong Room?

Mr. Hopkins. I do not know.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How long was he there?—Mr. Hopkins. Six Weeks.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How long was it in that Time before you heard he was there?———Mr. Hopkins. It could not be long.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How long after the Beginning of the six Weeks was it that you saw him there?

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot tell how long; it could not be long.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Was there any Matter in the Gaol that you did not acquaint Mr. Huggins with?

Mr. Hopkins. I seldom acquainted him with any of the Transactions.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Do you remember you acquainted him with this Man's being in the Strong Room?——Mr. Hopkins. I do not know I did.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did you hear any Complaint of his being in that Place?

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot say that I heard any Complaint of his being there.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. I have in my Hand, Mr. Hopkins, an Examination of your's, and I would have you consider with yourself, and I will ask you one Question or two. Do you think the Keeping the Man in that Place was the Cause of his Death?

Mr. Hopkins. I had been very credibly informed of the Indisposition of Arne before.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Upon the Oath you have taken, was not Arne's being confined in that Place the Occasion of his Death?

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot say, upon the Oath that I have taken, that it was, as he was mad and sick before he was put in the Strong Room. I believe the Madness was the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after Mr. Arne was confined was it that you saw him?

Mr. Hopkins. I cannot say how long; I believe it was in the Month of September.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you see him more than once?

Mr. Hopkins. I do not remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you again, Did not you see him more than once?

Mr. Hopkins. I do remember I saw him a second Time lying on the Floor, and the upper Part of his Body was then naked.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was any Prisoner in the Fleet confined in such a Strong Room before?

Mr. Hopkins. None was put in there before, nor in any such.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Kind of Room was it?

Mr. Hopkins. The Roof was arched; it was built even with the Ground, and built not long before Arne was put in there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe the Condition of the Wall?

Mr. Hopkins. The Room was damp.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Officer was you belonging to the Fleet?

Mr. Hopkins. I was Clerk of the Inquiries.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you go to Mr. Huggins frequently?

Mr. Hopkins. I went to Mr. Huggins three or four Times a Week.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you go to Mr. Huggins upon?

Mr. Hopkins. I went to him about his own Business.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you never attend him on Mornings about the Business of the Prison?

Mr. Hopkins. I have acquainted him with some Things.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you acquaint him with Matters of Consequence in the Prison?

Mr. Hopkins. I did, if they were Matters of any Consequence, or extraordinary.

Mr. Att. Gen: Did not you acquaint Mr. Huggins with Mr. Arne's being there?

Mr. Hopkins. The Reason is why I did not, that I went out of Town on the 27th of September, and did not return till the 14th of October.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you, Whether you believe in your Conscience you did acquaint Mr. Huggins or not?

Mr. Hopkins. It is very likely I did, if I was desired.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe in your Conscience you did, if you was desired?——Mr. Hopkins. Why, I verily believe in my Conscience I did, if I was desired.

Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know Arne was mad?

Mr. Hopkins. I heard that he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Would not his own Room have been a sufficient Confinement?——Mr. Hopkins. I believe it would.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you receive any Order from Mr. Huggins for the Relief of this Man?——Mr. Hopkins. I do not know that I did.

[Upon which his Examination, which was taken before Edward Hughes, Esq. upon Oath, was read, to shew his Prevarication.]

Mr. Justice Page. I ask you, Whether in the Month of September, there was not a great many People discharged out of Custody, and whether there was not any one Room that became empty?

Mr. Hopkins. I believe there was, for fifty or sixty Persons were then discharged; but I had nothing to do with the Affair of Rent.

Mr. Justice Page. Was there any Room better than the Strong Room empty?—Mr. Hopkins. Any Room was better than the Strong Room.

Mr. Justice Page. How long was Arne continued there after the 7th of September?—Mr. Hopkins. He was continued there till he died.

Mr. Justice Page. Was there any Room in the House so bad as that?

Mr. Hopkins. I do not know of any.

Mr. Justice Page. When so many were discharged, might there not be a Room that Arne might be put in?

Mr. Hopkins. I do not remember any Disposition of Rooms.

Mr. Justice Page. Was there no Places empty where the fifty or sixty lay?———Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Justice Page. Was there not a Room then for one Man to lie in?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Discourse with Bishop about Arne?

Mr. Hopkins. I do not remember he ever spoke to me about him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mr. Gybbon never speak to you in the Presence of Bishop, to speak to Mr. Huggins, that some Care might be taken of Arne?

Mr. Hopkins. He did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mr. Gybbon order you to speak to Mr. Huggins to get him into Bethlehem, and to speak to Mr. Taylor to get him in?

Mr. Justice Page. I must observe, that Mr. Huggins owned that he only did it (speaking of Arne's being got into Bethlehem) as a Friend, and not Quatenus Warden.

Mr. Lee. Mr. Hopkins. I ask you, Whether you at any Time spoke to Gybbon, or any one else, to give Mr. Huggins Notice of Arne's being in the Strong Room?——Mr. Hopkins. I do not know that I did.

(Call Thomas Smith.)

Mr. Huggins. What Resolution did the Upholder's Company come to, as to the discharging Arne out of the Fleet?

Smith. He was Servant to the Company of Undertakers at Exeter Change.

Mr. Justice Page. Do you know if Arne was to be discharged, or how?

Smith. Martin and others, Members of the said Company, first arrested him, and he was carried to a Bailiff's in Hare-Court, and lay there a considerable Time, and then was carried to the Fleet; and upon an Application to the Company of Upholders, they agreed to discharge him, and get him into Bethlehem.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, he was a very sickly Man before he came there; and I desire the Witness may tell you what Condition he was in.

Smith. In the Month of April, 1725, he was in a weakly Condition.

Mr. Justice Page. Mr. Huggins, I cannot admit you into that Evidence.

Mr. Huggins. I desire to call People to his Character.

(Call Mr. Thomas Arne.)

Mr. Huggins. He was chief Mourner to Arne; I desire he may acquaint you what Relation he was to him.

Mr. Arne. Edward Arne was my Uncle's Son: I know that he was in Prison; he lay some Time at an Officer's House, and from thence was removed to the Fleet.

Mr. Huggins. When did you go to him?

Mr. Arne. A Week or ten Days before he died I saw him there; I enquired for him, and they said he was locked up, and directed me to go to Mr. Louden, Mr. Jerningham's Man.

Mr. Huggins. Was the Door shut?

Mr. Arne. It was padlocked; he lay down at the Side of the Room near the Door, and I found some Rags about him. He knew me, and took me by the Hand; he was then very ill, and could hardly speak. I asked him, what was become of his Ring, Seal, Gold-headed Cane, and other Things of Value? He spoke very faint; I with much Difficulty understood by a Word now and then, that one Searls, a Mercer, had got some of them; and afterwards upon Enquiry found, that he had his Gold Watch, which he had lent him fourteen Guineas upon.

Mr. Huggins. Did he make any Complaint to you?

Mr. Arne. He was not capable of complaining, being so very weak.

Mr. Huggins. What State of Health was he in before he came there?

Mr. Arne. I believe he was in a wasting Condition before he was arrested

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any Complaint as to his being in the strong Room?——Mr. Arne. By him I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. At the Time when you came to visit him, was the Room in a Condition for a sick or a well Man?

Mr. Arne. I believe it was not fit for a sick or a well Man to be in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long do you think you could have lived if you had been confined in that Room?

Mr. Arne. I could not have lived six or seven Days, and could not believe any Man alive could be there six or seven Weeks.

Mr. Att. Gen. How often was you there?

Mr. Arne. I never saw it but once.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think you could have lived there six Weeks?

Mr. Arne. I think I could not live six Weeks in the Damp without Fire or Candle.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, I desire to call some Gentlemen to my Character.

Mr. Just. Page. That you may do if you think fit.

Sir George Oxenden, Bart.

My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins about nine Years, but have been more particularly acquainted with him these four or five Years last past; I never took him to be an ill-natur'd or barbarous Man, and do not believe, willingly, he would do an inhumane Thing to any one.

Sir John Hinde Cotton, Bart.

Mr. Huggins. Pray give an Account how long you have known me.

Sir John Cotton. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins about four or five Years, and have had Occasion to be a good deal with him. I believe him to be a good-natur'd, humane Man; and believe in my Conscience, he would not have been guilty of the Cruelty laid to his Charge.

Call Robert Viner, Esq.

Mr. Robert Viner. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins ever since I can remember any thing at all, he has been concerned for our Family these forty or fifty Years, and I lived with him two Years together; and I take him to be a good-natur'd and humane Man; and, in my Conscience, believe he would not be guilty of a cruel Thing to any Man.

Call John Hedges, Esq.

Mr. John Hedges. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins about six Years, and always took him for a good-natur'd and humane Man; and have since had an Opportunity of knowing several Instances of his Generosity and Good-nature without Fee or Reward: I have known him six or seven Years as a general Acquaintance, and he was very good natur'd and humane; and some time since I have known some Instances of great Generosity and Good-nature, merely for the Pleasure of doing Good, without Fee or Reward.

Call John Knight, Esq.

Mr. John Knight. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these eight or nine Years past, and frequently had Opportunities of being in Conversation with him, and I always took him to be, as far as any Man living, from doing any thing that was cruel; and always acted agreeable to the Character of a humane Man; and I am very sorry any such Thing should be laid to his Charge.

Call Christopher Tillson, Esq.

Mr. Tillson. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these five-and-thirty Years, not superficially, but in particular Friendship, and have found him in all Instances a Man unblameable; and I never saw any thing tending to Cruelty or ill Usage; and have always found him so for these thirty-five Years.

Call Major Churchill.

Major Churchill. My Lord, I have known him these forty-five Years, and have had frequent Communication with him, and always found him a Friend and a Man of Humanity, despising of Money; there was one Thing, in a most particular Manner, I will acquaint your Lordship of.

Mr. Just. Page. I can't admit you into a particular Character, but you may go on with a general one.

Major. Churchill. I never thought him capable in Thought, Word, or Deed, of doing a cruel Thing.

Call Thomas Gibson, Esq.

Mr. Thomas Gibson. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins for these seven or eight Years past, and found him to act with Good-nature, Integrity, Honour, and Humanity.

The Rev. Doctor Pearce (Rector of St. Martin's in the Fields, now Bishop of Rochester).

Dr. Pearce. My Lord, Mr. Huggins is a Vestry man; and I have had more particular Reason to converse with him frequently on that Account, and I never found any Thing in him, that was any way consistent with what is laid to his Charge, and have constantly found him at Church.

Edward Thompson, Esq.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these seven Years, and have had frequent Experience of Acts of his Friendship and Good-nature, and never discovered any Thing in his Behaviour, but the utmost Good-nature.

Thomas Woodford, Esq.

Mr. Woodford. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins many Years. I have been with him both sober and mellow, and never have discovered any Thing barbarous or cruel in him; and I verily believe he could not be guilty of any such Act, if he knew it at all.

Joseph Taylor, Esq.

Mr. Taylor. My Lord, I have transacted a great deal of Business with Mr. Huggins, and found him act with Candor. Sometimes I have been concerned against him, and sometimes with him; and, if ever I had suspected any Thing in him tending to Cruelty, I assure you, my Lord, I would have shunned his Company instead of seeking it, as I have done.

Martin Bladen, Esq.

Mr. Bladen. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins many Years, and have lived by him in the Country these eight or nine Years; and the Character that he has had is, that he is a good-natured, humane Man; it has been his whole Business of Life to leave a good Character; and, therefore, I can't believe he would do an ill-natured Act.

John Lade, Esq. afterwards Sir John Lade, Bart.

Mr. Lade. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these forty Years, and have seen a great many kind, compassionate Things of him.

Sir Charles Cox, Knt.

Sir Charles Cox. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these forty Years, and have had frequent Dealings with him, and always observed him to be a Man of Charity and Humanity; and I have courted his Company from the good Opinion I have had of him, and don't believe that he would be guilty of any Inhumanity.

Edward Halsey, Esq.

Mr. Halsey. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins near thirty Years, and have been conversant with him, and the Observation I have made of him is, that I have found him zealous to do good Offices, where he had no Fee or Reward, and never found him covetous or cruel.

Sir James Thornhill, Knt.

Sir James Thornhill. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins for these twenty-five Years, and I was proud of the Honour of his Acquaintance. I have never seen or heard of the least cruel Act that he has done by any one; and if I was to repeat the Instances of good-natured Acts——

Mr. Just. Page. Sir, you can't be admitted to do that.

Thomas Martin, Esq.

Mr. Martin. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins these thirty Years, and that he has done a great many kind and good-natured Things. I never knew him a vain Man, but that he did it through Good-nature.

Colonel Negus.

Col. Negus. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins a great many Years, and always looked upon him to be a good-natured-Man; and that it was impossible to think he could do so ill-natured an Act, as laid to his Charge.

—— Campbell, Esq.

Mr. Campbell. My Lord, I have known Mr. Huggins from fifteen to twenty Years, and always found him behave himself with Integrity in his Profession, as a good-natured Man, and always thought his Genius far superior to do an ill-natured Thing. I always had, and still have a good Opinion of him.

Mr. Huggins. My Lord, it appeared to your Lordship, that Mr. Gybbon was the Acting-Warden, and that Barnes was his Servant, not mine. No Argument can be drawn from the Coroners not sitting, the Custom of the Place is otherwise, but as to any Application to get him into Bethlem, that, my Lord, can't be applied to me Quatenus Warden, for it would be only in me a good-natured Act: If Barnes put him in, he is not my Servant; if so, then the Indictment must fail.

That as to the Witnesses they were Prisoners, and they are natural Haters of their Keepers.

I never went to the Prison, but had a hundred People about me, and I must have been seen by many; there was no Pretence of using any Barbarity to any Man, no Money to be extorted; and when I could no way be benefited by it, no one can think, my Lord, I could be guilty of Murder, when no Benefit or Advantage by it could arrive.

Mr. Louden, my Lord, who had the Custody of the Man, and had the Key till three Days before his Death, had never seen me there; and if he that had the Key did not know of my being there, who should? I shewed, my Lord, that I was out of Town in September, and Hopkins was out of Town till the 14th of October, so that it was impossible, that us two could be there together. All the other Witnesses, that have been called against me would not have lain from that Day to this in Prison, had they not lost their Honour, or lost their Designs.

I never saw the Man, nor heard there was such a Prisoner, and to murder a Man for nothing, God Almighty knows there never stood a Man at this Bar with more Innocency than myself.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. It is plain on the King's Side, that a Subject has been murdered; and what Mr. Huggins has endeavoured to shew is, that he never acted, but had a Deputy, and that Deputy was accountable, if any body, for he had no Acquaintance of this Thing; your Lordship, has heard the Witnesses, and I don't doubt but will relate the Evidence fully.

The Counsel for the Prisoner objected to Mr. Serjeant Cheshire's replying.

Mr. Just. Page. I am of Opinion, Brother, you can't reply.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. But I may say something to what has not been given already in Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Huggins endeavours to shew that Gybbon was the Acting-Warden. No, my Lord, neither by a Lease or Deputation Gybbon could not be appointed Warden.

Mr. Just. Page. Mr. Attorney, I cannot admit you to enter into any Reply, but if you have any Evidence, you may call them.

Call Elijah Beavis.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you a Prisoner in the Fleet, in the Year 1722?

Mr. Beavis. Yes, and I had the Liberty of the Rules, in the Year 1723; and in the Year 1724, I was intituled to be cleared by the Act of Insolvency, but because I could not give the Warden Money enough, was continued till the Year 1725, and I used to see Mr. Hopkins at Pindar's, where Gybbon kept his Office, and it was generally accepted by every body, that Hopkins brought Directions from Huggins to Gybbon every Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you heard Hopkins say, that he had Directions from Mr. Huggins to Gybbon, and that he came from Huggins?

Mr. Beavis. I did not hear any particular Directions.

Richard Bishop.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who gave Directions as to the Management of the Gaol?

Mr. Bishop. The particular Things were done by Huggins's Directions, but the common Things without.

Call Joseph Johnson.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Directions brought from Mr. Huggins by Mr. Hopkins, to Mr. Gybbon?

Mr. Johnson. I have heard Mr. Hopkins say, that he came from Mr. Huggins, and that he bid him come every Morning to him; and that one time Mr. Huggins sent word back by Hopkins, that I should be locked up.

Edward Hughes, Esq. (a Member of the House of Commons.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, what have you heard Mr. Huggins declare, as to the Acts he did during the time Gybbon was his Deputy?

Mr. Hughes. My Lord, it appeared to me ——

Mr. Baron Carter. Sir, you are not to tell us of what appeared to you, but what you know of your own Knowledge.

Mr. Hughes. My Lord, I can't tell how Knowledge should come to me, until it appeared to me. (After some Pause Mr. Hughes went on.)

My Lord, Mr. Huggins was ordered to attend the Committee, and while Mr. Huggins was there, he was asked, what Escapes had happened during the Time he was Warden? He said, he could not give an Account of them, there had happened so many; but said, that Oliver Read had escaped, and when he was taken, that he Mr. Huggins had ordered Corbett the Tipstaff to put him in Irons, which were sent for from Newgate by his, Huggins's directions, and owned that he did it by Virtue of his Authority for an Eſcape; this Confeſſion Huggins made himſelf, and owned, that he had paid 500*l.* for ſuch Eſcape that Read had made.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was it Mr. Huggins or Mr. Gybbon ordered him to be put in Irons?

Mr. Hughes. I did not ſay it was Mr. Gybbon bid him be put in Irons, but it was Mr. Huggins, and that he ordered him to be put in Irons as Warden, and in all Eſcapes he acted as Principal, for he paid 500*l.* for that Eſcape.

Mr. Baron Carter. About what time was this?

Mr. Hughes. It was upon the firſt Eſcape that Read made; it was in the Year 1726, that Read got off thoſe Irons, and made his ſecond Eſcape, and was retaken; and then he was put in the Dungeon.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was there any particular Time mentioned?

Mr. Hughes. I have recollected, and it was in the Year 1726; what points out the Time, is Read's Eſcape.

Mr. Serjeant Darnell. That Paper produced by Jeffreys amounts to a Leaſe.

Mr. Juſtice Page, and Mr. Baron Carter. } When ever an Agreement is made to make a Leaſe, that can never be eſteemed a Leaſe.

Proclamation was made to keep Silence.

Mr. Juſtice Page. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt Mr. Huggins, the Priſoner at the Bar, and one Barnes, for the Murder of Edward Arne. The Indictment is indeed particular; the Indictment takes notice, that Huggins was Warden of the Fleet the 1ſt of October, in the late King's Reign; that he being Warden, had the Government of the Priſoners in the Gaol (that Barnes was an Agent of his, who is fled from Juſtice). It ſets forth, Gentlemen, that Barnes ſeized upon the ſaid Arne, and carried him to a Place, called the Strong Room; and that Huggins was Aiding, Abetting, and Aſſiſting in carrying him to that Place, and he was continued there the Space of ſix Weeks; that this is a Place of cold Reſtraint, and a Room newly built, made of Brick and Mortar, very wet and unfit to live in; that this Barnes did continue him in this Place for ſix Weeks in a moſt barbarous and vile Manner, and not allowed him any Neceſſaries, inſomuch that he had no Chamber-pot, he was without Fire or Fire-place, and only had a little bed. This is the Nature of the Dungeon. It is a Vault arched over, and in the Wall a little Hole big enough to put a Quart-pot in at. It is built over a Common-Sewer adjoining to a Layſtall, where all the Dirt and Filth of the Priſon lies, which made it not only ſo noiſome, but very unwholeſome, that the continuing this Perſon ſo long in this Place was the Occaſion of his Death. That Mr. Huggins was acquainted with it, but ſhewed him no Favour; he was not let out, and died in the Middle of October. He died, Gentlemen, by this Dureſs of the Priſoner. I will ſay but little to what the Law is in this Caſe; a Priſoner for Debt is only taken like a Diſtreſs, and kept there till he, or his Friends can pay the Debt for him. Impriſonment is no Puniſhment, it is not taken as Part of the Debt; for let a Man lie ever ſo long, his Heirs at Law cannot be exempt from the Debt, but, if they have Effects, are anſwerable for it. He is kept only in ſuch Manner as he may be forth-coming and ſafe; this being the Caſe, he is to be kept in here in a becoming way, as the Warden may be ſafe, and the Priſoner forth-coming, but in no other Degree that the Priſoner ſhould be puniſhed, by any unreaſonable Reſtraint. If this Arne was kept in no other way than became the Subject of the King, in that reaſonable Manner, ſo that you may take it, there was no Torture, ill Uſage, or any Act, but ſuch as was fit and decent for Confinement, no Dureſs; then and in that Caſe, though he died there, it will not be Murder.

But if by the Evidence that has been called, it appears that this Room was an unfit Place to lay this Man in, that it muſt be the Means of his Deſtruction, that (being in ſuch Impriſonment as the Gaoler cannot juſtify) will be Dureſs; if they carry that Point, it is Part of the Common Law, the Antient Law, and very rightly obſerved by the Counſel, that it will be Murder. It would be very hard to take away this Law, though in his own Defence; as he was intruſted with the Life of the King's Subject, he was anſwerable for him, and the Coroner's Inqueſt ought to have ſat upon his Body; the Law is ſo much afraid of the Loſs of the Life of a Subject, that the King will have an Enquiry to ſee what is become of the Life of the Priſoner. It was opened by the Counſel for the King, that it was wilfully omitted; on the other Hand, it was urged that this Cuſtom ſeemed to be aſleep, and that it was hard to lay a great Weight, where it had not been ſo long practiſed. Gentlemen, there have been great Numbers of Witneſſes called, and therefore I cannot give it Word for Word, but will repeat as far as is neceſſary.

Mr. Longlorn was called to prove the firſt Part of the Indictment, that Huggins was Warden; and he proved the Copy of the Letters Patent granted to Mr. Huggins, who might act by himſelf or Deputy.

Bigrave gave an Account, that Huggins's Patent bore date on the 25th of July, in the 12th Year of the late Queen; that Mr. Huggins, though Warden, did not act himſelf, but appointed Gybbon as Deputy; and that Securities were taken by Huggins not by Gybbon, that is to be conſidered in point of Law, that the Act muſt be brought againſt him as Warden, and the making of a Deputy does not diſcharge him of his Duty; in ſeveral Caſes he does not continue anſwerable, for in Civil Caſes the Deputy is anſwerable, therefore the Security is lodged with him. It is a very ſtrong Evidence that the Warden ſtill continues Warden, that he ought to ſee to the Eſcape of Priſoners, for that is not only truſted to the Honeſty of the Warden, but he is to take the beſt Care he can of Eſcapes. He ſays, that Gibbon did buy his Place, that he did overſee and look after the Affairs of the Fleet, and filled up ſeveral Warrants, but always in Huggins's Name; that he did apprehend that Barnes was only a Servant to Gybbon, and that Gybbon, no doubt, had the immediate Truſt of the Gaol; and that Barnes was a Runner to Gybbon, and not Huggins's Servant. He agreed what this Place was; that it was arched over; that it was eight Feet wide, eleven Feet long, and nine Feet high; that it was built very little Time before Arne was committed there; he could not deſcribe the whole Situation, but gave an Account that it was very nigh the Dunghill and Filth, had no Chimney nor Chimney-place, and had only two little Holes to let the Air in. He gives an Account of Hopkins; that he looked upon Hopkins to be Gybbon's Servant, beſides that he was Clerk to Mr. Huggins at his Houſe in St. Martin's Lane, and generally went backward and forward moſt Days to Mr. Huggins, and was able to give him an Account of what happened in the Gaol.

Hopkins tells you, he was Clerk of the Inquiries, and that all the Security-Bonds were left with Gybbon, but left in Blank; and when he had inquired into the Securities, the Security-Bonds were filled up by Gybbon; that Gybbon received all the Money, and he heard that Gybbon was to pay Four Hundred Pounds per Annum for it, but that all went on in the Name of Huggins.

Biſhop ſays, that he was Tipſtaff under Huggins; that he did pay for his Place, which coſt him Two Hundred Pounds; and that about 1724 or 1725 Arne was brought a Priſoner firſt, and was carried to the Vine, and there continued about a Month, and afterwards was carried into Priſon, and lay with one Shaw, and upon a Quarrel was turned out, and the Strong Room was built at the latter End of the Summer; and it muſt be granted, it was not fit for mortal Man, ſcarce any Beaſt, to be in. Gentlemen, this Room is totally unfit for any Man to be put in; and that it was ſtrongly proved, that from the Nature of the Place, and the Circumſtances of the Weather, it was the Occaſion of his Death; that it was new built, not above three or four Yards from the Dunghill, and that every thing of Nature was done in it; there was no Chair, no Proviſion, only an old Bed. That he ſaw him before running about naked in the common Yard, and upon this did tell Gybbon of him, and that it was not fit for the poor Man to be left alone, ſo it was fitter for him to go to Bethlehem; and very ſoon after the Man was put into the Strong Room. To go along with Mr. Huggins, I muſt take Notice of an Obſervation he made: That it was very unfit for a Man to go naked about where there were Women; and it was fit he ſhould be confined ſomewhere. He (ſpeaking of Biſhop) gives ſome Account of Barnes, and ſome Account when the Room was built, juſt at the latter End of the Year; that he did hear he was in a very wild Condition; that Barnes nor none of them did apprehend Gybbon to have the ſole Power; but that Gybbon acted by the Authority of Mr. Huggins; but that he would apply to Mr. Huggins about it, and did aſk the Priſoner if it was not proper to get him into Bethlehem; and Huggins obſerved it was not Part of the Office of Warden of the Fleet, but he might by a friendly Office uſe his Intereſt with Mr. Taylor, and that would ſhew him more a humane Man than one guilty of Cruelty. When any thing ſpecial happened, that was ſtill done by Huggins; that tho' Arne was in that Condition, though there was no Occaſion or Hazard, and no Cauſe for putting him into that Room, Huggins not only a Principal, who is anſwerable for his Deputy, was often in the Fleet, and ſaw him ſeveral Times whilſt Gybbon was Deputy, and Arne in that Confinement, and did give Orders about ſeveral Things of Moment. Arne he knew was diſordered, but never did any ill Thing to put him in Fear and Hazard; the Man never did any Hurt, he might drink, but then there were other Rooms to put him in; no Place could be found to put this Man in ſo bad as this. When he was turned out from Shaw he had a little Place that he put up in the Common-Hall, and his Goods were carried down there. It was very hard to imagine, if he was not very well, if he was a little diſtempered, it was very ſtrange that no Place could be found but the Strong Room to put him in. When I came to ask the Queſtion, if there were other Rooms where the Man might be kept with Safety, it was ſaid, that there were Rooms where he might be put in Safety; but it was not thought fit he ſhould go into a Place fit for a Chriſtian to go in, but into this Place.

Mr. Cotton, by the Book, ſhews, he was admitted Priſoner on Meſne Proceſs in 1725, to ſhew he did not require to be kept in the ſame Strictneſs as on Execution. The Care of the Gaoler is to keep a ſafe Cuſtody, but not ſo great on Meſne Proceſs: If a Man in Execution for 1000*l.* was to eſcape, he muſt pay the whole Money: No Action of Debt lies on Meſne Proceſs; then the Gaoler is not anſwerable, the Gaoler could not pay the Debt, the Gaoler is no further anſwerable than for the Perſon: ſo that the Terror was not ſo great, the Danger was not ſo cloſe, and that may be the Reaſon that the Coroner does not ſit upon Priſoners in Meſne Proceſs, becauſe the Hazard is not ſo great; and he ſays, that about Hillary Term 1724 Barnes came in; and that he was a Watchman and a Runner there.

Farrington apprehends, that Arne came in about the Middle of June, and that he was in good Health when he came in, and that he never knew him do an ill Thing, nor that he would drink; that there was no Danger of his breaking Priſon. That he was put into the Strong Room in September, and continued therein till the Middle of October. When he firſt came into the Priſon he lodged with one Robert Shaw, and Shaw threw his Bed out of the Room; he then put his Bed upon a Settle, and he lay there till he was carried to the Strong Room.

He did not ſee Arne locked in the Strong Room, but did ſee him taken away, and ſays, that the Room was not built above ſix Weeks before the poor Man was carried there. That it was ſo very wet, green, and ſo much ouſing from the Mortar, that one might with one's Hands ſtrike the Drops off the Wall; and gave the ſame Account as to the Manner, that it was not tiled in, and he was continued there from the Middle of September, to the Middle of October, and lay in a miſerable Condition, not only having his own Excrements ſticking about him, but the Feathers of the Bed, having opened it and crept into it for Warmth. I need not take Notice of the Situation of the Place, that has been fully deſcribed. There was only two ſmall Holes to let in the Air, there was no Fire, nor Fire-place. He ſays, that after ſome time the poor Man grew hoarſe. One of the Witneſſes ſays, that he had a ſhivering Hoarſeneſs, and ſo continued lingering on till he died: Before he died he came to a bad Hoarſeneſs, and his Senſes and Voice were ſo far gone afterwards, that he could not ſpeak; then Nature failed, he fell away, and Death grew upon him, then he grew delirious, and in this poor Condition he had nothing but a Feather-bed, which a Gentleman had lent him, laying in the Dirt in his own Excrements, and in a naſty Condition, and no way left to preſerve Life, but to cut his Bed open, and to lie in the Feathers as long as he could: Being in this miſerable Condition, he came into the Church more like a feathered Fowl, than a human Creature, that the Feathers ſtuck all about him; he burſt out and came to the Church; he was demanded back again, and had no Comfort or Relief. Farrington, one of the Evidences ſays, that he ſaw Hopkins and Huggins at the Door of the Strong Room, and the Door was open, and Huggins looked upon him, and Hopkins and Huggins whiſpered, and talked together, but he was not near enough to hear what was

was ſaid, but Huggins ſhook his Head; not only Gybbon but Huggins himſelf locked him up, with Barnes, and this was at the Time when the Door was open, and Barnes kept the Key. It was when the Door was open, and Huggins looked in upon him, the Diſcourſe you will beſt judge of; his (meaning Huggins) Eyes were there fixed. This is very ſtrong upon the Priſoner; whether Huggins before knew of it, Huggins knew of it then, and then might have ſaved his Life; he might have taken the proper Care as he ought to have done of him; if Mr. Huggins had done his Part, it would have been no Objection to Huggins, and if he did nothing at that Time, you will judge how far he did pity the Man, whether he did know of it before or no, if he was privy to his being kept in that Dureſs, he had ſufficient Power, and nothing could bar him of having the ſuperior Power, for, in the Preſence of his Deputy, he might act; he that put the Man under Dureſs not only was told of it, but ſaw the Miſery of it; it makes him in Law a Principal. That Place was ſo damp, that he himſelf was in there but three Days, and was almoſt killed in that Time. It made his Legs ſwell, and he had been dead, if he had continued there longer. That Man died there from the Noiſomeneſs of the Place.

Fulthorpe ſays, that Arne and another Priſoner was drinking with him a Pot of Ale (that Gentleman don't create great Anger in the Fleet.) The Witneſs ſays, that he paid Five Shillings per Week for Boarding, and Barnes came up and ſeized upon Arne and carried him away, but he did not go to follow him; that Arne was very quiet, and he went the next Day to ſee how it was with him, and there was looſe Boards, which he apprehended to lie on the common Sewer, and the Walls were all green and wet, and that it was a miſerable Place; that the Man continued ſix or ſeven Weeks in this Strong Room.

He ſays, that he ſaw Huggins come twice into the Fleet, while Arne was in the Strong Room, but whether it was the Time that Farrington was there can't be certain; but that Huggins, Hopkins, and Barnes were there, and were looking upon him. When he came there a ſecond Time, he can't ſay that Huggins came to look on Arne, for that he ſtaid there only Half an Hour, to take care of the Priſon and Priſoners; that Arne was in Health at, and before the Time he was put in there, and that he went to give him ſome Drink at the Hole, and the Stench of the Room was ſo great that it was like to ſtrike him down. He ſays, that to the beſt of his Judgment on viewing the Place, that it was impoſſible for a Man to live there. He did ſee Arne out two or three Times, but they turned him in again.

Smith ſays, that Arne for whom he had a great Concern (which Matter is of great Conſequence, that requires the utmoſt Attention), was carried to the Vine, and then carried to the Gaol; that Barnes, who was a Servant to Huggins, as Arne was drinking in the Cellar without being the leaſt troubleſome, ſeized upon Arne, and carried him to the Strong Room; he lay upon the bare Ground, and had nothing to reſt him upon; the Deſcription of the Room that he gives, is, that there was no Fire-place, no Candle, nothing to eaſe Nature in, ſuch a Stink that he was forced to hold his Noſe, extremely wet, and in no Condition fit for any one to lie in; he having no Credit with Gybbon, wrote to Huggins ſeveral Letters, and in one of them mentioned the ſaid State of Arne, and ſent it by Robin the Porter, he ſent it by the common Porter, but did not prove that Robin delivered the Letter to Huggins, or brought an Anſwer, and was of Opinion, this barbarous Treatment was the Death of the poor Man.

Robin was examined as a Witneſs, he ſaid he did not know what the Letters were; he did what he was paid for, but can't take upon him to ſwear, whether the Letters were delivered to Mr. Huggins, and what the Contents of the Letters were; there is a Chaſm in that Part.

Paine ſays, that Arne was in a good State of Health, that he might drink, but there was no Ground or Occaſion to put him in the Strong Hold, that Barnes was Servant to Gybbon, and that Gybbon acted as Chief-Warden, and that the Priſoner at the Bar did not act. He gave an Account how the Room was built, that it was very damp, that Arne grew hoarſe, and loſt his Voice; and he believes any Perſon could not be there without Danger of loſing his Life.

Bouch ſays, that he was Turnkey, and gave an Account, when the Strong Room was built, and apprehended it was built by Huggins; that Huggins did come to the Lodge, but can't ſay whether he came into the Priſon or no; he ſays, that the poor Man died after in October, and that he carried a Letter to Mr. Huggins, wrote by one of Arne's Friends; that he gave it to Huggins, who opened it, and read it, who ſaid, that he muſt leave it, and Mr. Huggins would acquaint him with the Nature of the Rules; he further ſaid, that Mr. Huggins did not act ſingly and ſolely, and I don't know how indeed he could, I don't know how he could controul a Principal, he might controul a Deputy; he ſays, he did apply to Mr. Huggins to be Turnkey, and was very often in the Priſon, and ſaw Arne, and gave an Account of his being in that languiſhing Condition, and that he died there; the Chief of his Evidence is, that Mr. Huggins came often to inquire about the Affairs of the Gaol, and that he was ſtill principal Warden, and if any Thing wrong was done, he ordered it to be rectified.

Tucker was employed to make the Iron Work, but don't ſay by whom ordered.

Mrs. Le Pointz ſays, ſhe ſaw Arne in the Strong Room; and when Mr. Huggins was laſt there, ſhe ſaw him on the Bare, and that he could not come in or out, without coming near the Strong Room, and that it was impoſſible for him to go out upon the Bare, but to go by that Room.

For the Priſoner, he does inſiſt upon ſeveral Ways of making his Defence. He ſays this was in 1725, and therefore its not to be expected, that he can give ſo good an Account as if it had been a more recent Proſecution; this Thing had ſlept for three or four Years. It was taken Notice by Mr. Attorney how this came now by a ſtrict Examination, and a very honourable one, and that he mentioned was the Reaſon it could not eſcape the Eyes that were ſo diligent; that is the Anſwer to that Part of the Defence. Another Part of his Defence is, whether he was made Warden at the Time, that the Letters Patent bore Date? He takes Notice of his coming to an Agreement with Mr. Gybbon, who, he ſays, had the ſole Management, he was willing to put himſelf into a State of Inaction.—He did agree at firſt for the Priſon only for Half a Year, and then Gybbon, willing to take the whole Rents and Profits, was to pay together Nine Hundred Pounds per Ann. which was agreed on. Another Part of his Defence that he made, was, that he intruſted Mr. Gybbon with the Management of the Office; he had ſo little Knowledge, that he had never ſeen nor heard of the Name of Arne, nor never knew that there was ſuch a Priſoner.

Another Matter inſiſted upon, that there were three Witneſſes, that were all miſtaken, and that no Credit at all ought to be given to them; and it won't be very material. Some of his Witneſſes ſay, that they never heard of his being there, and others that he was not at London, looking upon it, that he was not concerned at all. To prove this he calls Witneſſes, and called Mr Tanner to read the Inſolvent Act, that Deputies were to make Returns of Priſoners. To prove the Liſt of the Priſoners was returned by Mr. Gybbon, he would have produced an Affidavit, but it was not ſufficient to be Proof. Mr. Tanner was aſked, whether at the Time the Liſt was delivered, Mr. Huggins was not Warden? He did not think fit to anſwer that Queſtion, and I did not preſs it very far: But I ſhall ſhew you Gybbon was only Deputy. The next Witneſs that was called was Jeffreys, to ſhew how far Gybbon was concerned in the Office; he was by when the Agreement was made, and ſigned by Mr. Huggins, and when it came to be a Queſtion, when that was to be read, whether it was an Agreement or not, he could not tell where it was, it was out of his Power, he could not produce it then. Jeffreys ſaid it was an Acquittance; upon that Huggins endeavoured to get the Paper, and that this was a Copy of it taken, and that it was a true Copy, then that Receipt was proper to be read: When that came to be read, you will conſider what it was; it was neither Leaſe nor Deputation, only an Agreement for a Leaſe, what Rent was to be paid, and how long he was to have it. It was a Receipt for a Depoſit of One Thouſand Pounds, wherein there was a proper Covenant and Clauſes to be performed. I don't go to argue the Validity of it, if a Man had agreed to hold Land for three Years, that would be a Leaſe; and if Huggins and Gybbon had agreed certainly for three Years, that would have been a Grant of the Office, and a ſufficient Evidence of a Deputation but it is nothing but an Agreement for a Deputation, or a Leaſe. In Strictneſs of Law it is nothing; though this may not be in Point of Law, it is ſufficient between them for Gybbon to be Deputy in Fact, who came with the good liking of Mr. Huggins and with his Conſent; that he was Deputy in Fact ſtill carry with you, and that Huggins was Chief in the Office, and had the Controul thereof. That a Deputy is controulable by the Principal, and when the Principal is there no Man can make a Deputy to execute the Office. This was dated 26 June, 1723, for 100*l.* and 90*l. per Annum.*

The next was Mr. Welland; there was a good deal ſaid by him about the Coroner's ſitting upon dead Bodies, not very much to the Purpoſe; and then he gave an Account that Gybbon did act during four Years, but what was become of the Repairs, who was to do that, I do not find; as to the Repairs and Taxes, it is not ſettled to this Day. If upon the Foot merely from the Truſt and Confidence one had of the other, if all the Expences were paid by Mr. Huggins, then he built the Strong Room; however, he was liable to the Charge. You will conſider, Gentlemen, by what Law this can be built; it was putting a Show of Cruelty in this Office, which they were no way juſtified to build: Things for Torment, and not for the Service of the Cuſtody, Things of that Kind are not to be done at the Will of the Gaoler, it always ought to be done by Order of their Superiors; if in the City, the Act muſt be done by the Mayor and Aldermen; if not, by the Common-Council: If in the County, it is not in the Power of the Gaoler, it muſt be done by the Seſſions; there are ſo many Gentlemen of the Seſſions to ſee what is proper to be done and decent for Chriſtians, that there is no Danger of erecting any Place of Torment. I do not know what Authority either Gybbon or Huggins had to build it; Huggins might have pulled it down, and Gybbon would have been anſwerable for the Contempt. There is no Agreement appears between Huggins and Gybbon that would clear it up; beſides, as to the Repairs we are left in the dark ſtill.

Welland ſays, that in the Year 1725 Arne was ſtark naked before he was put in the Strong Room. Huggins urged, that it was not deſigned for any ſuch Purpoſe. Welland does not deny, but that there were other Places in the Gaol to put him in: This was in the very Year when the Act paſſed for Inſolvent Debtors, when fifty or ſixty were diſcharged on the 7th of September, before that Time.

Another Part of his Defence is, that the Room was neither his nor Gibbon's to anſwer for; that there was a Court of the Priſoners, who formed themſelves into a Juriſdiction, and made what Order and Rules they pleaſed, and that they were ſo troubleſome that Gybbon was afraid to go into the Gaol: I do not know what Excuſe this is, it would have been very fit for them to have applied to another Place: And though Welland does ſay, that there was a Requeſt of ſome of the Priſoners to have him put into the Strong Room, all the Terror this Man put any body in, was flinging a Brick-batt on the Bare, not aiming at any one, and forced them to put this Man under the Reſtraint of the Strong Room. It was the Requeſt of Nobody, it was Nobody did it; it was very much to have ſuch a Combination, but every body knows that Welland is an Attorney, and has been taken notice of in the Courts. They have not given any Account of any Man's being put in there before. This Man being in a ſick Condition, Welland was deſired to go to the Upholders at Exeter-Change, they are very compaſſionate, and do aſſiſt People of their Fellowſhip; and he had ſome Relief given him. He ſays, that he never knew Mr. Huggins give any Direction in the Management of any Matters after Mr. Gybbon became Deputy, and gave an Account as to the Coroner's ſitting upon dead Bodies; that he took Barnes not to be Huggins's Servant, and Gybbon therefore was anſwerable for the Act of Barnes. He never ſo much as ſaw Mr. Huggins and Barnes together, and that he did not ſo much as know any Rule-Money paid to Huggins; that Gybbon generally was paid the Fees, for Gybbon paid Nine Hundred Pounds per Annum to Huggins. Whether a Man takes the Fees all at once or not, it is the ſame Thing.

Green ſays, that he applied to Mr. Gybbon in order to have a Room, and Mr. Gybbon could not go into the Gaol for fear of this Court of the Priſoners; but at laſt ſays, that he did get himſelf a Room in the Houſe, and did lie there; that he apprehended Gybbon was the Principal, and did act.

The

The next Witneſs was one Howard, who was a Priſoner there before Arne came in; he was firſt carried into the Spunging-Houſe, and at laſt brought into the Gaol. When he came there he had nothing to lie on, and Howard had a Bed to ſell, which Arne had a mind to purchaſe. Howard, Gentlemen, did not give an Account of any Freeneſs Arne was guilty of; but that Arne offered more for the Things than he ſold them for: Whether Arne was not in haſte for them, or whether offered more for them than they were worth, I cannot think an Argument of Madneſs.

Woodcock gave an Account of the poor Man's being there, that he was let out, and after a little Time drove in again, and during all this Time he never ſaw Huggins there; for he ſhould have ſeen him if he had come. Gentlemen, Mr. Huggins put it hard upon calling theſe People.

Humphreys ſays, that Arne was a Man of ſome Subſtance, and ſaid that he did no Harm nor Hurt; that he did ſome odd Acts, and then he was carried and put in the Strong Room in the manner you have heard, and ſtaid there till he died; and never ſaw Huggins there till about the Middle of September.

Louden ſays, that he kept a Boarding-houſe, and boarded a good many there at five Shillings per Week, and Arne was one; that afterwards, when he came to quit the Houſe and was carried into the Strong Room, he was deſired by the Upholders Company to take ſome Care of him; that the Key was kept by Barnes, ſo that there was a Difficulty to carry and ſupply him with Proviſions; that he ſaid he would give it up unleſs he had the Key; that he had no Authority to let him out; and that he did keep the Key till three Days before he died, and then delivered it up. He has given an Account of that Act of Arne's running about with the Feathers, and ſaid he never ſaw Huggins and Gybbon there, at the Time that Arne was in the Strong Room; and that Huggins was Warden, and Gybbon was Deputy. He has given an Account of the Room when built, and of the ſad Condition of it.

Gentlemen, Mr. Guyn ſaid the ſame; but that he never ſaw Huggins there.

Another Matter that Mr. Huggins inſiſted upon, to prove the Evidence not to be true, was, that he was not in Town.

The firſt Witneſs that he called was his Son, who ſaid, that from the firſt of September in that Year his Father came down to him in Hampſhire, and continued till the 14th or 15th, and ſtaid fourteen or fifteen Days; I do not find but it might be after that that he was at the Strong Room.

Smith proves the ſame, and that he was down there before in Auguſt.

Knight ſaid, that he was there in Auguſt.

Bird, Servant to Mr. Huggins, junior, ſaid, that he was there in Auguſt ſeven Days; and that he was there the firſt of September likewiſe.

Tucker ſays, that he was employed by Sir George Oxenden, and that he ſent his Coach with Mr. Huggins from Wittenham to Henley-upon-Thames about the 15th of September.

Sir George Oxenden agrees with the Servant; and ſays, that on the 17th or 18th the Priſoner came to his Houſe, and went away the 18th or 19th.

I muſt obſerve to you, Gentlemen, that from that Time to the Death of this Man, there is no Account given to you where he was.

Hopkins gave Evidence to ſhew the Witneſſes Miſtake. Farrington ſwore, that when Huggins looked in; Hopkins was with him at that Time; and Hopkins ſaid, that he went out of Town to Oxford, and did not return till the 14th of October. Huggins came from Sir George Oxenden's about the 18th or 19th, and I do not hear from any body that he continued out of Town; and it is natural to believe he came to Town, for Henley is the Road to come up to London. Hopkins ſaid, he did not go out of Town till the 27th of September, ſo that from the 19th to the 28th both might have been at the Strong Room; and I believe this was the Time, may be it may be the 19th, Hopkins did not go till the 27th. What I muſt leave to you, Gentlemen, is, that this Witneſs ſaid, it could not be true that he and Huggins could be together. There was about ten Days from the 17th to the 28th, and it appears they were both in Town; and it does ſeem to come pretty nigh the Time. You ſee, Gentlemen, Huggins came again a ſecond Time; the firſt Time does ſeem to tally, and run very well, if not both.

Gentlemen, you muſt take this with you, whether Hopkins does not confirm what Farrington ſays, though he ſaid he was out of Town. Farrington ſays, once upon a Time, he was at the Strong Room Door; the Door was open, and that he did ſee the Witneſs, (meaning Hopkins) and that Arne crept into the Feathers of his Bed; and Hopkins ſaid, that he was there, but he could not ſee the Feather-bed; that he was in ſomething half up and half naked, which Evidence rather confirms than weakens the Evidence. He (Hopkins) does contradict another Matter; that he does not know that Mr. Huggins was there at the Room, or that he ever ſaw him there; that he (Hopkins) was at the Strong Room Door, and that he was in the ſame Manner as the Witneſs that was there ſaid. And he does contradict, that Barnes was a Servant of Huggins's, and ſays that Huggins was not to be at the Charge of executing the Office. All that Hopkins ſays, is, that he was Clerk of the Inquiries, and that he did apply to Mr. Huggins, and that Mr. Huggins did not think fit to put him in, but he ſent him to Gybbon to be Clerk of the Inquiries. But that he was Clerk to Mr. Huggins at his Home, he did own it; but in a very extraordinary Manner, that he took him to do his Buſineſs for nothing. He ſaid, that the Management of this Office was not ſolely and clearly under Mr. Gybbon; but, Gentlemen, as to Things of Conſequence, there Mr. Huggins was called in, ſo that it appears that there was a View of his looking after the Priſoners; and it was very well, Gentlemen, that he ſhould, for he was the firſt Reſort upon all Occaſions. Hopkins ſays, that he does not remember any Diſcourſe about Arne with Mr. Huggins, but if he was deſired he believes he might do it; but does not remember he was deſired to do any thing as to Arne. It ſeems, Gentlemen, that he was examined in a ſtrict Manner, and a wiſe Inquiry made, as appears by an Examination taken before Edward Hughes, Eſq. which was produced, and ſhews, that he had given Evidence to you contrary to that Examination. In that he ſays, Huggins was Warden; and that he (Hopkins) went from the Fleet to him every Day, and told Huggins, whatever was conſiderable that was done there; and told him of Arne. He agrees, that there was a Diſcharge of Priſoners on the 7th of September 1725, when fifty or ſixty were diſcharged; and cannot ſay, but when they were gone, but that there was Room enough to put Arne in. He denies that Biſhop and Gybbon ſpoke to him about Arne, which Biſhop ſwears.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Arne, who was a Relation to the Deceaſed; he ſays, that the firſt Account he received of his miſerable Condition was about a Week or ten Days before the poor Man died; he then went to ſee him, and found him grovelling at the Door; that he was not only become hoarſe, but almoſt ſpeechleſs: He was crept down and fallen at the Door, and lay like a Dog. He found him, upon opening the Door, in a bad Condition: His Voice was ſo far gone, that it was a Difficulty to underſtand him. He had a Gold Watch, and he did get out of him by half Words and Sentences where it was; and ſaid, that the Place was not fit for any Creature whatſoever, neither ſick nor well; and that he could not have lived a Week in it. Gentlemen, I aſked one of the Witneſſes, who appeared to be a very ſtrong Man (Louden), if he had been there half the Time, would it not have been the Occaſion of his Death? Who owned that it would.

The Obſervation my Brother Carter made is very juſt: That if a ſtrong Man, being put into that filthy, vile Place it would kill him, to put into ſuch a Place him that wanted Health, Death was more ſure. If he was a weak Man, there was no Danger of his eſcaping, no Danger of going out.

As to his being in that Room being the Occaſion of his Death, there need not much be ſaid.

And what is ſaid by Mr. Huggins, except one Thing, carries little or no Weight; and there is only that can deſerve your Conſideration, Whether he did die by the Cruelty of Gybbon or Huggins? That he did die by Dureſs, it is not to be ſuppoſed to the contrary.

That in Point of Law, wherever there is a Deputy appointed, the Superior muſt anſwer; for had a Priſoner of 20,000 l. eſcaped, Mr. Huggins muſt have paid the Money.

In criminal Caſes I do not think, that the Warden or any other Officer ſhould anſwer for Murder, unleſs he was privy and conſenting. If this ſole Act was Gybbon's, and Huggins no ways conſenting, I think the Murder lies upon Gybbon, not Huggins. Though this was the Act of Gybbon and Barnes, whoever has a Hand in it, and the Authority and Power as he had, if it is true that he ſaw him, and he would not give a helping Hand to aſſiſt him, the excepted Rule of Scripture would be true, That he that is not for me muſt be againſt me: And if he was any way privy to the carrying him and confining him there, he muſt anſwer for the Murder both in this and the next World.

If this is the Act of Gybbon ſolely, Huggins is not to anſwer for it; but if Huggins was privy, and he was Warden, he could and ought to have relieved him.

One Thing more, in the latter Part of the Defence Mr. Huggins made for himſelf, was, to call vaſt Numbers of Gentlemen of the firſt Quality; Sir George Oxenden, Sir John Hinde Cotton, in all about twenty he called to his Character and Credit; and if theſe Gentlemen are not ſufficient, I do not know what will be: His Character has been fully eſtabliſhed; but I muſt obſerve to you, whatever the Character a Man bears, if he is guilty of that Act which deſtroys his Character, his Character goes for nothing: If there was Difficulty or great Doubt happened upon Circumſtances, whether Mr. Huggins was guilty or not, then it was the conſtant Practice to be governed by a Character: I think Nobody can have a better; he has had a very great Character given him.

Not long ſince a Perſon produced twenty-ſeven People, that gave him a Character, with no Compariſon to this, only the Greatneſs of Numbers.

Notwithſtanding which, if there was not doubted, he had committed the Fact; and the Jury very juſtly brought in their Verdict, Guilty.

Verdicts, in convicting of People, are to be founded upon the Evidence that the Jury has had before them; and I hope I do not expreſs myſelf ſo for them to found themſelves upon any thing I have ſaid; for they will determine according to the Evidence that has been before them.

Mr. Attorney-General produced three Witneſſes, that came to nothing.

I muſt take notice of one Piece of Evidence given by Mr. Hughes, a Gentleman of Probity and Diſtinction, one of the Committee appointed by the Houſe of Commons. He tells you, that when Mr. Huggins was under Examination before the Committee, relating to Eſcapes during the Time he was Warden, Huggins confeſſed ſo many had eſcaped, he could not remember them all; he owned one Oliver Read had eſcaped, and was retaken; and that he himſelf ſent to Newgate for Irons, and ordered Read to be ſtapled down and ironed; and that he owned he paid five hundred Pounds to Read's Creditors for the Eſcape of Read: This was whilſt Gybbon acted as Deputy.

Mr. Huggins does give this Anſwer to that; that Hopkins proved that Gybbon acted, and ſo he was Warden in Law; I cannot tell what Condition Gybbon was in, and what Security he had given; Huggins was liable for all Eſcapes.

I have taken Pains to ſtate the Evidence to you as fully as I can; and I hope you will conſider it; and that God will direct you to do for the beſt.

Then one was ſworn to keep the Jury, and they withdrew, and Mr. Juſtice Page and Mr. Baron Carter left the Bench; and Mr. Serjeant Raby with the Lord Mayor remained there; and in about two Hours and an Half the Jury returned.

Clerk of Arraigns. Are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſay for you?---Omnes. Foreman.

Clerk. John Huggins, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner: Is he Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. We are agreed to bring in our Verdict Special to the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is their Doubt in Point of Law?

Mr. Serj. Raby. What that Doubt is, muſt be referred to the Court.

Foreman. Was there any Medium between bringing him in Guilty or Not Guilty?

Mr. Serj. Raby. You may find the Fact ſpecially, and refer the ſpecial Matter to the Court. If any Matter of Law ariſes upon that Doubt, it will be explained. You may give a general Verdict in order to refer that to the Judgment of the Court. You muſt agree upon the Fact; you muſt ſtate the ſpecial Matter: It is uſual to ſtate the Point of Law that you doubt in. If you have any Doubt as to the Law, that you muſt refer to the Court; but as to the Fact, you muſt determine yourſelves.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is it makes the Queſtion doubtful?

Mr. Serj. Raby. The Jury do believe the Priſoner in ſome meaſure guilty, but not of the whole Indictment.

Foreman. We cannot find any of the Evidence come up to ſhew he was aiding, abetting, and aſſiſting Barnes in putting him into the Room.

Mr. Serj. Raby. Call over the Jury.

Clerk of Arraigns. Anſwer to your Names. (Which they did.) Are you all agreed in your Verdict? Is John Huggins Guilty of the Murder and Felony, whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

After conſidering ſome Time among themſelves, the Foreman ſpoke as follows:

Foreman. We agree the Priſoner was acceſſary to the Murder committed upon Edward Arne, but that it was not premeditated in him; that he has been privy to the Cauſe of this Man's Death, and might have prevented it. Two Witneſſes ſwore, that Mr. Huggins was at the Door of the Dungeon, and ſaw Arne there; and, as he did not diſcharge him at that Time, he was acceſſary to that.

Mr. Serj. Raby. If he was privy, he was guilty of that; if he was privy and conſenting, if he did concur in that Act, he is guilty; for it will imply Malice.

If he died by Dureſs, and he was concurring and conſenting to it, then he was guilty of this Act, in that he had Power to redreſs it, and did not. If he was privy, you muſt conſider if he was concurring.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he was privy and conſenting, it does imply it.

In all Special Verdicts the Jury never find Malice.

In no Special Judgment they find Malice.

Foreman. Several of us don't think him guilty of the Malice.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Law will imply the Malice.

Mr. Serj. Raby. You are to conſider and find the Fact.

Foreman. We all agree that Arne died by Dureſs; there are two Witneſſes to prove that; but that the Priſoner had no Forethought.

The Jury again conſidered among themſelves; but not immediately agreeing, withdrew, and ſtaid out ſome conſiderable Time, and then returned.

Clerk of Arraigns. Are you all agreed?

Foreman. "We are agreed, that there is ſufficient Evidence to prove, "that they ſaw Mr. Huggins at the Strong Room.

"We agree that he was Warden of the Fleet-Priſon; and that he was "Head-Warden at the Time the Fact happened, as mentioned in the In-"dictment; and that Gybbon was Deputy, and acted as ſuch.

"That James Barnes appeared to us to be Servant to Gybbon, and was "employed and acted under him in taking care of the Priſoners, and had "the Cuſtody of them; and particularly of Edward Arne."

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Tanner, you muſt write down the Verdict of the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Raby. Get Pen, Ink, and Paper ready. Gentlemen, you muſt tell him what he is to write, (which is as follows) viz.

"That James Barnes, at the Time mentioned in the Indictment, made "an Aſſault upon Edward Arne, being then a Priſoner in the Fleet Priſon; "did take and impriſon him without his Conſent, prout in the Indict-"ment."

Mr. Att. Gen. They will find the Deſcription and Situation of the Room as in the Indictment; they can have no Reaſon to doubt of that.

"That James Barnes and John Huggins, at the Time of the Impriſon-"ment of the ſaid Arne, knew that the Room was newly built; and that "the Walls were moiſt and damp, as in the Indictment."

Mr. Strange. Mr. Huggins did not know it at firſt, at the Time he was there, when the Door was open.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are the Jury ſatisfied that Mr. Huggins knew the State and Condition of the Room during the Time Arne was there?

Foreman. "We agree he ſaw the Building, and that he muſt know it "an unwholeſome Room, as deſcribed in the Indictment."

Mr. Att. Gen. Let me ſee the Indictment (Which he did, and read the Words as to the Deſcription of the Strong Room). He muſt know it when he was at the Strong Room Door.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. It is neceſſary that the Jury ſhould know what the Attorney reads.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Tanner has twice taken it. How long (ſpeaking to the Jury) before the Death of Arne do you find the Priſoner knew the Condition of the Room?

Foreman. I believe it to be fifteen Days at leaſt before the Death of Arne.

Mr. Att. Gen. That during this Impriſonment and Detention in this Room, the ſaid Arne, by reaſon of the Dureſs of ſuch Impriſonment, became ſick and languiſhed there, and died, prout in the Indictment.

Mr. Hug. The Jury are upon their Oaths, will they find him dead by my Means?

Mr. Strange. I deſire the Fact may be found as it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Tanner mind, That on the 7th of September he was aiding, abetting, and aſſiſting James Barnes.

Foreman. "We apprehend the Man continued from the 7th of Septem-"ber, and we apprehend he died about the 23d of October."

Mr. Att. Gen. That John Huggins, being principal Warden during the Impriſonment and Detention of the ſaid Arne, was preſent at the ſaid Room, and ſaw Arne in that Room under the Dureſs of that Impriſonment; and that he being preſent, the Room was locked up with the ſaid Arne in it.

That fifteen Days before the Death of Arne, John Huggins being then Warden of the Fleet, and Mr. Gybbon Deputy-Warden, he ſaw Arne under the Dureſs of that Impriſonment; and the ſaid Arne was confined in the ſaid Room, and the ſaid Huggins being then preſent, he was locked up by James Barnes, and continued in the ſaid Confinement.

Mr. Strange. That is not according to the Evidence. It ſhould be found thus:

That during the Impriſonment of the ſaid Arne, and fifteen Days at the leaſt before his Death, John Huggins being then Warden of the Fleet, and the ſaid Thomas Gybbon, Deputy and acting Warden, was once preſent, and ſaw the ſaid James Barnes lock up the Door of the ſaid Room, the ſaid Arne being therein impriſoned.

And at the Time Huggins turned away, James Barnes locked to the Door; and Arne continued under the ſaid Impriſonment therein, until the Time of his Death; and the Jury don't find, that Huggins knew the ſaid Arne was in the Strong Room when he was firſt put in there.

Mr. Att. Gen. I inſiſt upon adding the Words, Aiding, Abetting, and Aſſiſting. And that Huggins knew of the Badneſs of the Room.

Mr. Strange. They don't find, that, during the whole Time Arne was there, Huggins knew of the Badneſs of the Room.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Jury cannot find what they don't know.

Foreman. "We find the Letters Patent, conſtituting John Huggins, Eſq. "Warden of the Fleet, prout in the Indictment.

"That during the Time that Gybbon was Deputy-Warden, Huggins "acted as Warden."

Mr. Strange. That does not appear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ſent for Irons from Newgate?

Aſk whether or no they do find, that, at the Time Gybbon was Deputy-Warden, Huggins acted as Warden.—"Beavis in 1725, ſaid Hopkins, came "from Huggins about Buſineſs; that at the ſame Time, during the Time "that Gybbon acted as Deputy-Warden, John Huggins acted as War-"den." — — — — — — — — — — — — — — —

The Verdict was removed, at the Prayer of Mr. Attorney, into B. R. and there argued by Mr. Willes and Serj. Eyre; after which, it was argued at Serjeants-Inn-Hall in Chancery-Lane, before all the Judges, by Serjeant Cheſhire, Mr. Attorney, Mr. Sollicitor, and Mr. Willes, for the King; and by Serj. Darnell, Serj. Eyre, Serj. Hawkins, Mr. Peere Williams, Mr. Strange, and Mr. Foſter, for the Priſoner. But as every Thing inſiſted on by either ſide, is taken Notice of in the Opinion delivered by the Lord Chief-Juſtice Raymond, it will not be neceſſary to ſtate the Arguments of Counſel *.

Raymond, Chief-Juſtice †.

This was a Special Verdict, found at the Old-Bailey, on an Indictment of Murder againſt James Barnes and John Huggins. The Indictment ſets forth, "That John Huggins, from the firſt Day of October, in the twelfth "Year of the late King, to the firſt Day of January next following, and "long before and after, was Warden of the Priſon of the Fleet, &c. and "that James Barnes was, during that Time, Servant to John Huggins, "and employed about the Care of the Priſoners; and that James Barnes, "exiſtens perſona crudelis naturæ & immanis deportationis erga priſonarios in "eadem priſona exiſtentes, on the firſt Day of November, in the twelfth "Year, &c. made an Aſſault upon one Edward Arne, then being a Priſo-"ner in the ſame Priſon, under the Cuſtody of the ſaid John Huggins, "and him the ſaid Edward Arne, then and there, with Force and Arms, &c. "unlawfully, felониouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, and "without the Conſent of the ſaid Edward Arne, took, and him with "Force and Arms, &c. to a certain Room, within the Priſon aforeſaid, "then newly built, unlawfully, &c. conveyed and led, and him the "ſaid Edward Arne, with Force and Arms, &c. in the ſaid Room, for "a long Time, to wit, for the Space of ſix Weeks, then next following, "unlawfully, &c. impriſoned and detained, and him the ſaid Edward "Arne, then and there, with Force and Arms, &c. for all the Time laſt "mentioned, in that Room, abſque ſubſidio ignis aeneum ſive aliquod vas, "ſcaphio, vel aliquo alio hujuſmodi utenſili, unlawfully, &c. forced to re-"main and be (the Walls of the aforeſaid Room, made of Bricks and "Mortar, at the aforeſaid Time of the Impriſonment of the ſaid Edward "Arne in the ſame, being very moiſt, and the Room aforeſaid being "ſituate over the Common Sewer of the ſaid Priſon, and near the place "ubi ſordes & ſimus priſonæ predictæ necnon excrementa priſonariorum præ-"dictorum adtunc uſualiter poſita fuerunt, by reaſon whereof the Room "aforeſaid then was very unwholeſome, and greatly dangerous to the Life "of any Perſon detained in the ſame)". And the Indictment further ſets forth, "That the ſaid James Barnes and John Huggins, at the ſaid Time "of the Impriſonment of the ſaid Edward Arne in that Room, well knew "that the ſaid Room had then been newly built, and that the Walls of that "Room, being made of Bricks and Mortar, were then very moiſt, and "that the ſaid Room was ſo ſituate as aforeſaid." And the Indictment further ſets forth, "That the ſaid Edward Arne, during the Im-"priſonment and Detaining aforeſaid, in the ſaid Room, viz. the 7th of "November, &c. by Dureſs of the ſame Impriſonment and Detaining, "became ſick, and thereby from the ſame 7th Day of November, until "the 7th Day of December, then next following, in the Room afore-"ſaid, languiſhed, on which ſaid 7th Day of December, the ſaid Edward "Arne, by Dureſs of the Impriſonment and Detaining aforeſaid, in the "Room aforeſaid, died, &c." The Indictment further ſets forth, "That the ſaid John Huggins, being a Perſon of a cruel Nature, and "ſavage Diſpoſition, and a grievous and inhumane Oppreſſor of the "Priſoners in the ſame Priſon, under his Cuſtody being, during the "ſaid Impriſonment and Detaining of the aforeſaid Edward Arne, in the "Room aforeſaid, viz. the ſaid 7th Day of November, &c. and divers "other Days and Times, during that Impriſonment and Detaining, at "London, &c. felониouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, was "preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, aſſiſting, and maintaining the "aforeſaid James Barnes, felониouſly, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-"thought, the ſaid Edward Arne, in Manner aforeſaid, to kill and "murder: and ſo the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oath aforeſaid, ſay, "That the ſaid James Barnes and John Huggins, the ſaid Edward Arne, "in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felониouſly, wilfully, and of their Ma-"lice aforethought, did kill and murder, againſt the Peace, &c."

On Not Guilty pleaded by the Priſoner, Huggins, the Jury find a Special Verdict, as follows: "That Queen Anne, by her Letters "Patent, bearing Date the 22d of July, in the twelfth Year of Her "Reign, granted to John Huggins, named in the Indictment, the Office and " that the Walls of that Room were made of Bricks and Mortar, and " were then very damp; and that the ſaid Room was ſituate ſo as afore- " ſaid: And they further find, That during the ſaid Impriſonment, and " detaining of the ſaid Edward Arne in the ſaid Room, to wit, by the " Space of fifteen Days at leaſt before the Death of the ſaid Edward Arne, " the ſaid John Huggins knew that the ſaid Room had been then newly " built, and that the Walls of that Room were made of Bricks and Mor- " tar, and then were damp; but whether the ſaid John Huggins knew, " that on the ſaid ſeventh Day of September, in the twelfth Year, &c. the " Jurors know not: And they further find, that the ſaid Edward Arne, " during the ſaid Impriſonment and Detaining of him the ſaid Edward " Arne in the ſaid Room, to wit, the tenth Day of the ſame Month of " September, in the twelfth Year aboveſaid, by Dureſs of the ſame Im- " priſonment and Detaining, became ſick in the ſaid Room; and thereby, " from the ſame tenth Day of September, in the twelfth Year aboveſaid, " until the twentieth Day of October then next following, in the ſaid " Room languiſhed; on which ſaid twentieth Day of October, in the " twelfth Year aboveſaid, the ſaid Edward Arne, by Dureſs of the ſaid " Impriſonment and Detaining in the Room aforeſaid, died, to wit, at " London, &c. And they further find, That during the Impriſonment " and Detaining of the ſaid Edward Arne in the ſaid Room, to wit, by the " Space of fifteen Days at leaſt before the Death of the ſaid Edward Arne, " the ſaid John Huggins was once preſent at the ſaid Room, and then and " there ſaw the ſaid Edward Arne in that Room, under the Dureſs of the ſaid " Impriſonment, and then and there turned away; and the ſaid James Barnes " locked the Door of the ſame Room, at the ſame Time in which the " ſaid John Huggins turned away as aforeſaid (the ſame Edward Arne, at " the ſaid Time in which the ſaid Door was locked by the ſaid James " Barnes, being in the ſaid Room under Dureſs of the ſaid Impriſon- " ment). And they further find, That the ſaid Edward Arne, in the ſaid " Room, under Dureſs of the ſaid Impriſonment remained, and was con- " tinued from the ſaid Time in which the ſaid Door of the ſaid Room " was ſo locked by the ſaid James Barnes as aforeſaid, until the ſaid Time " in which the ſaid Edward Arne ſo as aforeſaid died: And they further " find, That the ſaid John Huggins ſometimes acted as Warden or " Keeper of the ſaid Priſon, during the Time in which he the ſame Tho- " mas Gybbon was Deputy of the ſaid John Huggins in the ſaid Office as " aforeſaid; but whether upon the whole Matter, &c."

The Record of this Indictment and Special Verdict being removed into the King's-Bench by Certiorari, it was argued on Tueſday the ſixteenth of June, 1730, by Mr. Willes, for the King; and Mr. Serjeant Eyre, for the Priſoner. And on the laſt Day of Michaelmas Term following, after the Caſe had been argued on the fourteenth of November, at Serjeants-Inn Hall, before all the twelve Judges, the Lord Chief Juſtice (Raymond) delivered the Opinion of the Judges.

In this Caſe two Queſtions have been made, firſt, What Crime the Facts found upon Barnes in the Special Verdict will amount to? Second, Whether the Priſoner at the Bar is found guilty of the ſame Offence with Barnes?

Firſt. As to the firſt Queſtion it is very plain, that the Facts found upon Barnes do amount to Murder in him. Murder may be committed without any Stroke. The Law has not confined the Offence to any particular Circumſtances or Manner of Killing; but there are as many Ways to commit Murder, as there are to deſtroy a Man, provided the Act be done with Malice, either expreſs or implied. Hale P. C. 46. 3 Inſt. 52. Murder is, where a Perſon kills another of Malice, ſo he dies within a Year and a Day. Hale P. C. 43. And Malice may be either expreſſed or implied. In this Caſe the Jury have found the Malice expreſs; for the Facts charged on Barnes are laid in the Indictment to be ex malitia ſua præcogitata, to wit, that he, having the Cuſtody of Arne, aſſaulted him, and carried him to this unwholeſome Room, and confined him there by Force againſt his Will, and without his Conſent, and without proper Support, ex malitia ſua præcogitata; by Means of which he languiſhed and died. And the Jury have found that Barnes did all theſe Facts, modo et forma prout in indictamento prædicto ſpecificatur.

But upon the finding of theſe Facts there is alſo a plain Malice ariſing in Conſtruction of Law. Hale P. C. 46. The Law implies Malice in reſpect of the Perſon killing. If a Priſoner, by Dureſs of the Gaoler, comes to an untimely End, it is Murder. It is not neceſſary to make it Dureſs, that there ſhould be actual Strokes or Wounds. And in 3 Inſt. 35. the putting into a Dungeon is Dureſs, or into a Place too ſtrait, 3 Inſt. 91. pluis arctment que devoit, Cromp. 90. The untimely End, mentioned by Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, is what is meant by Briton, cap. 11. fol. 18. If a Man die in Priſon, the Coroner is to take an Inqueſt upon the View of the Body; and if it is found by the Inquiſition, that the Perſon was brought nearer to Death, and farther from Life, per dure gard del gaoler, it is Felony.

The Reaſons why the Law implies Malice in ſuch Caſes are plain. Becauſe it is a Breach of his Duty, and of the Truſt which the Law has repoſed in him. A Priſoner is not to be puniſhed in Gaol, but to be kept ſafely. Fleet. 38. Bract. 105. The Act alſo is deliberate. And the Nature of the Act is ſuch, as that it muſt apparently do harm. It is alſo cruel; as it is committed upon a Perſon that cannot help himſelf. And it is committed by Force, and without the Conſent of the Priſoner. So that the Charge in the Indictment againſt Barnes is Murder; and theſe Facts found in the Verdict, as to him, fully maintain the Indictment, and amount to Murder. But Barnes is not before the Court, he having fled (as it is ſaid) from Juſtice.

Second. The next Queſtion is, Whether the Priſoner, Huggins, is found guilty of the ſame Offence as Barnes; or how far it appears, by this Special Verdict, that he has been aiding and aſſiſting to Barnes in the committing of theſe Facts?

In the Indictment the Offence is as ſtrongly charged upon Huggins as upon Barnes. The Indictment charges, that the Priſoner at Bar, during the Impriſonment of Arne in the ſaid Room (the Situation and Condition of which the Indictment expreſsly charges Huggins to have the Knowledge of), on the ſeventh of November, et diverſis diebus et vicibus, during that Impriſonment, felonioufly, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought, was preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, and aſſiſting the ſaid Barnes, the ſaid Arne felonioufly, and of his Malice aforethought, to kill and murder, &c. which if found by the Verdict, would certainly be Murder in the Priſoner. But there is a great Difference in the finding the Verdict. As to Huggins, the Jury have only found theſe Facts, viz. That he had the Office of Warden of the Fleet, &c. granted to him by Letters Patent of 22 July, 12 Ann. to hold for his Life, and to execute by himſelf or his Deputy: That he, 1 Sept. 12 Geo. I. and before and from thence to 11 Jan. 12 Geo. I. was Warden of the Fleet: That Thomas Gybbon was, and for all that Time acted as his Deputy in that Office: That James Barnes was for all that Time Servant of Gybbon, and acted under him about the Care of the Priſoners, and particularly about the Care of Arne: Then they find, that Barnes aſſaulted and carried by Force the ſaid Arne into the Room, and kept him there againſt his Conſent, prout in the Indictment, forty-four Days: Then they find the Situation and Condition of the Room, whereby it was very unwholeſome, and dangerous to the Life of any Perſon kept therein: That Huggins, during the Impriſonment of Arne in that Room, viz. for fifteen Days before Arne's Death, knew that the Room was then lately built, and that the Walls were made of Brick and Mortar, and were then damp; but whether he knew it the ſeventh of September, ignorant: That Arne, the tenth of September, 12 Geo. I. by Dureſs of Impriſonment, became ſick, and languiſhed to the twentieth of October, and then died by Dureſs of Impriſonment in the ſaid Room: That during the Impriſonment of Arne in that Room, viz. per ſpatium quindecim dierum ad minus before his Death, Huggins was once preſent at that Room, and then ſaw the ſaid Arne in that Room, ſub duritie impriſonamenti prædicti ac adtunc et ibidem ſe avertit, and the ſaid James Barnes, the ſame Time as Huggins turned himſelf away, locked the Door; the ſaid Arne, at the Time when the ſaid Door was locked by Barnes, being in the ſaid Room, ſub duritie impriſonamenti prædicti; and that Arne remained under that Dureſs till his Death: That Huggins acted ſometimes as Warden, during the Time Gybbon was Deputy: But it is not found that he acted as Warden during the Confinement of Arne.

The Judges are all unanimouſly of Opinion, that the Facts found in this Special Verdict do not amount to Murder in the Priſoner at the Bar; but as this Special Verdict is found, they are of Opinion that he is not guilty. Though he was Warden, yet it being found that there was a Deputy, he is not, as Warden, guilty of the Facts committed under the Authority of his Deputy. He ſhall anſwer as Superior for his Deputy civilly, but not criminally. It has been ſettled, that though a Sheriff muſt anſwer for the Offences of his Gaoler civilly, that is, he is ſubject in an Action to make Satisfaction to the Party injured, yet he is not to anſwer criminally for the Offences of his under Officer. He only is criminally puniſhable who immediately does the Act, or permits it to be done, Hale P. C. 114. So that if an Act be done by an under Officer, unleſs it is done by the Command or Direction, or with the Conſent of the Principal, the Principal is not criminally puniſhable for it. In this Caſe the Fact was done by Barnes; and it no where appears in the Special Verdict, that the Priſoner at the Bar ever commanded, or directed, or conſented to this Dureſs of Impriſonment; which was the Cauſe of Arne's Death. 1. No Command or Direction is found. And 2. It is not found that Huggins knew of it. That which made the Dureſs in this Caſe was, 1. Barnes's carrying and putting, and confining Arne in this Room by Force and againſt his Conſent. 2. The Situation and Condition of this Room. Now it is not found that Huggins knew of theſe ſeveral Circumſtances, which made the Dureſs. 1. It is not found that he knew any thing of Barnes's carrying Arne thither. 2. Nor that he was there without his Conſent, or without proper Support. 3. As to the Room, it is found by the Verdict, 1. That the Room was built of Bricks and Mortar. 2. That the Walls were valde humidæ. 3. That the Room was ſituate on the common Sewer of the Priſon, and near the Place where the Filth of the Priſon and Excrement of the Priſoners were uſually laid, ratione quorum the Room was very unwholeſome, and the Life of any Man kept there was in great Danger. But all that is found with reſpect to the Priſoner's Knowledge is, that for fifteen Days before Arne's Death he knew that the Room was then lately built, recenter; that the Walls were made of Brick and Mortar, and were then damp. But it is not found, nor does it appear, that he knew they were dangerous to a Man's Life, or that there was a Want of neceſſary Support. Nor is it found that he directed or conſented that Arne ſhould be kept or continued there. The chief Thing relied upon is, that the Verdict finds, that once the Priſoner at the Bar was preſent at the Room, and ſaw Arne ſub duritie impriſonamenti prædicti, et ſe avertit, &c. which, as was objected, made him an Aider and Abettor. But in Anſwer to this, 1. Being preſent alone, unleſs he knew all the Circumſtances, and directed that Arne ſhould continue, or at leaſt conſented that he ſhould, cannot make him an Aider or Abettor in the Murder. Kelynge 113. A Man may be preſent, and be entirely innocent. He may be caſually preſent. 2. The Verdict is, vidit ſub duritie impriſonamenti prædicti. He might ſee him, and ſee him while he was ſub duritie impriſonamenti prædicti, that is, while he was in Fact under the Dureſs by Barnes; but it does by no means follow from thence, that he knew that the Man was under this Dureſs, and it is not found that he did know it. It was objected, that if he ſaw the Man under this Dureſs he muſt know it, and it was his Duty to deliver him. But we cannot take Things by Inference in this Manner. The vidit does not imply a Knowledge of the ſeveral Facts that made the Dureſs. If the Nature of this Dureſs be conſidered, it is impoſſible that it ſhould be diſcovered by one Sight of the Man. It conſiſts of ſeveral Ingredients and Circumſtances, that are not neceſſarily to be diſcovered upon Sight: For though he ſaw Arne in the Room, yet by the View he could not tell that he was there without his Conſent, and by Force, or that he wanted neceſſary Relief. It is not found that the Man made any Complaint to him, or that any Application was made to him on the Man's Behalf. If he was there with his Conſent, it would take off the Dureſs. His ſeeing is but Evidence of his Knowledge of theſe Things at beſt, and very poor Evidence too. And therefore the Jury, if the Fact would have borne it, ſhould have found that Huggins knew that Arne was there without his Conſent; and that he conſented to and directed his Continuance there. Which not being done, we cannot intend theſe Things, nor infer them. For in Special Verdicts in criminal Caſes the Court muſt never intend nor infer Facts, but judge upon the Facts found, and not on the Evidence of the Facts. Kelynge 78. Whether a Man is aiding and aſſiſting in Murder or no is matter of Fact, and ought to be expreſsly found by the Jury, Kelynge, 111. Rex verſ. Plummer. It does not appear by the Special Verdict there that Glover, or the Perſon unknown, who ſhot off the Gun, did diſcharge it againſt any of the King's Officers, but it might be for aught that appears for another Purpoſe: Though upon the particular Circumſtances in the Special Verdict there are Things found which were a ſufficient Evidence, that the Gun was diſcharged againſt the King's Officers, and ſo it might be reaſonably intended, conſidering they were all armed, and in Proſecution of an unlawful Act in the Night, which they deſigned to juſtify and maintain by Force; eſpecially when the Gun was ſhot off upon the Watch-word given; and as the King's Officers were endeavouring to ſeize the Wool; the Jury thereupon might well have found that the Fuſee was diſcharged againſt the King's Officers *. But ſince they had not found it, the Court were confined to what they had found poſitively; and were not to judge the Law upon Evidence of a Fact, but upon the Fact when it is found. See Kelynge, 118.

This Caſe was ſo well argued on both Sides, that ſome Objections on the Part of the Crown muſt be taken notice of, though they are already in a great meaſure anticipated. As,

1. That Huggins, as Warden, though he had made a Deputy, had ſtill the Care of the Priſoners; and it was incumbent on him to ſee that there was no illegal Dureſs: And to explain what the Law means by Dureſs, Brit. cap. 11. fol. 18. was cited. If a Priſoner is brought nearer to Death and farther from Life per dure gard del keeper; and Staunf. P. C. lib. 1. cap. 35. If he keeps him more ſtrictly than of Right he ought, it is Dureſs. And the Dureſs need not be by the Hand of the Gaoler; for if it is done with his Privity, it will affect him. But that is a Miſtake; for when an Officer has Power to make a Deputy, and has appointed a Deputy, he has diſcharged himſelf of the whole Care: The Deputy has the whole Power, and it is incumbent upon the Deputy till the Principal reſumes his Office. Indeed, when the Principal comes to execute his Office himſelf, the Power of the Deputy ceaſes; but a bare accidental coming to the Place will not determine the Deputation, unleſs he comes with an Intent to reſume his Office. The Caſe of a Diſſeiſee coming to dine with a Diſſeiſor, or to ſee his Pictures, may be very properly compared to this.

2. It was objected, that this Murder was done with his Privity; it is found that he ſaw Arne under this Dureſs, et ſe avertit. He ought to have taken notice of it, and removed him, as it was his Duty to take care of his Priſoner's Life. Vidit ſub duritie implies that he knew it; and therefore he was privy to the Dureſs of which Arne died.

But his Conſent to this Dureſs is not found; it intirely depends on his ſeeing the Man, which does not import his Conſent, for want of his Knowledge of the particular Facts.

3d Objection. When he was preſent, the Power of his Deputy ceaſed; and then he ſhould have eaſed the Man of this Dureſs; and his ſuffering him to continue afterwards under the ſame Dureſs infers that he knowingly ſuffered him to continue till his Death; and his not reforming this Abuſe implies his Conſent to it. But theſe Inferences are by much too ſtrong; and the not reforming an Abuſe does by no means infer a Conſent to all the Conſequences of it.

4th Objection. A Perſon abſent may be Principal in Murder, as in the caſe of poiſoning. An Infant was laid in a Hog-ſtye, and a Sow eat it; and held Murder, Palm. 547, 548. The ſame Opinion in the caſe of a ſick Man laid in the Cold. So in the caſe of laying an Infant under Leaves in an Orchard, and a Kite ſtruck it, Poph. 13. Ow. 98. Hale P. C. 53. There the Perſon who did the Act occaſioned the Death; but in this Caſe no Act was done by the Priſoner at the Bar. There are indeed Caſes of Murder where no Act was done by the Perſons guilty, as the letting looſe a wild Beaſt, which the Party knows to be miſchievous, and he kills a Man. 3 Edw. III. corone 311. Staunf. 17. Crompt. 24 b. the Owner of the Beaſt is guilty of Murder. In Anſwer to thoſe Caſes, there is a Difference between Beaſts that are feræ naturæ, as Lions and Tygers, which a Man muſt always keep up at his Peril, and Beaſts that are manſuetæ naturæ, and break through the Tameneſs of their Nature, ſuch as Oxen and Horſes. In the latter Caſe an Action lies, if the Owner has had Notice of the Quality of the Beaſt; in the former Caſe an Action lies without ſuch Notice. As to the Point of Felony, if the Owner have Notice of the miſchievous Quality of the Ox, &c. and he uſes all proper Diligence to keep him up, and he happens to break looſe and kills a Man, it would be very hard to make the Owner guilty of Felony; but if through Negligence the Beaſt goes abroad, after Warning or Notice of this Condition, it is the Opinion of Hale (H. P. C. vol. I. 431.) that it is Manſlaughter in the Owner. And if he did purpoſely let him looſe and wander abroad, with a Deſign to do Miſchief; nay, though it were but with a Deſign to fright People and make Sport, and he kills a Man, it is Murder in the Owner.

5th Objection. It is found that Barnes ſhut the Door in the Preſence of Huggins; and therefore the continuing of Arne under that Confinement will affect Huggins. But there is no Conſent found to his Confinement. What is found is, at moſt, but Evidence of a Conſent; and even not that, it is only vidit et ſe avertit.

6th Objection. It is not neceſſary for the Jury to find the Conſent in expreſs Words, and if Facts are found that amount to a Conſent, the Court will judge it a Conſent. As in the Caſe of Malice, the Court will judge it upon the Facts found; and Malice is an Act of the Mind as well as Conſent. To this it is anſwered, that Malice is Matter of Law, and proper for the Court to judge, but the Conſent of one Man to the malicious Acts of another, is Matter of Fact which ought to be found by the Jury. And here is no Conſent found, nor that Huggins aided or abetted Barnes; nor is there any poſitive Fact found, that muſt neceſſarily be conſtrued an aiding and abetting.

There is another Matter which the King's Counſel inſiſted upon, That if the Court were of Opinion that they could not give Judgment upon the Facts found in this Verdict, that the Priſoner was guilty of Murder; that yet the Verdict was ſo uncertain, as that they could not give Judgment of Acquittal: And therefore, that a venire facias de novo ought to go. And this brought it under the Conſideration of the Judges, whether a venire facias de novo ought to be granted in this Caſe. And to ſpeak to that Point, the Counſel on both Sides were heard before all the Judges on Wedneſday the 24th Inſtant.

It was ſaid by the Counſel for the King, that they ſpoke to this Point without Prejudice. For they inſiſted, that as to the Verdict itſelf there were ſufficient Facts found affecting the Priſoner, to induce the Judges to be of Opinion that they amounted to Murder. But for Argument's Sake, in caſe the Judges ſhould be of Opinion, that they were too uncertain to found a Reſolution upon, that the Priſoner was guilty of Murder, then they argued that a venire facias de novo ought to go, though it was in a capital Caſe.

1. In a civil Caſe, if a Verdict is found ſo uncertainly and ambiguouſly as that no Judgment can be given, a venire facias de novo muſt iſſue. Co. Li. 227. 2 Roll. Abr. 693. Venn. verſ. Howell. Cro. Car. 322.

It was obſerved that the Book of Co. Li. 227. ſpeaks of Verdicts in general, and does not ſay in what Caſes: But as to civil Caſes there is no Doubt.

2. In criminal Caſes Writs of venire facias de novo have been granted. Co. Inter. 393. b. Hil. 4. Car. I. B. R. rot. 32. Rex verſ. Fiſher.

3. In capital Caſes a venire facias de novo muſt go. 1. In Caſes of Miſtrial. 6 Co. 14. a. Arundel's Caſe, the Point agreed. 2. For Miſbehaviour of the Jury in giving in their Verdict. Hil. 8 Hen. VII. rot. 3. placit. reg. Rex verſ. Wayner. Agreed. 3. As to granting a venire facias de novo, after a Special Verdict found, they were ſo candid as to own, that tho' there was Search made with the greateſt Diligence, yet they could not find one Inſtance, nor ſo much as an Opinion of a Judge, except what was ſaid by Lord Chief-Juſtice Holt, in the Caſe of the King verſ. Keite. Comberb. 408. Holt ſays, "I ſhould not be much againſt a venire de novo." (Comyns 17.) And this was remembered by ſome others that heard that Opinion. The Jury had found in that Caſe that the Priſoner had killed the Man; but it did not certainly appear whether the Fact was Murder or Manſlaughter. Mr. Attorney General inſiſted, that if there was ſuch an Uncertainty, as that no Judgment could be given in a capital Caſe; the ſame

* "I take it that the Point on which the Caſe turned was this, it did not appear from any of the Facts found, that the Gun was diſcharged in Proſecution of the Purpoſe for "which the Party was aſſembled. But had it been poſitively found, that it was diſcharged againſt the Officer or his Aſſiſtant, the Court, upon this finding, might, without encroaching on the Province of the Jury, have preſumed that it was diſcharged in Proſecution of their original Purpoſe. In Caſes ſo circumſtanced, Res ipſa loquitur." Foſter's Reports, p. 352."

Reaſon held in ſuch Caſe as in civil and other criminal Caſes; tho' there is no Precedent of it as yet; for ubi eadem eſt ratio, eſt eadem lex. And therefore, ſuppoſing (for in this it was argued upon a Suppoſition) that the Verdict was too uncertain to give Judgment againſt the Priſoner, they inſiſted that a venire facias de novo ought to go.

But the Judges came to no Reſolution, that a venire facias de novo could not iſſue after a ſpecial Verdict in any capital Caſe; it being unneceſſary for them to determine that Queſtion: For as every ſpecial Verdict depends upon the particular finding of the Verdict, ſo the preſent Queſtion relates only to the preſent Verdict before us as found. And as to that we were all of Opinion, that this Verdict was not ſo uncertain as that Judgment could not be given upon it. For the Facts found are all poſitively found; but thoſe Facts in the Nature of them joined together, are not ſufficient to make the Priſoner guilty of Murder. And if ſo, then the Priſoner muſt be acquitted; for it is not that the Verdict is uncertain, but it is not full enough to convict him. Perhaps the Jury might have found other Facts which they have not, but the Court can judge only upon what is found. (Kelyng, 78, 79.) We all agreed in the Caſe of Green and Bedell, on a ſpecial Verdict, that the Verdict was not full enough as to them, for us to judge it Treaſon in them; becauſe the Verdict only found that they were preſent, and found no particular Act of Force committed by them; and did not find that they were aiding and aſſiſting to the reſt. And it is poſſible they might be there only out of Curioſity to ſee; and whether they were aiding and aſſiſting is Matter of Fact, which ought to be expreſsly found by the Jury, and not left to the Court upon any colourable Implication; and accordingly thoſe two Perſons were diſcharged. And yet as to Green, he was found to be among the Perſons aſſembled, &c. calling up his Cap, and hallooing with a Staff in his Hand; and that whilſt he was among them he was knocked down by a Party of the King's Soldiers that came to ſuppreſs them; and was then taken. And as to Bedell, it was found that he was there, and being purſued by one of the King's Soldiers, called out to the reſt of the Company to face about, and not to leave them (a).

Upon the whole, there is no Authority againſt the Court's giving Judgment of Acquittal, upon a Verdict that is not ſufficient to convict; and therefore this Verdict not finding Facts ſufficient to make the Priſoner guilty of Murder, he muſt be adjudged not guilty. And he was diſcharged.

(a) Strange, in his Reports, vol. II. p. 888. after mentioning this Caſe of (Meſſengers) Bedell and Green, in the Opinion delivered by the Chief-Juſtice, adds to it, (from Kelyng, p. 66.) "On a Special Verdict it was found, that Thompſon and his Wife were fighting, and Dawes endeavouring to part them was killed by Thompſon; and it not "being found, that Thompſon knew Dawes intended only to part them, it was held Manſlaughter, without ſending it back to the Jury to be certified of his Knowledge. "Theſe are Caſes directly in Point as to this Head; and I muſt obſerve that Plummer's Caſe was after the Caſe of Keit, wherein Holt, Chief-Juſtice, had had this Point under "his Conſideration."

XII. The Trial of Thomas Bambridge, Eſq. late Warden of the Fleet, for the Murder of Mr. Robert Castell, before the Right Hon. Sir Robert Baylis, Knt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Page, the Hon. Die Jovis, 22° Die Maij, 1729.

Proclamation was made for Information.

Clerk of Arraigns. Thou the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death, therefore if thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thy Time is to ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Then the Pannel was called over, and Mr. Bambridge challenged twenty.

Mr. Juſtice Page. You have challeged the full Number allowed by Law, without any Reaſon aſſigned, now take care.

Then the Jury ſworn were as follow:

George Baker,	Oliver Slowcock,
John Goodinch,	John Nemes,
Robert Hampſhire,	Thomas Playſeed,
Richard Maſon,	William Mills,
William Bernard,	Robert Everett,
Roger Penny,	Moſes Freeman.

Clerk of Arraigns. Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Clerk of Arraigns. You, Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, hearken to his Charge, he ſtands indicted by the Name of Thomas Bambridge, &c. (prout in the Indictment Mutatis Mutandis.)

Mr. Bambridge. I deſire the Indictment may be read in Latin, as it is.

Mr. Juſtice Page. That you ſhall have done.

Mr Holland. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King. This, Gentlemen, is an Indictment againſt Thomas Bambridge, Eſq. late Warden of the Fleet Priſon, for the Murder of Mr. Robert Caſtell; and the Indictment ſets forth, That Thomas Bambridge, upon the 14th of November, had the Care and Cuſtody of the Priſoners in the ſaid Priſon, but being a Man of a cruel Temper, did upon the 14th of November laſt paſt, aſſault the ſaid Robert Caſtell, and carry him to Richard Corbett's, a Spunging-houſe, and at the Time of this Impriſonment, one Joſeph White was ſick of the Small-Pox, and Mr. Caſtell never had them; that Mr. Caſtell ſeveral Times deſired he might not be there, for that he was afraid if he ſhould catch it, it would be his Death. That from the 16th of November to the 12th of December following, Bambridge forced him to continue there; and that Caſtell (after his Requeſt made to Bambridge to be removed from that Place, and Notice had been given to Bambridge, that the Perſon was ſick of the Small-Pox) fell ſick of the Small-Pox, and languiſhed under it in the ſame Houſe until December 12, and then died: Therefore the Indictment concludes, that the ſaid Thomas Bambridge did felonioufly and maliciouſly murder the ſaid Robert Caſtell, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment the Defendant pleaded Not Guilty; but if the Fact is proved, I don't doubt but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Thomas Bambridge ſtands indicted for the Murder of Mr. Robert Caſtell, a Priſoner then in his Cuſtody. Gentlemen, Priſoners muſt be treated with Humanity and Tenderneſs, unleſs unruly, and then the Gaoler has an Authority to reſtrain them; but thoſe that behave well, he has no ſuch Authority over. This Perſon came to the Fleet the 28th of June, as will be ſhewn by the Books of the Warden, and Bambridge had been a Deputy Warden ſome Time before. I wiſh he had not learned to treat People with Severity. On the 30th of September he came to be Warden in right of himſelf, and Mr. Caſtell had performed every Thing that was neceſſary; for the Liberty of the Rules had given Security, and to continue that Liberty of the Rules, found additional Security, Security to his Satisfaction, approved on by the Clerk of the Enquiries, yet on the 14th of November, he was forced into Corbett's; and I muſt ſubmit it to you, my Lord, if it is not contrary to Law, as he lodged in the Rules, at one Mr. Underwood's, to carry him to a Spunging-houſe, Houſes where they make a Property of all Priſoners. 'Tis the Duty, Gentlemen, of a Gaoler, that has Priſoners in his Cuſtody, when he thinks they cannot be continued ſafely in the Rules, to put them into Priſon, and not into Spunging-houſes, where large Reckonings are run up upon them. Their Method is, Gentlemen, to make the Security uneaſy, and then to tell the Priſoners that they ſhall be carried into Spunging-houſes, till they can work them up to a Temper to pay ſuch Sums of Money that they want to get from the unhappy Priſoners. Gentlemen, Mr. Caſtell was given to underſtand, that a Man was ill of the Small-Pox in the ſame Houſe, and Mr. Caſtell had never had them, and ſaid, he ſhould die if he had, let me not be carried into this Houſe. This did not take Effect, Bambridge inſiſted upon his renewing his Security, and when he was carried there, Savage went from him to Bambridge, and told him that Mr. Caſtell never had the Small-Pox, and that one White was ill of them, and begged that he might be carried back into his Lodgings, or into the Gaol. One would have thought Bambridge ſhould have had ſome Conſideration of him, but he had no Anſwer to his Satisfaction; he continued there very melancholy till the 4th of December, and then the Diſtemper took him; he ſickened with the ſame, the Danger increaſed, and he died on the 12th, ſo that it was apparently the Occaſion of his Death. It was Bambridge's Duty, when he was informed the Diſtemper was in the Houſe, to have removed him. This is the State of the Evidence, and as we ſhall be able to prove the Facts, I doubt not but you will find the Defendant Guilty.

Mr. Attorney-General. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Thomas Bambridge ſtands indicted for the Life of an unhappy Man, who died under his Cuſtody. As the Law has armed Gaolers with a ſufficient Authority, for the ſafe Cuſtody of their Priſoners, and for the ſecuring their Properties, ſo the Law has taken Care that they ſhall not put any Priſoner into hard Dureſs, and if the Man dies, the Life of the Priſoner lies to the Gaoler, and whether the Perſon dies being ſo confined, or whether it was the Diſtemper occaſioned by means and by reaſon of his illegal Dureſs, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Direction, to be Murder; for where actual Force ſhould be committed, and the Offender does an unlawful Act, by which Death enſues, I muſt ſubmit it whether, being mixed with actual Force, it is not Murder. This is a particular Caſe of this Priſoner, for he had given Security for the Enjoyment of the Indulgence of the Liberty of the Rules, during the Time he was in thoſe Lodgings; but for what Reaſon does not appear, that Bambridge ordered Corbett to take him out, and not to bring him into Priſon, but carry him into Corbett's Houſe, that will appear to be an illegal Act of Impriſonment; for by the Statute 22d Charles II. it is provided, no Gaoler, or other Officer, having Priſoners in his Cuſtody, ſhall carry them to any public Victualling-Houſe; therefore Bambridge ordering Mr. Caſtell to be carried to a Victualling-Houſe, and not into the Priſon, is an illegal Act, and the Conſequence of that, I apprehend to be an illegal Confinement: At the Time when carried there, White being ſick of the Small-Pox, it will appear to you, Gentlemen, that Bambridge was acquainted that the Small-Pox was in the Houſe, (it was a contagious Diſtemper) and that Mr. Caſtell was afraid of catching it. Frequent Meſſages were ſent to deſire he might be removed, and it will apppear that Mr. Caſtell did perſonally apply to Bambridge himself at Corbett's; after this, the Small-Pox being mentioned to be in the House when Bambridge was in Company with Mr. Castell, he said he never had had them, and if he catched the Contagion, it would kill him, and desired to be removed; but Bambridge refused to let him go, and continued the unlawful Duress upon Castell; he did catch the Distemper, and of that Distemper, so taken into Corbett's, under this Duress, died. If this Matter is proved, it is a point of Law, if it is not Murder; as to the Fact, it must appear by Evidence, and if my Brief be true, it will be fully made out to you. If the Gaoler does so treat a Prisoner to put him in hazard of his Life, and by such Duress he dies, I submit it whether the Gaoler is not guilty of Murder.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will call the Witnesses to prove the Facts.

Call Richard Longborne (who was sworn), and produced a Copy of Bambridge's Patent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where had you it from?—Mr. Long. From the Rolls.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is it a true Copy?—Mr. Long. It is a true Copy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver it to the Clerk to be read, (which he accordingly did) and it appeared to be dated the 30th of September, in the second Year of his present Majesty.

Call Thomas Cotton. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Cotton, what Officer are you belonging to the Fleet Prison?—Mr. Cot. I am Clerk of the Papers.

Mr. Sol Gen. Produce the Commitment Books of the said Office, and see when Mr. Castell was committed Prisoner.

Mr. Cot. He was committed the 15th of July 1728, upon Mesne Process.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was he charged in Execution?

Mr. Cot. The 9th of November following, for 180*l.* at the Suit of William Waring.

Mr. Bambridge. I do not hear Mr. Cotton, and therefore desire he may raise his Voice (upon which the Court admitted Mr. Bambridge to come to the inner Bar); I must observe, my Lord, the Writ was brought in 1726, and entered in 1728.

Call Richard Corbett. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Corbett, what House do you keep?

Mr. Cor. A Publick-House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long have you lived there?

Mr. Cor. Eleven Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Castell was in your House?

Mr. Cor. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who brought Mr. Castell to your House?

Mr. Cor. Myself, his Security sent for me to the Rainbow Coffee-House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was he before he was carried to your House?

Mr. Cor. At his own Lodgings.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was that?

Mr. Cor. At Mr. Underwood's, in the Rules of the Fleet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now go on.

Mr. Cor. My Lord, the Security sent for me to the Rainbow Coffee-House to take up Mr. Castell; but having some Respect for Mr. Castell, I sent to him to let him know that his Security intended to surrender him, and afterwards, at five or six o'Clock in the Evening, the Security sent for me again to the King's-Arms Tavern (where Mr. Castell was) to surrender him, and I told them I would not take Mr. Castell into Custody without I was paid; and they gave me Half a Guinea, and then asked me, Why I did not lock him up? Said I, He is my Prisoner now, not yours, and I left him there, and went to the Judge's Chambers; whilst I was gone, a Servant was sent to my House to have a Fire made and a Bed got ready for Mr. Castell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came he to go to your House?

Mr. Cor. It was at his own Request.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Cor. Till he died, which was on the 12th of December following.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was one White there?---Mr. Cor. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long?---Mr. Cor. A considerable Time. White had been well about 14 Days before Mr. Castell came.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Bambridge there?

Mr. Cor. He was there several Times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Mr. Castell ever desire you to go to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Cor. He did desire me to go to Bambridge, and said he was afraid, he had never had the Small-Pox, for if he had, it was when he was very young; and I went to Bambridge to tell him, that Mr. Castell desired to go to his Lodgings.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was this?

Mr. Cor. Nine or ten Days after the Security had surrendered him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Mr. Castell tell you to say to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Cor. He told me to tell Mr. Bambridge he was afraid of the Small-Pox, and to sollicit him to let him go to his Lodgings; and I went accordingly to Mr. Bambridge, at the King's-Arms, on Ludgate-Hill, and did sollicit him to let Mr. Castell go to his Lodgings, and Bambridge made answer to me, that he could not let a Man go, that was charged in three Executions, without Security.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Reason you told Bambridge that Mr. Castell never had the Small-Pox, and desired to go to his Lodging at Ludgate-Hill?

Mr. Cor. I told Bambridge that one White had the Small-Pox.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Room was it Mr. Castell died in?

Mr. Cor. I have kept a Club in the Room where Mr. Castell died.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you first acquaint Mr. Bambridge with Mr. Castell's being at your House?

Mr. Cor. The 15th of November, the next Day.

Mr. At. Gen. What said you to Bambridge?

Mr. Cor. I told him Mr. Castell's Security had surrendered him; and Bambridge asked, Where is he? I said, At my House; to which Bambridge answered, That was well.

Mr. Bambridge. Be pleased to ask, my Lord, if Corbett had any Directions from me to take Mr. Castell into Custody.

Mr. Justice Page. Corbett, answer that Question.—Mr. Cor. I had not.

Mr. Bam. When was I admitted into my Office?

Mr. Cor. On the 15th of December.

Mr. Bam. I desire Mr. Corbett to be asked, if he was not in Court when I qualified myself for the Place, and desire he may give an Account of it.---Mr. Cor. I was in Court.

Mr. Justice Page. I cannot admit him to give an Account of what was done in Court, for that must appear by the Records thereof.

Mr. Bam. My Lord, I desire Mr. Corbett may acquaint you what part of the House Mr. Castell lay in, and what part White.

Mr. Cor. White lay in the old House, in the Garret, and Mr. Castell in a House newly taken in, on the first Floor.

Mr. Justice Page. Had Mr. Castell and White any Communication together?

Mr. Cor. I never suffered White to come down for eight Weeks.

Mr. Justice Page. How high was the House where he lay?

Mr. Cor. Three Stories.

Mr. Baron Carter. How long was it before White went out of his Chamber after Mr. Castell was there?

Mr. Cor. Not till six Weeks after Mr. Castell was dead.

Call John Savage. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Savage, do you know Mr. Castell being any Time a Prisoner in the Fleet?---Mr. Savage. I was daily with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of his being sent to Corbett's?

Mr. Sav. I was several Times in Company with him, and he seemed apprehensive of his Bail surrendering him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you go to him to Corbett's?

Mr. Sav. I went to Mr. Castell the Day after he was carried there, and he complained that he was afraid he should not get Day Rules to go out with, though it was Term-Time, to transact his Business.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he the Small-Pox at that Time?---Mr. Sav. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How soon did you go to Mr. Castell again?

Mr. Sav. I went to him again in a Day or two, and he expressed a great Concern for fear of the Small-Pox, and said if he caught that Distemper, it would be very fatal to him; and I went to Mr. Bambridge, and told him of it, and Bambridge said he would not let him go to his Lodgings.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you with Bambridge at any other Time?

Mr. Sav. I was at the Coffee-House with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Request did you make then?

Mr. Sav. I don't remember any.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Times did you go to Bambridge?

Mr. Sav. Four Times I went to him, and the second Time I mentioned Mr. Castell's Fear of having the Small-Pox.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see Mr. Castell after he had the Small-Pox?

Mr. Sav. I did not see him, in regard to some of my own Family who had not had them.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Castell was carried to Mr. Corbett's the very Day he was surrendered, pray what was it he desired at that Time?

Mr. Sav. He said it was a great Misfortune not to have the Benefit of Day Rules to negotiate his Business with his Friends.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you first go to Mr. Castell?

Mr. Sav. The next Day after he was carried there, and it was mentioned that Mr. Castell was fearful of having the Small-Pox.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not that the first Day that he was carried there?

Mr. Sav. I am not sure it was the first Day.

Mr. At. Gen. How did you hear it?

Mr. Sav. I had it from Mr. Castell the next Day after, or the Day after that.

Mr. At. Gen. When you went first to Mr. Bambridge from Mr. Castell, what did you desire?

Mr. Sav. I did desire that he might have the Benefit of the Day Rules, and Mr. Bambridge said he could not, being charged in Execution to the amount of 900*l.*

Mr. At. Gen. When did you go to Bambridge?

Mr. Sav. I believe I went in a Day or two after Mr. Castell was carried in, and then mentioned Mr. Castell's Fears of having the Small-Pox.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you say any thing of the Small-Pox being in the House?——Mr. Sav. I knew nothing of them.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to talk of the Small-Pox to Bambridge?

Mr. Sav. I heard it from Mr. Castell, that the Small-Pox was there.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Reason of Mr. Castell's Fear, and Message to Bambridge?

Mr. Sav. Mr. Castell told me the Small-Pox was there at Corbett's.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you tell Bambridge?

Mr. Sav. I told Bambridge that Mr. Castell was fearful of having the Small-Pox, and that he desired to be carried to his own Lodgings.

Call Mary Corbett. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Mrs. Mary Corbett, you are Wife of Mr. Corbett?

Mrs. Cor. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. When was Mr. Castell brought to your House?

Mrs. Cor. The 14th of November, at ten o'Clock at Night, and a Drawer came from the Tavern, and brought a Message to have a Fire made, and a Bed prepared for Mr. Castell.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Where was the Message brought from?

Mrs. Cor. The Message was from the King's-Arms Tavern.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did Mr. Castell come?---Mrs. Cor. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Was White there?

Mrs. Cor. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How long had White had the Small-Pox?

Mrs. Cor. I believe he had had the Small-Pox ten Days.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Was there any Mark of the Small-Pox remaining?

Mrs. Cor. He kept the Scars on.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. How long was he sick?

Mrs. Cor. Ten Days.

Mr. Serj. Chesh. Did he sit up?

Mrs.

Mrs. Corbett. He got up every Day.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Pray, if they are a good Sort, do they not turn in nine Days?--- Mrs. Corbett. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. So that the Day after the Small-Pox had turned, Mr. Caſtell came into your Houſe: How long had Mr. Caſtell been in your Houſe before he had the Small-Pox?

Mrs. Corbett. Mr. Caſtell had not the Small-Pox till about eight Days after he came to my Houſe: I was by chance ſpeaking of the Small-Pox, and ſaying a Perſon in the Houſe had them, and Mr. Caſtell ſaid he was very ſorry for it, becauſe he had never had them.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did he then deſire any thing of you or your Huſband, as to ſpeaking to Mr. Bambridge?

Mrs. Corbett. Mr. Bambridge was in the Room at the ſame Time.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What did Mr. Caſtell ſay?

Mrs. Corbett. He deſired that he might go home to his Lodgings with a Keeper, and Bambridge ſaid in anſwer, he never knew any thing of that kind done.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did you give any Inſtance?

Mrs. Corbett. I told him that it happened when Mr. Conway, a Maſter in Chancery, was committed to the Fleet Priſon, and there was no Conveniency in the Priſon, nor at my Houſe, and then Mr. Gybbon ſent a Keeper with him to his Lodging.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What did Bambridge ſay then?

Mrs. Corbett. He ſaid no more.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. During the Time Mr. Caſtell was at your Houſe, were there any Securities given?

Mrs. Corbett. Yes, I believe there were, for Mr. Caſtell ſaid his Securities were come, and ſtaid only for Codnor's coming with Bonds, and Codnor told me there was Security given.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you know nothing but what Codnor ſaid?

Mrs. Corbett. I ſaw two Men there, whoſe Names I do not know, in order to give Security.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you know that they gave Security?

Mrs. Corbett. I ſaw Codnor, the Deputy Clerk of the Papers, go up Stairs with ſome Papers, which Mr. Caſtell ſaid was his Bonds.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Did you hear Bambridge ſay, or own, that Codnor had taken Security?—Mrs. Corbett. No.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. How long was this after Caſtell came to your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. About ten Days.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Do you remember the Time how long after he ſickened and died?

Mrs. Corbett. He ſickened on the 4th Day of December, and died on the 12th.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What did he die of?

Mrs. Corbett. Of the Small-Pox.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Requeſt of Mr. Caſtell, when he had the Converſation with Mr. Bambridge at your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. His Requeſt to Mr. Bambridge was, to be moved to his own Lodgings with a Keeper.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he agree or refuſe?

Mrs. Corbett. His Anſwer was, he never knew any thing of that kind done.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was Mr. Caſtell firſt brought into your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. On the 14th of November, about ten o'Clock at Night.

Mr. Lee. Was you in Company at the Tavern?---Mrs. Corbett. No.

Mr. Lee. How long after your Huſband was gone there, did you receive the Meſſage about Mr. Caſtell's coming?

Mrs. Corbett. An Hour and an Half.

Mr. Lee. Who brought him to your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. He came in Cuſtody, but I did not ſee him.

Mr. Lee. How long was it after that Mr. Bambridge came to your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. In about a Week.

Mr. Lee. Did you hear Bambridge ſay any thing when he was at that Time at your Houſe?

Mrs. Corbett. He did not ſay any thing to me.

Mr. Lee. Are you ſure of it?---Mrs. Corbett. Yes.

Mr. Lee. White lay ill of the Small-Pox then, was it in the ſame Stair-caſe?

Mrs. Corbett. They went up the ſame Stair-caſe, but Mr. Caſtell lay in the new Houſe one Pair of Stairs, and White in the old Houſe three Pair of Stairs.

Mr. Lee. How long was it after Mr. Caſtell had been at your Houſe, that you mentioned White's having the Small-Pox?

Mrs Corbett. About a Week after he had been there, I ſaid to Mr. Caſtell (Mr. Bambridge being by) that there was one in the Houſe had the Small-Pox; to which Mr. Caſtell replied, I am ſorry to hear it, for I never had them.

Mrs. Lee. How long had White been ill before you happened to ſpeak of his Illneſs to Caſtell?

Mrs. Corbett. To the beſt of my Remembrance eight Days.

Mr. Bambridge (ſhewing a Paper to Mrs. Corbett) ſays, Mrs. Corbett, pray look on that Paper.

Mrs. Corbett. I have, and remember the Coroner's coming to my Houſe, but did not know who he was.

Mr. Juſt. Page. If you intend to produce any Evidence in reſpect to the Inqueſt, ſhe is not a proper Perſon; for that you muſt produce the Coroner himſelf.

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, I ſhall ſubmit, and deſire Mrs. Corbett may repeat what ſhe ſaid in relation to Mr. Conway.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Mrs. Corbett, pray repeat that.

Mrs. Corbett. My Lord, Mr. Conway was at a Friend's Houſe on Ludgate-Hill, and the Reaſon was, the Gaol was very full, and there was no Room at my Houſe, and Mr. Gybbon ſent a Keeper with him to his Lodging, but that in two Nights and two Days, when there was Room, he came there.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Do you know of your own Knowledge, what Houſe he was at?

Mrs. Corbett. No, I do not, but that he was kept in the Rules of the Priſon, with a Keeper, till he was brought to my Houſe.

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, I deſire ſhe may acquaint you what ſort of Intimacy there was between Mr. Caſtell and myſelf?

Mrs. Corbett. Mr. Bambridge uſed to be at a Club at my Houſe, where ſome Perſons met, and among them Mr. Caſtell, and I always thought him and Mr. Bambridge to be friendly together.

Mr. Bambridge. When Mr. Caſtell ſpoke about enquiring after new Securities, what Anſwer did I make?

Mrs. Corbett. That you would take the Security as it came.

Mr. Bambridge. When I was ſpeaking to a Gentleman, who told me Mr. Caſtell was ſick of the Small-Pox, what did I ſay?

Mrs. Corbett. You ſaid, that you was very ſorry to hear it, and that Mr. Caſtell ſhould trifle with you, and himſelf too, about the Securities.

Mr. Bambridge. When Mr. Caſtell applied about Securities, what did I ſay?---Mrs. Corbett. You ſaid it ſhould be done.

Mr. Bambridge. Was it not eſteemed a Favour, or Part of Friendſhip?

Mrs. Corbett. It was.

Mr. Bambridge. Was you by when Mr. Caſtell deſired to go to his Lodgings on Ludgate-Hill?---Mrs. Corbett. I was.

Mr. Bambridge. What was the Reaſon of Mr. Caſtell's deſiring to go?

Mrs. Corbett. I believe he was afraid of the Small-Pox.

Call Richard Corbett again.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Mr. Corbett, you ſaid that White was recovered of the Small-Pox fourteen Days before Mr. Caſtell was brought to your Houſe; are you certain of that?

Mr. Corbett. I heard ſo, my Lord; I never went up to ſee him, and the Nurſe is here, and can inform your Lordſhip better.

Mr. Juſt. Page. You may go, you know nothing of it.

Call Hannah Stretch. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Stretch, was you ſent for to Mr. Caſtell when he was ill?---Mrs. Stretch. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you leave White?

Mrs. Stretch. Some time in November laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you Nurſe to Mr. Caſtell?---Mrs. Stretch. I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know how Mr. Caſtell got the Small-Pox?

Mrs. Stretch. I do not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did you ſtay with White?

Mrs. Stretch. Full three Weeks, and in that Time White had not been out of his Room. I went from White on the Thurſday, and was ſent for to Mr. Caſtell on the Tueſday following.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Condition was White in when you left him?

Mrs. Stretch. When I left him he was out of all Danger, he had taken three Doſes of Phyſick.

Call Thomas Dawſon. (Who was ſworn).

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Dawſon, do you remember Mr. Caſtell's being brought into Corbett's?

Mr. Dawſon. I never ſaw Mr. Caſtell till after he was dead.

Call John Noel. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Noel, did you know Mr. Caſtell?

Mr. Noel. I was a Priſoner at Mr. Corbett's when he came there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was one White ill of the Small-Pox then?

Mr. Noel. I never ſaw Mr. White, but was informed he had the Small-Pox above Stairs; I was then in the Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know how long White had them?

Mr. Noel. He was never ſuffered to come down in two Months after.

Call James Codnor. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Codnor, was you concerned in the Priſon of the Fleet as a Clerk?

Mr. Codnor. I did act there as Deputy Clerk of the Papers, by the Approbation of Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know of any Securities given by Mr. Caſtell?

Mr. Codnor. Some time in November laſt, in Michaelmas Term, I received Orders from Mr. Bambridge to attend Mr. Caſtell as often as his Security ſhould come to him to compleat his Bonds, who had then three Securities, and I received three Habeas Corpus very ſoon one after the other, and Mr. Caſtell could not get the Bonds ſigned ſo ſoon till Execution came againſt him, and then the Security was objected to, becauſe a greater Charge came againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. What were thoſe Bonds that had been given?

Mr. Juſt. Page, and Mr. Bar. Carter. } We cannot admit you to ask any Queſtions as to the Bonds, unleſs you had applied to Mr. Bambridge for them, and he had refuſed to deliver them.

Then the Priſoner was directed to proceed in his Defence.

Mr. Bambridge. I have a great many Witneſſes to prove my Regard for Mr. Caſtell, if occaſion; but ſhall ſubmit the reſt to the Evidence given for the Crown.

Mr. Juſt. Page. You may go on if you think fit.

Mr. Bambridge. No, my Lord, I will ſubmit the whole.

Mr. Juſt. Page. Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Bambridge ſtands indicted for the Murder of one Mr. Caſtell. If this has not been proved, Gentlemen, you are not to find the Man Guilty. That the Evidence for the Crown is not ſufficient to find him Guilty, for ſo far from being Guilty, Mr. Caſtell deſired to come there, and the Warden, if he is apprehenſive that a Man will run away, then it is the Duty of a Warden to carry him to a Place of ſafe Cuſtody. It is ſaid, indeed, that when Mr. Bambridge came to Corbett's, in about eight Days after Mr. Caſtell was carried there, Mr. Bambridge was by, and Mr. Caſtell expreſſed his Fear of having the Small-Pox, and deſired to be removed to his Lodging, but then he never asked to go into the Cuſtody of the Gaol. Mrs. Corbett indeed ſaid, that one of the Maſters in Chancery, Mr. Conway, was allowed to be at his Lodging two Days before he was carried to the Gaol, but the Reaſon was, there was no Room in the Gaol. Gentlemen, the Gaoler muſt keep his Priſoners as well as he can, for they muſt not be put like Hogs together. Gentlemen, here was Execution upon Execution, which came to the Sum of 900*l.* therefore it was requiſite to have him in a Place of Safety. Another Witneſs ſays, that the Deputy Clerk of the Papers was ordered by Mr. Bambridge at all Times to attend Mr. Caſtell about his Securities, and ſo far from the Priſoner's having a malicious Intent, that there was no Quarrel, no ill Nature, no Difference, and they met frequently at Corbett's at a Club, and there was no Quarrel, but always a Friendſhip between them. And when Bambridge heard that he had the Small-Pox, he declared that he was ſorry that Mr. Caſtell had them, and that he had trifled with himſelf and him about the Securities. It must appear, Gentlemen, to you, that Mr. Castell was murdered maliciously, to find the Prisoner Guilty; if it appears otherwise, you must acquit him.

Clerk of Arraigns. How say you, is Thomas Bambridge Guilty of the Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not Guilty.

Upon this Acquittal, Mary, the Widow of Mr. Robert Castell, brought an Appeal against the said Thomas Bambridge and Richard Corbett, for the Murder of her Husband. We shall here give the Trial on the Appeal, though it is not in the Order of Time, yet as it relates to the same Fact, is proper to follow the Trial of Bambridge for the Murder.

What follows first, is a short Account of the Proceedings previous to the Trial, on the Appeal.

Hillary Term, 3 Geo. II.

Castell, Vid. vers. Bambridge, et Corbett.

'The Defendant Bambridge, having been prosecuted on the Report of 'the Committee of the House of Commons, for the Murder of the Plain-'tiff's Husband, who was a Prisoner in the Fleet, under the Custody of 'Bambridge the Warden, and having on the Trial been honourably 'acquitted, upon the Prosecutor's own Evidence, was followed with an 'Appeal, to which Corbett, who on the Cross Examination appeared to 'be a material Witness for Bambridge, was now also made an Appellee; 'and the Writ of Appeal running quia Maria Castell vidua fecit nos secur' 'de clamore suo prosequendo per Thom' Wagstaffe et Poston Stracey, contrary 'to the usual Form, which is, si the Appellant fecerit nos (i. e. the King) 'secur' Application was made to the Lord Chancellor King, to supersede 'this Writ, upon Affidavit that the Appellees were both in Custody upon 'it, but that no Security had been given, and the Writ reciting it as an 'Act done before the Emanation of it, the Sheriff had not taken any, as 'he would have done if it had been put by way of Condition, si fecerit. 'And it was argued by me that the Statute of Westminster 2. C. 12. giving 'the Appellee a Remedy against the Appellant, her Pledges, and Abet-'tors, it was not a Matter of Form, but Security should be entered into 'by Persons of Ability; to which it was answered by Mr. Attorney-'General, that it was sufficient if there were Pledges at any Time before 'Judgment. Sir T. Jones, 154. 9. Coke, Dr. Hussey's Case. Croke 'Jac. 413.

'To this it was replied, that at that rate the Appellee would never 'have any Remedy against the Pledges; for if he was convicted, he would 'be intitled to none, and if he was acquitted, the Appellant would never 'pray Judgment, and it would be an Artifice to elude the Law.

'Notwithstanding all which the Chancellor would do nothing in it, 'but said, if the quia fecerit vos was wrong, we might have Advantage of 'it, and so refused to make any Order.

'Upon the first Day of Michaelmas Term last, the Writ being return-'ed, and the Appellees both brought by Habeas Corpus, and turned over 'to the King's-Bench, it was there moved to have the Proceeding set aside, 'upon the same Affidavit of there being no Pledges; and the Court here 'were of Opinion it was a very good Objection, and a Foundation to 'supersede the Writ; but then they said, it was not in their Power, who 'were to take the Writ as they found it, and not to hear Affidavits, to 'contradict the Suggestion of the Writ; and therefore the having Secu-'rity, being recited as an Act done, they must take it so, and could not 'relieve.

'Upon this the Appeal was arraigned, setting forth that the Appellant's 'Husband was a Prisoner in the Fleet, under the Custody of Bambridge 'the Warden, who made an Assault upon him, and contrary to his Will 'carried him to the House of Corbett, a Victualling-house within the Fleet, 'and there imprisoned him, where one White then lay ill of the Small-'Pox, which Castell had never had; that the Appellees had Notice of 'this, and were desired to suffer him to remove to another Place in 'the Prison, which they refused, and afterwards Castell fell ill of the 'Distemper, and died in Corbett's House; whereby the Court concludes, 'the Appellees were Guilty of Murder.

'Without staying for a Copy of the Declaration, the Appellees instan-'ter plead Not Guilty, and their Plea was rehearsed in French, and Issue 'joined.

'Then it was moved, that the Appellees might be bailed; and, upon 'Debate, the Court were of Opinion to bail Bambridge, and not Corbett; 'and the Reason they gave was, that Bambridge had been acquitted, 'which was a strong Presumption of Innocence; and the Judge before 'whom he was tried, had certified that he was very well satisfied with 'the Verdict, and they said they would bail him in all Cases after an 'Acquittal; and that was the Reason they denied to bail in Slaughter-'ford's Case, because Holt, Chief-Justice, had sent out the Jury again, 'to consider whether they would stand to their Verdict of Acquittal; 'and when they insisted upon it, he himself ordered the Appeal.

'But as to Corbett, there was no Foundation to bail, for they denied 'that it was of Course to bail in an Appeal; so Bambridge was bailed by 'two Persons, Corpus pro Corpore, who justified in 1000*l.* each. And 'it was agreed, that in an Appeal by Writ, on the Civil Side, two Bail 'only are required; but had it come on the Crown Side by Certiorari, 'there must have been four.

'Then it was moved to fix a Time for the Trial, the Appellees offer-'ing to take short Notice; but it being by Original, there was a Neces-'sity to have fifteen Days between the Teste and the Return of the Dis-'tringas, and they could not be tried on the Venire, because being in 'London, there could be no Trial at Bar, (the Citizens not being to be 'brought out of the City) and as it must be tried at Nisi Prius, there 'must be a Distringas.

'Towards the latter End of the Term it was moved, that the Appel-'lees might be discharged, there being a Discontinuance, for that no 'Venire had been taken out; and in Appeals, which are a recent Prose-'cution, every Delay is a Discontinuance: and Cro. Jac. 283. Yelv. 204. 'were cited. But upon Consideration the Court held, that it was not 'necessary to take out the Writ and make it returnable the soonest it 'might be, though it must bear Teste the Day the Issue is joined; and 'then the Appellant took out a Venire, Teste 23d October, and returnable 'the 25th of November, which the Court looked upon as an affected De-'lay, and therefore admitted the other Appellee, Corbett, to Bail. They 'said it appeared he might have been tried the Sitting after the Term, 'and then upon his Acquittal, he must have been instanter discharged by 'the Judge of Nisi Prius, according to the Statute 14 H. VI. C. I.

'Both being thus out upon Bail, appeared on the several Continuance 'Days, according to their Recognizance, and the Appellant also ap-'peared; and in the Beginning of this Term the Appellees moved for a 'Rule on Mr. Tanner, the Officer who keeps the Records at the Old-'Bailey, to attend the Trial with the Record of Bambridge's Acquittal; 'he not being allowed a Copy of it. But the Court refused to make any 'Rule, and said, if it was brought it could be no Evidence. Strange's 'Reports, Vol. II. 854.'

XIII. The Trial of Thomas Bambridge, Esq. and Richard Corbett, at Guildhall, London, on an Appeal for the Murder of Mr. Robert Castell, before the Right Hon. the Lord Chief-Justice Raymond, January 26, 1729-30.

Mr. Filmer.

MAY it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the Appellants. This is an Appeal of Murder, brought by Mary Castell, against the Defendants Thomas Bambridge and Richard Corbett, for the Death of her late Husband. The Declaration sets forth, that upon the 14th of November, in the Second Year of his present Majesty, the said Thomas Bambridge was Warden of the Prison of the Fleet, and having the Custody of the Prisoners, did make an Assault, and with Force and Arms, and Malice aforethought, did carry and convey him to a Victualling-house, being the Defendant Corbett's Mansion-house, and did detain him there till the 12th of December, against his Will, and without his Consent; and that one Joseph White was then sick of the Small-Pox, and that Robert Castell had never had the Small-Pox. That on the 16th of November, Robert Castell requested they would not detain him, and gave the Defendants Notice that White was sick of the Small-Pox, and that he Castell had never had the Small-Pox, and that he was afraid of his Death from this Distemper; notwithstanding which, the Defendants imprisoned and detained him from the 16th of November to the 12th of December, and forced him to remain all that Time in the said House: And further sets forth, that on the 4th of December he began to grow sick, and languished to the 12th of the same December, and on the 12th died; so that the Defendants, with Malice aforethought, killed Robert Castell aforesaid, the Husband of the said Mary Castell. To this Declaration the Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty, but if we prove the Facts you will find them Guilty.

Mr. Reeves [afterwards Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas]. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the Widow. This is an Appeal of Murder, brought by her against the two Defendants, Thomas Bambridge and Richard Corbett. Bambridge, Gentlemen, is laid to be Warden of the Fleet, and Corbett a Person that kept a Spunging-house, where Prisoners were sometimes kept. It was for his Advantage to have Prisoners brought to his House, in order to get Money of them. Mr. Castell, Gentlemen, was so unfortunate to become a Prisoner under the Controul of Bambridge, and Bambridge was Head Warden. He came in a Prisoner before Bambridge was Warden, in June 1728, and at that Time Mr. Huggins was Warden; and after being a little Time in Prison, Security was given to Mr. Huggins for Mr. Castell's having the Liberty of the Rules. The first Action was at the Suit of one Waring, for 186*l.* tho' there was only 86*l.* due, and so sworn: another Cause was for 15*l.* at the Suit of another Plaintiff, so that the whole Charge against him then was 86*l.* due to Waring, and 15*l.* due to the other Plaintiff; so that Security was given upon his coming in; there was a Bond entered into by two sufficient Persons in the penal Sum of 200*l.* only; after, further Charges came against him in the Time of Bambridge. We shall shew you the Time when Bambridge became Warden, which was on the 30th of September 1728, in the Second Year of his present Majesty, then it was he was appointed Warden in his own Right, tho' some time before he came in his own Right; on the 30th of September he was sworn in, tho' on the 28th he was Warden, and acted in his own Right. Gentlemen, a little while after Bambridge came to be Warden, a Sum of Money 125*l.* Castell received; after this Money was paid to Castell, Bambridge knowing of it, contrived how to get some of this Money, and Corbett was to go Shares. It was this View of getting something from Castell, that was the Cause of the Demand for farther Security; and it was given: But some other Charges coming in, he gave a Bond for 800*l.* there was one of 200*l.* given before, and now it came to be 800*l.* then there was a third Security demanded, and given for 1000*l.* so that then the three Bonds as Security to the Warden, were 200*l.* 800*l.* and 1000*l.* these together made up the Sum of 2000*l.* for Security to be a true Prisoner to the Warden, and at that Time there was not 400*l.* due; one would have thought that when the Warden had 2000*l.* Security for 400*l.* this would have been sufficient; but that was not the Business intended, there was something farther to be done; for notwithstanding this ample Security, Castell was to be taken up, as they pretended, till he gave farther Security to the Warden, the Defendant Bambridge. Gentlemen, the Time of his being taken up was the 14th of November; the 28th of September Bambridge became Warden, Mr. Castell had then the Liberty of the Rules, and lodged at one Mr. Underwood's in the said Liberty. Corbett he took him up (it becomes them to shew by what Authority), and was for carrying him away; Castell expostulated with Corbett, and asked him by whose Authority he did it? Corbett said he did it by the Direction of the Warden. Gentlemen, when he was taken up, he was carried away from his Lodging, contrary to his Will, to the King's-Arms Tavern, and from thence in the Evening to Corbett's Houſe; what Authority he had, becomes them to ſhew you. We ſay that Priſoners are not to be confined in Spunging-houſes without the Conſent of thoſe Priſoners; the proper place of Confinement is the Gaol; if there was Reaſon for confining him, he ought to be put into the Walls of the Priſon, then he would have been in a legal Confinement; but during the Time he was at Corbett's, he was under an improper and illegal Confinement. The very Day, Gentlemen, he was taken up, he employed a Friend of his own to go to the Defendant Bambridge, who went at that Time he was to be carried to Corbett's, and told him it was not proper to carry him there, for that there was a Priſoner then ſick, one Joſeph White; this White languiſhed of the Small-Pox in Corbett's Houſe. Caſtell, Gentlemen, never had them, and was under the greateſt Terror that ever any Man could be, for fear of catching them. He ſent to the Defendant Bambridge, that he might not be carried to Corbett's Houſe, and if he did require further Security, he deſired to have a Keeper ſent with him to his Lodgings, which he would be at the Expence of, or otherwiſe into the Walls of the Priſon. Caſtell, Gentlemen, did not only ſend that Night, but the next Morning to Bambridge's Houſe or Lodgings, and did deſire him to conſider the Circumſtances, that he never had had the Small-Pox, and that he was under the greateſt Terror of catching them, and that White was ſick of them, and that he might not be carried there, but that he might be carried into the Priſon, or put in ſome other Place where the Small-Pox was not; but both theſe Requeſts were abſolutely refuſed, and he keeps him in Corbett's Houſe, rather than to let him go into the Gaol, or ſome other Place where the Diſtemper was not: Then he applied at Corbett's Houſe to Bambridge himſelf, and deſired he might not be kept any longer at Corbett's, but that he might go into the Gaol; but that not being complied with, there were frequent Applications to Bambridge for his Removal from Corbett's, but nothing complied with; and, if my Inſtructions are true, the Reaſon why Bambridge did inſiſt that he ſhould continue at Corbett's, and not go to the Gaol or any other Place, was, unleſs he gave Bambridge a Sum of Money: This not being complied with, there was freſh Security given, a fourth Bond for 1000*l.* more. After this was done, Caſtell's Friends complimented him of his having his Liberty again; but tho' he gave this Security, yet more Difficulties aroſe; they will have a fifth Bond. Mr. Caſtell was delayed in this manner for ſome Time, and a fifth Bond was given in the Penalty of 2000*l.* with four Perſons Security. Five Bonds, Gentlemen, were entered into for Caſtell's being a true Priſoner to the Warden.

Lord Chief-Juſtice Raymond. What were the laſt Bonds?

Mr. Reeves. One was for 1000*l.* the other for 2000*l.* Gentlemen, this laſt Bond was given in the Beginning of December; he was kept in Cuſtody till the Time of giving the fifth Bond, which was the Beginning of December; and notwithſtanding the fifth Bond was given, he was kept in Cuſtody three Days after; at laſt he had ſome Apprehenſion of having his Liberty, and upon the 4th of December there was an Order ſent to his Lodging, as he had before, to get them ready; but he was diſappointed, having thought he had done every thing that was reaſonable, but it happened unfortunately, that on the 4th of December having been confined in this Houſe under the Terror of that Diſtemper, he fell ill, and on the 12th of December died of that Diſtemper. We ſay, Gentlemen, that his Death was occaſioned by his unlawful Impriſonment, and that the Hardſhip he ſuffered was the occaſion of his Death. If you ſhall be of Opinion on the Circumſtances, that this Apprehenſion of him ſerved only to get Money from him, it will be Dureſs. There is one Witneſs that heard the Converſation between Caſtell and Bambridge at Corbett's, and the Witneſs will tell you, that Caſtell did expoſtulate with Bambridge, that he was in danger of his Life, and that he ſhould catch the Diſtemper and die, and deſired then to be carried to the Priſon or any other Place, and not to be in the Place where his Life was in ſo much danger; and his Anſwer was, that he ſhould neither go into the Priſon, nor to ſuch Place, without ſuch a ſum of Money; it was not to get Security as before. If we prove this to be the caſe, we prove the Declaration, and you muſt find the Defendants Guilty.

Mr. Lee [afterwards Lord Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench]. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the Appellant. This poor Woman has for ſome time ſtaid, in hopes to ſee that this Affair would have appeared in a true and juſt Light at a former Trial, had againſt one of the Priſoners, in which the other Priſoner who now appears here, was examined as Witneſs. The Appellant waited with great Satisfaction, under a Belief that the Truth of the Fact would have appeared at that Trial, and did not commence her Appeal, nor would ſhe if ſhe could have received Satisfaction on the former Trial. Gentlemen, ſhe did not receive that, and therefore was at liberty to bring her Appeal; for, by the Statute of Harry VII. it is provided, that notwithſtanding any Priſoner is tried and acquitted, that the Party Appellant has a Right to a full and intire Examination into the Fact. That Act of Harry has preſerved that Right, notwithſtanding he was before acquitted; and, as I apprehend, the Affair now ſtands as open as if nothing had been done. This being the caſe, the Matter, Gentlemen, for your Conſideration will be, how far, by the Witneſſes, we are able to ſatisfy you in reſpect to your Apprehenſion of the Manner of her Huſband's coming to his Death. It has been opened to you, Gentlemen, that Mr. Caſtell was a Priſoner in the Fleet, and that the Defendant Bambridge was acting Warden in June 1728; the Defendant, Corbett, was by his Office a Tipſtaff, and as ſuch was under the Direction of the Warden. When Priſoners are out upon the Rules, the Tipſtaff is the proper Officer for taking them into the Fleet, and that to be under the Warden's Direction, and Corbett was ſuch a Tipſtaff. This Caſtell being committed in June 1728, (he was a Gentleman that lived in good Figure) did procure Security in July, and a Bond was given in the Penalty of 200*l.* and another 800*l.* and a third 1000*l.* Gentlemen, he was out of Gaol upon this Security, and the Warden was ſatisfied as to his being abroad, but on the 14th of November he was taken up. On the 3d of October before this, Gentlemen, he received a Sum of 125*l.*; on the 22d of October, according to my Inſtructions, this came to the Knowledge of the Defendant Bambridge, then came theſe Demands of freſh Security; it was very likely the Means to inſiſt upon having Money in hand or freſh Security; notwithſtanding this, upon the 14th of November, Corbett came to his Lodging in which he then was, a Place within the Ruſes, and took him from thence, and carried him to the King's-Arms Tavern; there he was continued till the Evening: That during his Continuance there, he ſent for a Perſon who will appear here as Witneſs, who went to the Defendant Bambridge at the Deſire of Caſtell, and he deſired him to acquaint Bambridge, that he found there was an Intention of carrying him to Corbett's, and that the Small-Pox was there, and he never had them, and was afraid of catching them, and begged of Bambridge that he would not let him be carried there: The Witneſs accordingly went to Bambridge, and told him of the Requeſt of Caſtell, but before he came back Mr. Caſtell was carried to the Houſe of Corbett, and when he found him there (and was going on)—

Mr. Fazakerley. He found him at the Tavern when he came back.

Mr. Lee. The Difference, Gentlemen, is this, that this Perſon at the Requeſt of Caſtell went to Bambridge, and upon his Return (the Fact is that he found Corbett and Caſtell at the King's-Arms Tavern) ſaid, that upon his Application to Bambridge he could get no Anſwer, no Directions that Caſtell ſhould not be carried there. Caſtell, his Fear continued upon him, and the ſame Witneſs went next Day to Bambridge, and petitioned for the ſame thing, but could get no Satisfaction from Bambridge. We have Accounts of ſeveral other Applications, but without Anſwer to the purpoſe, and particularly one from Caſtell himſelf. When Bambridge came to Corbett's Houſe, it was that Caſtell complained to him himſelf of the Hardſhip of being confined there, and deſired Bambridge to let him go to his Lodgings with a Keeper, or into the Walls of the Gaol, which he choſe much rather, from the Fear he had of catching the Small-Pox: The Anſwer then given by Bambridge to Caſtell was, that he ſhould neither go into the Gaol (tho' there was Room enough), or go to that other Place. Gentlemen, it muſt be under the Fear and Apprehenſion Caſtell had of catching the Small-Pox, that he made this Requeſt. How a Man could appear with ſo much Inhumanity I can't conceive, for Bambridge himſelf ſaid, upon a time when he was at the Tavern with Caſtell, that he never ſaw a Man ſo much ſhocked at the Small-Pox; notwithſtanding which, when Caſtell complained to him, and deſired to be removed from Corbett's, this was Bambridge's Anſwer to him then, That he ſhould not go into the Priſon or any where elſe, unleſs he had a Sum of Money for going.

Gentlemen, the whole of his Charge at this time was under 400*l.* He was committed in June 1728; on the firſt of December Security was found for no leſs than 5200*l.* the firſt Bond was for 200*l.* the next 800*l.* the third 1900*l.* a fourth 1000*l.* and the fifth 2000*l.* Notwithſtanding theſe Bonds were given on the firſt Day of December, this Man was ſtill continued a Priſoner, and I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether he was not continued in ſuch a Manner as to make it Dureſs. By the Statute of 28 of K. C. II. no Man is to be carried to a Spunging-houſe without his own Requeſt. He was kept, Gentlemen, in this Place even after the fifth Bond was given three Days, and on the 4th, which was the 4th of December, he took the Diſtemper. This Gentleman was ſo much affected with the Hardſhip of his Caſe, that he often complained of this Uſage, and of Bambridge in particular; and in his laſt Words, when he lay upon his Death-bed, when it can hardly be imagined, that any thing could come from a Man but Truth, then his conſtant Declarations were, that his Death was owing to Bambridge.

This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Caſe, and we will beg leave to call our Witneſſes, and if they come up to Proof, it muſt be thought the Widow has done very right; and though Corbett, when he appeared as a Witneſs, did not give Satisfaction, (I would not ſay it, if it was not in my Brief) yet probably the Witneſſes now called will give you Satisfaction why Corbett did not give Satisfaction.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. I aſk you, according to the beſt of your Obſervation, whether he ever came out of his Room?

Mr. Noel. I believe he never did, except one Time; and then he came to ſpeak to me.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Was Caſtell there then?

Mr. Noel. No, my Lord; I believe he never was nearer to him than my Room.

Mr. Fazakerley. Sir, do you know this Houſe of Corbett's?

Capt. Sinclair. Yes.

Mr. Fazakerley. Was you there in September, October, November, or December, 1728?

Capt. Sinclair. I was not brought in then, I was fifty-two Days at Corbett's Houſe.

Mr. Fazakerley. How was you uſed then?

Capt. Sinclair. I muſt ſubmit it to the Court, whether, as I have a Proſecution againſt Bambridge, what I may ſay may not prejudice myſelf; whether any Thing I ſay now may not be prejudicial to me.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. It is impoſſible for me to tell you. If you ſay any Thing that they can make uſe of, without doubt they will.

Mr. Bambridge. I deſire, my Lord, the People may be kept from the Witneſſes behind.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. If you hear any body prompt the Witneſſes, they ſhall be removed.

Mr. Filmer. We deſire to know what Sort of a Houſe Corbett's is?

Capt. Sinclair. I was carried to Mr. Corbett's Houſe contrary to my Inclinations; when I was there I was put in a Garret, with ſome of the Domeſtics.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. It is not proper Evidence.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Let me know what it is; I don't know whether it is material or not.

Mr. Lee. My Lord, the Witneſs is come to give you an Account of this Houſe; that it is a Victualling-Houſe.

Capt. Sinclair. It is a Victualling-houſe and Spunging-houſe, and they take exorbitant Sums of Money. I was there from the 14th of December, 1727, till the 3d of February following.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. I think you ſay it was a public Victualling-houſe and Spunging-houſe?---Capt. Sinclair. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Reeves. I deſire you'll inform my Lord and the Jury, whether it is continued the ſame Sort of Houſe ſince?

Capt. Sinclair. There was one Blackwell there.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. When was that?

Capt. Sinclair. In the Month of January, 1727.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. That is not Evidence. Do you know nothing of this Houſe ſince 1727?

Capt. Sinclair. Since I have been diſcharged I have not been in the Houſe; but when I was there, I was obliged to pay one Shilling a Night for a Bed.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. That was a very wrong Thing, but that was in 1727?

Capt. Sinclair. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Let me aſk you one Queſtion. You call it a Victualling-houſe and a Spunging-houſe; what is a Spunging-houſe?

Capt. Sinclair. Thoſe that take exorbitant Fees.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Did you pay any Thing above the Fees?

Lord Chief-Juſtice. This is no Evidence in point of Time: You all know Evidence, and ſhould keep to it.

Call —— Wilſon (who was ſworn).

Mr. Reeves. Do you know Corbett's Houſe?---Mr. Wilſon. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. What Sort of a Houſe is it?

Mr. Wilſon. Beer, Ale, Cyder, Wine, Punch, and Victuals.

Mr. Reeves. Was the Houſe uſed for that Purpoſe when Mr. Caſtell was there?---Mr. Wilſon. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. You know Caſtell was there?---Mr. Wilſon. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. Was it then made uſe of for this Purpoſe?

Mr. Wilſon. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. Where had Mr. Caſtell Victuals and Drink?

Mr. Wilſon. In that Houſe.

Mr. Reeves. Do you know the Situation of the Room where Mr. Caſtell lay?---Mr. Wilſon. Very well.

Mr. Reeves. Do you know the Room where White was in?

Mr. Wilſon. No.

Mr. Fazakerley. How much did he (Mr. Caſtell) pay a Night for his Bed?---Mr. Wilſon. Mr. Caſtell told me——

Mr. Strange. That is not Evidence. Had he a Room up one Pair of Stairs?---Mr. Wilſon. The latter Part of his Time.

Mr. Strange. Was you with him often?

Mr. Wilſon. Yes, till he had the Small-Pox.

Mr. Strange. Did his Wife come near him during the Time he was ill?

Mr. Wilſon. No.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. If you are examining the Witneſſes, I cannot hear.

Then Mr. Strange aſked the Witneſs ſome Queſtion, which for the Noiſe in the Court was not heard.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. If you aſk any Queſtion, you muſt propoſe it to the Court.

Mr. Strange. Was you Servant to Mr. Caſtell?---Mr. Wilſon. No.

Mr. Strange. Was you his Companion?

Mr. Wilſon. Yes; and drank ſeveral Bottles of Wine with him; and I have heard Mr. Caſtell ſay, that Cambridge and Corbett were all Rogues alike.

Call —— Collett (who was ſworn).

Mr. Filmer. Do you know Mr. Caſtell?---Mr. Collett. Yes.

Mr. Filmer. Did you know of any Money he received?

Mr. Collett. Yes, 125*l.*

Mr. Filmer. When?---Mr. Collett. The 3d of October, 1728.

Mr. Filmer. Do you know of Cambridge being privy to it?

Mr. Collett. I believe he was; Mr. Caſtell told me ſo.

Mr. Kettleby. My Lord, that is no Evidence.

Mr. Filmer. Do you know of your own Knowledge that he knew of it?

Mr. Collett. No.

Mr. Lee. Where was this 125*l.* paid to Mr. Caſtell?

Mr. Collett. It was paid at Woodward's.

Mr. Lee. Where was Woodward's?

Mr.

Mr. Collett. I drew a Draft.
Mr. Lee. Where was Woodward's?
Mr. Collett. In Exchange Alley; I thought all the World knew that.
Mr. Lee. So Woodward paid it?———Mr. Collett. I don't know.
Lord Chief Juſtice. I thought you had actually paid the Money to Mr. Caſtell?—Mr. Collett. I gave a Draft on Woodward.
Mr. Lee. Was that allowed on Account, do you know?—Mr. Collet. Yes.
Mr. Strange. You don't know what Hands it was paid into at Woodward's?——Mr. Collett. No.
Mr. Strange. What Reaſon have you to believe Bambridge knew of it?
Mr. Collett. Becauſe I had ſome Difficulty in paying the Money; there was Mr. Brent, Mr. Alderman Preſton, Mr. Kirley, and myſelf, and we were under ſome Difficulty, and Caſtell deſired that one of us would go up to Bambridge; upon which Mr. Brent went up, and deſired to know if he might pay the Money with Safety; then Brent came down, and gave us Satisfaction, and I paid the Money.
Mr. Strange. The Force of their Argument is, that as ſoon as Bambridge knew that he had received this Money, then he preſſed him to give freſh Security. If he did not know that he had Money, that Argument will not hold. How was the Note drawn?
Mr. Collett. To Robert Caſtell, or Bearer.
Mr. Fazakerley. Who was the Note payable to?
Mr. Collett. It was payable to Mr. Robert Caſtell or Bearer, on Demand.
Mr. Fazakerley. And this was allowed in Account to you by Woodward?
Mr. Collett. Yes.
Mr. Strange. You don't know that it came to Caſtell's Hands?
Mr. Collett. No, any Porter might go and receive it.
Mr. Lee. To whom was the Note delivered?
Mr. Collett. To Mr. Caſtell.
Lord Chief Juſtice. I went away with it at firſt as if Caſtell had received it.
Mr. Lee. Brent was the Man that went up to Bambridge.
Mr. Strange. Prove ſomething or other.
Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, I never had one Shilling of him.
(Call Mr. ——— Brent, who was ſworn).
Mr. Fazakerley. Was you preſent when Mr. Collett drew a Bill upon Woodward, payable to Mr. Caſtell?——Mr. Brent. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know of any body that went to Bambridge, and what was ſaid?
Mr. Brent. Sir, I was jealous of Mr. Caſtell's Circumſtances, and I aſked Mr. Bambridge if there was any Judgment or Execution againſt Mr. Caſtell? and Bambridge told me he was in upon Meſne Proceſs.
Mr. Fazakerley. Did you at any Time tell him the Occaſion of aſking that Queſtion?
Mr. Brent. It is very poſſible I might give him ſome Hints, but I cannot be poſitive.
Mr. Fazakerley. I deſire you will recollect; it was very natural for you to ſpeak to Bambridge, did you mention any Thing of that Money?
Mr. Brent. I cannot ſay.
Mr. Fazakerley. Did Bambridge ſpeak to you concerning it?
Mr. Brent. I cannot remember that he did.
Mr. Fazakerley. Did you give him any Reaſons for aſking the Queſtion?
Mr. Brent. It is poſſible I might tell him ſome Reaſons.
Mr. Fazakerley. I deſire you'll acquaint my Lord, whether Bambridge appeared to be aſſiſting to Mr. Caſtell in that Affair, or have you Reaſon to believe him ſo?
Mr. Brent. I cannot ſay, unleſs to ſatisfy me, I aſked Mr. Caſtell ſeveral Queſtions, and Caſtell ſaid, if I would aſk Bambridge he would ſatisfy me.
Mr. Lee. When you went up to Bambridge, when you went to enquire after Caſtell's Circumſtances, what did you ſay to Bambridge?
Mr. Brent. I have anſwered that Queſtion, I cannot be poſitive, to be particular I cannot.
Mr. Lee. Where was Mr. Caſtell then?
Mr. Brent. I do believe Mr. Caſtell was with the other Company.
Mr. Lee. Where was Bambridge, was he with the other Company?
Mr. Brent. I believe he was not, I don't remember he was in the other Company.
Lord Chief Juſtice. Was he in the ſame Room?
Mr. Brent. I don't believe he was.
Lord Chief Juſtice. Did you go out of that Room into another Room to Bambridge?
Mr. Brent. I don't believe either Mr. Collett or Preſton went out of the Room, but I went myſelf.
Mr. Strange. Did you not go up Stairs?
Mr. Brent. I can't ſay whether it was in the ſame Stair-caſe, or not; I did aſk Bambridge, and he did ſatisfy me.
Mr. Strange. Did you aſk Bambridge if it was ſafe to pay Mr. Caſtell any Money?
Mr. Brent. I can't be certain it was the whole I ſaid, probably I might tell him I was negotiating the Concern.
Mr. Fazakerley. It will follow moſt naturally, that the further Bonds were demanded on Purpoſe to extort Money. Now we ſhall ſhew, that Security was given from Time to Time, and in order to that we had given Notice to Bambridge to produce the Bonds.
Mr. Strange. You know the other Day in the Court of Chancery it was over-ruled.
Mr. Reeves. Here are Bonds given as a Security to a private Perſon; we demand the Bonds, and the Proof lies upon them to ſhew they have delivered them over.
Mr. Lee. We ought to be let into Parole-evidence, to ſhew that we gave Notice to produce them.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. I think you are too early.
(Then Mr. Bendon was ſworn.)
Mr. Lee. Did you give Bambridge any Notice to deliver the Bonds?
Mr. Bendon. Yes, I have a Copy of it in my Hand.
Mr. Lee. What did Bambridge ſay to you?
Mr. Bendon. Bambridge told me he had but one in his Cuſtody.
Mr. Strange. Were not the Words, that he had only one executed?
Mr. Bendon. No.
Mr. Strange. Tell us the very Words.
Mr. Bendon. When I gave Bambridge that very Paper (which he had then delivered to the Counſel)——
Lord Chief Juſtice. That Paper—it muſt be produced.
Mr. Lee. We deſire to produce this Paper.
Mr. Bendon. Bambridge ſaid, to prevent any Diſputes in Court, I have but one Bond.
Mr. Strange. Who was by?——Mr. Bendon. Several.
Mr. Strange. Did you know any of them?
Mr. Bendon. There was one Beatniff, that was one of his Security.
Mr. Strange. How many were there in all?—Mr. Bendon. Five or ſix.
(Then the Paper was given into the Hands of the Clerk.)
Lord Chief Juſtice. Read.
Clerk. I do hereby give Notice, to produce on the Trial of this Cauſe, ſeveral Bonds entered into by the Appellant's Huſband, or his ſeveral Securities, taken by you as Warden of the Fleet, or by the Clerk of the Securities, and particularly two Bonds, dated about November or December, 1728.
Mr. Lee. Now we will call Peter Ellam. Somebody acted in the Room of Hopkins, who was Clerk of the Securities, and took a Bond wherein Peter Ellam was one of the Securities.
(Call Peter Ellam, who was ſworn.)
Mr. Reeves. Do you know what Security was given by Mr. Caſtell to the Warden of the Fleet?——Mr. Ellam. I do.
Mr. Reeves. Was you one?——Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Reeves. Give an Account of the ſeveral Securities you knew given, the Times when, and the Sums.
Mr. Ellam. Security was given five Times, one in July.
Mr. Reeves. When was the firſt?——Mr. Ellam. In July, 1728.
Mr. Fazakerley. How much was the Sum?—Mr. Ellam. I think 100*l.*
Mr. Fazakerley. How much was the Penalty of the Bond?
Mr. Ellam. I think it was 200*l.*
Mr. Reeves. Who was that given to?
Mr. Ellam. It was given to Hopkins.
Mr. Reeves. Who was Warden?——Mr. Ellam. Mr. Huggins.
Mr. Reeves. Who was Deputy-warden?
Mr. Ellam. I do not know, I believe Bambridge.
Mr. Reeves. Was there any other Security beſides yourſelf? Who was the Bond given by?—Mr. Ellam. By Mr. Chambers and myſelf.
Mr. Reeves. Pray, mind what I aſk you. The next Bond was given, how ſoon?—Mr. Ellam. I believe in about four or five Days.
Mr. Reeves. How much was that for?
Mr. Ellam. Eight Hundred Pounds.
Mr. Reeves. Who were put in that?
Mr. Ellam. Mr. Curll, Mr. Chambers, and myſelf.
Mr. Reeves. There was a third Bond, do you know any thing of that? Who was that given by?
Mr. Ellam. It was given by Curll, myſelf, and I believe Mr. Bell.
Mr. Reeves. Pray recollect yourſelf, do not be under any Miſtake.
Mr. Ellam. Mr. Curll and myſelf I am poſitive of.
Mr. Fazakerley. Can you be poſitive of a third Bond; was there three?
Mr. Ellam. I believe there was, and I ſigned with him.
Mr. Fazakerley. How much was the third for?
Mr. Ellam. The third was for 1000*l.*
Mr. Fazakerley. The third, when was that?
Mr. Ellam. I can't remember the particular Time.
Mr. Fazakerley. How long before Mr. Caſtell died?
Mr. Ellam. A great while.
Mr. Fazakerley. Was it before or after making the 4th Bond that he was taken ill?——Mr. Ellam. I believe it was after.
Mr. Fazakerley. How long after?
Mr. Ellam. I believe about the Beginning of the Term.
Mr. Fazakerley. Then that muſt be in October.—Was there any more?
Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. How much was that for?
Mr. Ellam. I think the fourth was for 1000*l.*
Mr. Fazakerley. Don't you know that it was for 1000*l?*
Mr. Ellam. I believe it was.
Mr. Fazakerley. Who entered into that Bond?
Mr. Ellam. There was Mr. Curll, Mr. Bell, and myſelf.
Mr. Fazakerley. When was that given?
Mr. Ellam. That was given the latter End of November.
Mr. Fazakerley. You ſay that was for 1000*l.*?—Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. You ſeemed to ſay ſomething of a fifth Bond being given, how much was that for?——Mr. Ellam. Two Thouſand Pounds.
Mr. Fazakerley. How do you know?
Mr. Ellam. I was preſent at reading it, and I took it to be 2000*l.*
Mr. Fazakerley. When was that given?
Mr. Ellam. On the firſt of December.
Mr. Fazakerley. Do you believe it was the 5th or 1ſt of December?
Mr. Ellam. I believe it was on a Monday.
Mr. Fazakerley. Who were bound?
Mr. Ellam. There was Mr. Curll, my Brother, and myſelf.
Mr. Fazakerley. What is your Brother's Name?—Mr. Ellam. John Ellam.
Mr. Fazakerley. What was the Reaſon of all theſe Bonds being given ſo quick? When was the laſt Bond given?
Mr. Ellam. One was given between the 24th and 25th of November, on a Saturday Night, then Mr. Caſtell was going to his Lodgings, and in two or three Days we went to ſee him, but could not find him; and they ſaid he was at Corbett's, and we went to him there.
Lord Chief Juſtice. When was this? Name the Time.
Mr. Ellam. It was about the latter End of November, between the 26th and the laſt.
Lord Chief Juſtice. Go on.
Mr. Ellam. I ſaid, Mr. Caſtell, what do you do here? You love a Gaol better than I do; what do you do here; what is the Reaſon of it? Mr. Caſtell ſaid, I do not know, it is what Bambridge pleaſes. I ſaid, Mr. Caſtell, ſurely your Luck is worſe than any body's.
Mr. Strange. Was Bambridge by?—Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Strange. Then you may hold your Tongue.

Mr.

Mr. Fazakerley. What were the Bonds given for?
Mr. Ellam. His Liberty.
Mr. Fazakerley. Had he his Liberty before the laſt Bond was given?
Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Fazakerley. I aſk you whether he had his Liberty upon the laſt Bond's being given?
Mr. Ellam. No, he never was out after.
Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know when he firſt took his Sickneſs?
Mr. Ellam. He firſt took his Sickneſs on a Monday Morning, the firſt of December.
Mr. Fazakerley. Was you a Creditor to Mr. Caſtell?
Mr. Ellam. He owed me near 200 l.
Mr. Fazakerley. Then you was his Security and Creditor at the ſame Time?
Mr. Ellam. I knew him to be as induſtrious a Man as any one living, and that there was no Probability of getting any thing in a Gaol, ſo thought it was better to run the hazard.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did you never apply to have him locked up?
Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. Do you know of any one elſe?
Mr. Ellam. No, I never was preſent.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. Do you know of the Deſign of his Security to put him into Priſon?
Mr. Ellam. Not that I know of, it was never mine.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did Bambridge never intreat you to continue Security for him?
Mr. Ellam. All that I know relating to that Matter is, that Chambers withdrew his Security.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. What did Bambridge do to Chambers to have him ſtand as one of his Security?
Mr. Ellam. Chambers withdrew his Security.
Mr. Bambridge. I don't look upon that to be a proper Anſwer.
Lord Chief-Juſtice. You muſt anſwer the Queſtion.
Mr. Ellam. Mr. Chappell was coming to me to tell me that Mr. Chambers would deliver him up, for that if he went out of the Rules, his Counſel adviſed him that the Security was liable, and I went along with Chambers to Bambridge, and Chambers told Bambridge that he would be Security no longer; upon this Mr. Caſtell was very uneaſy, and Chambers upon cooler Thoughts determined not to give up his Security.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. I aſk you whether Mr. Bambridge did not deſire Mr. Bell to continue his Security?
Mr. Ellam. Mr. Bambridge talked very civilly at that Time.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. I aſk you whether Mr. Bambridge appeared to have a Kindneſs for him?
Mr. Ellam. Bambridge told Mr. Caſtell, that if his Security delivered him up, he muſt go to Corbett's.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. What did you do when Chambers ſaid he would not be Security?
Mr. Ellam. When Chambers told me he would not be Security any longer, it lay upon myſelf, and I went down to the Tavern then, and told them I was reſolved to ſtand.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. I aſk you whether Mr. Bambridge perſuaded you to ſtand, or ſaid that he ſhould be put into the Gaol?
Mr. Ellam. It did appear to me that Bambridge was civil to him.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. When was this?
Mr. Ellam. This was before the 4th or 5th Bonds were given.
Mr. Strange. This was after the Bonds for 800 l. and 1000 l. Tell us whether Mr. Caſtell did not deſire that a Bed might be got there?
Mr. Ellam. I did not know of his going there.
Mr. Strange. Pray did not you deſire Corbett to take him in Cuſtody?
Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Strange. Was you by at any other Time?---Mr. Ellam. No.
Lord Chief-Juſtice. Fix the Time; hark you, Sir, do you remember the Time when Chambers would not continue Security, I aſk you if you can remember when it was?
Mr. Ellam. I believe it was in November.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. You ſay you cannot be poſitive as to the Day of the Month.
Mr. Ellam. I tell you fairly, that by the Almanack it was on Monday; if Mr. Caſtell died that Day Se'nnight, it was Monday Se'nnight before that.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. How long after you executed the Bond, how many Days was it before he died?
Mr. Ellam. It muſt be Wedneſday or Thurſday.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. You ſay Monday the Bond was executed?
Mr. Ellam. Yes, it muſt be the firſt Monday, if he died on the 12th.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. Who were the Bonds given before? Or to whom? Was Mr. Bambridge preſent?
Mr. Ellam. I never ſaw Bambridge preſent when they were given.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. Do you know whether you was excepted to, or remain there till better Security was given?
Mr. Ellam, I don't know.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. Who was there?
Mr. Ellam. Codnor was there who acted as Clerk.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. Were you all preſent when the fourth Bond was given?
Mr. Ellam. To the beſt of my Remembrance, we were all preſent when the fourth Bond was given.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. What ſay you as to the fifth?
Mr. Ellam. As to the fifth, I believe that all the Perſons were not then preſent.
Mr. Serj. Eyre. You can't tell that either of you was excepted to?
Mr. Ellam. I know no other than as Bambridge told me.
Mr. Wynn. You ſaid you was uneaſy when Chambers ſaid he would not ſtand; what did you do then?
Mr. Ellam. I did nothing then, but went home, and next Morning reſolved to ſtand.
Mr. Wynn. Did you ſay any thing to Mr. Corbett or Bambridge?
Mr. Ellam. No; when I went to Mr. Bambridge's Room, I went with a Deſign to ſurrender him; and when I came out, ſeeing Mr. Caſtell in ſo great an Agony, I reſolved then not to do it.
Mr. Wynn. What did Mr. Bambridge ſay?
Mr. Ellam. He ſaid, he believed that Mr. Caſtell always behaved himſelf within Bounds, and believed that we had no Reaſon to complain; and believed he would not make an Eſcape.

Mr. Wynn. Did he encourage you to ſurrender him?
Mr. Ellam. All that he ſaid at this Time ſeemed to encourage us to ſtand as Security.
Mr. Wynn. When Chambers would not ſtand, did you take any Counter-ſecurity from any one?
Mr. Ellam. There was a Note drawn, but I never had it; Mr. Curll had the Cuſtody of it.
Mr. Wynn. What was the Amount?---Mr. Ellam. I believe 100 l.
Mr. Wynn. I aſk you, whether you had not a Bill of Sale from Mr. Caſtell at that Time?——Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Wynn. How long before?
Mr. Ellam. I can't tell the Date; I have it by me.
Mr. Wynn. Had you not that Bill of Sale before you executed that firſt Security?——Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Wynn. Was it between the Firſt and Second?——Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Wynn. The Second and Third?---Mr. Ellam. Very likely it might.
Mr. Wynn. What Month do you believe it was in?
Mr. Ellam. November.
Mr. Strange. Do you ſay the Bill of Sale was in November?
Mr. Ellam. I can't ſay particularly.
Mr. Strange. Might it not be before November?
Mr. Ellam. I don't believe it was.
Mr. Strange. Can you take upon you to ſay whether before or not?
Mr. Ellam. I cannot.
Mr. Strange. I deſire you to ſee, whether that is your Name; look only on the Name.——Mr. Ellam. I take it to be my Name.
Mr. Lee. Give it to the Officer.
Mr. Strange. Then you are not able to ſay exactly the Day when Bambridge gave you Encouragement not to deliver him up; Was it before the fourth Bond was given?
Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. There was Curll; was he a Man of Subſtance?
Mr. Ellam. Yes; he has been a Houſekeeper theſe forty Years.
Mr. Strange. Is his Reputation to be a Man of Circumſtance?
Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. There were Bell and others?——Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. Were they Men of good Circumſtances?
Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. There was your Brother?——Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. Were they Houſekeepers?——Mr. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Strange. Were they able to anſwer the Sums they ſtood bound for?
Mr. Ellam. The World thinks ſo.
Mr. Strange. What will you ſay you are worth over and above your Debts?
Mr. Ellam. One Thouſand Pounds.
Mr. Strange. When your Debts are paid?
Mr. Ellam. The laſt Time my Books were caſt up, I was worth One Thouſand Pounds.
Mr. Strange. Did you ſay you was not worth 200 l. when in Company with Bambridge?——Mr. Ellam. No.
Mr. Lee. 'Tis a Queſtion enough to put any Man out of Countenance.
Lord Chief-Juſtice. No Man ſhould be obliged to diſcover his own Affairs.
Call John Ellam (who was ſworn).
Mr. Lee. You was Security for Mr. Caſtell to Mr. Bambridge, Warden of the Fleet?——Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Lee. When was it?——Mr. J. Ellam. In November laſt.
Mr. Lee. Who was Security with you?
Mr. J. Ellam. My Brother Peter Ellam and Mr. Curll.
Mr. Lee. What was the Penalty of the Bond?
Mr. J. Ellam. Two Thouſand Pounds.
Mr. Strange. He only ſays what Mr. Caſtell ſaid.
Lord Chief-Juſtice. He ſaid it of his own Knowledge.
Mr. Lee. When was the Bond executed?
Mr. J. Ellam. I believe in November.
Mr. Lee. You can't tell poſitively?——Mr. J. Ellam. No.
Mr. Lee. Might it not be the Beginning of December?
Mr. J. Ellam. I can't exactly tell.
Mr. Lee. Who was the Bond executed by?
Mr. J. Ellam. Myſelf and two others; I ſigned firſt, and the other two at Graveſend.
Mr. Lee. Was you with Bambridge to tell him about it?
Mr. J. Ellam. Yes
Mr. Lee. How came you to be his Security?
Mr. J. Ellam. Mr. Caſtell ſent to me to know if I would be Security in the Room of Mr. Chambers; I ſaid it was a Thing I did not care for, but for him I would; this was in the Morning. Mr. Caſtell ſaid, You will be Security? I ſaid, Yes. And he ſaid, I don't know whether Bambridge will accept of it; I beg you'll come at Night. I told him I would: I think Bambridge would not then accept of it. One Mr. Shortes was there at Night, and Mr. Caſtell deſired he would go to Mr. Bambridge to deſire the Bonds to be executed for him.
Mr. Lee. When was Mr. Caſtell taken ill?
Mr. J. Ellam. Mr. Caſtell was very ill in November and December.
Lord Chief-Juſtice. Where was this?——Mr. J. Ellam. At Corbett's.
Mr. Lee. Did you go to Bambridge?——Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.
Mr. Lee. What did you ſay?
Mr. J. Ellam. I aſked him, whether he thought my Security ſufficient in the Room of Mr. Chambers? And Mr. Bambridge ſaid he would accept of it.
Mr. Lee. Did you execute before your Brother?
Mr. J. Ellam. I believe I did before Mr. Curll; and Mr. Bell executed, I believe, after.
Mr. Lee. What was the Sum?---Mr. J. Ellam. Two Thouſand Pounds.
Mr. Lee. Was it Two Thouſand? How dow you know? Was it in Latin or Engliſh?
Mr. J. Ellam. The Attorney read it; and Mr. Caſtell told me ſo.
Mr. Lee. Was there any Perſon in the Bond before you ſigned?
Mr. J. Ellam. There was only Mr. Curll, my Brother, and myſelf.
Mr. Lee. I aſk you whether there was any more beſides you, your Brother, and Mr. Curll?——Mr. J. Ellam. No.
Mr. Lee. How many Names were there in the Bond?
Mr. J. Ellam. None but mine, my Brother, and Curll.
Mr. Lee. How many Obligors? Do you know what I mean by Obligors?

Mr.

Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.

Mr. Lee. Then I ask you, How many Persons Names there were besides these?---Mr. J. Ellam. There was mine, my Brother's, and Curll's.

L. C. J. That he said before.

Mr. Lee. When you was sent to Mr. Bambridge, Mr. Castell seemed very impatient to have the Bonds executed; did he complain of any extraordinary Usage?---Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.

Mr. Lee. What did he complain of?

Mr. J. Ellam. I asked him, what made him uneasy? He said, they would not let him out. Then I asked him, what was the Reason? He made answer, I suppose they want more Money of me.

Mr. Lee. They! Name them. Can you name any body?

Mr. Ellam. I asked him again, Have you given any Money? He said, Yes, I have. I said, Pray how much have you given? He made Answer, About ten Pounds.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. What he said is not Evidence.

Mr. Fazakerley. What he said upon his Death-bed, I apprehend, is Evidence; which is what we shall examine him next to.

L. C. J. That is according to the Nature of the Question; what is declared as an actual Fact, is.

Mr. Faz. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Castell, when he lay on his Death-bed, what was the Occasion of his Death?

L. C. J. [Speaking to the Witness.] Don't be in a Hurry, take time, speak out.

Mr. J. Ellam. He asked me, what I thought the Distemper might be? I said, I cannot tell. The Doctor went down with me; what he said to the Doctor was, I am very ill.

Mr. Strange. This was before he was very ill?

Mr. Faz. When he lay in his Extremity?

L. C. J. Was he near his Death?

Mr. Faz. Did he say any thing what was the Occasion of his Death, when in Extremity?

Mr. J. Ellam. He said upon his dying Bed, that Mr. Bambridge, in not letting him go, was the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. Faz. Did he know the Distemper he died of?

Mr. J. Ellam. No.

Mr. Faz. How long after the Small-Pox came out?

Mr. J. Ellam. A Day or two.

Mr. Faz. How long did he live after?----Mr. J. Ellam. About—

Mr. Serj Darnell. Had he an Apprehension of dying before the Distemper came out?

Mr. J. Ellam. He said, if they did not let him out it would be too late, for it would be his Death.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. This was before the Distemper came out?

Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Did he know of this Distemper being there? Was he apprehensive of this Distemper?

Mr. J. Ellam. He said, if it was in any Village of any County, he would go another Way.

L. C. J. Did he know it was in the House there?--Mr. J. Ellam. Yes.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Faz. The Bonds will shew; must not they produce them?

L. C. J. They must produce them, or give some Reason why they don't.

Mr. Strange. The two first were given in Mr. Huggins's Time, I don't know any thing of the other three. Bambridge was sworn the fifteenth of November, so that three were given in Mr. Huggins's Time, and two only in his—I am afraid it is a civil Action.

Mr. Lee. The Action is in a criminal Cause.

L. C. J. What do you think this is? The mixt Action is no Part of the Appeal; it is certainly a criminal Cause.

Mr. Reeves. We give it up, if we don't give sufficient Evidence after.

L. C. J. Can you go no further to fix it on him?

Mr. Reeves. We can prove that Codnor acted as Clerk of the Securities, in behalf of Hopkins.

L. C. J. What was Hopkins?

Mr. Reeves. Hopkins was Clerk of the Papers, and not being well, employed one Codnor, who proves that Peter Ellam entered into several Bonds.

L. C. J. You say he was not sworn in till the 15th of November, the Patent bears Date the 30th of October; let John Ellam be called again, he was the last Witness.

Mr. Reeves. If your Lordship pleases, we will call Peter Ellam, for he executed all the Bonds.

Then Mr. Peter Ellam was again called.

Mr. Reeves. When you executed these Bonds, who was present, and assisted in behalf of the Warden?

Mr. P. Ellam. Hopkins was to the two first, Codnor to the three last.

Mr. Reeves. Who did Codnor act for?

Mr. P. Ellam. I always understood he acted for Hopkins.

Mr. Reeves. Who did you think was the Clerk?

Mr. P. Ellam. I thought Hopkins.

Mr. Reeves. What was the Reason he was not there?

Mr. P. Ellam. It was reported he was sick.

Mr. Reeves. Who was the Bond delivered to?

Mr. P. Ellam. To Codnor.

L. C. J. Who was allowed to be the Master?

Mr. P. Ellam. Bambridge.

Mr. Faz. Was it so in the three last?

Mr. P. Ellam. I think so.

Mr. Faz. Was Codnor there when the last Bond was given?

Mr. P. Ellam. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. What Bonds do you speak to?

Mr. P. Ellam. The third and fourth, and I think the last.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. How many were bound in the last?

Mr. P. Ellam. Myself, Mr. Curll, John Ellam, and Mr. Bell.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. What is become of the Bonds?

Mr. P. Ellam. I don't know.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Should you know it if you should see it again?

Mr. P. Ellam. I believe I should.

L. C. J. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Bambridge about the third and fourth Bonds?

Mr. P. Ellam. No, not with him about any of these Bonds.

Mr. Faz. When Chambers declined standing as a Security, how many Bonds were given after?

Mr. P. Ellam. I think it was before the third was given up.

Then Peter Ellam withdrew, but was called back; and standing up again was further examined.

Mr. Faz. Recollect the Time you had the Discourse with Mr. Bambridge; How many Bonds did you give after the Time you had the Discourse with Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. P. Ellam. I think it was three; when he came to the third Bond I gave Security, Mr. Chambers having given up.

L. C. J. It don't appear who the Bonds were accepted by, or who delivered to.

Call Mr. Harbin. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Filmer. Who acted as Clerk of the Securities to the Warden of the Fleet when Hopkins was ill?

Mr. Harbin. I don't know of my own Knowledge, but as Hopkins told me.

Call Mr. Edwards. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Reeves. Do you know Hopkins?

Mr. Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Reev. What was his Office?

Mr. Edw. Clerk of the Inquiries, as I believe.

Mr. Reev. Who was Clerk of the Securities?

Mr. Edw. Hopkins, I believe.

Mr. Reev. Do you know Codnor?---Mr. Edw. Yes.

Mr. Reev. Do you know that he acted for Hopkins?

Mr. Edw. I was not privy to such Things.

Call Daniel Hopkins. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Reev. I think you were employed by Mr. Bambridge to take Securities for the Liberty of the Rules?---Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Reev. In November and December 1728, did you employ any one else?

Mr. Hop. In November I was taken ill, about the 20th; and in my Illness Codnor, who acted in the Office, I believe officiated in my Office.

Mr. Reev. Who did he deliver them to? To you?---Mr. Hop. No.

Mr. Reev. Who then?

Mr. Hop. I believe to Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Reev. Did he account for any Bonds to you?

Mr. Hop. No; but he gave me a Memorandum, that Bonds were taken for Mr. Landman and Mr. Castell.

Mr. Reev. Do you believe Mr. Bambridge appointed him?

Mr. Hop. Yes; Nobody else could.

Mr. Reev. You believe he accounted to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Hop. Yes.

Mr. Strange. You are Clerk of the Inquiries?---Mr. Hop. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Don't you go to enquire after the Securities?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes; and I have taken Bonds.

Mr. Strange. Don't the Clerk of the Papers take Bonds?

Mr. Hop. Not in my Time.

Mr. Strange. Is it not the Clerk of the Papers Business?

Mr. Hop. No.

Mr. Strange. What is your Business?

Mr. Hop. Our Business is, to inquire into the Circumstances of the Sureties before we take them.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Is it not usual to take Bonds de bene esse?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. Suppose you inquire into these Persons Circumstances, if you find them not sufficient do you take them?---Mr. Hop. No.

Mr. Serj. Darn. If any body gets a Day-rule and escapes, who takes them up?---Mr. Hop. The Tipstaff.

Mr. Serj. Darn. If the Security won't stand any longer, but will surrender the Party, the Tipstaff carries them to Prison?

Mr. Hop. Yes, if they desire it; and to their own Houses, if they desire it.

Mr. Serj. Darn. Was it usual to take up a Man without the Security going along with him to surrender him?---Mr. Hop. Sometimes.

Mr. Serj. Darn. Could he do it in the Case of Mr. Castell?

Mr. Hop. I don't know he could.

Mr. Serj. Darn. I desire he may acquaint you, whether he had any Directions from Mr. Bambridge to enquire after this Mr. Bell for Mr. Castell?

Mr. Hop. There was a Bond taken in the Month of July for 200*l.* Penalty, and another of 800*l.* and I inquired after the Security by the Direction of Mr. Bambridge, and Mr. Bambridge excepted to the Security first proposed for that Bond, and Mr. Castell was at Liberty to get other.

Mr. Serj. Darn. Did you report them as sufficient?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Was Bambridge satisfied?

Mr. Hop. Yes, in July.

Mr. Strange. I ask you whether you ever observed any Averseness to these Gentlemen, as to the first Bond?

Mr. Hopkins. Never myself.

Mr. Strange. Had you any Directions as to the third Bond?

Mr. Hop. I had Directions to inquire after one Lilly.

Mr. Strange. Did you inquire after Mr. Curll?

Mr. Hop. Not then.

Mr. Strange. After the two first, did you inquire after the Security?

Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever enquire after Curll?

Mr. Hop. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Did you report him sufficient?

Mr. Hop. Yes.

Mr. Strange. How many Bonds was he in?

Mr. Hop. He was in the two first, and the last Bond.

Mr. Strange. Have you these two Bonds?

Mr. Hop. No, I delivered them in to the Table at the Committee of the House of Commons, and have not had them since.

Mr. Strange. Do you know Mr. Corbett's?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Do you know what Prisoners pay there?---Mr. Hop. Yes.

Mr. Strange. What is the Price of a Dinner?

Mr. Hopkins. One Shilling, and I think it worth it.

Mr. Strange. While Mr. Castell was there, how was he used?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. (not answering directly) Did you ever hear Mr. Castell complain of any ill Usage?

Mr. Hopkins. No: There are some Persons behind interrupt me in giving my Evidence, and say I deserve to be hanged.

Mr. Serj Darnell. Do you know the House where White was?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Do you know the House where Castell was?

Mr. Hopkins. No.

Mr. Fazakerley. The Witness swore that Bambridge said he had one Bond.

Lord Chief Justice. Bendon did say so, for he had applied to Bambridge, and Bambridge said, to prevent Disputes, he had but one.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. Two were delivered to Mr. Huggins, the other two before the Committee; they charged Mr. Bambridge with having Bonds, and Bambridge said, to prevent Disputes, there was but one. If Hopkins could not act, and he had appointed any one, that was the same Thing; as to one Bond, that Bambridge confessed to have. There was an Act made last Session of Parliament, under the severest Penalty, that Bambridge should deliver up all his Books and Papers. If he should produce the other Bond, and it appears that he did not deliver up all Bonds, he would be liable to the said Penalty.

Lord Chief Justice. You are only to deliver the Bonds in Evidence; you must consider, here are three Bonds taken by Godnor; if one of these Bonds came to your Possession, that don't imply the rest being in your Hands; as to the single Bond, it is to be left to the Jury, for if Godnor is the Person, he put it in the Office, and has delivered up one Bond, won't it be implied that he has the other?

Mr. Serj. Darnell. There has been an Application to another Court for the Books of the Office; and it was the Opinion of the Court that the Books could not be delivered up.

Lord Chief Justice. That Excuse will not do here; if you shew they are taken from you, we cannot expect Impossibilities.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. I do confess they are not delivered up.

Lord Chief Justice. They say the Bonds were given for such Sums; you must produce the Bonds, to shew it that is true or not.

Mr. Serj Darnell. We are desirous to lay all before you we can; these Bonds were only taken de bene esse, only till the Security was enquired after, according to the Method of the Thing; these are not absolute, and that was the Reason why these People were enquired after.

Lord Chief Justice. Then the Question is, Whether they should not go on?

(Call Mr. Underwood, who was sworn.)

Mr. Reeves. Where do you live?

Mr. Underwood. Upon Ludgate-hill.

Mr. Reeves. In the Rules of the Fleet?——Mr. Underwood. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. Did Mr. Castell lodge at your House?

Mr. Underwood. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. When did he live there?

Mr. Under. Last July was twelve Months.

Mr. Reeves. How long did he continue there?

Mr Under. I believe till the Middle of November.

Mr. Reeves. Do you know what happened to him then?

Mr. Under. Corbett came to my House that Morning to fetch him away, but he was not at home; and when he came in, I told Mr. Castell he had been there; and Mr. Castell desired me, if he came again, not to tell him he was at home, and he went to lock himself up; then Corbett came up.

Mr. Reeves. Did he express any Concern?

Mr. Under. Yes, he spoke to me, and said, If Corbett came again he would lock himself up.

Mr. Strange. Did you hear any thing of his Security being uneasy?

Mr. Under. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you never hear Mr. Castell say the Security was uneasy?

Mr. Under. No.

Mr. Strange. Did Corbett use him uncivilly?—— Mr. Under. No.

Mr. Strange. What did Corbett say?——Mr. Under. He spoke to me, and asked where he was, and then went up.

(Then Daniel Hopkins was again called.)

Mr. Reeves. Was you in Mr. Underwood's House?—Mr. Hopkins. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. You heard the Discourse that passed?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes, I was in Williams's Room on the Stair-head; I lived up two Pair of Stairs, and Mr. Castell three Pair of Stairs; Williams, Castell, and I were standing together, Corbett came down Stairs; there was Mr. Castell with us; he said, Mr. Castell, you must go with me, your Security has surrendered you; Mr. Castell desired he might not go; Corbett said he must, he had the Warden's Orders, and must obey them.

Mr. Reeves. Who was Warden?——Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Reeves. Did not Castell desire him to let him stay?

Mr. Hopkins. Yes; Corbett said, he wished he could; and said several other civil Expressions.

Mr. Strange. Do you know the Time when Mr. Bambridge was sworn?

Mr. Hopkins. I believe it was the 15th of November.

Mr. Strange. How do you know?

Mr. Hopkins. The 16th I took Bonds in his Name.

Mr. Kettleby. How long was it after Mr. Castell was taken from Underwood's before Bambridge was admitted Warden? When was he admitted Warden?——Mr. Hopkins. About the 15th of November.

Mr. Kettleby. What Day was Mr. Castell fetched in?

Mr. Hopkins. About the 14th of November.

(Call Catharine Mackartney, who was sworn.)

Mr. Reeves. Was you present when Mr. Corbett came to take Mr. Castell?——Mrs. Mackartney. No.

Mr. Reeves. What Orders had you from your Mistress about Mr. Castell?

Mr. Kettleby. I must beg Leave to oppose that Question.

Mr. Reeves. Was you with Mr. Castell when he was ill?

Mrs. Mackartney. I went several times to know how he did; when I went the first Day, he kept his Bed, which was the second Day of the Small-Pox coming out.

Mr. Reeves. I desire she may acquaint you, whether she heard him say who was the Cause of his catching the Small-Pox.

Mr. Strange. How long before he died?

Mr. Fazakerley. Did you see him before he died?

Mrs. Mackartney. Every Day before he died.

Mr. Fazakerley. How long before he died, did you hear him say who was the Cause of his Death?

Mrs. Mackartney. I heard him say several Times, that if he died, he laid his Death to Mr. Bambridge, for he was the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. Fazakerley. Tell the last Time you heard him speak it. How long before he died?——Mrs. Mackartney. Three Days.

Mr. Fazakerley. Was he in a dangerous Condition at that Time?

Mrs. Mackartney. Yes.

Mr. Fazakerley. You say you went several Times by the Direction of your Mistress; did your Mistress supply him with any Thing?

Mrs. Mackartney. The first Day I went to him, he desired me to give his Service to my Mistress, for he wanted several Things.

Mr. Fazakerley. What did he say?

Mrs. Mackartney. He said he wanted to make some Tea, and he could not get Things there to make it.

Mr. Fazakerley. What were the Things?

Mrs. Mackartney. A Spoon, Tea-pot, Cup and Saucer, a Knife, Fork, Plate, and Napkin.

Mr. Fazakerley. When did he make that Declaration, that Bambridge was the Occasion of his Death?

Mrs. Mackartney. I heard him make that Declaration three Days before he died. The last Time I was with him, he held up his Hand, as much as to say, Don't come to speak.

Mr. Fazakerley. Who provided him with Necessaries?

Mrs. Mackartney. I cannot tell.

Mr. Fazakerley. Did your Mistress send them?—Mrs. Mackartney. No.

Call ——— Savage. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Lee. Did you at any Time see Mr. Castell after he was in Custody with Corbett?——Mr. Savage. Frequently.

Mr. Lee. When did you first see him?

Mr. Savage. The Day he was taken in Custody.

Mr. Lee. Where did you first see him?

Mr. Savage. I can't say whether at his own Lodgings, or at the King's-Arms Tavern.

Mr. Lee. Did Mr. Castell make any Request to you?

Mr. Savage. Mr. Castell desired I would go to Mr. Bambridge, for that he understood he was going to close Confinement, and that he apprehended the Small-Pox was there; and said, that it was very fatal to his Family, and if he catched it, he should die; and said, it would be a Loss to him in his Affairs.

Mr. Lee. When was this?

Mr. Savage. This was the first Day he was taken in Custody, before he went to Corbett's. I told Mr. Bambridge this, and told him the Apprehension Mr. Castell was under of catching the Small-Pox, and desired he might be indulged to go to his own Lodging, and that he would be at the Expence of having a Keeper there. Accordingly I went to Mr. Bambridge, but he gave me no express Answer.

Mr. Lee. Did you acquaint Mr. Bambridge with what Mr. Castell said?

Mr. Savage. Yes.

Mr. Lee. What did he do after?

Mr. Savage. I went upon the same Message to Bambridge three, four, or five Times, I believe four or five, and never had any Answer till the last Time; then Mr. Bambridge said, he was charged with a pretty deal of Money, and he must take care of his Office.

Mr. Lee. Did you mention any thing of the Small-Pox to Bambridge?

Mr. Savage. Yes.

Mr. Lee. Did he say any thing as to that?——Mr. Savage. No.

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you remember any Conversation at the King's-Arms Tavern?——Mr. Savage. Yes, that was some time after.

Mr. Fazakerley. How long?

Mr. Savage. A little before he was taken ill of the Small-Pox.

Mr. Fazakerley. How long before?

Mr. Savage. About a Week or four Days. I was in Company with some other Gentlemen, and Bambridge came in, and said he had been with Mr. Castell, and that an unlucky Accident had happened; and that Mrs. Corbett had mentioned the Danger the Man was in that was ill of the Small Pox, and Bambridge told us, that Mr. Castell seemed to be much affected, and it gave him vast Uneasiness.

Lord Chief Justice. Was this before Mr. Castell was taken ill?

Mr. Savage. I was at Supper in the King's-Arms Tavern, in a Room behind the Bar; then Bambridge came in and told us, that he had been at Corbett's House, and Corbett's Wife had unfortunately mentioned the Person's having the Small-Pox; and that Mr. Castell seemed to turn pale; and it gave him Pain to see Mr. Castell so much shocked.

Mr. Reeves. You say that you told Bambridge, the first time of going to him, of the Small-Pox being there, and you returned immediately to Mr. Castell?——Mr. Savage. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. Was that the first Day of his being in Custody?

Mr. Savage. Yes, I take it to be so.

Mr. Reeves. You say you went the next Day again?

Mr. Savage. I believe it was.

Mr. Reeves. Did you go by Order of Mr. Castell?

Mr. Savage. At the Request of Mr. Castell.

Mr. Reeves. What did Mr. Castell desire you to say the next Day to Mr. Bambridge?——Mr. Savage. The very same Thing.

Mr. Reeves. Was there any thing mentioned as to the Place Mr. Castell desired to be carried to?——Mr. Savage. It was to his own Lodging.

Mr. Reeves. Was there any other Place mentioned?—Mr. Savage. No.

Mr. Reeves. Was there any Endeavours used by Bambridge to take him out of that Place?——Mr. Savage. No, I do not know it.

Mr. Filmer. How many Times did you go?

Mr. Savage. Two, three, or four Times.

Mr. Kettleby. I think he said, it would be an Inconvenience, and that he cared not to go to Corbett's?——Mr. Savage. Yes.

Mr.

Mr. Strange. I aſk you, Whether you ſaid it was the firſt Day, or not, before he went to Corbett's?---Mr. Savage. No,

Mr. Strange. Did you ſee him there?---Mr. Savage. Yes.

Mr. Strange. How was his Uſage?

Mr. Savage. I did not hear him complain.

Mr. Strange. Did you go with any other Requeſt, than that he might go back to his Lodging?—Mr. Savage. That was the Requeſt by me.

Mr. Reeves. What was the Anſwer the laſt Time you went to Bambridge; whether he did not ſay he was in Execution?

Mr. Savage. I cannot take upon me to ſay.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. I think what you ſaid, was, that it had been ſignified by Corbett, that Mr. Caſtell was to be locked up there, and it had been ſignified to him that the Small-Pox was there?---Mr. Savage. Yes.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. What Place was it at?

Mr. Savage. I can't be certain whether at the King's-Arms, or his Lodgings.

Mr. Lee. Do you know the Day he fell ill?---Mr. Savage. I can't tell.

Mr. Lee. Was he well before he went into Corbett's?

Mr. Savage. Yes, he was.

Mr. Lee. When he went into Corbett's, the 14th of November, was he well then?---Mr. Savage. Yes.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Did he not talk that it was fatal to his Family?

Mr. Savage. Yes, and ſaid if he caught it, it would kill him.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Did you acquaint Bambridge of that?

Mr. Savage. I did tell him it would be fatal.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Was the Meſſage the ſame as the firſt?

Mr. Savage. I went on the ſame Meſſage.

Mr. Lee. How many Times did you go?

Mr. Savage. Four or five Times.

Mr. Lee. How long before Bambridge came in into the King's-Arms Tavern, before that Diſcourſe happened?

Mr. Savage, I believe the ſame Day.

Mr. Bambridge. I deſire a Queſtion may be aſked the Witneſs, Whether he came in relation to ſome Suits of Mr. Caſtell?

Mr. Lee. We muſt oppoſe that.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. It is between Party and Party, his Counſel muſt aſk Queſtions.

Mr. Savage. I did underſtand there was a Negotiation carried on by Mr. Bambridge for Mr. Caſtell, between him and the Printer; and Mr. Bambridge did tell me, that he had made an End of it for 40 or 50 l. but I know nothing of it.

Mr. Strange. Did not you come about one Curll?

Mr. Savage. I know nothing of it.

Mr. Strange. Did you come to Bambridge as to Mr. Curll's being Security?

Mr. Savage. I believe I did, and ſaid he was a proper Man for Security, being a Man of Subſtance.

Call ——— Shortis. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Lee. Did you go to Mr. Caſtell when at Corbett's?

Mr. Shortis. I went to Mr. Caſtell at Corbett's, the Morning after he was in Cuſtody.

Mr. Lee. What paſſed?---Mr. Shortis. Mr. Caſtell ſaid, he had been very ill uſed by his Creditors, and believed they had been in Combination, and had combined with Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Strange. Was you frequently with Mr. Caſtell while he was at Corbett's Houſe?---Mr. Shortis. Yes.

Mr. Strange. During the Time you was there, what Manner was he uſed in?---Mr. Shortis. Mr. Bambridge behaved towards him very gentleman-like, ſo did Mr. Corbett.

Mr. Strange. Did you ever hear him complain?---Mr. Shortis. No.

Mr. Strange. When did you laſt ſee him?

Mr. Shortis. A Day or two before he died.

Mr. Strange. Did he complain of Mr. Corbett's ill Uſage then?

Mr. Shortis. I believe he had every Thing he wanted from Corbett's.

Mr. Wynn. Did he complain of any Hardſhip in being carried to Mr. Corbett's Houſe?---Mr. Shortis. Yes.

Mr. Wynn. Who did he complain of, his Creditors, or Mr. Bambridge?

Lord Chief-Juſtice. That is not Evidence.

Call John Surrige. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Lee. Did you go at any Time from Mr. Caſtell to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Sur. I went two or three Times.

Mr. Lee. When did you ſee him?

Mr. Sur. I went in the Month of November.

Mr. Lee. What Time?

Mr. Sur. About fourteen Days in the Time of the Term.

Mr. Lee. That was about the Middle of November; it was before he was taken ill.—Did you ſee him at Corbett's?---Mr. Sur. Yes.

Mr. Lee. When you went to Mr. Bambridge, what did you go with?

Mr. Sur. Two Letters.

Mr. Lee. Did you go by Word of Mouth?---Mr. Sur. No.

Mr. Lee. Had you any Anſwer to theſe Letters? Did you deliver them to Mr. Bambridge? Did he give any Anſwer?

Mr. Sur. He ſaid, he would wait upon Mr. Caſtell.

Mr. Reeves. Had you any Diſcourſe, concerning his Confinement, with Mr. Bambridge?---Mr. Sur. No.

Call Thomas Goodman. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Reeves. Was you at any Time at Mr. Corbett's, when Mr. Bambridge and Mr. Caſtell were together?

Mr. Good. I was confined a Priſoner there.

Mr. Reeves. Did you remember any Converſation between them two?

Mr. Good. I was a Priſoner there, and Mr. Bambridge came into Corbett's, and ſent for Mr. Caſtell down Stairs; and Caſtell ſaid to Mr. Bambridge, he had ſent to him two or three Times, and never could have the Happineſs to ſee him; Bambridge ſaid he was very ſorry for that; and Mr. Caſtell deſired of Mr. Bambridge either to go into the Houſe, or the Rules, for the Diſtemper raged there.

Mr. Reeves. What do you mean by the Houſe? To go into the Gaol? Tell the D ſcourſe that happened; what did Mr. Caſtell ſay?

Mr. Good. Mr. Caſtell ſaid, the Diſtemper raged in the Houſe, and the Diſtemper would be the Death of him; and Bambridge made Anſwer, that he ſhould neither go into the Houſe, nor into the Rules, unleſs he gave him ſuch a Sum of Money.

Mr. Reeves. Where was you when you heard this Diſcourſe?

Mr. Good. I was at the Bar, aſking for ſome Bread and Cheeſe.

Mr. Lee. When Mr. Bambridge ſaid he ſhould not go into the Houſe, or into the Rules, what did Mr. Caſtell ſay?

Mr. Good. That he had given Security ſeveral Times, and freſh Bail, and that he would not give any more.

Mr. Reeves. Did Mr. Bambridge deny that?

Mr. Good. No; I did not hear it.

Mr. Reeves. Where did Bambridge order him to be put?

Mr. Good. He then ordered Corbett to put him into the Tap-room, and then he went up.

Mr. Reeves. How long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Good. About four Minutes.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. What Time of the Year was this?

Mr. Good. About the Month of November.

Mr. Reeves. Did Caſtell complain of any Illneſs?

Mr. Good. The next Morning he came down, and ſaid to Mr. Corbett he was very ill, and deſired a Fire to be made in his Room, and I believe he never came down again.

Mr. Reeves. How often did Mr. Caſtell repeat this to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Good. He deſired two or three Times to go into the Gaol, or to the other Place; and Bambridge ſaid he ſhould not go to either, without a Sum of Money.

Mr. Reeves. What Sum was it?---Mr. Good. I did not hear the Sum.

Mr. Reeves. Where was this?——Mr. Good. At the Bar; I was ſtanding at the Bar aſking for Bread and Cheeſe.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. How long was you there?

Mr. Good. Four or five Minutes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. How long was you a Priſoner?

Mr. Good. Four or five Months.

Mr. Kettleby. Where have you been ſince you was diſcharged?

Mr. Good. In my Buſineſs.

Mr. Kettleby, What Buſineſs?—Mr. Good. A Printer.

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, there is a Perſon, Mr. Botwright, ſtands behind the Evidence to prompt them, I deſire he may be removed from that Place.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. Let him go to the other Side.

Mr. Lee. Did you know he had the Small-Pox?

Mrs. Sutton. Yes; Mr. Corbett ſent for me, and deſired me to look after one White, but I could not, and Mr. Caſtell was ſtanding there, and ſaid he was afraid of the Small-Pox, and ſaid that he was afraid that I had them, obſerving ſomething like a Pimple upon my Face.

Mr. Lee. Was there any Thing upon your Face?

Mrs. Sutton. No, nothing but what is now.

Mr. Reeves. Was that after he was in Cuſtody at Corbett's?

Mrs. Sutton. He was not a Priſoner then there.

Mr. Reeves. Do you know the Month?

Mrs. Sutton. I can't tell, it was before Chriſtmas.

Mr. Fazakerley. What Diſtemper did he die of?

Mrs. Sutton. The Small-Pox.

Coll ——— Weſtbrook. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Fazakerley. What do you know of Mr. Caſtell's Fear of having the Small-Pox?

Mr. Weſtbrook. I have been Mr. Caſtell's Neighbour twenty Years, and often heard him ſay, that he was very much afraid of the Small-Pox.

Call ——— Kilbury. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know that about the 14th of November, and ſo for a Month, from that Time till December laſt, there were empty Rooms in the Priſon?——Mr. Kilbury. Yes, there was, one of the moſt commodious Rooms in the Priſon.

Mr. Fazakerley. Where was it?

Mr. Kilbury. Up one Pair of Stairs, No 16, wainſcoted.

Mr. Fazakerley. Was there any other Room?

Mr. Booth. They were empty about a Month; from the latter End of October till the 4th of December.

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know any Thing of a Houſe that there was Room in?---Mr. Booth. I don't know any Thing of that.

Call ——— Cleaver. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know that about the Middle of November, 1728, and ſo till ſome Time in December, there was any convenient Houſe, as convenient as Corbett's, to put Priſoners in?

Mr. Cleaver. There was one Room. I was firſt at Corbett's, and from Corbett's ordered to Brown's: It was the Latter-end of November, or Beginning of December.

Mr. Fazakerley. Was there Room there?

Mr. Cleav. Yes, there were ſeven Beds made there, and but four or five Priſoners in the Houſe.

Mr. Faz. Was the Small-Pox at Corbett's?---Mr. Cleav. Yes.

Mr. Faz. Was that Houſe made uſe of as Corbett's?

Mr. Cleav. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Was it fitted up?

Mr. Cleav. Yes, ſo fitted up as to have Priſoners in it.

Mr. Strange. Were not the Workmen at Work?---Mr. Cleav. No.

Mr. Faz. We ſhall call no more Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Darnell. I am of Counſel for the Defendants. The Gentlemen on the other Side ſay, That this is an Appeal that is brought, with a good deal of Commendation of the Widow; that ſhe was following the Murder of her Huſband; and that ſhe traced it with a full Conviction, that though one had been acquitted for it, yet ſhe ſhould now convict both, therefore ſhe waited for this Opportunity of laying it before the Court.

I ſhall not take Notice what paſſed upon that Occaſion, but obſerve to you, Gentlemen, what is alledged in the Appeal: The Appeal has charged, that theſe two Defendants did with Force and Arms make an Aſſault, and did felonioufly take and impriſon Robert Caſtell, without his Conſent and againſt his Will, in the Houſe of Richard Corbett; that there they did impriſon him; and that in that Houſe there was one Joſeph White then ill of the Small-Pox, a Diſtemper the ſaid Caſtell was greatly afraid of; and he believed he ſhould die if he had them.

That being there confined, he caught the Small-Pox and died.

I cannot but ſay, it is ſomething new, and an uncommon Accuſation of Murder; but ſo far I'll go, that if People do wickedly, they ſhould anſwer for it.

There is firſt a great deal to be conſidered. As to the firſt Point, Whether he was legally taken and impriſoned? I think there is no Evidence as to that but Hopkins. He told you he was preſent, and ſaw Corbett come to Underwood's, and told him his Bail had ſurrendered him, and told him he muſt carry him away to Priſon, and told him he was ſorry for it.

This is the unlawfully and felonioufly carrying him there.

He told you he had the Warden's Authority; as he was his Agent and Tipſtaff, he was put to take him; he muſt take him, and did it by the Authority of the Warden, as he was his Officer; this was the general Authority: This is the ſingle Evidence of the firſt taking the Man. I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Direction, that there is nothing unlawful in this.

The next is, that he was carried to the Houſe where White was ſick of the Small-Pox. What is the Evidence as to that? Every Body that ſpeaks as to that, ſaid, the Small-Pox was over ten Days; if it was over ten Days, when is he ſaid to be ſick? When is the Small-Pox to end? What is the Conſequence of his coming there? That he dreaded the Diſtemper, caught it and died. That the catching it was from the 14th of November, till the 4th of December, which was near three Weeks; this comes out to be a Month after the Man had the Small-Pox. It was lawful when he was carried there.

As it is unreaſonable to ſuppoſe the Time of catching the Small-Pox, are not you to judge? It is ſo general a Diſtemper, there is hardly one in a hundred in this Town, that has not caught it. Is it becauſe he had the Small-Pox there, that they had a felonious Intent? Were there all theſe Circumſtances to make it appear? This is the Circumſtance that muſt be left to you, the general Credit that Mr. Bambridge received from almoſt all the Witneſſes, that he treated him civilly, and that even Mr. Bambridge did Buſineſs for him, till it come to Goodman, and Goodman gives an odd Account to you, if you can believe it. He ſays, he ſtood at the Bar (which in a Publick-Houſe is very noiſy); and ſays, that he heard a Talk through the Door which was ſhut, and he took it to be Mr. Caſtell's Voice; and he ſaid he deſired to have the Liberty of the Rules, for the Diſtemper raged in the Houſe.

For a Man to hear this at the Bar, when the Door was ſhut, and that this ſhould be a Secret ſo long, is very extraordinary.

I muſt obſerve to you, Gentlemen, that Goodman was a Priſoner; and if this Evidence had been thought material, the Vigilance and Induſtry uſed to find him out (and very commendable it was), it was impoſſible to think it ſhould be undiſcovered, where ſo vigilant an Inquiry was made.

This is the only Thing that ſhews any Iniquity in Bambridge. Here is a Man that wants to go into the Liberty of the Rules; is a Gaoler to let him? If a Gaoler deſires Money, I don't know that it is illegal; it was after his Bonds were given up; it would have turned upon his own Head if he had gone away; he muſt have been anſwerable.

He charges him with ſo monſtrous an Improbability (it is impoſſible to think he ſaid it), that we muſt ſubmit it, whether any Credit can be given to ſuch Evidence.

I chuſe to mention Mr. Bambridge; but I am more particularly concerned for Mr. Corbett.

They have called ſeveral Witneſſes, and they ſay Mr. Corbett uſed him very well. And this is alledged to be Evidence, That where Witneſſes are wanting, the Man's Declaration upon his Death-Bed is Evidence; becauſe that it may be done without the Privity of any one elſe; and that a Man at that Time would have Regard to himſelf in what he ſaid. What was this Declaration? If I die, I lay my Death to Bambridge; but he is not certain that the Man did lay the Misfortune of being brought into Priſon to Bambridge; but if he did die by catching it from White, or being confined in a cloſe Air, if I die the Priſon is the Occaſion of my Death, and conſequently the Keeper. Is there any Conſequence can be drawn, that there was a felonious Intent? There is nothing at all from Corbett.

But as they have taken up a good deal of Time in ſhewing that it was a Crime carrying him to Corbett's, though I apprehend it is not material, we ſhall make it plain that it was no Crime at all.

I muſt take Notice as to this, that it was inſinuated from Circumſtances. They have endeavoured to ſhew Mr. Caſtell received 125*l.* and alledged, that this Money was to be got from him; this Money was the Means of his being uſed ill. When they came to prove this, they only ſhewed that a Note was drawn upon Woodward. If he had any Money, might he not have paid it to his Creditors?

The next Thing I ſhall take Notice of is, as to the Bonds. Probably the Bonds that had been given to Mr. Huggins were delivered to Mr. Bambridge. Mr. Bambridge ſaid he had but one; and if it was taken in the manner even ſaid by their Witneſſes, it did not appear in any manner oppreſſive; for Chambers ſaid he would ſurrender him.

When Peter Elliam was examined, he was aſked, whether Bambridge ſaid, that he would not have them ſurrender him? He made anſwer, that he ſaid ſomething to that Effect; and it was ſaid, that theſe Bonds were given de bene eſſe; therefore the Warden was to have a reaſonable Time to enquire into the Securities; ſo it may be likewiſe taken by the Circumſtance, that he deſired to have a Keeper with him, and he would pay for it. What Hazard does the Gaoler run, if two or three Perſons come to him to aſk the Liberties of the Rules, and he gives it them, and the Men eſcape? Is not he to anſwer for them? If that was the Caſe, a Keeper, which is thought to be a beneficial Office, would be ſoon ruined by Acts of Good-nature.

As to the Caſe, it ſtands thus: Mr. Caſtell was firſt committed the 18th of June, 1728, and it is cuſtomary to bring Priſoners firſt to this Houſe. Hopkins ſays, it is common for Priſoners to deſire to be there, for they have better Convenience to tranſact what Buſineſs is to be done, than to trouble their Friends to go into the Gaol. Hopkins ſays, that it was cuſtomary; and from this Houſe he did give Security and went to his Lodgings, and continued there till his Security would not ſtand.

When this Man was brought in, he happened to be an intimate Acquaintance with one Mr. Vanderbank, who ſpoke himſelf, and got ſeveral others to ſpeak to Mr. Bambridge in his Behalf. He will give you an Account of the very Creditors coming to ſurrender him; and it is nothing but a Man's Creditors can come; and theſe People will ſhew with what Favour Mr. Bambridge treated him, and that he deſired Mr. Bambridge to aſſiſt him in his Affairs.

Gentlemen, he was removed from Corbett's to his Lodgings, and continued there till his Security ſurrendered him; and we ſhall ſhew you, that Mr. Caſtell ſent to Mr. Corbett's, that this Room might be made convenient and fit for him; which ſtrikes out the firſt Part of the Appeal; and if we prove he deſired to be there, that ſtrikes out the whole; therefore there will be an End of the whole. The Man is carried to the Houſe, but the Communication between them was up two Pair of Stairs: For the Witneſſes ſay, White lay up three Pair of Stairs in one Houſe, and Caſtell lay up one Pair of Stairs in another. Was there any more Danger lying here than in the next Houſe? The Witneſſes ſay, White never came down, and Nobody inſiſted that Caſtell went up; he muſt have been a Madman if he did. When we ſhew you that he came there at his own Deſire, and had the Bed and Bedding at his own Deſire, we muſt ſay that this Diſtemper was the Viſitation of God, and came to him as to other People.

We ſhall call a good many of the People who were his Security, to prove, that as ſoon as they were inquired after, they were admitted to ſtand.

Gentlemen, after the laſt Bond was given, he might have gone about his Buſineſs if he would; and that Bond was given de bene eſſe; and therefore in the Power of the Warden to let them in or not. We will call our Witneſſes, and ſhew you how long White had been well before Mr. Caſtell came there; that he had taken three times Phyſick; but for fear of any Accident, becauſe there were other Priſoners in the Houſe, they did not let him come down. This, Gentlemen, we ſhall be able to prove by ſeveral Witneſſes; which if we do, you will find the Priſoners Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Eyre. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel of the ſame Side. I ſhall not go over the whole Caſe; but only obſerve to you, that the Gentlemen on the other Side were conſcious that they had no poſitive Proof; therefore they have artfully gone about to prove Circumſtances.

They ſay, that Mr. Caſtell had 125*l.* paid him; and having this Money, Mr. Bambridge knew of it, and conſequently was making uſe of Endeavours to extort the Money from him.

They are far ſhort, in that they called ſome People, who only proved that a Note was drawn upon Mr. Woodward, payable to him or Bearer; but it did not appear that Bambridge had any Part of it.

There is another Evidence, one Goodman, who ſaid, that Mr. Bambridge had a View to get ſome of the Money; one would have thought, that he ſhould have mentioned a particular Sum. That ſeems to be exceedingly unnatural, for the Anſwer Caſtell gives is, that Security was given, and he would give no more.

Conſider, Gentlemen, when this happened; in November, when all the Securities had been completed.

It is very extraordinary, that this Witneſs ſhould never be called on before, and very particular that he ſhould hear ſo well. He was at the Bar, they in the Room, and the Door ſhut; and, Gentlemen, I am inſtructed to ſay, that it is impoſſible to hear what any Perſon ſays behind the Bar, that ſtands on the Outſide of the Bar.

It is uſual to take Securities before their Circumſtances are inquired into, What then is the Caſe? They ſtand if their Circumſtances are good, if not they do n't.

How then ſtands this? If theſe Bonds were executed on the Second, this Man fell ſick on the Third, and this one Bond was only delivered over to the Principal, as a Bond de bene eſſe.

What I ſhould apprehend was neceſſary for them to produce, were the Facts in the Declaration, that he was forcibly taken away out of his Lodgings, and carried to Corbett's Houſe: They admit them as Priſoners; and ſo far from Force, that ſome of the Sureties, on the 14th of November, ſaid, that they would ſtand no longer, and deſired Mr. Caſtell to be taken care of.

They ſay it was very wrong to carry him to a Spunging-Houſe; a Victualling-Houſe it is, but it don't appear to be a Spunging-Houſe; every Gentleman is uſed according to his Circumſtances; they pay one Shilling for their Dinner, which is very reaſonable, and Hopkins ſaid well deſerves it.

We

we say it is exceedingly lawful to put Prisoners there; it is lawful, and as lawful as his own Lodgings, and any Place in the Liberty of the Rules is lawful. This is not all; he went first to the Tavern, and his Servant bespoke a Room, and had the very Room he bespoke; and we apprehend, Corbett had a lawful Authority to carry him there.

There is another Fact they have alledged, I must beg leave to take notice of; That White was sick at this very Time, and in this very House.

These two Charges are necessary to be proved; but how have they proved them? It appears that these were two distinct Houses, two distinct Stair-cases; and, in my Judgment, I apprehend, appear to be two Houses, not one.

As to White's being sick at that Time, it appears he was not sick, and we shall shew he had taken three Purges.

It is not only necessary for them to prove that this Man was sick at the Time Castell came there, and that he was unlawfully carried there, but it is necessary to prove that this Sickness was infectious; but Castell, on the contrary, did not come there till he was well.

Does it not appear that White lay up three Pair of Stairs, and was injoined not to come out of his Room, and that he continued there, as Noel said, all the Time? Where was Castell? In one Pair of Stairs in the new House. How can you imagine any Infection to come from the Garret down to Mr. Castell in the one Pair of Stairs Room? Therefore, it was impossible to imagine that Distemper was so taken.

Here is a Man visited with the Small-Pox, and says, "Pray let me not "go to Gaol, but let me go to my own Lodgings;" the Bail surrender him, because he was not safe at the Place where he lodged; therefore, it was very ridiculous for him to ask to go to his Lodging, which was unreasonable.

As to the Persons that were his Securities, I don't think they were his Friends in fact; for these Men, who before were drinking at the Bar of this House, designed it should be so.

I must beg leave to make one Observation: Suppose there were some of the Prisoners had the Small-Pox, and a Prisoner comes to the Gaoler, and says, Here is the Small-Pox in a Garret, I desire to go into the Liberty; I don't see how it can be granted, for it is impossible for that or any other Gaoler, if a contagious Distemper comes into it, and the well Prisoners desire to go out, he should give them the Liberty: If Criminals should be let out, it is very plain, in that Case, the Gaoler must answer for them; so I apprehend it would be in Civil Cases: Therefore, I must conclude with saying, that my Clients have done nothing at all but what is humane and right.

Mr. Kettleby. My Lord, I am Counsel of the same Side; and we will call our Witnesses.

Call —— Chappel. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Kettleby. Was you present on the 14th of November, or at any other Time, when Mr. Castell's Security came to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Chappel. Mr. Chambers came and said, he was determined to stand Security for Mr. Castell no longer; and Peter Ellam and Curll the same.

Mr. Kettleby. What did they say to Bambridge?

Mr. Chappel. That they gave him Power to take him up.

Mr. Kettleby. Where was this?—Mr. Chappel. At Bell-Savage Yard.

Mr. Kettleby. What did Bambridge say in Answer?

Mr. Chappel. He believed they were secure, and could not imagine the Reason of their withdrawing their Security.

Mr. Kettleby. What did they say to that?

Mr. Chappel. Chambers seemed willing, but Curll would not.

Mr. Kettleby. What Resolution was taken upon that?

Mr. Chappel. He persuaded Ellam to consent, and nothing more was done then; and we left Castell and Bambridge together.

Mr. Kettleby. What Time was this?

Mr. Chappel. I don't know the Day.

Mr. Kettleby. What Month was it in?—Mr. Chappel. In November.

Mr. Kettleby. The Beginning, Middle, or latter End?—Mr. Chappel. I cannot tell; by a Line sent to Mr. the Attorney, it will appear.

Mr. Kettleby. How long before he was carried to Corbett's House?

Mr. Chappel. Three Weeks or a Month.

Mr. Kettleby. Do you know any Discourse that happened between them a little before he went to Corbett's House?

Mr. Chappel. Mr. Chambers came to Mr. Bambridge, and told him, he would be Security no longer.

Mr. Kettleby. How near the Time he was carried to Corbett's?

Mr. Chappel. The next Morning.

Mr. Kettleby. Give an Account what passed the Day before he went to Corbett's.

Mr. Chappel. Chambers was twice with Mr. Bambridge; and the first Time Mr. Bambridge desired Mr. Castell might not be surrendered; Mr. Chambers waited two or three Days, and then came to Mr. Bambridge again, to let him know he would surrender him, and said he would be his Security no longer; and Mr. Bambridge said, if he would deliver him up, he must go to the Tipstaff's; then Chambers went to one Corbett, and Corbett said, he must have a Fee; then Chambers gave him his Fee, and Chambers said, he was at the King's Arms. About an Hour after I saw Corbett, Chambers and Castell together.

Mr. Kettleby. What did you see done?—Mr. Chappel. That is all I know.

Mr. Kettleby. Did not you go to the King's Arms Tavern?

Mr. Chappel. No.

Mr. Kettleby. Did you hear the Security say, they would complain to the Judges about it?—Mr. Chappel. Mr. an Attorney, was there.

Mr. Kettleby. What did the Attorney say?—Mr. Chappel. I don't know.

Mr. Kettleby. Did they direct him to take him up? Who did Chambers speak to?

Mr. Chappel. To Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Kettleby. To do what?

Mr. Chappel. To take Mr. Castell in Custody, for he would be Security no longer; and desired that he would take him in Custody.

Mr. Strange. What did Mr. Bambridge tell him was necessary to be done?

Mr. Chappel. Bambridge said he must employ a Tipstaff.

Mr. Strange. What did Mr. Chambers do to Corbett?

Mr. Chappel. He sent to Corbett to the Coffee-house, and Corbett said, he must have a Fee.

Mr. Strange. When was this?---Mr. Chappel. Over Night.

Mr. Strange. Did Chambers threaten him?---Mr. Chappel. No.

Mr. Strange. What did he say?

Mr. Chappel. He said something about giving a Fee; and Corbett went to the King's Arms, and said, he could not find him.

Mr. Reeves. First of all Ellam seemed uneasy, but afterwards was not; Did Peter Ellam concern himself afterwards?

Mr. Chappel. Yes, he sent a Letter to Mr. Scott.

Mr. Reeves. I ask you, whether Ellam did not consent to continue before he was taken up?---Mr. Chappel. Yes.

Mr. Reeves. Did Curll, before Mr. Castell was taken up?

Mr. Chappel. I don't know of that.

Mr. Reeves. You don't know of any others?---Mr. Chappel. No.

Mr. Lee. How come you to be so much concerned?

Mr. Chappel. I was to secure Ellam and myself. I was so much concerned, that he and I were bound for Three-Fourths of One Thousand Pounds.

Mr. Lee. Who went with you to Bambridge the first Time?

Mr. Chappel. I went along the first time to Bambridge with Peter Ellam and Curll.

Mr. Lee. With what Intent did you go?

Mr. Chappel. I went with Peter Ellam and Curll with an Intent to deliver Mr. Castell up, for I had given Security to Ellam to indemnify him a half Part.

Mr. Lee. To indemnify him! Did Ellam decline then?

Mr. Chappel. He seemed inclinable to continue.

Mr. Lee. Was you present when Bambridge said he must go to the Tipstaff's?---Mr. Chappel. Yes.

Mr. Lee. Was he acquainted with Corbett?---Mr. Chappel. I don't know.

Mr. Lee. Was there any body mentioned at the Time when you was with Bambridge?

Mr. Chappel. I can't charge my Memory with any Name.

Mr. Lee. At this Time when you talked about the Tipstaff, was Ellam and Curll there?---Mr. Chappel. No.

Mr. Fazakerley. Pray what Bond was that you talked of, that you was Security in?---Mr. Chappel. I don't hear.

Mr. Fazakerley. Was there any Talk then with Bambridge how much the Bond was for?---Mr. Chappel. No.

Mr. Fazakerley. What was the Bond for?---Mr. Chappel. I think 1000*l*.

Mr. Strange. You say, upon Bambridge's Interposition, that Ellam was induced to stand?---Mr. Chappel. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Was Curll the same?---Mr. Chappel. Yes.

Mr. Strange. When was that?---Mr. Chappel. That was the first Time.

Mr. Strange. When was the last Time?

L. C. J. I don't find that you fixed these Times.

Call —— Chambers. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Strange. You was Security for Mr. Castell?---Mr. Chambers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Give an Account what you did in relation to that?

Mr. Chambers. I begg'd of Mr. Chappel, he having Business every Day in Town, to apply to Mr. Bambridge, to let him know that I would be Security no longer; but having long had an Intimacy with Mr. Bambridge, Bambridge desired me to continue Security eight Days longer; and told me, that White at the King's Arms Tavern had given a Note. I said I was determined to deliver him up. Mr. Bambridge said, I was very safe, and desired I would continue; he had been the Instrument of my being Security, and he would not deceive me; if he thought there was any Danger, he would advise me by Letter. I came to Mr. Castell from time to time; he told me, he had other Securities ready, and it would be no Inconvenience to him. I came to tell him two or three times I would not stand, and found he had Nobody ready; and then went to Mr. Bambridge, and found him at the Lodge about seven or eight o'Clock at Night, and told him I was come determined to deliver Mr. Castell up; upon which he said, If you will deliver him up you must. I asked him which way to proceed? He said, I must get a Tipstaff. I asked him, where there was a Tipstaff? He said, there was one Corbett. I asked him, what I must give him? He said, Six-and-eight-Pence. I went accordingly to Corbett, and told him Mr. Castell was at the King's Arms Tavern, and I would give him Half a Guinea to secure him. Mr. Corbett went to the King's Arms, came back, and said he could not find him; then I said, I would be in Town; and I lay at the Bell-Savage Inn; then I came the next Morning, and sent to Corbett's, who came in his Gown and Slippers; and Corbett said, he wished he had not got Notice of our Intention; and said he would go to his Lodgings; and said, he believed there he should find him: Then Corbett came, and said he was at his House; and I gave Corbett Half a Guinea; and I went to Mr. Castell at Corbett's, and he said, he thanked me for my Civility; and said, he believed it was not an Act of my own; and I said it was. As you are going abroad, do not think I use you ill. He said, No; I don't believe it was your own Act. I said, Don't deceive yourself, it is.

Mr. Strange. Did Mr. Bambridge persuade you at first to be Security?

Mr. Chambers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Castell made no manner of Objection to his being at Corbett's, but thanked you?---Mr. Chambers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. About what Time was this?

Mr. Chambers. About the Middle of November.

Mr. Strange. Was this after he was surrendered?---Mr. Chambers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Did he complain of being at Corbett's House then?

Mr. Chambers. No.

Mr. Strange. Was you at the King's Arms the Day he was taken?

Mr. Chambers. No.

Mr. Strange. Was you with Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Wynn. What was wrote there?---Mr. Codnor. De bene esse.
Mr. Wynn. Was it done at that Time?
Mr. Codnor. I might go into the Office.
Mr. Wynn. Was it usual to let Parties execute Bonds before Enquiry was made?---Mr. Codnor. Yes; it was the daily Practice.
Mr. Reeves. You say it was the usual Practice to take Bonds de bene esse, and you say the other Bonds were cancelled?---Mr. Codnor. I believe so.
Mr. Reeves. Did you see them cancelled?---Mr. Codnor. I did not.
Mr. Reeves. I ask you then, whether it was usual for you to cancel a Bond that was good before another was executed?
Mr. Codnor. I would not have taken upon me then to have done it.
Mr. Reeves. Do you know it was done?
Mr. Codnor. I can't say I do; it was usual to take new Bonds de bene esse: when Bonds given before were cancelled, and the Persons had been inquired after, and not found sufficient.
Mr. Reeves. What were your Orders?
Mr. Codnor. My Orders were, to take the Securities from Time to Time as they came.
Mr. Reeves. So you took them de bene esse?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. You say you have got a Method to take Bonds de bene esse: Did not you take a Bond de bene non esse, which he was in Execution for?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. What, do you take double Times?
Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. Did you say how much he was in Execution for?
Mr. Codnor, No.
Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know how much?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Mr. Fazakerley. Was there any Thing more?---Mr. Codnor. No.
Mr. Fazakerley. Then that was 500 l.?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Lord Chief-Justice. So your constant Practice is, that the Securities are first bound, and then you enquire after them?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Lord Chief-Justice. You say you took these Bonds by Mr. Bambridge's Directions?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Lord Chief-Justice. What did you do with the first Bond?
Mr. Codnor. I can't charge my Memory.
Lord Chief-Justice. Are you sure you took but two?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Mr. Strange. It was very probable that these People might demand 1000*l.* Bond; the other Bond, when given, was for 2000*l.* What was the Reason of your taking a larger Security?
Mr. Codnor. I received three Habeas Corpus's, which was the Reason of taking so large a Security (speaking to Mr. Strange). We always take Security, though charged by the same Plaintiff, for two Sums.
Lord Chief-Justice. Is that usual?---Mr. Codnor. Yes.
Lord Chief-Justice. So that you take Security for the Declaration, and take Security for the subsequent Charge in Execution.
Mr. Fazakerley. When was the last Security given?
Mr. Codnor. Much about a Week after the first.
Mr. Fazakerley. Observe; if an Action is brought for 2000*l.* and you take Security, and a Week after that Judgment is had, do you take other Security, and double the Sum?
Mr. Codnor. Not without a Habeas Corpus is brought.
Mr. Fazakerley. So you don't increase the Penalty, unless you distrust the Value of the Bail?---Mr. Codnor. No.
Mr. Fazakerley. Because I observe a great many Judgments are given before the Security is increased.
Lord Chief-Justice. The last Bond was executed the first of December, and he was taken ill the third.
Mr. Strange. My Lord, we shall call no more Evidence, but submit it here.
Mr. Reeves. My Lord, I must beg leave to take notice of the Objections they have made. The first is, that he went voluntarily to Corbett's; that it was his own Desire. In Answer to that, if our Witnesses are to be credited, we have proved the whole Appeal. We have proved, he was taken forcibly; I humbly apprehend that was sufficiently proved; for if Corbett took him without his Consent, it was forcibly, and it was unlawful; it will warrant the Declaration of Appeal.
The next Fact is, that he was carried to the House of Richard Corbett, where one Joseph White was then ill of the Small-Pox. The Objection did arise, that it was laid to be the House of Richard Corbett, which was one House, and here are two; one where Joseph White lay sick, and they say, he was carried to the other. As to that, it appeared by the Evidence, that before this Fact happened, they were made into one House; and notwithstanding they were made into two Dwelling-houses before Castell was put there, our Witnesses say, they went up Stairs into one and the same House; and that Mr. Castell was carried to the House of the said Richard Corbett, where Joseph White was ill of the Small-Pox.
The other Objection is, that Joseph White was well of the Small-Pox ten Days before Mr. Castell was brought there. My Lord, we apprehend that That is contradicted by their own Evidence; that the Man was well, and looked upon to be recovered; for I must beg leave to observe, that upon the Evidence of Holdesworth, it appeared that White was blind at that Time when Castell came in; and he remained there a considerable Time after Castell was brought in.
As to the Points of Law insisted on by the Gentlemen on the other Side, I must submit it to your Lordship, whether this Proof is not sufficient to support the Appeal; that he was carried against his Consent to an unlawful Confinement, and at a Spunging-house.
Mr. Strange. The Point of Law is, Whether he was unlawfully taken? And though he was unlawfully confined, yet it don't make an unlawful Taking.
Lord Chief-Justice. Though he was lawfully taken, yet he ought not to be unlawfully confined. He was carried into Corbett's on the 14th of November, and the fifth Bond was given the first of December; which was a great while after he was taken in Custody.
Mr. Reeves. There was a third Bond given for 1000*l.* one was in July. In order to make these Bonds clear, they should be produced.
Mr. Strange. Codnor swears, that he took but two.
Mr. Reeves. It was sworn by Ellam that there were five.
Mr. Serj. Darnell. The Confinement was a proper Confinement. A Tipstaff's House is a proper Confinement, and the Taking was not an unlawful Taking.
Lord Chief-Justice. Is there not a Difference of being carried into the Rules? If not in the Rules, it is not a Part of the Prison; if not, every Prisoner that escapes and dies, the Gaoler is answerable for; and a Prisoner being there, will not be looked upon to be a Priſoner at large: Every Part of the Rules is a Part of the Priſon, though not within the Walls: if it is not in the Priſon, then there is an End: It was both illegal to carry him there, and confine him there. There is another Conſideration; they ſay, capitally Guilty; I don't know but that is the Caſe here; but then it is not laid ſo in the Declaration. If a Priſoner dies by Dureſs, the Gaoler is guilty, and capitally guilty.

Mr. Lee. We humbly apprehend, that the Caſe muſt be conſidered, that he did with Malice aforethought murder the ſaid Robert Caſtell.

Lord Chief Juſtice. The Law makes it ſo.

Mr. Lee. Therefore I apprehend, from the Nature of the Thing, and his Behaviour, that it muſt be taken, that in this Caſe they did feloniouſly carry this Man to the Houſe of Richard Corbett; but that muſt be decided by the Evidence. They knew the Houſe to be infected; therefore, whether the original taking him up was legal or illegal, is the Thing to be conſidered: If he was only taken up to be carried into the Gaol, it will have another Conſideration; but the Priſoner's Intention is to be judged by the Jury. I don't know whether I ſhould be proper in taking Notice of the Evidence; I ſhould very ſhortly take Notice of the Evidence in this Trial.

Lord Chief Juſtice. That can't be done.

Mr. Fazakerley. As to the ſingle Matter of taking, that will be the Conſequence of the other.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Though the Act itſelf is lawful, the Uſage of the Man will make it unlawful: This is a neceſſary Caſe for their Conſideration; for where a Man dies in Dureſs, it is Murder in the Gaoler. It is the Nature of Human Bodies to take Infection; and if a Man is put into a Place where ſuch Infection is, it will be Murder in the Gaoler.

Mr. Strange. That does not appear to be done with the Privity of either.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Is the Proof againſt Corbett's taking of him? Human Bodies may breathe forth infectious Vapours.

Mr. Fazakerley. We deſire to call Noel again.

(Noel ſtanding up again.)

Mr. Fazakerley. What has been the Uſage, where an Action has been brought, and Security given for 100 l. and Judgment given upon this Action?

Mr. Noel. I don't know what it was then; but ſince Mr. Gambier's Time, where a Priſoner is charged with Meſne Proceſs, we have taken the Bond for the Sum; but when in Execution, take the Bond in a double Penalty.

Mr. Fazakerley. We deſire to call Jonathan Ireland, to aſk him a Queſtion or two, as to a Declaration of Holdſworth.

(Call Jonathan Ireland, who was ſworn.)

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you know Holdſworth?

Mr. Ireland. Yes.

Mr. Fazakerley. Had you any Diſcourſe with him about a Bed being brought out of White's Room?

Mr. Ireland. No, I had no ſuch Diſcourſe.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Appeal of Murder, brought by Mary Caſtell for the Death of her Huſband. I muſt take Notice of the whole Appeal, becauſe Proofs are required of the Facts as there laid. It charges, that on the 14th Day of November, in the ſecond Year of his preſent Majeſty, he was duly committed to the Cuſtody of the Warden; that on the 14th of November, Richard Corbett took her Huſband, arreſted him, and carried him to the Houſe of him, the ſaid Richard Corbett, and kept him there for the Space of twenty-one Days, againſt the Will, and without the Conſent of the ſaid Robert Caſtell. Then it goes on, and ſays, that the ſaid Richard Corbett did unlawfully, violently, and of Malice aforethought, impriſon and detain the ſaid Robert Caſtell in his the ſaid Richard Corbett's Houſe; and that, at the Time of taking and impriſoning of the ſaid Robert Caſtell, White was ill of the Small-Pox in the ſame Houſe; which Diſtemper Robert Caſtell never had.

Further ſets forth, That while her Huſband was there, on the 16th of November, he requeſted Bambridge and Corbett, that they would not detain him in the Houſe; and then gave Notice that White was ſick of the Small-Pox, and that Caſtell had not had them; and if he got that Diſtemper, it would be the Occaſion of his Death: That notwithſtanding this Diſtemper was there, they detained him there, and there kept him till the 12th of December.

Further ſets forth, That on the 4th of December he fell ill of this Diſtemper; and on the 12th of the ſame December he died of the ſame.

To conclude, that theſe two Appellors did feloniouſly, voluntarily, and of Malice aforethought, kill and murder the ſaid Robert Caſtell.

To which the two Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty. The Queſtion for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to conſider of, is, If the Appeal is proved, and not what is opened by the Counſel: You muſt regard that no further than it is proved by the Evidence.

This Appeal is grounded upon this Law; that as the Law has particular Guards and Privileges in juſtifying the Right of Gaolers in detaining of Priſoners in ſafe Cuſtody; ſo on the other Hand, that though they had the Liberty of keeping Priſoners ſecure and ſafe, yet they muſt treat them humanely, and put them into ſuch Places as do not prejudice their Limbs and Lives; for if they ſhould be put in ſuch Places as they do, and they die, it lies at their Doors; that is Murder.

If a Gaoler brought Bodies that were infectious into a Room, by which a Priſoner ſhould catch a Diſtemper; or put a Man into Irons, by which he ſhould die, it would be the ſame Thing. If a Goaler will take Perſons that have not a Diſtemper, and carry them to a Room againſt their Conſent, after Notice was given him that ſuch a Diſtemper was there, it is at his Peril. Gentlemen, I muſt obſerve to you, that in the preſent Caſe all theſe Circumſtances muſt be concurrent:

That he was carried there againſt his Will; that the Diſtemper was in the Houſe; that he had Knowledge of the Diſtemper being there, and that the Nature of it was infectious; that Application was made on his Behalf; that notwithſtanding he was carried there, and there kept; and by that Means caught that Diſtemper, which was the Occaſion of his Death; becauſe Diſtempers may ariſe from Human Bodies.

This is the Foundation upon which the Appeal is founded.

The firſt Witneſs is only to ſhew, that Mr. Bambridge was Warden of the Fleet; and for that End, he produced a Copy of the Letters Patent.

I ſhall take Notice of the Time, which is the 30th of September, 1728: It ſaid, he was not admitted till after, but there is no Proof to be admitted.

The next, John Noel, is to prove, that he was committed the 18th of June, 1728. I need not trouble you with all the particular Sums, but that all together they come to 527 l. When they have proved this, it was neceſſary to ſhew that he was a Priſoner at large.

As to Corbett's Houſe, he ſays, he was a Priſoner there two Months, and that he never ſaw any Thing but what was very humane; the Houſe was in the Liberty of the Rules, and ſo conſequently Part of the Priſon; the Queſtions that were aſked by the Defendant's Counſel were to ſhew, that he had a Right to take him up, becauſe he might have went away before; that the Houſe belonged to the Warden, and that the Behaviour of Corbett to him, and his Uſage while he was there, were very humane.

He told you he was taken ill the 4th of December, and died the 12th; that as for the Houſe, there were two Houſes laid into one; and White was not properly in the Houſe, becauſe one was in the firſt Floor in one Houſe, and the other was up three Pair of Stairs in the other; and that Direction was given, that White was not to come down; and White never came down during the Time Mr. Caſtell was there, before he died.

That as to Corbett's Wife, when Mr. Caſtell was ill, ſhe did look after him as much as if he had been her own Child; and that Mr. Caſtell did not complain, but did ſay, he was very ſorry he had the Diſtemper, and that Corbett and Caſtell had been of a Club together; that as to the Room, it was a very commodious Place. As to what Evidence elſe was given by him, I ſhall mention but little of it now, for I am now only ſumming up for the Appellant.

The next Evidence that was called was Captain Sinclair; he did not ſpeak to the Time in Queſtion, but ſpoke only to 1727; he was going on, but the Counſel knew that was not proper, ſo ſtopped him.

The next Witneſs was Wilſon; he ſays, that it was a Publick Houſe, and that they ſell Beer, Ale, and Wine; and that Caſtell had Proviſion there, and paid for it. I deſire, if I omit any Thing, I may be put in mind of it.

The next was Captain Collet; they made uſe of him for another Purpoſe, to prove that Mr. Caſtell had received 125 l. therefore they inſiſted, that Mr. Bambridge having Notice of this, he might take the Occaſion of inſiſting upon further Security, in order to extort Money from him.

Mr. Lee. There is a Juryman and the Priſoner talking all the Time.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I muſt have no Obſtruction of Juſtice; you muſt not diſturb the Court.

The firſt Thing to be done was to prove, that Bambridge had Knowledge of Mr. Caſtell's receiving the Money for that End; Collet and Brent were called, who proved, that a Note was given to Caſtell, payable to him or Bearer, for the Sum; and that it was afterwards allowed in Woodward's Account. Collet ſays, he was in the ſame Room with Caſtell, talking about the Judgment, and ſays, That it was poſſible that he might mention the Money that was to be paid by Caſtell to Bambridge; that is the material Thing. They would infer on the other Side, that it cannot be proved, unleſs it came to the Knowledge of Bambridge; for though Brent went up to Bambridge, he cannot take upon him to ſay, he mentioned any thing in relation to that Sum.

What is inſiſted on by the Appellant's Counſel, is, that ſeveral Securities were given upon Account of Mr. Caſtell, and therefore Security was given before; and in order to prove that, they called Witneſſes to ſhew he demanded ſeveral Bonds, and that Notice was given to Mr. Bambridge to produce them. As to that, the Anſwer that was given was, that to prevent Diſputes in Court he had but one Bond. Then they called upon Witneſſes to prove the Circumſtances. Mr. Peter Ellam, who ſays, he gave Bond five Times, the firſt in July, 1728, for 200 l. in the ſecond Bond one Chambers and Peter Ellam were bound; the third was for 1000 l. entered into by him and Curll; the fourth was for 1000 l. entered into by Curll, and him, and Bell, the latter End of November, in order for Mr. Caſtell to have the Liberty of the Rules; and there was a fifth for 2000 l. given: He ſays it was on a Monday, but that is a Miſtake; Peter Ellam, and John, and Curll were bound in that. He ſays, that between the 26th and laſt of November, he ſaw Mr. Caſtell at Corbett's, and he aſked him what was the Reaſon of his being there? And he made Anſwer, That he did not know, it was what Bambridge pleaſed. Then he tells you how he came to be bound; that he was a Creditor of Mr. Caſtell's in the Sum of 200 l. that he had a good Opinion of Mr. Caſtell's Induſtry, and that he had a Bill of Sale from him, but did not know the Date; then the Defendant's Counſel produced a Paper, which ſhews it was the 22d of October, 1728.

That is the Point controverted, as you will ſee by and bye. He ſays, that there was one Chambers bound, who did not care to continue any longer; he ſays, he himſelf was inclinable to give it up, but that Caſtell probably might get over his Difficulties, ſo he was reſolved to continue. He was aſked, Whether Bambridge did diſſuade them from continuing Securities? He ſays, he did encourage them to continue, rather than diſſuade them from it. Afterwards the Security was to be delivered up, and he was carried to Corbett's, after the 4th or 5th Bond was given; but he can't take upon him to ſay that Mr. Bambridge did ever accept of it; then was the other Security, in November, 1728, given by himſelf, John Ellam, and Curll, the Clerk attended at Graveſend; he ſays, he did ſend to them (Caſtell being uneaſy) to have the Bonds executed: He ſays, That he was with Caſtell before he died; and he ſays, he was much concerned at having the Diſtemper, and that he did ſay, that Bambridge was the Occaſion of his Death, for he applied to him to let him go, but he did not let him go; and told him, if he did not let him go out ſoon he knew he ſhould die. This was not above two days before he died.

Then, Gentlemen, they go on upon the former Enquiry about the Bonds, to fix the Bonds upon Bambridge, and called Daniel Hopkins. He ſays, he was Clerk of Inquiries; but that he was taken very ill, and Codnor officiated for him. He ſuppoſes Bambridge did, if any Security was not found ſufficient, ſcruple to continue him; and ſays, when Security ſurrenders a Man, it is the conſtant Practice to take them up by a Tipſtaff, who brings them in Cuſtody, and puts them into a Spunging-houſe: As to the Houſe of Corbett, he knew the Houſe, and that there was good Uſage there, and that Mr. Caſtell had not any ill Uſage there. Then they they go to shew Mr. Castell was carried there without his Consent: and in order to prove that, called Mr. Underwood, who says, that last July was twelve Months (he continued in Custody till he died) Corbett came one Morning to inquire after Mr. Castell; then he was not at his Room, and Castell seemed much concerned at the hearing of it, and said he would go up and lock himself in; that Corbett came at nine o'Clock in the Morning, and took Castell, and he seemed very much concerned; but Corbett did not use him ill. Hopkins says, that Corbett said he must go along with him, his Security had surrendered him; upon which Castell desired to stay there; and Corbett said to that, he had the Warden's Order for it, and he must obey it; he wished he could excuse it.

Then they called Catharine Mackartney; she says; she was with Mr. Castell, and saw him the Day before he died; and says, she saw him about three Days before that, and he said, if he died, he would lay his Death to Mr. Bambridge. She says, that he wanted some Necessaries, as a Tea-pot, Knife and Fork, and that her Mistress supplied him.

Savage was the next; he says, he saw Mr. Castell a little before he was taken into Custody; and Mr. Castell sent to him, to desire him to go to Mr. Bambridge, to acquaint him that they had the Small-Pox in the House, and that he was afraid of catching them, for his Family had suffered very much thereby; so he was directed to deliver himself as to his Message; and that he had a great Inconvenience, to be locked upon respect of going out by Day Rules: He says he did go, but the Defendant gave no Answer till the last Time; he says, he went two or three times; he don't know but he went three or four times, and he delivered the same Message every Time, and he had no Answer till at last, and then he said he was in Execution; and after said, he was charged with great Sums of Money, and he must take care of his Office. He says, that some time after Castell was taken ill of the Small-Pox. He says further, Gentlemen, that Bambridge came to the King's-Arms Tavern, and said that he had been at Corbett's, and that the Small-Pox being mentioned before Mr. Castell to be there, he said that Castell was extremely affected with it, and greatly concerned. He did go about some sort of Business to Mr. Bambridge.

Shortis was the next; he gave you Evidence, which I shall not repeat, it did not come to the Time; but he being cross-examined, said Bambridge treated him well.

Then Surrige was called; who said, he went with two Letters from Castell to Bambridge, and Bambridge said he would send an Answer. This is only introductory, to shew that Castell made Application to Bambridge.

Goodman was the next; he says, he was at Corbett's, and Bambridge came there, and Castell said he had sent several Messages to him; and pursuing the Discourse, Castell desired to go into the Gaol, or go into the Rules, because the Distemper was there, and he certainly should die if he caught it. He swears, that Bambridge said he should neither go into the Gaol, or into the Liberty of the Rules, without a certain Sum; (he could not take upon him to swear what it was) to which Castell said, he had given Security enough, and he would give no more. Then he went into the Tap-room, and the next Day he was taken ill, and desired a Fire in his Room. The Counsel on the other Side, they did examine him to know the Description of the Place, and asked him if he could hear what was said; he said the Door was shut, but he took upon him to swear he did hear.

Then Sutton was called; who says, that Mr. Castell was very timorous; and says, she was sent for to White; that Mr. Castell looked her in the Face, and fancied she had the Small-Pox; she said she had no more Mark than at this time; and she swears he did die of the Small-Pox.

Westbrook was the next, who spoke to the same Purpose, to shew his Apprehension of catching the Small-Pox.

Then they go to the other Evidence, to shew that there was no Necessity of carrying him to this Place. There was a Room Kilbury swears was an empty Room from the Latter-end of October till about the 5th of December, No. 16; there was a Lumber-Room besides, that might have been made commodious.

Booth he says the same.

Beaver was called next, to give an Account, that there was not only a Room in the Prison empty, but that there were Rooms empty in another Spunging-house. This is the Substance of the Evidence, as near as I can lay it before you. The Evidence given by Savage is the most material; and the Evidence given by Goodman and the other Witnesses, of his Fear of having the Small-Pox.

This being the Evidence for the Appellant; for the Defendants, they insisted upon some Points of Law, that the Party here was not illegally taken, and say this was laid so in the Declaration. This was urged, because they will shew you in their Evidence, that it was proper for the Warden to take him up by a Tipstaff; that this was a legal Taking, and that it will be the Consequence only of —— that will be taken Notice of when that Part of the Case comes to be considered; that it is laid to be in one House, but there are two: Though they are different Apartments, this must be considered as one House.

The next Thing that was laid, was, that White was sick at the same time when Mr. Castell was brought in. Now say they, having proved that, they have proved the Declaration.

I don't see that the Man can be said to be ill of the Distemper when he was brought down; though the Defendant's Witnesses say, that he had not taken all his Purges; that Evidence will take off the Objection made by the Appellee's Counsel.

Then they go on further, and say, that he did actually catch this Distemper; and on the other hand, they say there was little Reason to believe it, when he was kept so long before he came down. This is true, it is to be considered in that Manner. As to the Objection of that Part of the Declaration of Mr. Castell, where he declared Bambridge was the Occasion of his Death; I must acquaint you, where a Man is wounded, and dies in a little time, we have admitted what he said to be given in Evidence. These Things were at the time when he had the Distemper, a little time before he died.

The Counsel for the Defendants gave this Answer, that if they bring him there, that his Declaration would not signify, for if they confine him there, they have a Right; it would be justifiable in them to do it.

After this Observation, they do say, that it was very incredible to hear what was said in the Room at the Bar; the Room was close boarded to the Top, and the Door was locked, and this was a long time before it was discovered; and called Witnesses to prove, how incredible it was to hear what was said in that Room.

Then the Defendants Counsel come to give Evidence that his Security had surrendered him. The Witness they make use of was Mr. Chappel, to shew that Chambers would not continue as Security any longer: He gives an Account, that Chambers would not stand, that Peter Ellam was of the same Mind, but afterwards did recede, and Bambridge said he thought them very secure; what could induce them to withdraw their Securities, don't appear; both the Ellams would stand. Chambers told Bambridge himself, that he desired to take him up; and Bambridge said, if he must be taken up, you must go to a Tipstaff, and directed him to Corbett, and Corbett demanded his Fee. That he could not find Castell at first, but went a second Time, and took him.

Ellam first refused, afterwards he was Counter-security to Ellam; that was the Reason he called the Note from Chambers.

Chambers desired Mr. Chappel to tell Bambridge, that he then came to Town in order to give him up; and Bambridge told him he was very safe, and he desired him to continue Security still. The Use they make of this is, that if Bambridge wanted him in Custody, he would not have persuaded him to continue Security. He says, that on Bambridge's saying that, he did continue some time longer; then he came to Town, and was resolved he would deliver him up; he told him again, if he was resolved, he must go to a Tipstaff, and give Six Shillings and Eight-pence for his Fee; that Chambers went that very Day to Corbett's, and had Castell taken up; and Castell said to Chappel, that he was set on; and Chappel said, he was not; and Castell said, he did not believe it; and says that Mr. Castell did not complain of any ill Usage.

Joseph Vains was the next; he says that Chambers came to his House (he was not there after he spoke to Corbett), and asked him, whether he had seen Corbett? He said, he had seen him that Day: He came there again, and met with Corbett, and told him he intended to surrender Mr. Castell, for that he was informed he was going abroad with Lord Londonderry. He says, that he charged Corbett to look for Castell; and said, if he did not get him, he would move the Court against him, and make him pay the Debt.

Woodyer, he gives an Account, that Mr. Castell was at the King's-Arms, and says, that Mr. Castell ordered him to get a Room ready, to air the Sheets, and get a Fire; and he says, he sent the Boy thereupon, but that he never saw Mr. Castell after; that Mr. Corbett went with him; that he went away easy, and did not make any Complaint.

The next is Downs; he did not say that he received the Message from Mr. Castell to get the Room ready, and that the Night before he lay at Underwood's, that he attended him there till he died; and as to Necessaries, he had every thing that was fit, and there was a Club kept there, and Corbett used to be with them.

Then Holdesworth the Chamberlain was called; who says, that Mr. Castell came in there, and wanted nothing; he seemed to complain of nothing; before he came in there the Bed was aired. They asked him, whether they could hear on the Outside of the Bar, what was said in the Room behind it? (to take off the Evidence of Goodman) He says, in his Opinion he could not hear, unless they spoke very loud. As to White, he says, he lay up three Pair of Stairs, and Castell up one Pair of Stairs; that two Houses were laid together only at the Top, and that one Stair-case was stopped up five or six Days before Castell came there.

That the Bed White lay on was brought down into Mr. Castell's Room, but the Bedstead being too little, it was carried up again; this was five or six Days before Mr. Castell came there.

The next Witness is Norton; he tells you, that a Message was brought to have a Fire made in the best Room, and to have the best Bed got ready in the best Room. He tells you, as to the Bar, that you can't hear what is said in the Inner-room.

They then called Doctor Gardiner; when he was charged in Execution, he says, he was with him at that Place; talking how Mr. Bambridge and Corbett used him, he said he was used with great Civility.

This was the last Day of Michaelmas Term, which was long after Mr. Castell was carried there, for he was carried there the 14th of November; and says, that he went back again with him.

The next was Blake; who gives an Account, that she saw Hartshorn-drink made; that she never had the Small-Pox, and staid in the House the whole time White was there, but never went out.

Mr. Moor says, he found him in a convenient Room, and that he wanted nothing.

Mrs. Smith was the next; who said, that Corbett said to Bambridge, that poor Castell was ill of the Small-Pox, and Bambridge desired to let him have every thing that was necessary for him; and Corbett came again the next Day, and said the Gentlemen were uneasy, and he said he had thoughts to remove him; and Bambridge said, if they are afraid, let them go into the Gaol.

The next was Captain Martin; he tells you, that he never heard that he particularly complained; that the Second Day after the Small-Pox came out, he went to Bambridge, and was telling him how Mr. Castell was, and Bambridge said he was very sorry for it; then he went up to Mr. Castell, and told him what Mr. Bambridge had said, and Mr. Castell desired he would not mention his Name.

Then there was a Paper produced to shew what he did by a Bill of Sale.

Then King was called; who says, that Mr. Castell was at Corbett's, and that Bambridge used him very well, and Bambridge paid his Reckoning on the 21st of November, which is about seven Days after he came into Corbett's House.

One Howson, another Witness, says, that Mr. Castell owed him Money, and that Bambridge was employed for him, and this was about ten Days before Mr. Castell died.

Then they come to shew you what became of the Bonds.

Peter Ellam proves that there were five; but then it was not proved they were delivered to Bambridge.

Codnor, he was Clerk, and says, he had repeated Directions, from time to time, to take Mr. Castell's Security as soon as they came; he says, there were but two taken; there was 1000 l. 1000 l. and 2000 l. but he only admitted of 1000 l. and 2000 l.

He

He says, that the Bonds were taken de bene esse, in their Language, which was only to be taken in order for an Inquiry; one was taken up and cancelled, the other was only de bene esse.

He tells you likewise, that all the Charges was 500 l. this was taken in the Penalty of 2000 l.

He says, that where the Charge is first for 100 l. and Judgment for 100 l. they take Bonds for double.

There are other Witnesses say, that the Custom is otherwise lately: they say what the other said; and that the same Man may have a Declaration for one Sum, and Judgment for another.

Codnor says positively, that the two last Bonds were only taken de bene esse.

This Evidence has been long, according to the different Things; if any thing is omitted, you'll remind me of it.

Gentlemen, you are to consider in the first place, as to Corbett, that only Part of the Evidence relates to him, as to the taking Mr. Castell up; but as it does not appear he had any Knowledge of the Small-Pox being there then, I apprehend it is not sufficient to convict him: Then as to Bambridge; if Bambridge had notice that he never had this Distemper, that he was afraid of catching it, that he desired not to go there; if he did carry him afterwards, against his Will, and Castell did catch this Distemper of White, and he died of that Distemper, then he is Guilty. The Appeal depends upon these Circumstances. I take it in point of Law, they must all concur; if they do not, you will not find them Guilty; if they do, you will find them Guilty.

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, answer to your Names. (Which they did.)

Clerk. Who shall say for you?—Jury. The Foreman.

Clerk. Are you agreed?

Omnes. Yes.

Clerk. Are the Defendants, or either, and which of them, Guilty or Not Guilty?---Foreman. Not Guilty.

Upon this Acquittal, Mr. Kettleby moved the Court, on the Statute of 13 Edw. I. C. 12. which enacts, That upon a false Appeal, by Malice, the Appellor shall suffer a Year's Imprisonment, and restore the Parties appealed their Damages, at the Discretion of the Justices.

But the Court would not allow the same; the Chief-Justice said,* He was only to try the Issue, and that the Application was proper above, or by Writ of Conspiracy, and all he could do was to record the Verdict.

Upon 3 February following, the Appellees appeared in Court, and having given a Rule upon the postea, which they then produced, and Nobody appearing to say any thing against them, they were discharged. Strange pro Appellatis.

Mr. Acton. I desire the Indictment may be read in Latin.

Mr. Strange. I desire Mr. Serjeant Baynes may be here, before it is read.

Mr. Baron Carter. I have staid an Hour already, I can't stay any longer. Cryer, make Proclamation to keep Silence upon Pain of Imprisonment. This is a Trial for Life and Death, and I shall commit any one that don't hold their Peace.

Mr. Harding. William Acton stands indicted for the Murder of Thomas Bliss. The Indictment sets forth, That John Darby was Keeper of the King's Palace-Court at Westminster, and had the Custody of the Prisoners there.

That William Acton, during the Time he was Servant of the said John Darby, was employed in and about the Care and Custody of the Prisoners there.

That the said William Acton, being a Person of an inhumane and cruel Disposition, did on the 21st of October, in the Thirteenth Year of the late King, cruelly, barbarously, and feloniously beat, assault, and wound the said Thomas Bliss, then being a Prisoner under the Custody of the said Darby; and of Malice aforethought did carry the said Bliss into the Strong-Room, and put on Irons and Fetters of great Weight upon his Legs; and the said Bliss was exposed to the Damp, and Wet, and Cold of the said Room; which is a dangerous, damp, noisome, filthy, and an unwholesome Place.

The Indictment further sets forth, that he put on an Iron Instrument, and Engine of Torture, upon the Head of the said Thomas Bliss, called the Scull-Cap; and also Thumb-Screws upon his Thumbs; and that he remained there three Hours under all this Torture and Torment.

At the Time of the imprisoning the said Thomas Bliss in the Room aforesaid, he knew it to be damp, noisome, and filthy; and consequently very unwholesome.

That during the Detention of the said Thomas Bliss in the said Room, by Duress of the Imprisonment, by being assaulted, beat and wounded, the said Thomas Bliss became languid, and contracted such an Indisposition, and ill Habit of Body, that he languished; and, by reason of this Duress, died.

The Indictment concludes, that he did feloniously, voluntarily, and of Malice aforethought, murder the said Thomas Bliss.

Gentlemen, the Prisoner has pleaded Not Guilty; and if we prove him guilty, you will find him so.

Mr. Marsh. I have the Honour to be Counsel for the King against William Acton, the Prisoner at the Bar. The Offence is Murder; and Nobody can be guilty of Murder, but by being a Person of a malicious and cruel Nature. The Law determines all Differences between all Subjects; and by the Laws of this Land, the Body and Person of the unfortunate Debtor is liable to Imprisonment till he pays the Debt; and the Law takes care, that Gaolers and Keepers of Prisons should have a particular Encouragement and Defence against the Persons that offer Abuses to them in the Capacity of a Gaoler; and on the other hand, the Law takes care, that they shall not use their Prisoners inhumanely or cruelly.

The Nature of all Custody is to answer for the Debt owing, or Injuries done; and the Person is to be kept safe there, till justly delivered in Court. Where a Person is condemned in an Action where Judgment is had against him, then the Gaoler is to keep the Prisoner in safe Custody, but not to use any inhumane Treatment.

That, by the common Fate and Inequality of human Affairs, Mankind cannot be alike in point of Fortune, and it must fall to the Lot of many to become insolvent; and it would be very hard for these of the Unfortunate, when they are reduced by the Confinement and Miseries of a Gaol, to be made more miserable by the Cruelty of the Gaoler; who ought to treat his Prisoners with Lenity and Humanity. Bliss was put in Gaol, and was there kept for a small Debt.

The Indictment takes notice, that Darby had the Custody of the Gaol; and that Acton was his Servant, and stood in his Place; and performed the same as Darby ought to have done.

That the Prisoner at the Bar, by a long Train and Series of cruel and inhuman Usage, maltreated the Deceased (I would not be hard upon a Man in his Circumstances); I may say what the Law allows, that he being under Darby as Servant, assaulted Bliss, who was a Prisoner for Debt under his Care, and prosecuted that, by putting him into that Place, where he would not have put his Swine, or other Beast.

A Place so damp, in which were so many noxious Humours, that any one that was put there must be in Danger of Death, not only from the noxious Vapours, but from the want of a due Covering at Top; and from its being so remote from the Sun, that it could have no Influence upon it, and must for want of it grow noxious, even to Infection.

To make Misery more miserable, he put him there without Bed or Bedding.

A Bed would have kept him warm, but he was denied that, which is seldom denied even to Criminals and Convicts; nor would he afford him the cold Comfort even of Straw; but he was restrained from the Liberty of looking out for any thing to relieve him from the Injuries of the Place.

He was several times very hardly used; he was so beat with a most terrible Instrument of Correction, a Bull's-pizzle, that his Clothes were forced to be cut off his Body.

There is no punishing the Body without the Concurrence of the Mind. The Prisoner sent for this poor Man out of this terrible Place, in Sport and Ridicule, to the Lodge where he had Company; and there had an Iron Instrument fixed upon his Head, Thumb-screws on his Thumbs, that the Blood started from his Thumbs. He had another Instrument, called a Collar, put about his Neck; it was very far from being easy; it there made an Impression that the Mark plainly appeared: He had a Load of heavy Irons on, worse than any Yoke of Servitude; after these Instruments were fixed on him, he had Fetters put upon his Legs, of great Weight.

What

What then were the Fetters put on for? To add to the Affliction of the Man, and to ſhew the Cruelty of the Priſoner, I have already mentioned, that he was a Priſoner for Debt: They ſhould not be loaded with Fetters, upon any Pretence whatever.

Indeed, by an old Act of Parliament, where Auditors of Accounts were found indebted to their Principal, and are impriſoned, and refuſe to account, they may be ironed; but this is an obſolete, diſuſed Law, and being in a particular Caſe excludes all others. Lord Coke takes Notice, that it is not lawful, that Priſoners for Debt by the Common Law ſhould be put in Dureſs.

The Indictment does not ſay, that it was the Occaſion of his immediate Death; but it would have been better that one of thoſe Inſtruments had put an End to his Life, that he had expired under theſe Cruelties, his Death would have put an End to him and them together; for every body would rather chooſe to die immediately, than to be ſo puniſhed, when Death muſt be the Conſequence. But though he ſurvived them, the Effects remained; the Man ſoon died, and that ſhews that it was the Cauſe of his Death. The Indictment charges, that the Priſoner killed and murdered him. If we prove the Facts, they will juſtify that Concluſion; and then we muſt ſubmit to your Lordſhip, if it is Murder. If a Gaoler brings a Priſoner to his Death by Dureſs, it is Murder; and the Law in ſuch Caſe judges it to be Malice prepenſe.

There is one Thing I ſhould have taken Notice of; that in Caſe of the Death of any Priſoner, the Law requires the Gaoler to have the Coroner's Inqueſt to ſit upon the Body, to inquire the Cauſe of his Death: I don't find that was done.

Mr. Ward. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel of the ſame Side. If a Gaoler, or the Servant of a Gaoler, kills a Priſoner by Dureſs, I take that to be Murder; the Reaſon of the Law is plain: By the Conſtitution of this Country, a Priſon is only for the ſafe Cuſtody of the Priſoners till tried or diſcharged: If that is turned into Cruelty, it is contrary to the Law; and he muſt anſwer for it. If Bliſs came to his Death by Acton, if that Uſage was the Occaſion of his Death, I muſt conclude, as in the Indictment, that he is guilty of Murder. To ſhew you, Gentlemen, that Acton uſed him in that barbarous manner, we ſhall ſhew, that the Place he kept him in was unfit for any human Creature; it was not defended from the Violence of the Rains and Seaſons, which made it moiſt and damp, and very unwholeſome. He was kept here without a Bed; this might be the Occaſion of his Death; but if he had Force uſed upon him afterwards, there can be no Reaſon to doubt it.

We ſhall ſhew you that he had actual Force uſed upon him. He had a Cap of Iron fixed on his Head, and a Collar of Iron on his Neck, ſo that he could not open his Jaws; even his Suſtenance was forced to be pulled into little Pieces, for it was impoſſible before to get it into his Mouth, which was occaſioned by the Weight of his Collar. The Man did addreſs himſelf to a Perſon, who condeſcended to chew it fit for him to get it into his Mouth.

Beſides theſe Irons he had Thumb-Screws on his Thumbs, and the Blood guſhed out of them; beſides this, he was beat with a Bull's Pizzle and a Rope, and was black all over. Not content with this, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtamped upon his Belly, till the Swelling was ſo great, that his Clothes were forced to be cut off his Body.

Further, to be more barbarous, he put him into Fetters ſo ſtrait, that they made an Impreſſion on his Legs, and eat into the Skin; which occaſioned a Wound and Mortification in his Legs. This was the Uſage of the Priſoner, to a poor Man who was only to be kept in ſafe Cuſtody by him. If he did not die immediately, but languiſhed of his Wounds, and then died of them; that will be as much chargeable upon him.

If we call our Evidence, and prove the Caſe, you will find him Guilty: That he feloniouſly, and of Malice aforethought, aſſaulted and murdered Thomas Bliſs.

Mr. Trigg. A Perſon confined for a very ſmall Debt, to have all thoſe Engines of Torture upon him, is contrary to Law.

Mr. Ward. It is ſet forth in the Indictment, that Darby was Keeper of the Priſon; therefore it is proper to proceed to prove that firſt.

John Wilſon being produced.

Mr. Marſh. What is your Name?---Mr. Wilſon. John Wilſon.

Mr. Marſh. Have you been ſworn?---Mr. Wil. Yes.

Mr. Marſh. Do you know the Marſhalſea Priſon?

Mr. Wil. Yes, I have been a Priſoner there ever ſince April 1726.

Mr. Marſh. Who was the Keeper?---Mr. Wil. John Darby.

Mr. Marſh. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar, William Acton?

Mr. Wil. Yes.

Mr. Marſh. In the Year 1726 was Mr. Acton concerned, and in what Manner?

Mr. Wil. He acted as chief Turnkey, and ſucceeded one Burleigh.

Mr. Marſh. What is the Nature of Turnkey?

Mr. Wil. He acted under Mr. Darby, in taking care of the Priſoners.

Mr. Marſh. Acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, if you remember Thomas Bliſs.---Mr. Wil. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. I muſt put you in mind, you have only examined to the Year 1726.

Mr. Marſh. How long did he (Acton) continue under Mr. Darby?

Mr. Wil. I can't juſtly ſay how long; till Mr. Darby farmed out the Gaol.

Mr. Marſh. How long had it been farmed out?

Mr. Wil. I believe it had been farmed out a Year, more or leſs.

Mr. Marſh. When was it farmed out?--Mr. Wil. I believe in May 1727.

Mr. Ward. You ſay, you believe it was farmed out in 1727; Who took care of the Priſoners then? Who in May 1727?

Mr. Baron Carter. You need not go ſo far; take any Part of the Year 1727, to the Death of Bliſs.

Mr. Ward. From what do you know he was Turnkey? How long was he ſo before 1727?

Mr. Wil. He was ſo the Time I was committed. I was committed in 1726.

Mr. Ward. You believe he did continue as ſuch from 1726 to 1727.

Mr. Wil. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Did Acton act?

Mr. Wil. Acton did act. I ſeldom ſaw Darby there.

Mr. Marſh. Give an Account what Condition Bliſs was in.

Mr. Wil. When I was committed a Priſoner in 1726, he was then put in the ſick Ward; a little before the Act paſſed, to prevent frivolous and vexatious Arreſts, there was a Draught made of four Priſoners out of each Ward, to be put into the Pump-Ward, and I and Bliſs were among them: He then appeared to be a ſad Object, very lame, and I took an Opportunity to aſk him the Cauſe of it, and he told me that he attempted to eſcape; but being ſeen by a Woman, he was diſcovered in the Attempt, and fell down and diſlocated his Ankle; and that one Rogers and Page took him, and brought him into the Gaol again, who he ſaid had beat him.

Mr. Acton. I deſire, my Lord, he may may be aſked, if he ever ſaw Bliſs in Irons?

Mr. Baron Carter. Anſwer that.—Mr. Wil. No, my Lord.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk him, my Lord, if Bliſs ever fell off the Top of the Houſe.

Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?—Mr. Wil. He did.

Mr. Baron Carter. He ſaid ſo before.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, if he ever ſaw Bliſs beat, or confined in the Strong Room.----Mr. Wil. I never ſaw him beat.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, if he ſaw my Behaviour to the Priſoners in general.

Mr. Baron Car. What ſay you to that?

Mr. Wil. I have ſeen People beat, and put in Irons.

Mr. Ward. By whoſe Directions?—Mr. Wil. I believe by Acton's.

Mr. Ward. Have you ſeen Acton ſtrike Priſoners?

Mr. Wil. I have ſeen him ſtrike Priſoners with his Fiſt.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee Bliſs with an Iron Inſtrument on?--Mr. Wil. No.

Mr. Bar. Carter. What Behaviour did Acton uſe towards his Priſoners?

Mr. Wil. He behaved very well to ſome, and uſed others ill.

Mr. Strange. Wilſon's Evidence is Hear-ſay, being only the Declaration of the Deceaſed.

Mrs. Anne Bliſs ſworn.

Mr. Marſh. Did you know Thomas Bils?---Mrs. Bliſs. Yes.

Mr. Marſh. Who was he?---Mrs. Bliſs. My Huſband.

Mr. Marſh. Do you remember the Time when he was put into the Strong Room?

Mrs. Bliſs. He was a Priſoner in the Marſhalſea for a ſmall Debt.

Mr. Marſh. Did you uſe to viſit him?

Mrs. Bliſs. I went to him every Night and Morning.

Mr. Marſh. Acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, with every Step as to the Treatment of your Huſband.

Mrs. Bliſs. My Huſband went to make his Eſcape, and was betrayed.

Mr. Ward. Tell the Time.

Mrs. Bliſs. He and ſix or ſeven others went to break into a Baker's, and Acton came in.

Mr. Ward. Name the Time.

Mrs. Bliſs. I can't be ſure when it was, but one Murlimus, when he was put in, was there, and was collared.

Mr. Marſh. Wa you by?

Mrs. Bliſs. I ſaw it next Morning; I went into the Strong Room, and Murlimus had an Iron Collar on, but my Huſband was only fettered.

Mr. Marſh. I confine my Queſtion only to your Huſband. What Room was he in?---Mrs. Bliſs. The Strong Room.

Mr. Marſh. Deſcribe it.

Mrs. Bliſs. It is a Room floored with Boards, and there is a Hole big enough to put in a Pot of Beer, and I ſaw him in there thro' the Hole.

Mr. Marſh. How long did he lie there?

Mrs. Bliſs. He lay there three Weeks, in the Winter-Time.

Mr. Ward. You ſay, there is a little Hole, big enough to put in a Quart Pot?---Mrs. Bliſs. Yes, there is, juſt on the Side of the Door.

Mr. Baron Carter. Stay a little, I can't hear one Word. You ſay you could not go into the Room, but looked thro' the Hole?---Mrs. Bliſs. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you obſerve the Condition of the Room?

Mrs. Bliſs. The Floor was very damp, and it had rained that Night, and had rained in.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was it covered at Top?

Mrs. Bliſs. Yes, but the Rain came in through the Boards.

Mr. Foſter. Were the Irons heavy he had on?

Mrs. Bliſs. Yes, they were.

Mr. Ward. What Time of the Year was it?

Mrs. Bliſs. It was much about Chriſtmas Time.

Mr. Ward. How long ago?

Mrs. Bliſs. About three Months after he was in Gaol.

Mr. Ward. What Time did he firſt go into Gaol?

Mrs. Bliſs. I cannot tell the Month.

Mr. Ward. Can't you be certain as to the Time?

Mrs. Bliſs. I think it was after Chriſtmas, not much.

Mr. Ward. How long ſince?

Mrs. Bliſs. It was much about three Years; it was much about four Years ſince the firſt Time he attempted to eſcape. He went to make an Eſcape a ſecond Time, by a Rope, about two or three Months after the firſt Attempt; and then Acton purſued after him, and took him.

Mr. Ward. Do you know this of your own Knowledge?

Mrs. Bliſs. When I came the next Day to the Priſon, Nichols ſaid, there is the Bitch his Wife, and Acton ordered me to be called into the Lodge; and ſaid, Damn you, Madam, I will have you before Juſtice Ladd, for bringing the Rope to your Huſband: Damn you, I will confine you; and he put me into the Place where they put the Irons in, adjoining to the Lodge, and kept me there an Hour. Whilſt I was there, he ſent for my Huſband into the Lodge, and put on the Scull-cap, Collar, Thumb-Screws, and Fetters.

Mr. Ward. Were they all put on at the ſame Time?--Mrs. Bliſs. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Who put them on?

Mrs. Bliſs. They were put on by Acton's Order.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him order it?

Mrs. Bliſs. I heard him order it, I did not ſee it.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee them on your Huſband?

Mrs. Bliſs. I did. My Huſband ſaid, As you are a Man, I hope you will uſe me as ſuch; Acton ſaid, If you will confeſs who brought you the Rope; and ordered him into a Place called the Dungeon; and when he was put there, ſent for me, and ſaid, I will now have you before Juſtice Ladd; but having a Friend there, who interceeded, I was let go out of the Gaol, and came the next Morning, and found my Huſband in the Dungeon; he ſpoke to me thro' the Hole.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him?

Mrs. Bliſs. I did not ſee him, but thro' the Hole. He ſaid, This Place, and the cruel Uſage I have had, will be the Death of me. He was beat ſo, that his Cloaths were forced to be cut off, and his Body, Stomach, and Belly, were very much ſwelled.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him beat?----Mrs. Bliſs. I ſaw the Marks.

Mr. Ward. When did you ſee him in the Strong Room?

Mrs. Bliſs. About two Hours after I came in, in the Morning; Acton came down the Yard at the ſame Time.

Mr. Ward. Had he all theſe Irons on when Acton came down?

Mrs. Bliſs. He had them all on.

Mr. Ward. When were his Cloaths cut off?

Mrs. Bliſs. His Cloaths were cut off from his Body after Nichels beat him, becauſe he was ſwelled.

Mr. Ward. You told us that you ſaw your Huſband, what had he on?

Mrs. Bliſs. I ſaw him with the Scull-cap, Collar, and Irons on.

Mr. Ward. By whoſe Order were they put on?

Mrs. Bliſs. I heard Acton order them to be put on.

Mr. Ward. What was he ſwelled with?

Mrs. Bliſs. He was ſwelled with the Blows that Acton had given him, as my Huſband told me.

Mr. Foſter. How long was this before his Death?

Mrs. Bliſs. His Cloaths were forced to be cut down; and Acton told the Nurſe of the ſick Ward, to take a deal of Care of him.

Mr. Foſter. Recollect what Year this was in?

Mrs. Bliſs. It was about two Years and Three Quarters ago.

Mr. Richardſon. When he was in this Place, (the Strong Room) did you ſee any Blood about him?

Mrs. Bliſs. He bled at the Mouth, and he told me, that it was cauſed by having the Iron Inſtrument on his Head; and the Blood flowed from under the Nails of his Thumbs.

Mr. Harding. Did you make any Complaint of this Uſage?

Mrs. Bliſs. A Friend of mine did.

Mr. Harding. How long did he continue in the Strong Room?

Mrs. Bliſs. Above a Month at one Time, a Week at another, and another Time about three Days.

Mr. Harding. How long before he died?

Mrs. Bliſs. About ſeven or eight Months before he died.

Mr. Richardſon. Did you ſee your Huſband beat?

Mrs. Bliſs. He was black as any thing with the Marks of the Bull's-pizzle Acton kept. Rogers and Nichels knocked him down with a Bunch of Keys, as I was told.

Mr. Richardſon. From the time you ſaw him in this Condition, till he died, how long was it?

Mrs. Bliſs. About ſeven or eight Months.

Mr. Richardſon. When did he die?

Mrs. Bliſs. He died on Lady-day.

Mr. Richardſon. What Condition of Health was he in?

Mrs. Bliſs. He was a pretty while in the ſick Ward, and then was removed into his own Ward.

Mr. Richardſon. How long after this Uſage was it before he died?

Mrs. Bliſs. Seven or eight Months.

Mr. Baron Carter. The firſt Witneſs, Wilſon, put it right, when he came in April 1726, to Lady-day 1727; you muſt keep her to that Time.

Mr. Harding. What Time did you ſee him in Fetters?

Mrs. Bliſs. Seven or eight Months before he died.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, if he was not well after this, and went into the Country to work.

Mr. Baron Carter. Anſwer that Queſtion?

Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?---Mrs. Bliſs. No, I did not.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, if ſhe complained to her Father or Mother.

Mrs. Bliſs. I had no Father, and as to my Mother, I did not ſee her in half a Year; it was above a Quarter of a Year after my Huſband's Death.

Mr. Acton. I deſire ſhe may be aſked again, if ſhe did not tell her Mother.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did not you tell your Mother?

Mrs. Bliſs. No, I had a Difference with my Mother, on account of her marrying a ſecond Huſband.

Mr. Acton. I deſire ſhe may be aſked, when was the firſt time of her complaining, whether it was voluntarily, or whether ſhe was ſent for, and by whom, and whereto.

Mr. Baron Carter. You hear the Queſtion.

Mrs. Bliſs. One Mr. Newland, an Acquaintance of my Father's, knowing how my Huſband was uſed, ſent for me.

Mr. Acton. I deſire ſhe may be aſked, when and where.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you tell Heſter Long ſo?

Mrs. Bliſs. No; my Siſter came to me, and ſaid, Mr. Newland deſired to ſee me; and ſhe ſaid, ſhe believed there was Money for me. Afterwards I ſaw Newland, and he told me to go to the Gentleman.

Mr. Harding. What Sort of a Place is the Strong Room?

Mrs. Dodd. It is a large Room, and strong.

Mr. Harding. Describe the Room. Is it damp?

Mrs. Dodd. It is not damp; it is dry enough.

Mr. Harding. Is it covered at Top?

Mrs. Dodd. It is leaded over at Top. I gave him Drink through the Hole by the Door, while he held his Head backward; he could not take it himself, because of his Hands being confined.

Mrs. Butler. He was a Prisoner, I cannot say how long; but I saw him going over the House, and he fell off; and was taken on the other Side, and brought in again; and was put in the Strong Room by Acton, Thomas Nichols, Rogers and Page.

Mr. Ward. Did you see Acton put him there?

Mrs. Butler. I saw Acton concerned in putting him there. He kept him there till the other Prisoners were locked up, and then brought him into the sick Ward, and Acton beat him with a Bull's-pizzle there, and stamped upon his Body several Times, he (Bliss) lying upon the Ground. He had hurt his Leg with the Fall, and thought it was broke. He continued in the sick Ward that Night, and the next Day they carried him into the Lodge, and there put Irons on.

Mrs. Butler. I verily believe they were the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. Richardson. What State of Health was he in when he left the Gaol?

Mrs Butler. In a very ill State of Health.

Mr. Baron Carter. For my Satisfaction and the Jury's, give an Account particularly when he was beat with the Bull's-pizzle.

Mr. Bacon. I was not a Prisoner then; I was a Prisoner from about the latter End of April to Michaelmas following, and then I was discharged. He was sick great Part of that Time, and said he should do well enough, if not for the Bruises; and that that Rogue, Acton, had done that to him which he should never recover.

Mr. Harding. What State of Health was he in when you left the Prison?

Mr. Bacon. He was sickly.

Mr. Richardson. Do you know the Strong Room?

Mr. Ward. Did you see him after you was discharged?

Mr. Bacon. I was discharged about Michaelmas, 1726, and went to the Gaol to see him between Michaelmas and Christmas; and I am positive he was never well while I saw him in Gaol.

Mrs. Gillis. Yes; I was a Prisoner nineteen Months, and remember Bliss very well.

Mr. Ward. Give an Account of what you know in relation to Bliss.

Mrs. Gillis. The Account I can give is this: The Man was almost perished for Want, and with a Rope had attempted to escape, being tied round his Middle; but being discovered, the Rope was cut, and he fell into the Yard on the other Side, and received Damage in one of his Legs; and though he could not stand, Acton and his Servants brought him into the Lodge.

Mr. Ward. When was it?

Mrs. Gillis. In an Evening; about the Beginning of March.

Mr. Ward. Who were Acton's Servants? Name them.

Mrs. Gillis. Richard Page, Nichols and Rogers. Acton was there himself; they pulled and hawled him about, and Acton beat him with a Bull's-pizzle; he stood upon one Leg, for he could not set the other to the Ground, and cried out for Mercy; and they asked him, who gave him the Rope? He said, Thomas Crabb. Then they put him in a Hole, a little Place under the Stairs, and he lay there a little while; and when he came out, they ironed him on one Leg.

Mr. Ward. Was Acton in the Yard?

Mr. Richardson. Did you see Bliss in the Strong Room?

Mr. Abbot. No.

Mr. Baron Carter. Will you (speaking to the Prisoner) ask any Questions?

Mr. Acton. My Lord, please to ask the Question, Whether I ever used the Prisoners ill during the Time he was there.

Mr. Abbot. I did see him beat a great many People, but can't say who.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee both his Legs?

Mr. Bran. I took it to be the left Leg.

Mr. Ward. Was his Ankle ſtrained?

Mr. Bran. I don't know any thing of the ſtraining of his Ankle; it was much about the Ankle.

Mr. Baron Carter. If it was his Leg that he hurt; that's an Anſwer.

Mr. Ward. That remains upon them to prove. Had the Skin been broke?

Mr. Bran. The Skin had been broke, and it was ſwelled above and below, and there was the Mark of the Iron.

Mr. Harding. What Sort of Mark was it?

Mr. Bran. It was a circular Mark.

Mr. Hard. Did he make any Complaint to you?

Mr. Bran. I gave him Part of a Mug of Ale; and as he was relating his Grievances to me, he told me he deſired me to ſee Acton proſecuted, in in caſe he died.

Mr. Rich. Did you ſee his Legs? What Condition were they in?

Mr. Mur. I ſaw them; they were black and blue; and they were raw in a Circle, and the Skin was off.

Mr. Rich. Did he complain of any Bruiſes?

Mr. Mur. He complained of his Side.

Mr. Acton. Did he never talk of falling off the Houſe, and that he was hurt thereby?---Mr. Mur. I never heard him.

Ellis Roberts was ſworn.

Mr. Ward. Did you know Bliſs?---Mr. Roberts. I ſaw him in Priſon, and ſaw the Fetters upon both his Legs.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him after he went out?---Mr. Rob. I can't ſay.

Mr. Ward. Did he make any Complaint to you?

Mr. Rob. He told me, that his Legs were very bad, and deſired me to go to Mr. Darby about it; which I did, but was afraid to ſpeak in the Priſon, ſeeing People uſed ſo ill; and I ſpoke to him at the Door, and Darby ſaid——

Mr. Baron Carter. What Darby ſaid is no Evidence.

Mr. Ward. Upon what Account did you go to him?

Mr. Rob. I went to Darby to deſire the Fetters might be taken off; or otherwiſe, that thoſe might be taken off, and bigger put on; for his Legs were ſwelled ſo much, that they hid the Irons; the Iron hung almoſt out of Sight on one Side.

Mr. Ward. Did he ſhew you any other Marks?---Mr. Rob. No.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him in the Strong Room?

Mr. Rob. I did ſee him in the Strong Room; and I ſaw ſeveral more there lying upon the Ground, coming to ſee him after Work.

Mr. Ward. What Sort of a Place is it?

Mr. Rob. There is only one Place to look in at, a Hole on the Side of the Door. It is very diſmal to look into.

Mr. Ward. Was it dry?

Mr. Rob. I can't ſay. At the ſame Time Bliſs was there, I ſaw another Man with an Iron about his Neck in the ſame Room.

Mr. Baron Carter. Would you (ſpeaking to the Priſoner) have me aſk any Queſtions?—Mr. Acton. No, my Lord.

Mr. Rich. It was inſinuated, that the Man went to work. We ſhall produce the Perſon where he went to work, to ſhew he was not able.

William Cowley, Maſter Carpenter, was ſworn.

Mr. Marſh. Did you know Bliſs?

Mr. Cowley. I remember his coming out of Gaol; and after he came out of Gaol, he came to work with me.

Mr. Marſh. What Trade are you?

Mr. Cowley. A Carpenter.

Mr. Marſh. Give an Account what State of Health Bliſs was in when he came to work for you?

Mr. Cowley. I had a Job of Work at Southgate, and came to Town generally on a Saturday Night; and he came the Day after, and ſaid he was coming to work for me; I ſaid he was too weak, and he had better be purged and blooded before he went down. I left him in Town, and when I came again from the Country, he came to me; I aſked him, How he did then? He ſaid, Pretty hearty. I and the reſt of the Men went down; and on Monday he came down after us to Southgate. I aſked him, How he got down, and if he came to work? He ſaid, I don't doubt but I ſhall, in Grace of God. I got him ſome Mutton, and made Broth of it; and he endeavoured to work, but was very little able, and did nothing that Day. The next Day he came to work, and plained three Boards; and then ſaid, he could not work any longer. I aſked him, What he would have? Give me, ſays he, a Dram of Geneva, or Brandy, one of which they got; and laid him down, and threw their Clothes over him. I aſked him, if he could eat any thing? He ſaid, He believed he could eat ſome Bacon; but when it came, he could not touch a Bit. I ſaid, Can you eat any thing elſe? He ſaid,

No,

No, nothing. I then ſpoke to the Woman of the Houſe to get him Sugar-ſops, which ſhe did; but it did him no good; he grew worſe and worſe. I aſked him, if I ſhould ſend to the Apothecary? He ſaid, No: He attempted to come up, but could not. On Saturday Night I came to London; I aſked him, if I ſhould leave any thing? He ſaid, No; but deſired his Siſter might be ſent for; and I think I ſent for her, and my Son, Thomas, ſent for the Apothecary. And when I came back on the Monday he was worſe, and the People were uneaſy with me for bringing a ſick Man; ſo I got the Man, that carried my Timber, to bring him to London; and he was put into the Hoſpital; and on the 25th or 26th of March he died.

Mr. Marſh. Was you with him in the Hoſpital?

Mr. Cowley. Hearing he was abuſed, I went to ſee him. He had Holes in his Legs when he came down to me; and his Words were, Maſter, that Rogue, Acton, and thoſe other Rogues, are the Death of me; this was about a Month before he died.

Mr. Marſh. How long was he with you in the Country?

Mr. Cowley. About nine Days.

Mr. Marſh. Did he complain of any thing?—Mr. Cowley. About a Month before he died, he complained for a Week together.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did the Deceaſed complain of his Side?

Mr. Cowley. He told me, that they took and held him by the Legs, and his Head knocked on the Ground; and kept him chained in Irons.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain of his Side?

Mr. Cowley. He complained of inward Bruiſes.

William Cowley, junior, ſworn.

Mr. Marſh. Acquaint my Lord with what you know of Bliſs.

Mr. Cowley. After he came out of Priſon he come to ſee for me at my Lodgings.

Mr. Marſh. Don't tell all you know in your Life-time.

Mr. Cowley. When Bliſs came to ſee for me, I met him in Crooked Lane, and aſked him, How he did? He ſaid, as well as can be expected; for the Bruiſes I have received from thoſe Rogues I ſhall never recover.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ſee his Legs?

Mr. Cowley. Yes, and they were black, blue, and yellow, about the Calf. When he came to Southgate, I aſked him then how he did; he ſaid as well as can be expected; for I have got thoſe Bruiſes I ſhall never recover.

Mr. Marſh. Tell how he was at Southgate?

Mr. Cowley. After he had done Work, he went up to Bed, and ſaid, I hope I ſhall do well; and putting his Hand to his Breaſt, ſaid he was very ſore. After he began to work, he fainted. We had a Fire made, and laid him down, and aſked him if he could eat; he ſaid if we could get him ſome Bacon; but when it came he could not touch it. Then we got him ſome Bread and Ale, and he could but juſt take it down, and brought it up again, and complained of Pains. He was afterwards blooded, and the Blood was of all Manner of Colours, and mighty watery.

Mr. Marſh. Did you ſee any Marks but in his Legs?---Mr. Cowley. He ſaid thoſe Rogues had given him Bruiſes he ſhould never recover.

Mr. Marſh. Did he name any body?

Mr. Cowley. Yes, he named Acton, and a little Fellow he had ſhewn to me when at the Gaol.

Mr. Baron Carter. When he was going away, what did he complain of?

Mr. Cowley. He ſaid, I ſhall never overcome the Blows received by theſe Villains; and I muſt lay my Death to Acton and thoſe Rogues.

Samuel Parker was ſworn.

Mr. Marſh. Did you know Thomas Bliſs?

Mr. Parker. I knew Thomas Bliſs when he came out of Gaol; I ſaw him come down to Southgate to work, but he was fitter to go to Bed. He worked with me, and lay down on the Bench ſeven or eight times.

Mr. Marſh. Did he complain?

Mr. Parker. He complained of his Stomach and Legs, and ſaid that his Stomach was beat to a great Degree, and that Acton had put on Irons on his Legs, (which extended them a Yard) and put on an Iron on his Head, Thumb-ſcrews on his Thumbs, ſo that the Blood guſhed out at the End of his Thumbs.

Mr. Marſh. Did you ſee his Legs?

Mr. Parker. Yes; they were ſwelled ſo, that he was forced to wear old Slippers; and they looked of many Colours; and there was a Hole in one of them big enough to put your Thumb in.

Mr. Marſh. What Condition was he in?

Mr. Parker. In a very weak Condition, not fit to work.

Mr. Marſh. How long did he work?

Mr. Parker. About a Quarter of an Hour, and then ſaid, Maſter, I can't work any more; he then laid down, and they made a Fire for him.

Mr. Marſh. Had he any Apprehenſion of Death?

Mr. Parker. He ſaid, that the Bruiſes and the Blows he had received were the Occaſion of his Death, and he ſhould never recover them, and hoped ſome good Perſon or other would proſecute them for it.

Mr. Baron Carter. Now, you have heard the Charge againſt you, by ſixteen Witneſſes, you ſtand upon your Defence.

Mr. Acton. Notwithſtanding what the People have ſwore againſt me, I hope to make it appear that I am innocent.

Thomas Bliſs, was a Priſoner in December 1725, and he attempted to eſcape by a Rope, to get over a Houſe; but ſome People ſeeing him, he fell off the Houſe on the other Side, which is twenty-four Feet high: I went round, and found him lying on the Ground; I took him up by the Arm, and aſked him the Reaſon why he did ſo; he ſaid, he was poor, and he could not get out, without Somebody would aſſiſt him: I put him into the ſick Ward, to be taken Care of, and allowed him Two-pence per Day; and had a Surgeon to bathe his Leg, which he had hurt in the Fall. He continued in Cuſtody, and continued in the ſick Ward only till his Leg was well, and then went into the Pump Ward, where he was choſe Conſtable, but for ſome Miſdemeanor was turned out; it was for cheating the other Priſoners of the Ward. After he was diſcharged, he continued three Weeks at one Greſham's near the Marſhalſea Gate, and was ſuddled ſeveral Days. He went into the Country and came up again, and ſaid he had catched Cold, was put into the Hoſpital, and there died of a Fever. My Lord, ſince his Fall, he never had any Irons on, and he lived near twelve Months after. I have ſeveral Witneſſes ready to prove thoſe Facts, which I will call.

Samuel Bullock was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Give an Account of what Uſage Bliſs had in the Priſon.

Mr. Bul. (After making a long Pauſe.) My Lord, I may be a little ſtartled, having never been before ſuch an Audience before, therefore deſire a little time to recover myſelf.

Mr. Baron Carter. You muſt propoſe what Queſtions you would have aſked, to the Court.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, if Bliſs was on the Top of the Houſe, and what Uſage he ſaw when he came back.

Mr. Bul. In March 1725, or 1726, I went to ſee Mr. Acton, and there was an Out-cry He was here, he was there; and Acton went into Axe and Bottle Yard, and brought Bliſs along with him. I ſaw no Barbarity uſed, but ſaw ſome of them ſtrike him.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, if he ſaw any Irons on.

Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?

Mr. Bul. I ſaw no Irons on. He continued with Mr. Acton till he was confined in the ſick Ward, and a Friend and myſelf gave a Shilling a-piece, becauſe he complained he was deſtitute, and had no Suſtenance.

Mr. Acton. My Lord, pleaſe to aſk, if he did not complain of his Legs and Back by the Fall.

Mr. Bul. I ſaw him in a miſerable Condition.

Mr. Baron Carter. The Queſtion was, if he did not complain of his Leg and Back by the Fall?

Mr. Bul. He complained of his Ankle and his Side.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, if there was any Irons on ſhould he have ſeen them.

Mr. Baron Carter. I think that Queſtion will not be ſo much for your Service; you may have it aſked if you pleaſe.

Mr. Holmes. He had no Irons on, no Abuſe given.

Mr. Acton. What did he complain of?

Mr. Holmes. He only complained of his Legs.

Mr. Acton. Where did he go after he was diſcharged?

Mr. Holmes. He went and lodged at one Greſham's, and I drank with him very often in an Evening, and he and I took a Walk together, and he then declared to me, that Acton had uſed him very well, and if it had not been for him, he muſt have periſhed before he got diſcharged; and when we came back to Mr. Greſham's he told me, he was to go to Work at Southgate, which he did, and ſtaid there nine Days; and when he came back, he ſaid he had catched an Ague, and took a Sweat; and two or three Days after that went into St. Thomas's Hoſpital. I met Bliſs's Wife on the Bridge, and ſhe ſaid ———

Mr. Marſh. I apprehend what ſhe ſaid cannot be Evidence.

Mr. Baron Carter. I tell you how far; ſhe is a good Witneſs to contradict herſelf.

Mr. Marſh. You can only call this Witneſs to invalidate her Teſtimony. What did ſhe ſay about her Huſband's Death?

Mr. Baron Carter. She has ſaid, the Blows he received from Acton were the Occaſion of his Death; and the Witneſs may be aſked to what ſhe ſaid as to that. Did you ſee any Irons upon Bliſs, after the Fall from the Houſe?

Mr. Holmes. No.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was he in the Strong Room?

Mr. Holmes. No, he was in the Sick Ward.

Mr. Holmes. I came down into the Lodge with him.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where was he carried next?

Mr. Holmes. He was ſet down there.

Mr. Baron Carter. You did not ſee him in the Yard?---Mr. Holmes. No.

Mr. Baron Carter. The Witneſſes ſay, that he was firſt brought into the Lodge, and there had Irons put on, and then was carried into the Yard, and there it was that all the Witneſſes ſay he was beat.

Mr. Marſh. I did not hear that.

Mr. Baron Carter. It is ſo ſaid.

Mr. Marſh. When did he fall from the Houſe?

Mr. Holmes. About ſeven or eight o'Clock at Night.

Mr. Marſh. What time of the Year was it?

Mr. Holmes. I can't ſay, I believe about March.

Mr. Baron Carter. Let the Time be whenever it will, it muſt be taken after the Fall off the Houſe.

Mr. Marſh. When did he fall?---Mr. Holmes. As near as I can gueſs, in March next coming, four Years ago.

Mr. Marſh. You was ſpeaking of his continuing well when he came out of the Sick Ward; When did he come out?

Mr. Holmes. About four Years ſince, by the Act of Inſolvency.

Mrs. Bliſs, being in Court to confront Holmes.

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may give an Account of the Converſation he had with Mrs. Bliſs.

Mr. Holmes. I met Mrs. Bliſs on Saffron-hill, and ſhe told me, ſhe thanked God her Huſband was dead.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did ſhe tell you what was the Occaſion of his Death? What did ſhe tell you he died of?

Mr. Holmes. That he died of an Ague and Fever in St. Thomas's Hoſpital. I met her on Tueſday laſt.

Mrs. Bliſs. My Lord, I did meet him on Tueſday, but never ſaid any ſuch Words; there was no ſuch Word ſpoke.

Henry Chapman was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Don't you remember Bliſs's Attempt to eſcape?

Mr. Baron Carter. I would have you take one thing for granted, that he fell off the Houſe; aſk any thing that was the Conſequence of that.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk him, if he ſaw Bliſs after he fell off the Houſe.

Mr. Chapman. Bliſs was found in the Axe and Bottle Yard, and was brought in; he had hurt his Leg, and as ſoon as he came, he was put into the Sick Ward; Dr. Draper was ſent for to him, and uſed what Means he thought proper.

Mr. Bar. Cart. Tell me, if you ſaw him when he went back to the Lodge?

Mr. Chapman. He was carried to the Sick Ward directly. I ſaw nothing of him till he was brought into the Sick Ward.

Mr. Acton. My Lord, Chapman was not out at all.

Mr Baron Carter. Bliſs muſt come into the Lodge?

Mr. Chap. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where does he go, thro' the Yard to the Lodge?

Mr. Chap. I ſaw nothing there; but he was carried to the Sick Ward, and the Doctor was called out of Bed to him.

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, whether I did not order the Doctor to come to him, and let him have Three-pence per Day while he was Sick.

Mr. Chap. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. How long did he continue in the Sick Ward?

Mr. Chapman. I can't tell how long.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, if he did not go with Bliſs into the Sick Ward, and if I ſtamped upon his Breaſt. How long did he continue in Health after he came out of the Sick Ward?

Mr. Chap. It was, to the beſt of my Memory——

Mr. Strange. Was it a great or a little while?

Mr. Chap. It was a conſiderable Time; but I can't be certain.

Mr. Chap. I drank with him there.

Mr. Acton. How was he in Health there?

Thomas Fletcher, Surgeon, was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Mr. Fletcher, pray tell the Court, after Bliſs fell from the Houſe, whether you looked after him in the Sick Ward.

Mr. Fletcher. I viſited People in the Sick Ward, and the Deceaſed asked me to look at his Leg; I did look upon it, and ſaw a large Tumour, and uſed the beſt Means I could. I went to my own Ward, and got ſome Oils, and uſed them firſt, and then applied a Plaiſter. I often asked him where his Pain was? He ſaid, he felt no Pains but in that Part. In about fourteen Days time I took off that Plaiſter, and put on another, and then he was removed into another Ward. I was then releaſed, but I went to ſee him now and then; and in the Month of February or March following, I aſked him how he did? He had either a Rule or Stick in his Hand, and pointed to his Ankle, and ſaid he ſhould never be well as long as he lived. Mr. Whitford. He (Bliſs) ſaid, that if it had not been for Acton, he ſhould not have got out of Priſon; and he himſelf had ſpoke reſpectfully of him, and ſo had his Wife.

Mr. Acton. Did you go to Mrs. Bliſs?

Mr. Whitford. I went to Mrs. Bliſs, in the Alehouſe, where ſhe lived; and ſhe deſired I would take no notice that her Huſband was dead; and told me, he went into the Country to work, and there catched Cold, and was carried into the Hoſpital, and died of it; which was thought the Occaſion of his Death.

Mr. Acton. What do you think of the Strong Room?

Mr. Whitford. It is a Strong Room, but the beſt Room on the Common Side of the Gaol.

Mr. Baron Carter. Do you ſay, it is the beſt Room on the Common Side?---Mr. Whitford. Yes, for Wholeſomeneſs and Cleanneſs.

Mr. Baron Carter. What have you to ſay? Do you know of Bliſs's breaking out?---Mr. Bolland. I ſaw him after it.

Mr. Baron Carter. What did he complain of?
Mr. Belland. Only of hurting one Leg.
Mr. Acton. Pleaſe, my Lord, to aſk, how he was in Health.
Mr. Bol. In as good as I am.
Mr. Acton. Did you eat and drink with him?
Mr. Bol. Often, at one Greſham's.
Mr. Acton. Pleaſe o aſk, if he did not fetch Bread.
Mr. Baron Carter. What ſignifies that, I don't ſee how it affects you one way or the other. Did you ſee him after he was out of Cuſtody?
Mr. Bol. Yes, I ſaw him at Greſham's; and I met his Wife on Tueſday laſt, and aſked her to drink ſome Gin.
Mr. Baron Carter. I muſt not let you go on ſo.—What did he (Bliſs) ſay of the Priſoner?--- Mr. Bol. That he was very civil and kind to him.
Mr. Ward. Did Mrs. Bliſs tell you what her Huſband died of?
Mr. Bol. She ſaid, ſhe believed he died of an Ague and Fever.
Mr. Ward. Did you ſee his Legs after he fell?
Mr. Bol. Yes, both, and one of them was ſwelled.
Mr. Ward. You are ſure both were not ſwelled.
Mr. Bol. No, only one.
Mr. Baron Carter. What is that he ſays?
Mr. Strange. Repeat the Anſwer to my Lord.
Mr. Bol. I ſaw only one of his Legs ſwelled.

John Weſtby was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. How was Bliſs in Health, after the ſecond Attempt to eſcape?
Mr. Weſtby. I ſaw him the Night he was brought in.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain of one or both Legs?
Mr. Weſtby. One only.
Mr. Baron Carter. What Health was he in?
Mr. Weſtby. He was in the Sick Ward, and I don't apprehend he wanted Health; he was only lame.
Mr. Baron Carter. What did Bliſs ſay was the Occaſion of his Death?
Mr. Weſtby. His Wife told me, he was at Southgate at Work four or five Days, and he came home on the Sunday following; and his Wife ſaid, he was very well, but the Country was too cold for him; but he went back the Week following, and ſhe ſaid, he worked a Day, or a Day and Half, but the Country was ſo cold he could not bear it. I did not ſee her after his Death.
Mr. Baron Carter. What did Mrs. Bliſs ſay?—Mr. Weſtby. That he had caught Cold, which ſhe took to be the Cauſe of his Illneſs.

Chriſtian Fandy was ſworn.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ſee Bliſs after the Fall from the Houſe?
Mr. Fandy. He lay by me four Months in the Queen's Ward.
Mr. Baron Carter. The Queen's Ward?
Mr. Acton. He was removed from the Sick Ward to the Queen's.
Mr. Baron Carter. What Health was he in? Did he make any Complaint?
Mr. Fandy. I never heard him make any Complaint, but of his Ankle.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain only of one Leg?
Mr. Fandy. It muſt be one Leg. He could not lye down at Nights; and the other Leg was only ſwelled.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ſee him at the Dolphin?
Mr. Fandy. I did ſeveral Times.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain of any thing at his coming out of the Gaol?
Mr. Fandy. He deſired me to lend him Half a Guinea, and he would go to Work.
Mr. Acton. Be pleaſed, my Lord, to aſk, if he ſaw him in the Hoſpital.
Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?
Mr. Fandy. Mrs. Bliſs told me her Huſband was gone to the Hoſpital; and I went into the Hoſpital to him, and aſked him how he came there? He ſaid, he was at work in the Country, and pulled off his Waiſtcoat, and catched Cold.
Mr. Baron Carter. What was the Priſoner's general Behaviour?
Mr. Fandy. I had been there ten Months, and never ſaw any Harm done to any Priſoner in that Time.

Heſter Long was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. I deſire, my Lord, ſhe may be aſked, if ſhe ſaw Bliſs after he came out of Priſon.
Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?
Mrs. Long. I ſtaid at the Dolphin Ale-houſe to drink when he came out, and I wiſhed him well of being out; he thanked me, and ſaid it was owing to Mr. Acton; and ſaid, God bleſs him, he got me out. I aſked him, If he was arreſted again, what he would do? he ſaid, Acton would ſtand by him. Mrs. Bliſs, my Siſter-in-law, came there, and ſhe ſaid, that he was as well as ever in his Life; and on the Saturday Se'nnight after, he came to my Houſe, in Eaſt-Smithfield, and ſaid to his Wife, Go home to Dinner, for I muſt go to Mr. Cowley, for I have ſeven Shillings and Six-pence to take of him for Wages; and afterwards I ſaw him in the Hoſpital.
Mr. Baron Carter. What was the matter with him?
Mrs. Long. Mrs. Bliſs deſired to lodge with me; which ſhe did, and ſhe told me, her Huſband wanted to ſee me; and when I went to him, he ſaid, Siſter, I am going to leave the World: I ſaid, it was only going a little before me.
Mr. Baron Carter. Pray tell whether he made any Complaint to you of any thing?———Mrs. Long. No.
Mr. Baron Carter. What Diſtemper did he die of in the Hoſpital?
Mrs. Long. He ſaid no more, than that he catched Cold at Southgate.
Mr. Acton. I deſire, ſhe may be aſked, what ſhe heard Mrs. Bliſs talk about any Money ſhe was to have in this Proſecution, and from whom.
Mr. Baron Carter. Anſwer that Queſtion.
Mrs. Long. I never heard no more talk till within theſe four Months; and then a Meſſenger came, and ſaid, there was Money for Mrs. Bliſs in Southwark; and when ſhe went there, the Gentleman was not at home; and when ſhe came back, ſhe ſaid, ſhe ſhould have thirty or forty Shillings. I aſked for what? She ſaid upon account of going to ſwear againſt Mr. Acton.
Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, whether Somebody gave her any Cloaths, and who.
Mrs. Long. The next Day after, ſhe gave out, that ſhe was to go to ſome Gentleman; and I aſked to whom? She ſaid, to the Committee, and ſhe ſhould have forty or fifty Pounds; and when ſhe came home, I ſaid, Nanny, I hope you will not be ſo fooliſh to go to take away the Life of a Man for forty or fifty Pounds. After that ſhe went to Service.

Mr. Acton. Did you not ſee Bliſs and her Brother together, and what was the Converſation?
Mrs. Long. I ſaid Anne Bliſs and her Brother together, and he cautioned her to take care what ſhe did; and ſhe ſaid ſhe was to have forty or fifty Guineas; and he ſaid, Make it up; if you go to Acton, he will give you a couple of Guineas; and ſhe ſaid ſhe could not go, for her Maſter ſaid ſhe ſhould take a hundred Pounds. She (Bliſs) came and ſaid, ſome time after, ſhe had two Guineas given her by one of the Gentlemen of the Committee, and that ſhe did go and live with him in an Alley by Little Moor Fields.
Mr. Baron Carter. You talk faſter than I can take Notes of what you ſay; you have no Occaſion to talk ſo much. Who did did you ſay, ſhe ſaid, ſhe went to live with?
Mrs. Long. One of the Committee.
Mr. Oglethorpe. My Lord, with humble Submiſſion, I deſire leave to ſpeak.
Mr. Baron Carter. Sir, you may.
Mr. Oglethorpe. Then, my Lord, I deſire this Matter may be thoroughly ſifted, and the Evidences may be confronted.

(Upon which Mrs. Bliſs was called to confront Heſter Long.)

Mrs. Bliſs. When I went to my Siſter Long, ſhe ſaid, ſhe would have me conſider, not to be ruled by Mr. Newland, and if I would, ſhe could go to Mr. Acton and make it up, and he would give me ſomething: I told her, ſhe never liked my Huſband, and Mr. Jennings would not forgive me, if I made up my Huſband's Death; and ſhe (Long) ſaid again, her Huſband would not forgive me, and wondered how I could pretend to go. I told her after that, my Maſter Jennings had lent me two Guineas, and deſired the Gentleman, where I went to live, that he would ſee the Money laid out; and gave the Gentleman the Money with his own Hands, and his Wife laid it out for me.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did you not ſay, that you was to have forty or fifty Pounds?
Mrs. Bliſs. I ſaid no ſuch thing.
Mrs. Long. The Perſon that came from Newland ſaid, it would be a great deal in her way.
Mr. Oglethorpe. I deſire ſhe may be aſked, who that Perſon was, and whether he was one of the Committee.
Mr. Baron Carter. Who was Mr. Newland?
Mrs. Long. A Baker in Southwark.
Mr. Baron Carter. Mrs. Bliſs, I aſk you, whether you ſaid, that Mr. Jennings told you, that you ſhould not take 100*l*.
Mrs. Bliſs. He ſaid, if they were to offer me 100*l*. I ſhould not take it, not to do Juſtice to my Huſband.
Mr. Baron Carter. How came you to leave Jennings's Service?
Mrs. Bliſs. There were ſo many came flocking up and down after me, that I could not live with him. There came two Gentlemen laſt Sunday.
Mr. Richardſon. You ſay you could not live with your Maſter, becauſe ſo many people came after you. Who did they come from?
Mrs. Bliſs. They ſaid they came from Acton.
Mr. Baron Carter. What they ſaid is no Evidence.
Mr. Oglethrope. My Lord, I muſt with all humble Submiſſion beg leave to ſpeak. Reputation is a very valuable Thing; and here is an Aſperſion thrown out at random againſt a Member of a Committee, which may affect the Characters of ſeveral Gentlemen who are not here preſent.
Mr. Baron Carter. There are many Committees, and I ſhould have taken notice if any thing had been ſaid of any Committee of the Houſe of Commons.
Mr. Oglethorpe. There are many Committees, as your Lordſhip ſays; there is one of Aldermen, there was alſo another, which I find is not forgot. I would have them explain what Committee they mean; the Charge is a very heavy one, no leſs than Subornation of Perjury, and this founded on a Hearſay, ſo as to render it impoſſible for any Perſons to juſtify themſelves; I therefore deſire this may be ſtrictly examined into, and inſiſt upon knowing who this Perſon was, and his Name.
Mr. Baron Carter. Was there any Name mentioned?
Mrs. Long. She ſaid, one of the Committee, and the Committee's Spouſe was to lay out the Money for Cloaths.
Mr. Richardſon. I aſk you, whether or no ſhe ſaid ſhe was to have two Guineas from Jennings, or any one elſe?
Mrs. Long. From Nobody but Mr. Jennings.

Robert Cole was ſworn,

Mr. Acton. My Lord, pleaſe to aſk Robert Cole if I gave Bliſs Money?
Mr. Cole. Some time after the Committee met they had ſat once or twice, I met Mrs. Bliſs on London-Bridge, and aſked her, if ſhe had been with the Committee or Acton. She ſaid, No; but if Acton would give her five Pounds, ſhe would not mention any thing of her Huſband's Death.
Mr. Baron Carter. How long was this before Acton was taken up?
Mr. Cole. About three Weeks; I can't be certain.
Mrs. Bliſs. I ſaid no ſuch Thing.
Mr. Richardſon. Are you ſubpœna'd?-----Mr. Cole. No.
Mr. Richardſon. How came you here, if not ſubpœna'd?
Mr. Cole. Hearing Mr. Acton was to be tried.
Mr. Richardſon. How did you know he was to be tried?
Mr. Cole. I heard it by being in the Marſhalſea as a Priſoner.

Thomas Rogers was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. What Uſage did Bliſs receive after he fell off the Houſe at the Marſhalſea?
Mr. Rogers. His Ankle was ſwelled as big as his Calf.
Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, how the other Leg was.
Mr. Baron Carter. What ſay you to that?——Mr. Rogers. As uſual.
Mr. Acton. I beg he may be aſked, whether he was with Bliſs when he was brought into the Lodge?
Mr. Rogers. Mr. Acton and I ſupported him.
Mr. Baron Carter. This Man was accuſed of beating Bliſs; I will not preſs the Thing upon him to affect himſelf.
Mr. Serj. Baynes. If he thinks himſelf innocent, he may be voluntarily a Witneſs, though he could not be obliged to it.
Mr. Baron Carter. He may be a Witneſs; but don't let me lead him into any thing that may injure himſelf.
Mr. Acton. I deſire then he may may be aſked, if he ſaw Bliſs in the Sick Ward?

Mr. Rogers. I did; and Mr. Acton ſent for a Surgeon into the Sick Ward to bathe his Leg.

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, if he was put in Irons.

Mr. Rogers. He was not.

Mr. Acton. Was you by there all the while?—Mr. Rogers. I was.

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, if he continued a Priſoner after Bliſs was diſcharged.———Mr. Rogers. I did.

Mr. Ward. You are aſking too many Queſtions.

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, if he ever ſaw him after he was diſcharged.

Mr. Rogers. I did ſee him, and drank with him; and he was very merry and well.

Mr. Acton. Rogers, my Lord, was in the Gaol; I beg he may be aſked, if the Iron Cap was ever made uſe of?

Mr. Baron Carter. That is a proper Queſtion. Did you ever know that it was made uſe of?

Mr. Rogers. I ſaw it there in Burleigh's Time, and never ſaw it uſed from that Time to the Time of my Diſcharge; it hung up.

Mr. Ward. I aſk you, whether you never ſaw Bliſs beat with a Bull's-pizzle, or Rope?——Mr. Rogers. I never ſaw him beat at all.

(Mr. Baugh was ſworn.)

Mr. Acton. I deſire Mr. Baugh may be examined (he has belonged to this Court many Years), whether he has not ſeen ſuch an Inſtrument uſed in burning Felons in the Cheek.

Mr. Baugh. I have ſeen ſuch an Inſtrument uſed to burn People in the Cheek.

(John Grace was ſworn.)

Mr. Acton. I deſire he may be aſked, whether the Iron Cap was not in the Priſon before I came.

Mr. Grace. My Lord, I remember the Marſhalſea Priſon above a Year before Mr. Acton knew it; and the Iron Cap hung up there, and I enquired the Uſe of it. There was an Act in King William's Time for burning Felons in the Cheek; and it was uſed for that Purpoſe; and that was the County Gaol, till within theſe five Years and an Half.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk if there were not Irons left behind?

Mr. Grace. Theſe Irons were.

Mr. Ward. How do you know?

Mr. Grace. I was Clerk of the Papers five Years.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk if there was not an Inventory left.

Mr. Grace. When Burleigh left the Gaol, there was an Inventory.

(John Boſwell was ſworn.)

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ſee Bliſs after his Fall?

Mr. Boſwell. I ſaw Bliſs brought in: I was in the Lodge at that Time, and Acton had him to the Sick Ward, and had a Surgeon to bleed him, and ſent for Ointment to anoint him.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where was he hurt?

Mr. Boſwell. It was the Small of both his Legs.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain of both Legs being hurt with the Fall off the Houſe?

Mr. Boſwell. He did; it was twenty-four Feet high.

Mr. Ward. Was he dreſſed of both his Legs?——Mr. Boſwell. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Whether the Deceaſed, before he went into the Sick Ward, had any Irons or Thumb-ſcrews on him?——Mr. Boſwell. No.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you ſee him carried through the Lodge into the Sick Ward?——Mr. Boſwell. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. What way was he carried?

Mr. Boſwell. Croſs the Yard.

Mr. Baron Carter. How long was he in the Sick Ward?

Mr. Boſwell. Two Months.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where was he afterwards?

Mr. Boſwell. In the Queen's Ward.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did he go out of the Sick Ward into the Queen's Ward?

Mr. Boſwell. He went into another Ward before?

Mr. Baron Carter. Was it the Pump Ward?

Mr. Boſwell. Yes; he went into the Pump Ward.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did any one meddle with him when he went croſs the Yard?—Mr. Boſwell. Nobody.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, my Lord, how he was in Health after he was abroad.

Mr. Boſwell. He lay three Weeks next Door to the Gaol, at the Dolphin; being very intimate, I aſked him how he did; he ſaid, very well. And he worked for me in the Gaol now and then a Day, when he was able.

Mr. Baron Carter. How was he when he was out of the Gaol?

Mr. Boſwell. He ſaid he was very well in Health, but his Legs were not quite come to.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk, if he ever ſaw any Irons upon Bliſs.

Mr. Baron Carter. You hear the Queſtion, anſwer it.

Mr. Daveniſh. No, directly or indirectly.

Mr. Bowdler. Yes.

(Elizabeth Goſling was ſworn.)

Mr. Baron Carter. How was Bliſs after his Fall, when he was brought into Priſon?

Mrs. Goſling. He had ſprained one of his Ankles, and was carried into the Sick Ward for three Months; he lived at my Houſe, and ſaid, he was as hearty as ever in his Life, only as to the Sprain of his Ankle.

Mr. Baron Carter. What was the general Behaviour of the Priſoner?

Mrs. Goſling. I never heard him have an ill Character, or that he ſtruck any one in his Life.

(Robert Greſham, the Man that kept the Dolphin Alehouſe, was ſworn.)

(Sir John Darnell, Serjeant at Law, and Judge of the Marſhalſea Court, was ſworn.)

Sir John Darnell. My Lord, I did not hear any thing of this Affair, till I came here to the Aſſizes. I think, my Lord, 'tis five Years ago ſince I had the Honour of having the Patent for Steward of the Palace-Court; and it is three Years ſince Acton has been in the Office that he now is in; and in all the Time that I have known, him both as Turnkey, and when he bame to be Deputy, I always thought him a very humane Man. I have often heard Complaints of the Priſoners, and have ſpent whole Days to mediate between their Keeper and them; and never found but he was very willing to have them made eaſy. This only I muſt ſay, that he was careful of the Cuſtody of them. In my whole Obſervation, I neither thought him cruel or ſevere.

Mr. Ward. Do you believe he was guilty of murdering Priſoners by Dureſs?——Mr. Baron Carter. I can't aſk him that Queſtion.

Mr. Marſh. Was there no Application by Petition to you, as Judge of the Court, from the Deceaſed?

Sir John Darnell. No; I never heard that he was a Priſoner.

Mr. Marſh. Was there no Petition to you in relation to ſix Perſons being put in Irons?——Sir John Darnell. No.

(Edmond Halſey, Eſq. was ſworn.)

Mr. Baron Carter, Sir, the Priſoner calls you to his Character.

Mr. Halſey. I have known the Priſoner ever ſince he was at the Marſhalſea, both before and ſince he was Deputy, and never heard an ill Character of him, but that he was a very honeſt Trader, and a humane Man, and paid very well for what he had.

Mr. Ward. Does he keep a Shop?—Mr. Halſey. He buys Bread and Beer.

(Malthus Ryall, Eſq. one of his Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Surry, was ſworn.)

Mr. Ryall. I have known the Priſoner better than twelve Months, and I thought him improper for the Poſt he was in, from his too great Compaſſion.

John

John Lade, Esq. (one of his Majesty's Justices of Peace for the said County) was sworn.

Mr. Baron Carter. You must speak to the general Character of the Prisoner.

Mr. Lade. I live in the Neighbourhood, and most commonly am applied to if any Abuses have been committed in the Prison; and I never have heard any Complaint of the ill Usage of Prisoners.

Mr. Baron Carter. What is his general Character?

Mr. Lade. His general Character is good.

Mr. Hayley was sworn.

Mr. Hayley. The Prisoner was four Years a Servant with my Father, and his Behaviour was very well; he was a good-natur'd Man.

Mr. Ward. In what Capacity did he serve your Father?

Mr. Hayley. As a Butcher.

John Morris was sworn.

Mr. Morris. For almost fifty Years last past I have visited all the Prisons about London, and I believe I have discharged three hundred poor Prisoners, and I never found better Usage in any Gaol than in this.

Mr. Acton. I desire he may give an Account what Sort of Place the Strong Room is.

Mr. Morris. I have been of the building Trade, and have taken particular Notice of the Strong Room; and would choose it rather than any other on the Common Side. This rises ten Inches from the Surface, and is boarded, and covered at Top with a Tarpaulin; and the others go down a Step.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask if any Wet could come in.

Mr. Morris. I don't believe any Wet could get in.

Mr. Marsh. It had not been built long when he saw it.

Mr. Terrant, in the Borough.

Mr. Terrant. I live in the Borough, and the Prisoner has as good a Character as any one in the Neighbourhood.

Mr. Acton. I desire, my Lord, he may be asked as to the Strong Room.

Mr. Terrant. I was curious to see the Strong Room. It is a boarded Place of nine Feet Square.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you see it?—Mr. Terrant. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was it dry?—Mr. Terrant. It was.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was there any Stench?—Mr. Terrant. It is very close.

Mr. Marsh. When did you go to see it?

Mr. Terrant. About two Months ago.

Mr. Marsh. Was it over the Common Sewer?---Mr. Terrant. No.

Mr. Ward. Was it dry Weather when you saw it?---Mr. Terrant. It was.

Mr. Taylor, of the Borough.

Mr. Acton. I desire he may acquaint the Court what is my Character.

Mr. Taylor. In relation to his Character he is a very honest Man, and a Man of Humanity to all People.

Mr. Acton. I desire he may be asked as to the Strong Room.

Mr. Taylor. The Strong Room is dry; there is a Drain runs some Distance from it, but not near it.

Mr. Whitaker, of the Borough.

Mr. Whitaker. I have been with Acton in and out of Gaol, and never saw him do any thing ill.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask him, my Lord, about the Strong Room.

Mr. Baron Carter. Give an Account of what you know of that.

Mr. Whitaker. The Strong Room is dry, there is no Drain runs under it, but there is a Drain about five Yards from it.

Mr. Lamb was sworn.

Mr. Lamb. I have had the Happiness of knowing him these three or four Years. He has had a good Character, and was a Man of Humanity.

Mr. Sydall, of the Borough, Apothecary.

Mr. Baron Carter. What was the Prisoner's Character?

Mr. Sydall. Having had recourse to the Gaol, the Prisoners told me he had a very good Character.

Mr. Brown was sworn.

Mr. Baron Carter. What Character had the Prisoner?

Mr. Brown. I believe as good as any Man's can be.

Mr. Harrison was sworn.

Mr. Harrison. I have known his Character these three or four Years, and he is a very modest Man, and of a good Behaviour.

Mr. Acton. My Lord, I humbly apprehend I have called a sufficient Number of Witnesses to my Character, and will rest my Defence here. I apprehend it can't be conceived, that any Man can be guilty of such Inhumanity as is here laid to my Charge, and to live a Year.

Mr. Baron Carter. You must not say that; for then there could have been no Room for the Prosecution.

Mr. Acton. By all Circumstances, my Lord, this Man must certainly die a natural Death; and I humbly apprehend, that they must be mistaken in point of Time, for that no Irons were used the second time of his attempting to escape.

Mr. Marsh. I would not be wanting to my Clients, and yet would preserve all Rule and Order, and must beg leave to observe——

Mr. Serj. Baynes. I have been concerned in several criminal Prosecutions, and never knew it admitted.

Mr. Strange. The Prisoner is not allowed Counsel to speak for him in his Defence; therefore the King's Counsel have no Right of Reply. It was not allowed in Huggins's Trial.

Mr. Baron Carter. In Huggins's Trial, Mr. Justice Page and myself would not allow it.

Mr. Baron Carter. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner stands indicted for the Murder of Thomas Bliss.

To prove this, a great Number of Witnesses have been called on the Part of the King, not less than sixteen, to make good the Charge.

The first Thing necessary to be proved is, that the Prisoner at the Bar had the Care and Custody of the Prisoners; for which Purpose John Wilson was called, who proved that Darby was Keeper, and the Prisoner Acton Turnkey and Servant, and acted under Darby. That Part stands plain, that the Prisoner at the Bar had the Care and Custody of the Prisoners; and if he has behaved in such a Manner to Prisoners as Death ensues, he must answer for it. It is said, that every Prisoner must be treated with Humanity, and the Law is very tender, and directs that no Prisoner shall die in Gaol, but the Coroner's Inquest must sit upon his Body; and the Reason of that is, that he should not be killed by the Duress of the Gaol.

The Question stands singly, whether upon what you have heard, there has been such a Behaviour of the Prisoner to Bliss, that it has been the Occasion of his Death. If that is so, then you will find the Prisoner Guilty.

Wilson spoke much of the Escape; he talked about it, but did not know when he escaped; he only goes to that. He says, that he never did see Acton beat him; but that he was well to some, and beat others, which came from the Prisoner's own Question; therefore I was put to ask it, and I have told you the Answer.

The next Witness, the Wife of the unfortunate Man, says, that her Husband was there for a small Sum of Money, but that is not material; her Husband was almost famished and starved, and therefore attempted a second Time to escape. The Means he used to escape is not material, that is not what you are to rely upon. She says, there was some Assistance given him; a Rope was provided, and he unfortunately miscarried in the Attempt; and he was brought back into the Prison again, and she saw him beaten by Nichols, Page, and Rogers; and, what is remarkable, she saw the Prisoner beat him with a Bull's-pizzle, and the End of a Rope; that he cried out, if he had any Mercy, he would have Mercy upon him. He then put him into the Strong Room. As to the Nature of the Place, that is a Consideration I shall take up by and bye. She says, she saw him with an Instrument of Iron on his Head; that the Blood came out of his Mouth, and out of his Thumbs; that he had Thumb-screws on his Thumbs, and Sheers on his Legs; that she saw him flung down, and saw the Prisoner on Top of him several times. After he had treated him in this Manner, he began to relent, thinking he might die, and it was time for him to take Care of him, and sent him a Piece of Meat. She says, his Legs were swollen, his Body was swollen; she got him a Pair of Stockings, but his Legs were so swollen, she could not get them on. After this, when he was removed to another Ward, she said, he grew something better. That when he was discharged, he used his Endeavours to get Work; (Gentlemen, you did observe the Question came from the Prisoner) but tho' he was with the Man that he treated with, he got another, he could not work, his Legs were swollen, and there were Marks on them. All the Time, to the Time he was put into the Strong Room, he constantly complained of one Breast and his Side; and afterwards, when he became so bad that he could not work, he was put into the Hospital. One thing is very observable, that all his Discourse was, when any one asked him concerning his Usage, that he said, he did believe that he should never recover it, but would lay his Death to Acton; this Evidence was given by the Widow; she was asked by a Question from the Prisoner, whether she told her Sister of this? She said, No; did you tell your Mother, No; her Mother and she were not upon good Terms, and she never was with her but a very short Time. Then she was asked, if Newland did not send for her; she said Yes; it was thought that he was a very considerable Man; and when she was asked, what did he say to you, he said, he would have her Husband done Right to. Then there was a Question asked of Hester Long, as to Money, she (Bliss) said she was to have; and Bliss says, that she never did say any such thing.

Susannah Dodd; she gives you an Account that she has seen Bliss in Irons in the Strong Room; that he was treated cruelly; that he had then Screws upon his Thumbs. There was a very particular Circumstance, that he desired her to chew his Meat for him, for that he could not do it himself, by reason of having the Scull-cap on; that she carried him a Three-farthing Mug of Ale, and the Screws were upon his Thumbs, therefore, she was forced to give him the Drink, as he could not put the Mug to his Mouth to drink, because of his Thumbs being confined: that she saw Fetters, very large ones, on his Legs, and there was a Pair of Sheers cross his Legs; that he continued there two Days, and she saw him after, and saw his Thumbs bleed; and the Strong Room was a Strong Room, and ledead, and that she thinks it not an unhealthful Room.

Butler, she gives an Account of his Attempt to escape; and tells you, that she saw the Prisoner beat him (Bliss) with a Bull's-pizzle, and that when Nichols was beating him, she saw him fling the Deceased down, and saw Acton stamp upon him three times, and shewed the Place of his Breast that he complained of, and that his Death was owing to such Usage. It was his Belly and Stomach that he stamped upon, and that he was very ill when he did it; that both Legs were swelled; but that he said, he should do very well but for the Pain in his Side. She says, that the Strong Room was not fit to put in any human Creature; that he went out about August, and came about Christmas. The Prisoner asked as to his Character: she said, it was good and bad; and says, that she heard there was a Complaint made, that Acton was the Author of his Death.

Matthew Bacon taken no notice of, Sic MS.

Mrs. Gillis, she agrees as to the Fall from the House; and she says, that Nicholas, Page, and Rogers held Bliss till Acton beat him with a Bull's-pizzle; that he was carried to the Sick Ward. She was asked how long they were using him in this Manner; she said, half a quarter of an Hour. Reputation is not so material to be made use of; you are to consider if the Fact was done.

The next Witness was one James Abbot; he saw Bliss, (I will take it in his own Words) he saw him so drubbed, that he never saw any one so drubbed in his Life, with a Rope and Bull's-pizzle. He says, he did not see Acton there, but after charges him with it; and he agrees as to the cruel Behaviour of Acton. If the Act was committed, he might be there, and yet Acton not seen by him. He was asked, as to his (Acton's) Character; and he said, he saw him beat many.

Matthew Brandon says, that his Legs were much swollen, and the Skin was broke; that he saw the Marks of the Irons. As to the Fall from the House, and the straining of one of his Legs, he knows nothing of it. He swears directly to the Skin's being broke of both Legs; and he says, that he often talked with Bliss, and he said, that he did believe the Injuries he had received from the Prisoner would be the Death of him, and gave an Account, that the Marks round his Legs were circular; that it must be owing to the Irons, and not to arise by a Strain, is the Observation the Counsel make, but you will be governed by Sense and Reason.

Mary Renwood; ſhe ſays, that ſhe ſaw him very often, and that his Legs were ſo bad, that the Irons were forced to be pulled off; that the Irons eat into his Legs; and into his Ankle, they had eat very deep; that the Skin was broke, and they were ſore; this ſhe ſaw in the Sick Ward: That he was in ſo terrible a Condition from his Poverty, that he had nothing to help him, no Cloaths, but a Piece of Blanket; ſhe relieved him, and carried him ſome of her Huſband's Cloaths. It is remarkable, that ſhe carried him a Pair of Stockings, and they would not fit; ſhe could not get them on. She ſays, they were her Huſband's, and that her Huſband was not a very large Man.

Peter Purchace; he ſays, that his Legs were very much ſwelled, and he took it to be the Marks of the Irons; he ſaw his Thumbs very black, which he took to be hurt by the Thumb-ſcrews.

Cummins; he ſays, that his Legs were very much ſwelled, and apprehends it to be occaſioned by the Irons; compares it to the Fetlock of a Horſe cut with a Clog; that the Strong Room was a Place of Terror, to keep them from being diſorderly; and that he heard Acton ſay to Bliſs, he thought he had given him enough, but he would give him more.

Edward Murfey ſays, That he never ſaw any thing ſo much beaten in his whole Life; that his Legs were black and blue, and green. The Counſel deſired you, Gentlemen, to take Notice what this Witneſs ſaid, that he complained of his Side, which had been hurt by the Bruiſes he had received from Acton.

Roberts ſays, That he went to Mr. Darby upon a particular Occaſion; but I can't mention to you what he ſaid, becauſe 'tis not Evidence; that he confirms the others in ſome Meaſure, that he had rather have larger Irons; that his Legs were ſo ſwelled, that he could ſcarce ſee the Pair of Fetters on the Side, becauſe the Swelling came over.

The King's Counſel called three Witneſſes, as to the Deceaſed working at Southgate. Cowley ſays, he wanted Work, and he was willing to let him have it. The Man went down, and came up again, and the ſecond Day he treated him with Mutton Broth, &c. but this is not material. But he ſays, he complained of his Side, and always ſaid he had received it from the Priſoner at the Bar; he ſaid, there were Holes in his Legs, and that Acton was the Author of his Death.

Cowley, the younger, ſays the ſame; that they treated him like an old Acquaintance, and provided him with Broth; that the Man was ſo ſick he could not work; that his Legs were ſwollen black and blue, and he complained of his Breaſt; both ſhewed with their Hands how, by pointing to their own Breaſt, and ſaid, he pointed to his; and that Bliſs ſaid, if he died, he would lay his Death to that Rogue Acton.

Parker ſays, That he was to be his Comrade, to be employed in ſome Tuſk-work; that though they laid him by the Fire, his Sickneſs increaſed, and they brought him to Town in a Cart; and all his Complaint was, thro' the Injury he had received from Acton; that his Legs were ſwollen.

Therefore, upon the whole, what Credit you will give to the Witneſſes for the King, is in your own Breaſts.

Now, as you have given great Attention to what has been ſaid againſt him, you will take Notice of what has been ſaid on his own Part; if it is contradictory, I can't ſay any Thing to that, you will weigh them in an equal Balance.

He has called twenty-three Witneſſes, to anſwer the Evidence for the King. The firſt is,

Samuel Bullock; he ſays, That he ſaw Bliſs brought in after his Fall; that he had hurt his Ankle; but he ſaw no Barbarity uſed; and ſaw him carried into the Sick Ward. The next is,

Robert Holmes; he ſays, That there were no Irons only on one Leg; and Acton always uſed him well, and if it had not been for Acton, he would have periſhed. This Character differs from what has been laid before you: He gave an Account that he caught a ſad Cold, which was the Occaſion of his Death; he ſays, that he never ſaw him in the Strong Room; and that as to his Health, it was very good the whole Time. This is their Opinion of Bliſs; theſe People would make you believe that he was perfectly well, and had received no Injuries from Acton. He ſays, further, that he met the Woman on Saffron-Hill, he aſked how her Huſband did? When he aſked her, ſhe ſaid, ſhe thanked God he was dead, (the Woman was glad to get ſhut of him) and ſaid he died of an Ague and Fever.

Chapman ſaw him after the Fall. The firſt Place he begins with, is the Sick Ward, and that Acton ſent Doctor Draper, and that nothing was done to him in the Yard. The Yard is the Place that the principal Evidences ſpeak to; that the Priſoner was humane to him, that he had ſo great Compaſſion for him, that he allowed him Two-pence Halfpenny or Three-pence a Day, till he was better; therefore, he would have you to believe he was a very humane Man, and that he could not uſe the Man as others ſay the Priſoner did. He ſays, that he was removed to the Pump Ward, and was Conſtable there, and came to the Tap; that he ſaw him at Greſham's very well, and ſaw him after he came from Southgate very well. It is very remarkable he ſhould never complain of Acton. He ſays, that he looked upon it that the Occaſion of his Death was, from the Cold he caught at Southgate; that the Strong Room was not ſo terrible a Place; that it was a dry Room, though a Strong Room; that the Priſoners were ſo far from thinking this Room a Terror, that they choſe it; that he complained only of one Leg, which differs from the other Witneſſes. All were converſant with it.

Thomas Fletcher you will find was a Surgeon; he ſays, one Leg was very much ſwollen, from the Fall he got; he ſaid it was a Tumour, in his Way of Dialect; he went home, and brought proper Things, got ſome Ointment and a Sear-Cloth. He ſays, that Bliſs told him he ſhould never have been diſcharged but for Acton.

Thomas Whitfield; he tells you Mrs. Bliſs told him, that her Huſband had got Cold in the Country, and had a Fever and Ague. He was aſked in relation to the Strong Room, which he ſaid was the beſt Place on the Common Side; that the Priſoner had a good Character, and gave Victuals to many of the Priſoners that wanted.

Robert Walter ſays, he was not privy to any ill Uſage Bliſs received from the Priſoner; that he walked well, and talked heartily, and complained of nothing, only one Leg, which he apprehended he had hurt by the Fall. He ſpoke in praiſe of the Priſoner for his Humanity.

The next is John Chepe; he ſays, Bliſs was well in the February before he died; he complained of nothing of the Priſoner; that after he was diſcharged, he ſays, he went to Southgate; that he came from thence, and after that complained of a great Cold.

William Belland ſays, that he never ſaw the Priſoner miſuſe Bliſs; that he complained only of his Leg; that he eat and drank well; that he ſaw him after he was diſcharged, and he ſaid, that the Priſoner had been civil and kind to him.

Weſtbury ſays, That he complained of one Leg only; that he went into the Country and catched Cold, and that was the Occaſion of his Illneſs.

Fandy; he ſays, that he lay with him in the Queen's Ward ſeveral Months. I don't apprehend he was in the Queen's Ward, but he did prove him to be there. I will tell you how that Matter was: This Man ſpeaks to a conſiderable Length of Time after his eſcaping; the Time is not ſettled, both are at a Loſs on the one Side and the other; it ſhould have been reduced to a Certainty, becauſe the Indictment is confined to the Second Eſcape. He ſays, one Leg was bruiſed only, the other ſwelled; that he liked to drink, and did not go to Bed, and ſat up, and that was the Reaſon of it; that he ſaw Bliſs in the Hoſpital, and he ſaid to him that he had catched cold; that he was at Work in the Country, and that he was brought into that Condition by an Ague and Fever.

Heſter Long has given a long Evidence; I hope you have taken it, becauſe it is a very long Evidence, and affects the Character of Bliſs. She ſays, That ſhe ſaw him ſeveral Times, and that he was as well as ever he was in his Life; that he was to go to his Maſter for Seven Shillings and Sixpence, the Profits of his Labour; therefore he was fit to work, and had obtained that Liberty from Acton. It ſeemed ſhe had ſome Diſcourſe with Mrs. Bliſs, and ſaid ſhe was her Siſter-in-Law, and ſhe deſired Leave to lodge with her. After the Death of her Huſband, ſhe never heard any Complaint made about Bliſs; that four Months ago, a Gentleman ſent to her (Bliſs) to ſwear againſt Acton; that Long was there, and Anne Bliſs's Brother, and he cautioned her not to concern herſelf; that a Man's Life ought to be taken care of with the utmoſt Caution; that ſhe was to leave her Maſter, one Jennings, to go to another Place; and Jennings ſaid, that ſhe ſhould not make it up for forty or fifty Pounds. Her Brother ſaid, that if ſhe would make it up with Acton, ſhe might have forty or fifty Shillings. Bliſs denies that ſhe had any Sum, that ſhe was never offered forty or fifty Pounds to ſwear, and her Maſter ſaid ſhe ſhould not take any, and adviſed her, that if they would give a hundred Pounds not to take it, to hinder the Proſecution. She (Bliſs) ſays, that Jennings let her have two or three Guineas, and ſhe went into another Service, and not being very capable, had two or three with her to lay it out for her.

Cole ſays, That Anne Bliſs told him, ſhe was to have five Pounds for ſwearing againſt Acton. This Diſcourſe was upon London Bridge. How far you will think this probable, not having any other Diſcourſe, that ſhe ſhould immediately introduce this, I muſt leave to you.

Rogers; he ſays, That he held the Man after the Fall; that he ſaw him that very Day; that he complained only of one Leg, and that he never knew the Scull-cap uſed.

Grace ſays, That he had ſeen ſuch an Inſtrument in the Priſon, and that it was made uſe of to keep their Heads ſteady, when Felons were burnt in the Cheek; that this Inſtrument was never deſigned for any Priſoner; that this was the County Gaol a few Years ago, and that it was not made uſe of ſince.

Boſwell ſays, He knew Bliſs when in the Sick Ward; that he was lame of both Legs; ſometimes was lame of one, ſometimes of both, but was very well in Health.

Samuel Davenish ſays, That he was with him frequently, and that he was always very well, only had a lame Foot, and ſaid he had no Irons on. The Priſoner aſked him in reſpect of his Behaviour; he gives him a very good Character, that his Behaviour was juſt, charitable, and humane.

Brown ſays, That he complained of both Legs, one was worſe than the other; and as to his Behaviour, gives him a very good Character.

Bowdler, he was with him in the ſame Ward; and ſays, that he only complained of one Leg, the other was very well, and gave him a very good Character.

Goſling ſaw him carried into the Sick Ward, and ſays he only complained of his Ankle.

Robert Greſham ſays, That he lodged at his Houſe three Weeks after he was diſcharged, and only complained of a Cold he had got from the bad Weather in the Country.

Jane Lapworth, the Nurſe; ſhe is a very materal Witneſs indeed; ſhe ſays, that he had an Ague and Fever, and gave a Deſcription of the different Operations of it. He, poor Man, died of a Fever; he had Medicines applied by Doctor Coatſworth. She ſays, ſhe apprehended he died of a Cold, which brought him into a Fever; what was very remarkable, ſhe laid him out, and there were no Bruiſes on his Head; all his Body was clean from Scabs, or any thing that looked like ill Uſage.

Now, Gentlemen, what Credit this will receive from you, I can't ſay; but this Evidence ſtrongly contradicts all that have given you a different Account. I am very glad you have taken Notes; and I deſire, if I have made any Miſtake, you will tell me, on either Side.

As to the Character of the Priſoner, his Witneſſes ſay he is a very humane Man; and if you have them down, they are in Number ſufficient too.

My Brother Darnell ſays, he has been Steward of the Palace Court about five Years, and never heard any Complaint againſt the Priſoner; that it is three Years ſince Acton has been in the Office he now is in, and in all that Time he thought him a very humane Man, and never thought him cruel or ſevere.

Mr. Halſey ſays, he was a very humane Man.

Mr. Ryall, Mr. Lade, Mr. Hayſey, give him a very good Character.

Mr. Morriſon ſays, That the other Rooms were under Ground, and this Strong Room was ten Inches above; it was a dry Place, and covered over the Top with Lead.

Mr. Terrant ſays, That he thinks the Strong Room a very dry Place; and gives Acton a good Character.

Then, Gentlemen, Mr. Taylor ſays, he was a Man of Humanity; and that there was no Drain near the Strong Room.

Mr. Bowdler gives him a good Character; and four or five other Witneſſes have been called up, and given him a very good Character. As to the Strong Room, I don't find much Evidence to affect the Priſoner as to that. There is great Difference in Opinion as to what immediately gave him the Diſtemper to carry him off. A great many again ſay, that he did ſeem to be pretty well in Health; but what will particularly affect the Priſoner, is what happened in the Priſon Yard. Upon the whole, if you are ſatisfied that the Priſoner treated Bliſs in that Manner as the King's Witneſſes ſaid, and that was the Occaſion of his Death, and that he had treated him ill, and beat him, you will find him Guilty; but if he was not ſo treated, and it was not the Occaſion of his Death, you will find him Not Guilty.

There are great Contradictions in the Evidence, I ſcarce ever heard ſo great. It is a Matter of great Conſequence, and deſerves your mature Conſideration.

Then one was ſworn to keep the Jury, and they withdrew, and Baron Carter went to Dinner; and when he returned, they gave their Verdict.

Cl. of Arraigns. Gentlemen, are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Arraigns. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Clerk of Arraigns. William Acton, hold up thy hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; how ſay you; Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

XV. The Trial of William Acton, for the Murder of John Bromfield, at Kingſton upon Thames, in Surrey, before the Hon. Mr. Baron Carter, Auguſt 2, 1729.

Die Sabbati, 2 Die Auguſti, 1729.

Proclamation was made for all Perſons concerned to attend.

Clerk of Arraigns.

YOU good Men that are impannelled to inquire, &c. anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Fines.

Clerk of Arraigns. William Acton, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.) You ſtand indicted by the Name of William Acton, &c.

How ſayeſt thou, William Acton, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

William Acton. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

William Acton. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

He was alſo ſeverally arraigned upon two other Indictments; one for the Murder of Robert Newton, and the other for the Murder of James Thompſon, to which he ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon God and his Country in Manner aforeſaid.

Then Proclamation was made for Information.

Cl. of Ar. Thou the Priſoner at the Bar, thoſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death; therefore if thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, your Time to ſpeak is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Then the ſame Pannel was going to be called over, which had tried him the Day before.

Upon which Mr. Paxton, the Sollicitor for the Crown, three ſeveral Times inſiſted upon a new Pannel.

Mr. Strange. The other Pannel cannot write; theſe are Men of Ability and Experience.

Then the Pannel was called over.

Mr. Ward. We challenge Robert Parkhurſt, we have an Affidavit ready to produce if Occaſion (but the Challenge being allowed, the Affidavit was not read).

Then the Jury ſworn were as follows:

Thomas Cole,	William Goſwell,	William Browne,
Miles Poole,	John Sigins,	John Walter,
Vincent Hollis,	George Wadbrook,	Robert Patten,
Charles Buckland,	Thomas Bandford,	James Wellbeloved.

Cl. of Ar. William Acton, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Mr. Strange. My Lord, you will pleaſe to admit him to the other Bar.

Mr. Baron Carter. It ſhall be allowed.

Cl. of Ar. You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge. He ſtands indicted by the Name of William Acton, &c. (prout in the Indictment mutatis mutandis.)

Mr. Acton. I deſire it may be read in Latin.

Mr. Baron Carter. You had the Indictment Yeſterday read in Latin, you found it no Advantage to you; if you purpoſe any Advantage by it, you may have it read.

Mr. Acton. I deſire my Counſel may hear it read.

Mr. Baron Carter. Let it be read. (Which was accordingly done.)

Mr. Harding. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel for the King. The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for the Murder of John Bromfield. The Indictment ſets forth, That———

We will call our Witneſſes, and don't doubt, if we prove him guilty, but you will find him ſo.

Mr. Ward. Gentlemen of the Jury, you ſee what the Nature of the Indictment is; it is for the inhumane and barbarous Treatment of John Bromfield, of which he died. If we ſhew you, that that was the real and true Cauſe of his Death, it cannot be doubted but that he put him to Death. Gaolers ought to treat their Priſoners with Humanity; they are to confine them in a Place of a ſecure Cuſtody, but not to treat them inhumanely.

On the firſt of March, 1725, Capt. Bromfield became a Priſoner in the Marſhalſea Priſon, Gentlemen; he fell under the Diſpleaſure of Acton, the Priſoner at the Bar, and in order to ſatisfy his Reſentment, he beat him inhumanely and unmercifully, that the Marks and Strokes of the Blows were viſible after his Death. Not ſatisfied with this, he put him in double Irons, which the Man could ſcarce well bear; and put him into a Hole which is damp, dirty, and ſtrait; ſo that he could not ſtand upright, or lie at length: He was kept there for ſeveral Days. The Priſoner then began to relent, and took him into another Place, but did not take the Irons off at that Time; but the Man having contracted an ill State of Health, when the Priſoner thought it would be the Occaſion of his Death, he then took off the Irons; but that was too late, for he ſoon died. This, Gentlemen, will ſhew you the Reaſon why, conſequently, the Coroner's Inqueſt ſhould have ſat upon the Body of Captain Bromfield; but no Coroner's Inqueſt did ſit; and the Reaſon is plain that it did not, for if it had, they would have ſeen that he had come to his Death by a violent Occaſion. If we prove this to be the Caſe, Gentlemen, you will do Juſtice to your Country, and find him guilty.

We will call our Witneſſes to prove the Facts.

William Wheeler was ſworn.

Mr. Ward. Do you know the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Wheeler. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Do you know whether he was Turnkey in 1725?

Mr. Wheeler. He was Turnkey to Mr. Darby.

Mr. Ward. What was the Buſineſs of Turnkey?

Mr. Wheeler. To take care of the Priſon and Priſoners.

Mr. Ward. Did you know Captain Bromfield to be a Priſoner then?

Mr. Wheeler. Yes; he was a Priſoner in the Beginning of the Year 1725.

Mr. Ward. Give an Account of what Uſage you ſaw Captain Bromfield have.

Mr. Wheeler. I lodged in the ſame Room with him. We were locked up; and coming down Stairs there was a Hatch, which was locked, and one Perkins kept the Key of it; and he made Words to let Captain Bromfield come down.

Mr. Ward. What was Perkins?

Mr. Wheeler. Servant to the Gaoler.

Mr. Ward. Go on.

Mr. Wheeler. There were ſome Words paſſed; but at laſt Perkins did let the Captain down, and he went into the Chandler's Shop, and Perkins and the Captain fell into greater Diſputes; and the Captain took a Knife, and jabbed it into Perkins's Breaſt.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee Acton there?

Mr. Baron Carter. What did he do then?

Mr. Wheeler. He dropt down the Penknife, and it was found in the Chandler's Shop. The Captain was carried into the Pound.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where is the Pound?

Mr. Wheeler. The Pound and the Chandler's Shop join.

Mr. Baron Carter. Where was he carried from thence?

Mr. Wheeler. He was carried from the Pound to the Lodge; further I could not ſee. He took him away refractory.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him with Irons on?

Mr. Wheeler. I ſaw him with Irons on in the Evening.

Mr. Foſter. What did Acton order?

Mr. Wheeler. After the Court broke up, Acton came down and ſpoke to the Captain; and aſked him, what was the Reaſon that he ſtabbed the Man in a Paſſion.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee the Fetters on?---Mr. Wheeler. I did.

Mr. Ward. How long was he confined in the Hole?

Mr. Wheeler. He continued in the Hole from the Time he was taken out of the Lodge, till the next Day Nine of the Clock.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee Acton with him during all or any Part of this Time?

Mr. Wheeler. When Acton had ironed him, he turned him over from the Maſter's to the Common Side.

Mr. Ward. How long had he the Irons on?

Mr. Wheeler. He had the Irons on about five Days; Acton ſent him from the Hole to the Common Side, to George's Ward.

Mr. Ward. When did he die?

Mr. Wheeler. He died the latter End of June

Mr. Baron Carter. When did he die?

Mr. Wheeler. About four Years ago, the latter Part of June 1725.

Mr. Baron Carter. Tell me when the Fact was?

Mr. Wheeler. I can't tell the Month.

Mr. Ward. Did you ſee him after he was dead?---Mr. Wheeler. Yes.

Mr. Ward. What Condition was his Body in?

Mr. Wheeler. It was all black.

Mr. Ward. What was the Occaſion of its being black?

Mr. Wheeler. It was ſaid to be the Jaundice.

Mr. Ward. When did it turn black?

Mr. Wheeler. It turned black after his Deceaſe.

Mr. Ward. Was it one continued black, or was it in Streaks?

Mr. Wheeler. It was one intire black.

Mr. Ward. Did the Coroner's Inqueſt ſit upon him?

Mr. Baron Carter. That is no Charge upon the Priſoner. It was not, in Fiens's Caſe; if the Coroner's Inqueſt had ſat on all others, and had not ſat upon this Man, then this had been Evidence; but as 'tis generally omitted, it is no Evidence.

Hugh Martin was ſworn.

Mr. Ward. Did you know Capt. Bromfield?

Mr. Martin. Yes; he was Priſoner about the Beginning of the Year 1725.

Mr. Ward. Give an Account of what Uſage he received from Acton.

Mr. Martin. He was Bedfellow with me in the Nurſery Ward, and on a Court Day he was down in the Chandler's Shop; and one of Acton's Servants would have had him go up into his Ward, but he refuſed to go; and, upon that, the Servant would force him up.

Mr. Ward. What is the Servant's Name?

Mr. Martin. John Perkins.

Mr. Ward. Go on.

Mr. Martin. As they had a Scuffle together, Capt. Bromfield privately ſtabb'd him, and dropt down the Knife. There was an Outcry, and a Doctor was ſent for; and in the Time that he was called, Acton's Servant carried the Captain to the Common Side.

Mr. Ward. Was Acton there at that Time?
Mr. Martin. I did not see Acton.
Mr. Ward. Who took him away?——Mr. Martin. Acton's Servants.
Mr. Ward. Did Acton give any Orders?—Mr. Martin. I don't know.
Mr. Ward. Did you see Acton in the Yard?——Mr. Martin. I saw Acton in the Yard, or between that and the Lodge.
Mr. Ward. Which Way was Captain Bromfield carried?—Mr. Martin. He was taken out of the Chandler's Shop, and carried through the Pound.
Mr. Ward. Was Acton in the Chandler's Shop, or Pound?
Mr. Martin. No.
Mr. Ward. Did you see Acton before Captain Bromfield was carried into the Yard?
Mr. Baron Carter. You say you saw Acton in the Yard, and that Captain Bromfield was put on the Common Side?——Mr. Martin. Yes.
Mr. Ward. After he was brought into the Yard, did you see any Thing done to him?——Mr. Martin. I did not see any Thing done to him, because I could not go out, I was confined.
Mr. Ward. Did you see any body beat him?
Mr. Martin. No, but I saw Irons on him.
Mr. Ward. What Irons?
Mr. Martin. They were double Irons; I saw him come out of the Hole the next Morning with Irons on, between eight and nine o'Clock.
Mr. Ward. Who put him in the Hole?
Mr. Martin. I was not there to see it.
Mr. Ward. What Sort of a Place is the Hole?
Mr. Martin. It is a little Place under the Stairs; a little bigger than a large Coffin in Width and Length.
Mr. Ward. Did he lye or stand?—Mr. Martin. He stood, but could hardly stand upright; he had nothing but the Earth to lie on.
Mr. Ward. Was the Earth wet?——Mr. Martin. It was dampish.
Mr. Ward. How do you know?—Mr. Martin. I saw it at that Time.
Mr. Harding. Was there any Door to it?—Mr. Martin. There was.
Mr. Harding. When it was shut, was there any Place to let in the Light?
Mr. Martin. There was the Key-hole, and a Crevice of the Door.
Mr. Ward. When did he come out?
Mr. Martin. Between eight and nine O'clock the next Morning.
Mr. Ward. Where did he go afterwards?
Mr. Martin. Afterwards he lodged in George's Ward, opposite against the Hole, upon the Left-hand; I think it is called George's Ward.
Mr. Ward. Had he Irons on in George's Ward?—Mr. Martin. Yes.
Mr. Ward. How long?—Mr. Martin. I don't know.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him after he was dead?
Mr. Martin. I did; I helped him into his Coffin. His Body was a sad Spectacle; but I can't say whether by the Distemper or not.
Mr. Ward. What State of Health was he in before he was confined in this Hole?——Mr. Martin. He was in good Health on the Day the Scuffle happened.
Mr. Ward. What sized Man was he?
Mr. Martin. A middle-sized Man.
Mr. Ward. Was he in bodily Health?—Mr. Martin. I did not discern his Body; he was healthy, and eat his Victuals when he had it.
Mr. Ward. Did you hear him complain of any Illness?
Mr. Martin. I never did.
Mr. Harding. How did he appear?
Mr. Martin. As a Man used to appear with Irons on. He was altered miserably after, about a Week before his Death
Mr. Harding. How long was it from the Time of his coming out of the Hole, to the Time of his Death?——Mr. Martin. I believe it may be three Weeks or a Month, to the best of my Knowledge.
Mr. Harding. How soon did you see him after he was taken out of the Hole?——Mr. Martin. I saw him the same Morning he was put in George's Ward.
Mr. Harding. How was he then?——Mr. Martin. He was in good Health, but went cripling by, having the Irons on.
Mr. Harding. What do you apprehend was the Occasion of his Death?
Mr. Martin. I believe the ill Usage, and lying in the Hole, were the Occasion of his Death, and for want of Necessaries.
Mr. Acton. When he was in George's Ward, whether he did not lye in a Hammock?——Mr. Martin. He lay under a Hammock.
Mr. Baron Carter. What Distemper do you look upon it he died of?
Mr. Martin. Some People were apt to judge that he died of the Jaundice.

(John Saunders was sworn.)

Mr. Ward. Did you know Captain Bromfield?
Mr. Saunders. I did; he was a Prisoner on the Master Side; he came on the first of March, 1725.
Mr. Ward. Give an Account of what Usage he had.
Mr. Saunders. It was upon a Court Day, at the latter End of May, Captain Bromfield was brought up from the Master Side to the Common Side, and there locked up.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him brought along?
Mr. Saunders. He was brought along by Rogers and Nichols, and Acton followed, and ordered him to be taken to the Lodge, and ironed, and from thence they brought and put him into the Hole, under the Stairs, adjoining to George's Ward.
Mr. Ward. How long did he continue there?
Mr. Saunders. Three or four Nights and Days.
Mr. Ward. Was he let out in that Time?——Mr. Saunders. He was let out sometimes, when they thought fitting, to ease his Body.
Mr. Ward. What Sort of a Place is it?
Mr. Saunders. It is a Place under the Stairs, which a Woman used to put Greens in; it was not fit for a Christian to be in; there was no Floor, and a Cold Place, and there was nothing to sit on, but what the Woman put her Greens on, which was an old broken Chair.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him there?
Mr. Saunders. I saw him every Day.
Mr. Ward. What sized Man was he?
Mr. Saunders. He was taller than me, and I don't believe he could stand upright in the Hole.
Mr. Ward. Could he lye down?——Mr. Saunders. He could not lye at Length, and he durst not lye down, it was so damp and wet.
Mr. Ward. What did Acton order?
Mr. Saunders. Acton ordered him to be taken to the Lodge, and ironed.
Mr. Baron Carter. What did he order after?
Mr. Ward. Was there any Application made to Acton?
Mr. Saunders. One King attended Bromfield, and Bromfield desired me to go along with him to Acton; and I said it was more proper for King.
Mr. Baron Carter. Answer my Question.
Mr. Saunders. I saw Captain Bromfield carried into the Lodge, and from thence immediately into the Hole.
Mr. Ward. Was Acton there?——Mr. Saunders. I saw Acton there at the Time when he was carried to the Hole.
Mr. Ward. Was he by when the Irons were put on?
Mr. Saunders. He was by then, and ordered the Captain to be carried from the Lodge into the Hole.
Mr. Ward. Was he first ordered to the Lodge?——Mr. Saunders. That Order to carry him to the Lodge was first given.
Mr. Ward. What did he order after?
Mr. Saunders. He then ordered him to be carried into the Hole.
Mr. Ward. Whether you saw any other Force or Violence used to him by any one?——Mr. Saunders. As to this Purpose, Acton came himself, and saw the Irons put on.
Mr. Ward. Were the Irons taken off?——Mr. Saunders. I heard they were taken off by King and Rogers, with Darby's Leave.
Mr. Ward. Where was Captain Bromfield put, when he was taken out of the Hole?——Mr. Saunders. He was carried into George's Ward; I went with him into the Ward.
Mr. Ward. Were his Irons taken off then?
Mr. Saunders. They were taken off when he was ill and weak.
Mr. Ward. What State of Health was he in before he was put into the Hole?——Mr. Saunders. He appeared to me to be a Man in perfect Health; if he had any Distemper, I did not know it.
Mr. Ward. Do you believe his being confined in the Hole, and the ill Usage, were the Occasion of his Death?——Mr. Saunders. I do, in my Conscience, believe they were the Occasion of his Death.
Mr. Ward. How long did he live after this Usage?
Mr. Saunders. I believe, from his being first put into the Hole, to the Day of his Death, was about fourteen Days.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him after he was dead?
Mr. Saunders. I helped to put him into his Coffin, and his Body was of several Colours, black and yellow.
Mr. Ward. Were there any Marks upon his Body?
Mr. Saunders. I saw no Marks.
Mr. Harding. Was you with him when he died?
Mr. Saunders. I staid by him when he died; (he said the Night before he should not live till Morning) and he gave me his Hand, moved his Mouth, but could not speak.
Mr. Ward. You was with him when he died; did he declare then, or at any other Time, what was the Cause of his Death?
Mr. Saunders. The Night before he died he declared, that the Punishment (which was being put in Irons, and confined in the Hole) was the Occasion of his Death. In the Morning he could not speak.
Mr. Ward. Was there any Coroner's Inquest sat on the Deceased?
Mr. Saunders. No, there was no Coroner's Inquest sat upon any one then.
Mr. Baron Carter. If the Coroner's Inquest had sat upon all others, and not sat upon this Man, then this had been Evidence; but as it is not generally so, it is no Evidence.
Mr. Ward. How soon was he buried after he died?
Mr. Saunders. He was hurried away, I believe, the same Day of his Death.

(Martha Johnson was sworn.)

Mr. Ward. Did you know Captain Bromfield?—Mrs. Johnson. Yes.
Mr. Ward. Give an Account of the Usage he had.
Mrs. Johnson. I never saw any thing done to him.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him in Irons?——Mrs. Johnson. I saw him come out of the Hole in Irons, and go into George's Ward.
Mr. Ward. Who brought him out?
Mrs. Johnson. When the Door was unlocked, he came out of himself.
Mr. Ward. Did you see him after he was dead?
Mrs. Johnson. I saw his Body.
Mr. Baron Carter. When you saw his Body, did you see any Marks?
Mrs. Johnson. His Body was covered when I saw it, he did not lie naked.
Mr. Ward. We shall call no more Witnesses; for if what John Saunders says is true, it is a full Proof of the Indictment.
Mr. Baron Carter. You have heard the Charge and Evidence against you, you may now proceed upon your Defence.
Mr. Acton. Captain Bromfield stabbed Perkins, and I went for a Surgeon, and whilst I was gone, Bromfield was put in Irons. Mr. Darby had him put in Irons, till the Man was out of Danger. After this, he was very well; and had the Yellow Jaundice, of which he died. As to the Coroner's Inquest, there was none ever sat upon the Bodies of any Prisoners at that Time.
Mr. Baron Carter. You are not to answer for that.
Mr. Acton. I will call my Witnesses. Call George Carew.

(George Carew was sworn.)

Mr. Acton. My Lord, one Witness says, that Captain Bromfield continued one Night in the Hole, and the other says, he continued two or three Nights.——Did you see Captain Bromfield stab Perkins?
Mr. Carew. Acton went for a Surgeon.
Mr. Acton. What was done whilst I went for a Surgeon?
Mr. Carew. John Littleton, who was Turnkey, came in with two or three more, and took Bromfield from the Pound, and carried him to the Lodge, and ironed him.
Mr. Acton. What was done with him after?
Mr. Carew. He was brought on the Common Side, and there ordered to be put in George's Ward.
Mr. Baron Carter. Who brought him there?
Mr. Carew. John Littleton.

Mr.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did Acton give any Directions for putting him into the Hole?---Mr. Carew. No.

Mr. Baron Carter. Who put him in?

Mr. Carew. John Littleton put him in.

Mr. Baron Carter. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Carew. Three or four Hours, as I heard.

Mr. Acton. How was he after he came out of the Hole, as to his Health?

Mr. Carew. I saw him come out of the Hole, and he was very well in Health.

Mr. Ward. He has contradicted himself; he just now said, he was carried from the Common Side to George's Ward.

Mr. Baron Carter. If the Man mistakes, you must allow him to correct himself. How soon after he came out of the Hole did you see him?

Mr. Carew. The next Day, I saw him walk about the Yard.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask, whether Bromfield was in Irons before I returned back from the Surgeon.

Mr. Carew. Yes, and he was put on the Common Side.

Mr. Acton. When did he die?

Mr. Carew. He was on the Common Side a Month before he had any Sickness.

Mr. Baron Carter. When did he die?---Mr. Carew. In six Weeks Time.

Mr. Baron Carter. What Distemper did he die of?

Mr. Carew. Of the Black Jaundice, as it was given out in the Gaol.

Mr. Acton. Did you see him a Week before he died?

Mr. Carew. Yes, and his Face was yellow and black.

Mr. Ward. You saw him when the Scuffle happened; he was very well then?---Mr. Carew. I can't say he was very healthy in Constitution.

Mr. Ward. Who carried him to the Hole?

Mr. Carew. He was carried by John Littleton to the Place.

Mr. Ward. Were there no Orders given by Acton?

Mr. Carew. Acton was gone before John Littleton came into the Pound for him; he was gone for the Surgeon, as he said he would.

Mr. Ward. Who carried him to the Lodge?

Mr. Carew. Littleton carried him to the Lodge, and after that to the Common Side.

Mr. Ward. Was not the Common Side shut?---Mr. Carew. It was then.

Mr. Ward. How did he get in?---Mr. Carew. He was let in.

Mr. Ward. How long did he continue on the Common Side?

Mr. Carew. Six Weeks.

Mr. Ward. Was he not put in the Hole?

Mr. Carew. I don't know that he was in the Hole at all, for I saw him put on the Common Side.

Mr. Harding. After the Stroke with the Penknife, was not Bromfield seized?---Mr. Carew. No.

Mr. Harding. When did Acton come?

Mr. Carew. Acton came down when Bromfield was in the Pound.

Mr. Harding. How long was Acton gone?---Mr. Carew. Some Minutes.

Mr. Harding. Might not Acton give Orders to Littleton, before he went for the Surgeon?

Mr. Baron Carter. I must not hang a Man upon a might or might not. Did Acton come back with the Surgeon?---Mr. Carew. He brought the Surgeon back, and stood by till Perkins was dressed.

Francis Cartwright was sworn.

Mr. Acton. I desire, he may give an Account of what he knows of this Matter.

Mr. Cartwright. Mr. Acton came out of the Court into the Pound, hearing a Noise, and they told him that Captain Bromfield had stabbed Perkins; Bromfield was ironed, and Littleton put him into the Hole, without Acton's Directions.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was he in the Pound before Acton came down?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did Acton say any Thing about ironing him?

Mr. Cartwright. No, but said, that he would fetch a Surgeon.

Mr. Baron Carter. When was he taken out of the Hole?

Mr. Cartwright. He was taken out in about six Hours. They usually lock up the Prisoners at nine o'Clock at Night, after Lady-Day, and he was taken out, and put in George's Ward, about that Time.

Mr. Baron Carter. How long did he remain there?

Mr. Cartwright. He staid there three or four Months after the Thing was done.

Mr. Baron Carter. Who used to lock the Prisoners up?

Mr. Cartwright. The Servants to Acton used to lock them up every Night.

Mr. Baron Carter. Answer me another Question. What State of Health was Captain Bromfield in?---Mr. Cartwright. He was always a very weakly Man, but very mischievous.

Mr. Baron Carter. When was he taken ill?

Mr. Cartwright. After I was gone.

Mr. Baron Carter. Was he ill whilst you was there?

Mr. Cartwright. He was not ill, only poor and weak.

Mr. Ward. When was Bromfield ironed?---Mr. Cart. Littleton ironed him, while Acton was gone for the Surgeon, and put him into the Hole.

Mr. Ward. Where was he ironed?

Mr. Cartwright. He was carried first into the Lodge and ironed, and then put into the Hole.

Mr. Ward. Where is the Hole?---Mr. Cart. On the Common Side.

Mr. Ward. Did you see George Carew there?!

Mr. Cartwright. I don't know whether he followed him down.

Mr. Ward. Did Carew go along with Littleton, when he put him into the Hole?---Mr. Cartwright. I can't say, whether he did or not.

Joseph Wood, a Surgeon, was sworn.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask him, my Lord, if I came to fetch him.

Mr. Baron Carter. What say you to that?

Mr. Wood. Acton came to me, and desired me to go along with him; which I did, and found a Person stabbed in the Breast. The next Day I went to the Person who had wounded him, and I asked him how he could be so barbarous.

Mr. Baron Carter. That is not material. What State of Health did Bromfield seem to be in?

Mr. Wood. Bromfield seemed to be pretty well in Health.

Mr. Acton. Where did you see Bromfield?---Mr. Wood. In the Lodge.

Mr. Acton. Did you say any Thing to him?

Mr. Wood. I said, I find you are ironed: I think you deserve it; and he said, that Darby ordered him to be ironed, and he was glad Acton went for a Surgeon.

Mr. Ward. What Time did you see Bromfield?

Mr. Wood. The next Morning, about nine o'Clock.

Mr. Ward Where did you see him?---Mr. Wood. In the Yard.

Mr. Ward. How long did you stay there?

Mr. Wood. I staid there a trifling Time, about half an Hour, and left him there.

Lewis Jones.

Mr. Acton. I desire, my Lord, he may give an Account of what he knows as to Captain Bromfield.

Mr. Jones. Bromfield came in April from the Master Side to the Common Side, and was put in Irons by John Littleton.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask what State of Health he was in.

Mr. Jones. Bromfield was in a sad State of Health, he fell sick of the Gaol Distemper, he had the Jaundice on him.

Mr. Acton. What did he die of?---Mr. Jones. A Fever.

Mr. Acton. How do you know?

Mr. Jones. I am a Surgeon; I took Notice of him continually.

Mr. Acton. How did I behave myself to Captain Bromfield?

Mr. Jones. You was kind to him at all Times.

Mr. Acton. Please to ask, my Lord, how I behaved myself to the Prisoners in general.

Mr. Jones. Acton would never suffer any Thing of Hardship.

Mr. Acton. Have you seen any Acts of Friendship?

Mr. Jones. Both your Pocket and your Table have been made use of.

Mr. Baron Carter. Did you see Captain Bromfield put in the Hole?

Mr. Jones. I saw Nobody put in the Hole.

Mr. Ward. Did not you see Bromfield in the Hole?

Mr. Jones. I never saw him in the Hole.

Mr. Harding. I beg leave to make an Observation (and was going on).

Mr. Baron Carter. You can't observe; I don't think you have used me me well before. A Gentleman that is a young Counsel, should open no more than the Record.

Mr. Harding. I opened no more than the Fact.

Mr. Baron Carter. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for the Murder of John Bromfield. The Indictment sets forth,——

You are to consider, whether you have sufficient Evidence, to induce you to believe him Guilty of this Fact. Whatever is opened by the Counsel, that is not proved to you, is to have no Weight with you. It is set forth, that he was beat, and that the Marks and Strokes were upon him. I don't observe by the Evidence, that any Stroke was given to the Man at all.

Gentlemen, let the Consequence be what it will, Evidence is to determine every Man's Fate.

The Indictment sets forth, that Darby was Keeper of the Gaol on the 15th of July, and that Bromfield died the second.

The Fact is charged preceding to that Time; the Fact is laid in April, and all this is laid to be in the Space of five Days.

Wheeler, the first Evidence for the King; he says, that Acton was Turnkey, and Servant to Darby; that he knew Bromfield; that he lodged in the Nursery, and coming down the Stairs, there was a Hatch upon the Stairs, and Perkins kept the Key; that he and the Captain quarrelled, and that they went into the Chandler's Shop, and quarrelled further, and then Bromfield stabbed him with a Pen-knife, and thereupon dropt the Knife. He was carried from thence to the Pound, and carried from thence away to the Lodge, and was refractory; but he did not hear Acton order any Thing.

He says, Gentlemen, that he saw Fetters on him, when he came out of the Hole the next Morning; and that he was turned from the Master's to the Common Side; that his Body was all over black, and turned so after his Decease. He says, that it was not in Streaks, but one continued Blackness.

The second Witness, Hugh Martin, says, that he knew Captain Bromfield; that he was his Bedfellow; that he saw the Captain in the Chandler's Shop, and Perkins refused him a Favour, and Bromfield stabbed him; that he did not see Acton there, but saw him in the Yard, and saw him go to the Court-House. That he saw Bromfield on the Common Side with Fetters on, and saw him in the Hole, but saw no Beating; that he continued in there all Night, and the Hole is a little Place, has no Floor, and is damp; that there is no Place to let in the Air and Light, but the Key-hole and Crevice. He says, that he saw Bromfield in George's Ward in Irons; that it was three Weeks or a Month before he died; that he wanted Necessaries, and that he was apt to judge he died of the Jaundice.

On the 1st of March, 1725, Saunders says, that Bromfield became a Prisoner; that Nichols and Littleton brought Bromfield along; and that he saw him ironed by Acton's Orders. This is the only Witness that says Acton ordered it. That Bromfield, he believes, was in the Hole three Days, it might be a little longer; that the Hole was under a Pair of Stairs, there was no Light, nothing in it, but a Piece of a Chair that a Woman set her Greens on: That Bromfield could not stand upright, that he dared not lie down, because it was so wet; that King and Bromfield spoke to Acton to take the Irons off, but he could not do it without Darby's Order. It was his Opinion that Bromfield was well, and that the hard Usage was the Occasion of his Death. That he saw his Body after he was dead, and it was of several Colours. He was asked, if he saw any Sign of a Stroke on his Body, and he said that it was all of a Colour. He says that Bromfield told him, that the Usage of the Hole, and the Fetters, where the Occasion of his Death, the Night before he died. So that what he said is Evidence, and ought to have its Weight; such Cruelty should not have been continued.

Martha Johnson; she says, that she saw Bromfield come out of the Hole in Irons.

So that there is but one Witness that says he was put there by Acton's Order; and the Prisoner insists, that he did not order him there; and if he did, he did not die by Duress, but by the Jaundice.

George

George Carew, the first Witness for the Prisoner, says, he was there; and Acton went for a Surgeon, and Littleton came from the Lodge, and took Bromfield there, and ironed him, and put him into George's Ward, but that Acton gave no Directions; that he was in there three or four Hours, and that he saw him well the next Day, and that he walked about the Yard. That he fell ill of the Jaundice, and his Face was black and yellow a Week before he died. He was asked by the King's Counsel, if he was a healthful Man? And he said, he was not. He says, that Acton was gone before Littleton came; so that in his Opinion, Acton did nothing; and says, that Bromfield died of the Jaundice.

The second Witness for the Prisoner says, that he saw Acton run out of the Court into the Pound, and Acton said he would go for a Surgeon. That Littleton ironed him, and put him into the Hole, and it was all done before Acton came from the Surgeon. He was there before Littleton came, and said, he would go and fetch a Surgeon. He says, that Bromfield was in the Hole six Hours; that he locked him up every Night, and he looked upon him to be a weak Man.

Wood says, that he saw Bromfield the next Day, and talked with him about Irons; and he said he was ironed by the Direction of Mr. Darby; and that Acton was always very kind to him.

Jones says, that Littleton ironed Bromfield; and that it was in April, and he died in June. He says, that he was a Surgeon, and that Acton was always very kind to the Deceased.

Gentlemen, in the first place you are to consider, whether the Man was put into the Hole by the Direction of Acton; and in the next Place, if it was done by Acton, and this was not the Occasion of his Death, you will acquit him as to that. But if you believe Acton ordered him into his Hole, and that it was the Occasion of his Death, he was guilty of Duress; but that will be contrary, four Witnesses to one.

The Jury agreed upon their Verdict immediately, without going out of Court.

Clerk of Arraigns. Gentlemen, are you you all agreed in your Verdict?
Omnes. Yes.
Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?
Omnes. Our Foreman.
Cl. of Ar. Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; How say you; Is he Guilty of the Murder and Felony whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?
Foreman. Not Guilty.

XVI. The Trial of William Acton, for the Murder of Robert Newton, before Mr. Baron Carter, at the Assizes held at Kingston upon Thames, for the County of Surry, August 2, 1729.

Die Sabbati, 2 Die Augusti 1729.

The said William Acton having been before arraigned for the Murder of Robert Newton, the Counsel proceeded as follows:

Mr. Harding. MY Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the King. This is an Indictment against William Acton for the Murder of Robert Newton. The Indictment sets forth——

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment against the Prisoner at the Bar, William Acton, for the Murder of one Robert Newton. It sets forth that Darby was principal Gaoler, and Acton under him. Newton and Hartness were Chums or Ward-mates: and whilst they were there, one of them attempted to escape; they were prevented in that; and Acton clapped on Newton very severe Shackles, and he was ordered into a Place called the Strong Room, a Place, we think to satisfy you, was a Room not at all fit to put Persons into. We say it is a very bad Place, and a very dangerous Place to the Health; there this Newton was confined for a considerable Time; there he was locked up, and the Key kept by an inferior Officer of the Gaol. And Acton was so very sensible he was in a declining Way, that purely for his own Safety, he first ordered him out of that Place into the Lodge, then carried him into the Sick Ward. He continued there some time, and complained of this Hardship, this Imprisonment, and the Hardship put upon him by Acton; and that that Rogue of a Man was his Murderer: For that he had applied to the Judge of the Court, and he was pleased to make an Order, after being very angry with what Acton had done, to release him out of his Hardship; but he, notwithstanding, disobeyed that Order. Therefore, if we call our Witnesses to shew he contracted by this Usage an Illness of which he languished and died, it will remain on the Prisoner to shew what he died of, and that he died of some other Distemper; and then you will judge of the Fact.

Mr. Ward. I am Counsel of the same Side, and we will call our Witnesses.

Mr. Marſh. When you worked in the Strong Room, had you any other Place to work in?

Mr. Wal. I had another Place to work in, in George's Ward, but I was hunted about by other Priſoners. I would chooſe to lie there, and have lain there for a Week together, rather than lie in a Place where there are thirty or forty; for it is better to lie in a clean Place where there are not ſo many.

Mr. Ward. You ſay, you furniſhed Thompſon with a Bed; How came you to have a Bed to ſpare?

Mr. Wal. I purchaſed ſeveral Beds, and let them out to hire.

Mr. Bar. Car. He ſaid he ſent in a Bed like an Upholder.

Mr. Ward. I was really ſurprized, that a Priſoner ſhould have more than one.

Mr. Ward. Where did Newton lye after he came out of the Strong Room?---Mrs. Hartneſs. My Huſband and Newton were Bedfellows.

Mrs. Berkley. Yes.
Mr. Baron Carter. When did he die?
Mrs. Berkley. He died in November.
Mr. Baron Carter. Did he complain of any hard Uſage?
Mrs. Berkley. No; he went about with his Fetters.

Mr. Ward. Have you no Office in the Gaol?

Mr. Ward. How came they to chooſe you?
Mrs. Berk. They took me to be a ſober, modeſt Woman, and ſo choſe me.
Mr. Baron Carter. You ſee you have an Anſwer; ſhe is a ſober, modeſt Woman.
Mr. Ward. But 'tis difficult to get the Truth out of her.

John Boſwell was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Did you build the Strong Room?
Mr. Boſwell. I did; it was made to put Pirates in.
Mr. Acton. Is it a wholeſome Place?
Mr. Boſwell. It is a very wholeſome Place; it is nine Inches from the Ground.

Mr. Morris was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Do you know the Strong Room?

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk him, what Buſineſs he is.

—— Overſton was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. What did you hear Mr. Demotet ſay concerning me?
Mrs. Overſton. I heard Mr. Demotet ſay, he would hang Acton, right or wrong, to be an Example to all other Gaolers; and that he was maintained by ſome Gentlemen to hang him.
Mr. Ward. How long ago was it that you heard him ſay this?
Mrs. Over. It was the fourteenth Day of July laſt, in the Cellar of the Fleet Priſon.
Mr. Marſh. How came you to be in the Fleet?
Mrs. Over. I went backward and forward to the Fleet.
Mr. Marſh. What are you?
Mrs. Over. A Servant, I live in Fetter-Lane.

Mr. Demotet was called, to confront Overſton.

Mr. Marſh. Do you know that Woman?---Mr. Demetet. I do.
Mr. Marſh. What was it you ſaid to her?
Mr. Demotet. I ſaid, I would ſay nothing but the Truth, and do nothing but what the Law required.
Mr. Marſh. Overſton, What was it Demotet ſaid to you on the 14th of July, in the Fleet Priſon?
Mrs. Overſton. He was in the Cellar there, and ſaid he would ſwear againſt Mr. Acton, right or wrong, in order to make an Example of him.
Mr. Demotet. I ſaid, I would ſay what was Truth.

Elizabeth Clayton was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. What did you hear Demotet ſay?
Mrs. Clayton. In the Cellar in the Fleet Priſon?
Mr. Marſh. Miſtreſs, hold; Was not you a Priſoner in the Marſhalſea?
Mrs. Clayton. I was a Priſoner there twelve Months; but hearing that Demotet had ſworn againſt Acton, I had a mind to talk with him about it; and he ſaid, that Acton had killed a hundred, and that he would be revenged of him, if he ſwore himſelf to the Devil.
Mr. Marſh. She was a Priſoner in the Marſhalſea; how came ſhe into the Fleet?
Mr. Baron Carter. How came you there?
Mr. Clayton. I went to Mrs. Overſton, ſhe was at one Mr. Solas Wife's.
Mr. Dem. (In a Paſſion) She is an old Bawd, and brought Whores to Solas.
Mr. Baron Carter. You muſt not behave yourſelf ill to Witneſſes.
Mr. Demotet. What ſhe has ſaid, is not true.

John Hull was ſworn.

Mr. Acton. Pleaſe to aſk him, what Demotet declared to him.
Mr. Hull. Mr. Demotet declared, that he would hang Acton right or wrong, to be an Example to all other Gaolers.
Mr. Ward. There is a very remarkable Difference in the Witneſſes, in relation to the Place the Man was ſuppoſed to go to, after he came out of the Strong Room.
Mr. Baron Carter. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for the Murder of Robert Newton; the Indictment ſets forth, that he put him, againſt his Will, into a Place called the Strong Room, and kept him there fourteen Days; that there were unwholeſome, noiſome Smells; that it was damp and wet, and that he got a Diſtemper there whereof he died. To prove this, they called ſeveral Witneſſes. The firſt, was Captain Tudman; he ſays, that he knew Newton and Hartneſs, and that they broke out; and in a Month or two after, Newton was taken again, and brought into the Lodge, and ironed, and then carried into the Strong Room; he ſays, that there is a little Hole to put in Drink; and ſays, that before Newton went into this Place, he was a hale, ſtrong young Fellow.
Carr; he ſays, that he ſaw Newton in the Marſhalſea; that he came ironed out of the Lodge, and that he was brought out by Rogers, and carried to the Strong Room, and he, and Hartneſs, remained there two Court Days; that Newton was a ſtrong, hale Fellow, and that he fell ill in the Strong Room; Gentlemen, it was of the Gaol Diſtemper, which he thought the Jaundice, ſuch as they were uſed to, no uncommon Diſeaſe. He was aſked then, whether the Strong Room was opened on Days, and locked up on Nights; he ſays, that after two or three Days, the Door was opened on Days.——He ſays, Gentlemen, that there was no Drain to carry off the Water; that the Sun does not viſit it; that it is built in a Corner in the Yard, and the Sun does not ſhine upon it, and ſays, that Wet comes from the Top; that he was with Newton a Week before he died, and Newton ſaid, that the Confinement was the Occaſion of his Death, and the Witneſs thinks ſo too. He ſays, Gentlemen, Hartneſs was all the Time in the Strong Room, and ironed, and caught no Diſtemper.
Edward Phillips ſays, that he knew the Strong Room; that there is a Sort of a Pool, where the Water ſettles, that comes from the Neceſſary-houſe that is under it, ſo makes it damp: and ſays, that it was ſometimes open: That, upon aſking him his Opinion, if there were any noiſome Smells, he ſays, that it was a noiſome Place, and not fit for a human Creature to

to be in. He says, that the Irons were small; and he believes Newton was in the Strong Room ten or twelve Days, and that it was so long before he was taken ill; that Hartness was not so strong a Man as Newton, and he received no Injury by being there; but that Newton's Confinement was the Occasion of his Sickness.

Robert Smith says, that he knew Newton; that he was a lusty, hale Man; but he can't say that he was sick in the Strong Room; he was in it, and saw it opened.

Mr. Demotet says, that he knew Newton; that he broke out, and was retaken, and was put in the Strong Room, and continued there fourteen or fifteen Days, on the Ground, without having a Bed; that he came out of the Lodge ironed, and Acton came and followed him, and saw him locked up in the Strong Room; that his Wife came to see him, and he died in three or four Days after he came into the sick Ward; and that the Occasion of his Death was Vermin and Lice; that the Water came in at the Top, and it was not fit to put a Man in; that the Floor was bad. He says, that he himself was in the Strong Room about ten Minutes, and it was infested with Rats.

Martha Johnson; she says, she never saw him confined.

John Johnson; he says, that he saw Newton once in the Strong Room; that it is a close Place; that there is no Air, and it has the same noisome Smell as the Common Side, and the Door was opened for him to go and shave him.

Ruth Butler says, that she knew Newton; that he was retaken and put in the Strong Room; that Irons were put on his Legs; that he fell sick there, and died in three or four Days in the sick Ward; that she can't tell the Occasion of his Death, unless the Injury caused from his Confinement. She says, that the Strong Room is boarded at the Top, but that the Rain comes in. Gentlemen, she says, what was not mentioned before, that he complained of his Legs.

Nicholas Purden said nothing to the purpose.

Cummins said, that it was an ugly Room; that it was never swept, and was wet and dirty.

This is the Substance of the Evidence for the King.

The Prisoner is insisted upon to be a severe Man; it is said, that he put Newton into this Place; now says he, if I did not do it, I am not affected.

What was the Consequence; if he did not put him into Irons, he put him in the Strong Room.

Holmes, the first Witness for the Prisoner, says, he was there when the Man came back, and said, that Darby ordered him to be put in Irons; admit he had given Orders, the Irons were not of so extraordinary a Weight; the Room was not so bad.

The Witnesses called for the King all agree, that he fell ill in the Strong Room; now the Witnesses for the Prisoner will shew you, that the Man was taken out of the Strong Room, and was taken into the Duke's Ward, where he remained a considerable Time; that when Hartness and Newton were uneasy under the Irons, they desired to have Relief, and applied to Darby, and he ordered the Irons to be taken off. That is a Confirmation that Darby had the sole Power. This is the Manner of the Evidence in his Favour. If Darby did do it, Acton was not to answer for it.

The first Witness is at a Loss as to the Time of the Man's Death. When he came in, according to the Evidence given for the King, he remained fourteen or fifteen Days in the Strong Room, and was carried to the Sick Ward, and died in three or four Days.

Holmes says, he was in very good Health; he drank with him several Times, and played at Trap-ball; and he believes he remained six Weeks before he died, and that he died of the Gaol Distemper. He says, that he was retaken the latter End of August, and died in November; here are two Months complete; and the Witnesses for the Crown account but for six Weeks. He says, that it is the best Room on the Common Side for two or three to be in; and that several, of his own Knowledge, desired to be there. The Counsel pressed him very much, to name any one Person that was there, by his own Desire; so he said, that one Thompson was there. He says, that it could not rain through, because it was just built.

Walter says, that he knew Newton in the Duke's Ward; and says, that he was there about four Weeks; that he heard him make no Complaint, but just before he was carried there: He had a good Opinion of the Strong Room, and requested to work there, and says, that he let Newton have a Bed; which contradicts all the other Evidences. He was asked about the Beds, and said, that he got them by his Savings; and that he let them out to hire.

Hartness says, that she knows very well that Newton had a Bed; and her Husband and he lay together, and a Captain was there; that she never found the Room wet, nor any thing like it; that they went out of Days, and were locked up in the Strong Room of Nights; that Newton was six Weeks or two Months, before he died, in the Duke's Ward; that her Husband received no Damage. She says, that it was a clean Room; that she never heard Newton complain of his Irons, or ill Usage of the Prisoner. She says, that she went to Darby to have the Irons taken off, and he ordered them to be taken off, while she stood by, and gave Directions accordingly.

Burton; she says, that she saw Newton in the Strong Room, and she saw a Bed; so there are three Witnesses as to that. She says, she washed the Room every Day; it is very extraordinary, after so many have swore it to be very dirty. She says, that he never did complain of the Prisoner; that he went into the Duke's Ward for seven Weeks; that she was Nurse, and that he died in November, and died of an Ague and Fever; that she laid him out, and never saw a finer Corpse; and that the Rain never came into the Strong Room. In order to take off Part of her Testimony, she was asked, Whether she was not obliged to the Prisoner at the Bar? She said, that she was Nurse, and that she had Three-pence a-piece of those she took care of; and that she was chosen by the free Election of the Prisoners.

The Prisoner called two or three others, to the Strong Room.

Boswell says, he built it, and that it was very wholesome, and it was twenty-four Feet from the Common Sewer.

Morris says, the Strong Room was very wholesome, and that it was better than any Ground-Room on the Common Side, and that there was a Tarpaulin at Top.

Overston was called to impeach the Credit of Demotet. She says, that in the Fleet Cellar, she heard him say, that he would hang Acton right or wrong, as an Example to other Gaolers, to deter them from being Rogues. The Prisoner called two others. Elizabeth Clayton; she heard him say, that he would hang Acton, tho' he sent himself to the Devil; and the other, John Hull, heard him say, that he would hang Acton right or wrong.—— Demotet, being called to confront these Witnesses, denies he ever said what they assert he did.

This is the Evidence on both Sides; therefore you will consider if Acton caused him to be put into the Strong Room; for if he did not, then he must be acquitted: If he did put him in, you are to consider, whether this Place is such a Place as they have set forth.

There is not a single Witness for the King that does not give the same Account of the Strong Room: It is pretty extraordinary, that to a Man the Witnesses should remain in one Opinion for the self same Purpose; their Words were, that it was not fit for a Human Creature to be in.

The Witnesses for the King say, that he died in two or three Days after he was taken out of the Strong Room; the others say, that he lived two Months; therefore consider, if he was put in this Room, and it was not the Occasion of his Death, he ought not to be found Guilty, in that he was very well for a Month, some say six Weeks after; and that he fell sick of the Gaol Distemper in the Sick Ward.

If he did nothing in relation to the Irons, he must be acquitted as to that.

If the Room was such as was fit for a Man to be put in, there was no Harm in putting him in there.

If he did not die by Duress, by being put in that Room, I believe he must be acquitted on that Head.

If he was put in the Strong Room by Acton, against his Will, and it was so unwholesome that he caught a bad Distemper, and died of it, you must find him Guilty.

The Jury agreed upon their Verdict immediately, without going out of Court.

Clerk of Arraigns. Gentlemen, are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Clerk of Arraigns. Who shall say for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Clerk of Arraigns. William Acton, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you, Is he Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

XVII. The Trial of William Acton, for the Murder of James Thompson, at the Assizes held at Kingston upon Thames, in Surrey, before the Hon. Mr. Baron Carter, August 2, 1729.

Die Sabbati, 2 Augusti, 1729.

William Acton having been before arraigned for the Murder of James Thompson, and pleaded Not Guilty, the Counsel proceeded as follows.

Mr. Middleton. MY Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the King. The Indictment sets forth--- We will call our Witnesses to prove the Fact.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence for the King against the Prisoner at the Bar for murdering one James Thompson, is to this Effect: That the poor Man had the Misfortune to be troubled with a Diabetes; and, according to the Account given of that Distemper, it does occasion Persons to void a great deal of Water. The Prisoner was so far from compassionating of him, that he put him against his Will into the Strong Room, and he lay there ten Days or more in a bad Condition; that no Regard was had to him; he was there suffered to continue without a Bed till his Left Side mortified. It was a very bad Place. Some of the Witnesses for the Prisoner did give an Account of it, that it was built for Felons and Pirates: This Place was built up for them, that is now said by the Prisoner to be the best Room in this Gaol. One of the Witnesses in the last Cause spoke of the Pirates being put there. When Thompson was in this Place, this was done; his miserable Condition was represented to Acton, and he made use of a very harsh Expression, 'Damn him, let him lie there, and perish.' We will call our Witnesses to shew the Fact, and it must be left to you to consider whether he is Guilty or not.

There was so little Care taken of this Man, that after he was carried into the Duke's Ward, he was suffered to be put again into this Place, and there died.

Edmund Cummins was sworn.

Mr. Marsh. Did you know James Thompson?---Mr. Cummins. Yes.

Mr. Marsh. Whose Care was he under?

Mr. Cummins. He was under the Care of Acton.

Mr. Marsh. Who put Thompson in the Strong Room?

Mr. Cummins. He was put in the Strong Room out of the Ward.

Mr. Marsh. What was the Occasion of his being put there?

Mr. Cummins. I don't know what was the Reason of his being put there; but Acton gave that Reason, that the Ward Company complained of him.

Mr. Baron Carter. He was asked, who put him into the Strong Room? And he told you the Ward Company.

Mr. Cummins. My Lord I could not say so.

Mr. Baron Carter. I heard you say so.

Mr. Cummins. My Lord, I heard you——just now indulge a Witness for the Prisoner to explain herself. I thought your Lordship would not take so much notice of one of the King's Evidence making a Mistake. I came here to speak the Truth; and if your Lordship will not give me leave to explain myself, I will go down.

Mr. Baron Carter. Indeed you behave yourself very impertinently; but go on.

Mr. Cummins. Mr. Acton did say that was the Reason, that the Ward Company complained of him for making Water.

Mr. Marſh. How long was Thompſon in the Strong Room?

Mr. Cummins. He was there five or ſix Days; I ſaw him whilſt he was alive there; he lay there on Nights, and had no Bed.

Mr. Marſh. When you ſaw him there, what Condition was he in?

Mr. Cum. I ſaw him in a bad Condition.

Mr. Marſh. Where did he die?——Mr. Cum. In the Strong Room.

Mr. Marſh. Did you hear Acton ſay any thing about it?---Mr. Cum. No.

Mr. Marſh. Did you ſee him after he was dead?---Mr. Cum. I did.

Mr. Marſh. How long was he dead when you ſaw him?

Mr. Cum. He was alive over Night, and I ſaw him dead the next Morning. He had only a Night-Gown with him.

Mr. Marſh. Did you ſee his Face?

Mr. Cum. His Face was diſfigured with the Rats; I ſaw the Marks.

Mr. Marſh. What was the Occaſion of Thompſon's Death?

Mr. Cum. He might die by lying in that Room.

Mr. Marſh. What do you, in your Opinion, believe to be the Occaſion of his Death?

Mr. Cum. I believe his being put there was the Occaſion of his Death.

Mr. Marſh. How ſoon was he buried after he died?

Mr. Cum. He was hurried away in an Hour or two after he died, and was buried.

Mr. Marſh. Who gave any Orders for hurrying him away?

Mr. Cum. The Men carried him away that uſed to do it.

Mr. Marſh. When was he carried away?

Mr. Cum. The very ſame Morning he died; in two Hours after.

Mr. Marſh. How long was he in the Strong Room?

Mr. Cum. Five, ſix, or ſeven Days.

Mr. Marſh. Had he any Bed to lie on?——Mr. Cum. He had not.

Mr. Marſh. I aſk you, whether you ſaw him carried to the Strong Room, and whether Acton was preſent?

Mr. Cum. Mr. Acton was there; and the Man was unwilling to go, and deſired to ſtay; but Acton ſaid, he ſhould not.

Matthew Brandon was ſworn.

Mr. Marſh. Did you know Captain Thompſon?

Mr. Brandon. I did; he was in the ſame Ward I belonged to, which is called Pump Ward.

Mr. Marſh. Had he any Infirmity?

Mr. Bran. When he was in the Ward he made a little Water; and ſome Complaint was made, and he was turned into the Strong Room.

Mr. Marſh. Did you viſit him when he was there?

Mr. Bran. Several Times.

Mr. Marſh. Did you hear Acton give any Orders about his being there?

Mr. Bran. I did not.

Mr. Marſh. How long did he lie there?

Mr. Bran. Ten Days; then he was remanded back to his Ward, and lay there one Night; and then remanded back, and put in the Strong Room again.

Mr. Marſh. Did he tell you any thing?

Mr. Bran. He told me, that he was unwilling to go back to the Strong Room, for that it would be his Death.

Mr. Johnſon. I ſpoke to him two Days before he went there; and he ſaid, he ſhould be glad if Acton would grant him the Favour of lying there.

Mr. Baron Carter. Had he a Bed there?

Mr. Johnſon. I ſaw him carry his Bed there; and he thanked God that Mr. Acton was ſo good to let him lie there, for he hoped it would be the ſaving of his Life.

Ralph Malban was ſworn.

Mr. Baron Carter. What do you know of Captain Thompſon?

Mr. Malban. I can ſay nothing, but that when I was in the Ward one Night I ſaw a great deal of Abuſe offered him; and the next Day I asked him how he came to ſuffer ſuch Abuſes; and he ſaid he had a noiſome Diſtemper, and ſo they abuſed him; and in a Month or three Weeks I ſaw him again, and he then ſaid, he had Leave to get into the Strong Room, and thanked God for it.

Thomas Fletcher was ſworn.

Mr. Baron Carter. What do you know of Thompſon?

Mr. Fletcher. I know Thompſon had the Diabetes, and that his Fellow-Priſoners did often reflect upon him. I was out of Priſon, and then came in again, and I asked Thompſon how he did; he ſaid, very well as to his Health, except as to the Diabetes; and Acton had given him Leave to lie in the Strong Room.

Here the Priſoner reſted his Defence.

Mr. Baron Carter. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted for the Murder of one James Thompſon. The Indictment ſets forth, that the ſaid James Thompſon died by Dureſs, ſo that the Priſoner was thereby Guilty of Murder.

There were ſeveral Witneſſes called for the King. The firſt was Edmund Cummins; he ſays, that he knew Thompſon very well; that he was in the Pump-Ward, and that he was put in the Strong Room, as Acton ſaid for having the Diabetes, ſome of the Ward complaining of his being naſty; that he came out ſometimes, and he ſaw him after he died; and he was very quickly buried; and he ſaw a Mark upon his Face. He ſays, that Acton did order his Burial, becauſe he was carried by thoſe that uſually carry Corpſe to be buried. He ſays, that he was reſolved to ſtay in the Ward, and would not have gone out, but Acton would not let him ſtay.

Matthew Brandon ſays, he ſaw Thompſon in the Strong Room, and he did hear the Priſoner order him to be put there. He ſays, that there was a Complaint of the Ward that he was nauſeous: That two Days before his Death he could not ſtir at all; that he had a ſore Place on his left Side, and he ſays, that he complained if he ſhould go there again it would be the Death of him. He ſays, that Wilſon and Cummins went to Acton, and they repreſented the Condition he was in, and deſired he might go to the Sick Ward; and Acton ſaid to Wilſon, Go about your Buſineſs. He ſays, that there was a Mark upon his Noſe and Ear, and the Wound was not ſo angry after his Death as it was before.

Jennings ſays, he was not ſo ill when he came there, but only had the Diabetes, and the Priſoner ordered him into the Strong Room where he continued eight or ten Days, and then came out for two Days; and then was ordered back by the Priſoner. He deſired Acton to have Thompſon removed; and Acton ſaid, Let him die like a Son of a Bitch, and be damned. He ſaid, he died the next Morning, and died in this Strong Room. That the Strong Room was ſeldom waſhed, it was rough-ſwept; but what he means by that I cannot ſee: He ſays, that it was not dry over Head.

Mary Seaſband ſays, that he was removed into the Strong Room, and Acton gave no Orders concerning him; there was ſome Wet under him, but ſhe does not explain from whence it came, therefore it might come from the Diſtemper. She ſays, that his Side mortified; that there was ſome Diſfiguration on the Side of his Face, it was eat by the Rats. She thinks it a very ſtrong Room, and it was not a proper Place to put any Perſon in; that it was never waſhed; that about Six in the Morning he died, and was buried about Ten.

Snape cannot ſay, whether Thompſon went by his own Conſent or not; but that he went from the Pump-Ward to the Strong Room, and ſtaid nine or ten Days, and then ſtaid two or three Days in the Pump-Ward, and went back again, and ſtaid nine or ten Days both Times. He ſays, he came in and out when he pleaſed. He ſays, that he ſaw his Corpſe, and one Side of his Thigh was black, he ſaw him three or four four Days before he died, and he never complained of his Thigh: It was very wonderful he ſhould not complain of it.

Eleanor Ewer ſaid nothing to the Purpoſe.

Bacon ſays, that he came in the latter End of May 1726, and Thompſon and he were in the Pump-Ward; that Thompſon remained there three Weeks, and was carried from thence into the Strong Room; that he has ſeen twenty Rats there at a Time; when he had been there ten Days he came back, and ſtaid in the Pump Ward two Days, and then returned; that he had no Bed, or but a little Piece of one. He ſays, that Thompſon complained of the ſevere Uſage, and that it would be the Occaſion of his Death; but not of the Sore. He ſays, the Room was made on purpoſe to puniſh People for great Crimes againſt the Government; and Thompſon told him, that it would be the Occaſion of his Death.

Purchace ſays, that he ſaw him removed, and ſaid he walked there; that he viſited him very frequently, and the Room was not waſhed all the Time he was there a Priſoner; that there was no Complaint of his Sore, but of his Uſage; he ſays, that it was wet, and the Rain came in at Top.

Wilſon ſays, Thompſon was in the Pump Ward; that he was very hearty and merry, and gave ſome Inſtances of his Mirth; that he was put in the Strong Room, and was in a bad Condition. He gives you an Account of the Floor; that there was Water there; that ſome came down from above, and ſome was made by Thompſon. He ſays, that he was locked up on Nights, but not on Days; he went to Acton to intreat him to remove him, and he bid him hold his Tongue; he told him he ſhould die if he was not put in another Place; and thereupon he went to the Nurſe of the Sick Ward, but ſhe refuſed his coming there. He ſays, there was a Tarpaulin put on the Top of the Strong Room about a Year ago, and before that the Wet came in, and he believes that this was the Cauſe of his Illneſs and Death.

Phillips ſays, that Thompſon was troubled with a Diabetes; that he was in a miſerable Condition; that he was in the Room ten Days before he died; and that he laid upon the Ground all the Time, and he was put there by the Priſoner's Order; and that he never ſaw the Room waſhed. He ſays, that he might have been put in a better Place, for there was Room in the Sick Ward; and he might have been put in a Room againſt his own Ward, for it was empty.

Gentlemen of the Jury, you will conſider the State of this Indictment; and that there are neceſſary to be taken Notice of two Things.

The firſt is, that Thompſon was put in the Strong Room againſt his Conſent.

The next is, that the Confinement there, was the Occaſion of his Death.

The Priſoner ſays, that he was very far from putting him there, for he aſked Leave to go; ſo that a Charge is laid upon him who never gave Thompſon any Offence, or uſed any hard Words to him; therefore he cannot be ſo barbarous as repreſented.

There are eleven Witneſſes that he has called, who give an Account of Thompſon's having the Diabetes, that the Ward was very uneaſy with him; and becauſe he had done in the Ward, what they uſed not to have done there, they took all his Cloaths away.

Chriſtopher Goſling ſays, that Thompſon was offered by the Priſoner to go into the Sick Ward, and he refuſed, which confirms what the other Witneſſes ſay, (and then Acton bid him go whither he would,) and he ſaid he would go into the Strong Room; and Acton ſaid, if you go into ſuch a Room (the Witneſs naming the Room) won't that be as well. If he went into the Strong Room on his own Deſire, Acton is not guilty.

He ſays, that Thompſon had a Pillow and Blanket, which is explained afterwards, that he could lie upon it and turn.

Holmes ſays, that Thompſon was ſo tormented by the Ward, that Thompſon deſired him to go to Acton, to deſire he might go into the Strong Room, and upon that Acton gave leave; and ſays, that he was deſired to go to the Sick Ward; and ſays, that he was not confined in the Day-time, unleſs he was bolted in by his Fellow-Priſoners, that had played the Rogue with him.

Elizabeth Goſling; ſhe gives an Account as her Huſband did; that Thompſon owned how friendly the Priſoner had been to him, and that it was ſo far from being looked on as a Puniſhment, that it was a Matter of Favour thought by Thompſon to be there.

Brown ſays, that he talked with Thompſon, and Thompſon ſaid, God bleſs Acton, he had ſaved his Life, for if he had ſtayed any longer in the Ward, he ſhould have died; and ſays, there was a Bed there.

Barton; ſhe heard the Captain ſay, that he aſked Leave to go into the Strong Room, being quiet and eaſy to be there; and that he had rather be there, becauſe he was always at Eaſe.

Bowdler ſays, that the Ward was uneaſy; upon which Thompſon made Intereſt to go there, and took his Bed and Bedding, and aſked Leave of Acton to go.

Daveniſh ſays, that the People of the Ward came for him, and he ſaw him carried quite through. He goes into the Strong Room, and aſked Thompſon, how he came to be there; and he owned, by the Civility of Acton that he was there. He ſays, that Thompſon had a Bed, and that he went out and in when he pleaſed.

Johnſon ſays, that Thompſon ſaid, that he thanked God that Acton was ſo good to let him be there.

There were two other Witneſſes, who ſpoke to his aſking Leave.

Gentlemen, now you will conſider how the two Evidences tally, and what Injury there was done to Thompſon.

For the King, they ſay, that he was put there without, and againſt his Conſent; and for the Priſoner, eleven Witneſſes ſay, it was with his Conſent. If you ſhould be of an Opinion that it was without his Conſent, then it deſerves another Conſideration; but if you ſhould be of an Opinion that it was with his Conſent, then there muſt be an End of this.

In the next Place, you will conſider in relation to the Diſtemper. As to the Diabetes, ſome have ſaid on one Side, that they looked upon it to be mortal, and that he never complained. It is very obſervable, that he never ſhould complain.

In the next Place, they tell you, how he caught it, by lying upon the bare Boards. Some of the Witneſſes for the King ſay, he had only a Sort of a Bed; and eleven Witneſſes for the Priſoner ſay, he had a Bed; and if he had; he did not lie on the Ground, and could not have the Diſtemper from lying there; it was impoſſible.

The third Part is, whether he was a Priſoner in the Strong Room? You have heard, the Witneſſes for the King all agreed that he went out on Days, though he was locked up on Nights.

The Witneſſes for the Priſoner all agree, he went out on Days, and he was not locked up on Nights.

As to his going to the Sick Ward, the Witneſſes ſay, that Acton ordered it, and he refuſed to go.

If this Place gave him the Diſtemper of which he died, and if he went without his Conſent, you will find the Priſoner Guilty; but if he went out and in when he would, in conſequence, he was not confined there; there is no Reaſon to find him guilty.

When he aſked Leave to go to the Strong Room, the Priſoner gave it in a very humane Manner, and gave him his Choice, to go there, or into the Sick Ward.

Upon the whole, I muſt leave it to you.

The Jury agreed upon their Verdict immediately, without going out of Court.

Clerk of Arraigns. Gentlemen, are you all agreed in your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Clerk of Arraigns. Who ſhall ſay for you?—Omnes. Foreman.

Clerk of Arraigns. William Acton, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner, how ſay you; Is he Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?—Fore. Not Guilty.

Mr. Strange. The Priſoner, my Lord, has been very much fatigued, and deſires, upon paying his Fees, he may be now diſcharged.

Mr. Acton. My Lord, I deſire you will diſcharge me now.

Mr. Bar. Car. I can't comply with your Requeſt.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Paxton, ſpeak to the Judge. Upon which Mr. Paxton went out of Court.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Ogletborpe, I deſire you will interfere, and ſpeak to the Judge, and that you'll give your Opinion. Pray ſpeak, pray tell whether you conſent.

Mr. Ogle. Were I Proſecutor, I ſhould deſire the Priſoner might be releaſed; not that I think him innocent, but that every Engliſhman, let him be never ſo unjuſtly acquitted, hath, by the Habeas Corpus Act, on his Acquittal, a Right to be diſcharged; nor can any Subornation of Perjury, or any Management of a Jury, prevent it, for they are cognizable at another Time.

(There being then a great Noiſe in the Court, interrupted his ſpeaking for ſome Time, and as ſoon as it ceaſed, he went on again.)

As I ſaid before, I am not the Proſecutor; if I were, I knew what I ſhould have done. The Attorney General was ordered to proſecute by the Crown; and it is he, or his Repreſentative, that ſhould anſwer this Queſtion, and not me; and ſince I am ſpeaking, I deſire to be indulged a Word more, that I may tell the Reaſon of my coming here.

Having had the Honour of being one of thoſe Gentlemen who were appointed to inquire into ſeveral Matters, ſome of which have been this Day under your Conſideration; not knowing, therefore, what Queſtions might ariſe, for the clearing up of which I might be neceſſary, I thought it incumbent on me to attend.

I have had nothing to do in conducting the Proſecution here, which has appeared evidently; therefore I can't imagine why any Application ſhould be made to me.

Dominus Rex verſus Acton.
Michaelmas Term. 3 Geo. II *.

The Defendant was Deputy-Keeper of the Marſhalſea Priſon; and upon the Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons, was proſecuted for ſeveral Murders, ſuppoſed to have been committed by him on Priſoners in his Cuſtody. He was tried on four ſeveral Indictments, whereon the only Queſtion was, 'Whether a Place within the Priſon, called the Strong Room, was a proper Place to confine diſorderly Priſoners in? And the Jury upon all the four Trials acquitted him, to the Satisfaction of almoſt every Body; and in conſequence of theſe Acquittals he was diſcharged. Preſently after he was at Liberty, a ſingle Juſtice of the Peace, upon Information of a fifth Perſon's having been put into the ſame Strong Room, and dying within a Year after, thought fit to commit the Defendant again for Murder; and upon a Habeas Corpus, Strange pro Def. moved he might be admitted to Bail, on producing Copies of the Informations, and Affidavits of the former Trials, and of the identical Nature of the Offences; but the Court refuſed to look into the Informations, though they were preſſed with the Lord Mohun's Caſe, Salk. 124. where they looked into the Depoſitions taken by the Coroner, upon a Motion to bail: And, in the preſent Caſe, they remanded the Defendant; who lay in Priſon till the next Aſſizes; when the Grand Jury did him the Juſtice to return the Bill Ignoramus, and he was diſcharged.

XVIII. Several Proceedings relating to the bailing Mr. BAMBRIDGE, both at the King's-Bench, and at the Seſſion's-Houſe, in the Old-Bailey, in 1729, previous to his Trial for Felony.

At the King's-Bench.

June 7, 1729.

THIS Morning Mr. Bambridge was brought by Habeas Corpus from Newgate to the Court of King's-Bench. The Habeas Corpus, and the Return, which contained the ſeveral Matters, wherewith he was charged, were read, viz. 1. A Commitment by the Honourable Houſe of Commons, for many Barbarities, Cruelties, and Crimes, in the Execution of the Office of Warden of the Fleet. 2. An Indictment for the Murder of Mr. Caſtell. 3. A Charge of Felony for ſtealing Goods.

* Sir John Strange's Reports, Vol. II. p. 851.

The Priſoner's Counſel moved the Court, that he might be admitted to Bail; for that as to the firſt of the ſaid Commitments it was ended by the Expiration of the Seſſions of Parliament; as to the ſecond, the Priſoner, upon a fair Trial, had been acquitted; and as to the third, it was a Charge brought in upon the Priſoner, on his being acquitted of the Murder, and no Bill of Indictment either found, or offered to the Grand Jury, though they continued ſitting till the Day after the Trial; and more eſpecially, was it reaſonable to admit him to Bail, for that by a late Act of Parliament, he is obliged, on the Pains and Penalties of Felony, Forthwith to make out true and perfect Liſts of all the Priſoners in the Fleet, till June fourteen, and to give up all Securities, &c. which it was impoſſible for him to do, without having his Liberty to go to the Fleet, to inſpect the Books, and examine the Officers there; and eight Perſons being ready to become his Sureties, whereof Notice was given; therefore, it was hoped the Court would admit him to Bail. The King's Counſel alledged, that the Crime which the Priſoner ſtood charged with, on Oath, was Felony, without Benefit of Clergy: That, as to what was ſaid of the Priſoner's being liable to the Pains of Death, in caſe he refuſes or neglects forthwith to make out the ſaid Liſts, &c. the ſaid Word forthwith, in this Caſe, imports a convenient Time, or as ſoon as is reaſonable; and therefore, on behalf of the King, they hoped he ſhould not be admitted to Bail. The Court were of Opinion, that as this Caſe is circumſtanced, there were not ſufficient Reaſons to admit the Priſoner to Bail, the Crime he is charged with being Capital; and one of the King's Evidence being out of the way, the laſt Day of the Seſſions at the Old Bailey, the Bill againſt him was not preferred, and the Court there having ordered the Priſoner's Detainer till next Seſſions. The Court alſo declared their Opinion, that in caſe the Priſoner, to the utmoſt of his Power, complied with the Act of Parliament, in delivering ſuch Liſts, &c. he would be no way liable to the Penalties thereof; in the End he was remanded to Newgate.

Dns. Rex ver. Bambridge. } At the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery, held at Juſtice-Hall, at the Old Bailey, on the ninth Day of July, 1729, before Sir Robert Baylis, Knight, Lord Mayor, and others his Majeſty's Juſtices.

The Sollicitor for the Crown not being ready to try Thomas Bambridge, who ſtood indicted for Felony; the King's Counſel did not attend till the 9th of July, the 1ſt Day of the Seſſions; when Lord Chief Baron Pengelly, being ill, was out of Town; and Mr. Juſtice Reynolds, being obliged to go the Circuit; there were only on the Bench, Sir William Thompſon the Recorder, and Mr. Serjeant Raby the Deputy Recorder.

When Mr. Bambridge was brought from Newgate to the Old Bailey, he petitioned the Court, that he might be either tried, bailed, or diſcharged; and that in the mean time he might, under the Cuſtody of the Keeper of Newgate, be permitted to go to the Judges Chambers, to inſpect the Bail-books and Commitments, to enable him to perfect the Liſts of all his Priſoners, which the preſent Warden had demanded; and which by a late Act of Parliament he is obliged to deliver, on the Pains of Felony without Benefit of Clergy; and the Judges going their Circuits on Monday next, his Petition ſet forth, that it might be too late for him, after the End of the Seſſions, to inſpect the ſaid Books. The Court were pleaſed to Record the Petition, and to grant the firſt Part of it, viz. That he ſhould either be tried, bailed, or diſcharged; and as to the other Part of his Petition, declared that he could not incur the Penalties in the ſaid Act, if he did the utmoſt in his Power to perfect the ſaid Liſts.—And next Day, (July 10,) Mr. Bambridge, who had petitioned the Court to be trid, bailed, or diſcharged, was indicted, together with James Douglas, and William Pindar, (his Accomplices) for breaking open the Door, and feloniouſly ſtealing the Goods of Mrs. Berkley, a Priſoner in the Fleet; when the Grand Jury found the Bill againſt them all; whereupon Douglas and Pindar abſconded.

And on 12th July 1729, being the laſt Day of the Seſſions,

Thomas Bambridge (being before arraigned) was brought to the Bar, to be tried for the Felony whereof he ſtood indicted; when Sir William Thompſon ſpoke as follows:

Sir William Thompſon. As I have the Honour to be a Member of the Houſe of Commons, and as this Proſecution was ordered by Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons, it may be objected by the Priſoner, that I am both a Proſecutor and Judge.

Mr. Bambridge. I have no perſonal Objection to your trying me; but as you are a Member of the Houſe of Commons, I have long had a Regard for you, and I beg I may not be underſtood as having any perſonal Objection to you; but I beg no Perſon belonging to the Houſe of Commons may have any thing to do with it.

Sir William Thompſon. Mr. Attorney, you ſee the Priſoner thinks me not a proper Judge to try him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I apprehend it is not a legal Objection; I believe it has frequently happened, that Members have ſat as Judges, where Proſecutions have been ordered by the Houſe of Commons.

Sir William Thompſon. He may not think me diveſted of Partiality; it may be thought in me a remote Objection, but I would avoid lying under any Imputation of Partiality.

Mr. Att. Gen. I don't ſay it is not a legal Objection; as the Priſoner does inſiſt upon it, it is not right in me to inſiſt upon your trying him; but if you do not think proper to try him for the Sake of the Proſecution, and the Solemnity of it, I hope the Trial will go off till a Judge is here: But I am told there is Danger that ſome of the Witneſſes may be gone out of the way; and as Witneſſes are the moſt material in all Trials, I ſhould be glad of its coming on as ſoon as poſſible.

Sir William Thompſon. I will tell you how that Matter happens; there is not a Day next Week, that my Lord Mayor is not engaged in Buſineſs; ſuppoſe it ſhould be put off till Monday Se'n-night, ſome of the Judges may be come home from their Circuits on Saturday Night; the Seſſions ſhall be adjourned on purpoſe; there ſhall be all the Care in the World to ſupport the Proſecution. As this Matter does happen, and the Priſoner ſtill inſiſts upon it, let it be Wedneſday or Monday Se'n-night.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe Monday will be the propereſt Day; Lord Chief Juſtice Eyre, and Baron Carter, may be in Town then.

Sir William Thompſon. He ſees the Inconvenience; if he will wave the Objection, I am ready to try him, and he ſhall have all the Indulgence the Law will allow; I do it not to wave the Fatigue; and as for Mr. Serjeant Raby, he is not well, he has had an ill State of Health for ſome Time, and is not able to try him.

Mr. Attorney. If it goes off to Monday ſeven-night, it may be put off till next Seſſions; therefore I ſhould think it better for the Priſoner to be tried now: I don't deſire him; it ſhall be voluntary in him.

Bambridge. I inſiſt upon the Objection.

Mr. Attorney. Pray let it be on Monday ſeven-night.

Sir William Thompſon. It is the Attorney's Deſire, that it may be adjourned till Monday ſeven-night.

Bambridge. The Trial I went under laſt Seſſions, for the Murder of Mr. Caſtell, met with falſe Repreſentations in the Papers; therefore, rather than run any Hazard of a Miſrepreſentation, I deſire it may be adjourned to the Time Mr. Attorney mentions.

Sir William Thompſon. What was inſerted in the Papers I have nothing to ſay to.

Bambridge. If Things were miſrepreſented then, they may again; and I have ſuffered ſo much in my Character under ſuch Miſrepreſentations, that I ought to be cautious how I conduct myſelf.

Then the Court was adjourned to Monday ſeven-night.

Lunæ 21° die Julii, 1729.

Proclamation was made for Information.

Clerk of Arraigns. Set up Thomas Bambridge. (Which was accordingly done, and the Indictment read in Engliſh.)

Sir William Thompſon. This Matter was put off till To-day (the Priſoner having thought fit to object againſt me), in expectation that ſome of the Judges would come to Town.

My Lord Mayor has ſent to thoſe in Town, and they ſent Word, that it would not be convenient for them, being fatigued with the Circuit.

Mr. Attorney. Mr. Serjeant Cheſhire and myſelf are ready, and the King's Witneſſes are ready.

Sir William Thompſon. I have had the Objection in my Mind; and the more I conſider of it, the more I think it will be very improper for me to try him. I know no Inſtance, no Parallel.

There was an Act paſſed laſt Seſſions of Parliament, to which I was a Party; the Proſecution was ordered by Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons, to which I was a Party; and it does remain a Scruple with me, that it does not become me to try this Man.

The Trial muſt be put off till next Seſſions.

Lord Mayor. The Judges ſent Word, that they were ſo fatigued with the Aſſizes, that their Health would not permit them to attend.

Mr. Attorney. I have been here twice: Next Seſſions is the 27th of Auguſt; I muſt be out of Town, and cannot be able to attend the Trial.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. I ſhall be one hundred and fifty Miles out of Town at that Time.

Sir William Thompſon. The Seſſions you don't uſually attend; I wiſh it was otherwiſe: If you can tell me of any Caſe where a Judge acted as Proſecutor and Judge, I will try him.

Mr. Attorney. I can't recollect any Precedent; but the Court of King's Bench grants Informations, and try the Cauſe after.

Sir William Thompſon. After the Court of King's Bench grants Informations, they hear both Parties. Whoever reads the Act paſſed laſt Seſſions, if I had tried him, would ſay I was not impartial.

Mr. Attorney. If it is a Scruple the Priſoner makes, he cannot be diſcharged.

Sir William Thompſon. The Trial muſt go over; it muſt take its Fate. Mr. Allen, take care of the Priſoner.

Dns. Rex ver. Bambridge. } At the Old Bailey.

Mercurii 27° die Auguſti, 1729.

MR. Conningſby attended on Behalf of the Crown, and made a Motion to put off the Trial of Thomas Bambridge till next Seſſions; but the Court did not think fit to enter into the Argument then, and deferred it till the 29th of the ſame Inſtant.

Veneris 29° die Auguſti, 1729.

Mr. Conningſby. I am of Counſel for the King, my Lord. I have an humble Motion to make to the Court, that the Trial of Mr. Bambridge may be put off till the next Seſſions; and when I aſk this, it will be neceſſary to aſſign ſome Reaſon: The laſt Time I made the Motion to the Court, your Lordſhip was pleaſed to determine, that the Priſoner was not in the Meaning of the Habeas Corpus Act, as he waved being tried himſelf; and therefore it is diſcretionary in the Court what they will do in this Matter, as the Trial was before put off by the Priſoner's Concurrence. My Lord, the King's Counſel being out of Town, or upon the Circuits, is one Reaſon; but I don't barely inſiſt upon that; for I have an Affidavit, that a material Witneſs for the King is abſent, and can't be found; that he has abſconded for Debt; but that we ſhall be able to have him by next Seſſions, though not now; I ſubmit it upon that.

Then the Affidavit was read, which was to the following Effect:

"Nicholas Comer maketh Oath, That he had ſought after Gifford Lane, "formerly Clerk to Mr. Gybbon, late Deputy Warden of the Fleet, to "ſerve him with a Subpœna; but could not find him out, becauſe he has "abſconded for Debt; but believes he ſhall find him by the next enſuing "Seſſions; and that it was not ſafe to proceed to Trial without his Teſ-"timony, &c."

Mr. Conningſby. I hope, upon this, my Lord, the Trial will be put off.

Mr. Juſt. Probyn. While Mr. Wynn is ſpeaking, I deſire I may look over the Affidavit.

Mr. Wynn. (Counſel for the Priſoner.) My Lord, I hope the Reaſon given is not ſufficient to put off the Trial: I will not mention now the long Time that he has been kept in Priſon, it is ſo freſh in Memory.

As to the Abſence of the King's Counſel, there is no Occaſion for them, as that learned Gentleman is preſent; and I humbly apprehend, that can be no Foundation to put the Trial off.

The next Argument is founded upon the Affidavit of Nicholas Comer, That he had not been able to find Lane; and that Lane was a material Witneſs for the King: What Foundation he had to believe Lane a material Witneſs does not appear; and it is very eaſy to ſeek for a Man where he he is not to be found. The other Day, my Lord, there was nothing then pretended but the firſt Part of the Motion; and Mr. Paxton himſelf will own, that he could aſſign no other Reaſon than the Abſence of the King's Counſel; and, I preſume, as your Lordſhip would not allow that as a ſufficient Reaſon then, I hope you will not now. At the latter End of a Seſſions no Affidavit, they themſelves are conſcious, can have any Weight.

They ſuppoſed that your Lordſhip would hardly enter into it now; and, for that Reaſon, have very artfully ſpun it out: I called upon them then to give a Reaſon for putting the Trial off. Why was there not a proper Application Yeſterday? The Affidavit would have been filed, and the Priſoner would have had a proper Opportunity to give Evidence as to the Character of Comer; and if any Thing is to be preſumed, your Lordſhip will preſume it in Favour of the Priſoner.

I will not take up any more of your Lordſhip's Time; but humbly inſiſt, that your Lordſhip will proceed upon the Trial, or admit him to Bail.

Mr. Conningſby. The learned Gentleman, my Lord, inſinuates, that we ſearched for Lane where he was not to be found: The Affidavit ſets forth, That Comer ſearched at his Place of Abode, and at other Places, where it was thought he was likely to be. We do take upon us to ſay, he is a material Witneſs: If we ſwear falſely, that lies upon us to anſwer; and, I apprehend, the Crown would be no more ſurpriſed than the Priſoner.

Mr. Bambridge. As to Lane's being a material Witneſs, if you look upon the Indictment, you'll not ſee him upon the Back of it.

Mr. Paxton. That's not to the Purpoſe; for we ſeldom put the moſt material Evidence on the Back of the Indictment.

Mr. Bambridge. I beg Leave, my Lord, to mention one Circumſtance, which is notorious, and now publickly talked of: There was one Gentleman of the Grand Jury, who was very ſolicitous to the reſt of his Brethren to find this Bill, has laid violent Hands upon himſelf for the Injury done to me.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. That is not to the Purpoſe.

Mr. Bambridge. He has not ſworn to Lane's Place of Abode

Mr. Paxton. There is one remarkable Circumſtance, that the Court was adjourned for ſeveral Days, that the Priſoner might have a legal Trial, and it went off upon the Priſoner's Account.

Mr. Bambridge, I am ſurpriſed Mr. Paxton ſhould ſay that; I did not ſpeak one Word that Day.——I have in Writing what was ſaid, which there is one ready to ſwear to; which he read over.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. That relates to the Prayer of the Habeas Corpus Act.

When People are in Cuſtody a conſiderable Time, without ſome particular Reaſon, they ſhould be diſcharged.

One of the Reaſons always admitted, is the want of Evidence for the Proſecutor: If Endeavours have been uſed, and they cannot be had, that always is a ſufficient Reaſon. As to the Affidavit, it is not ſo ſtrong as uſually is made upon ſuch Occaſions; It ſays, that he was concerned for the Proſecutor; but it don't appear how he was concerned. He ſays, that he had made Enquiry at Mr. Gybbons's Houſe, but don't ſay that he ever lodged there; but goes on and ſays, that he enquired at ſeveral other Places where it was likely to find him; but don't ſay he lodged at thoſe Places. Why won't you conſent that the Priſoner ſhould be bailed?

Mr. Conningsby. I don't know what Service it will be to him.

Mr. Wynn (afterwards Serjeant). I am ſurprized that any thing ſhould be mentioned about the Appeal, which is a private Cauſe.

Mr. Conningsby. I mentioned nothing of the Appeal now.

Mr. Wynn. You did the other Day.

Mr. Baron Comyns. As, on the one Hand, Care ſhould be taken that the Proſecution ſhould be ſo carried on, that the Perſon guilty ſhould be puniſhed; ſo, on the other Hand, it ſhould be carried on with ſuch Speed, that no Perſon ſhould be longer confined than neceſſary. It does appear, by the Conceſſions on all Hands, that the Priſoner has continued in Priſon ever ſince May laſt: Though, by the Waver of not being tried, he is not intitled to his Diſcharge, yet he ought to be conſidered as to the Length of Time he has continued in Priſon; unleſs you can ſhow any Diſadvantage to the Crown, if he is admitted to Bail. If it ſecures the Liberty of the Subject, on the one Hand, we ſhall take care, on the other, that the Bail ſhall be ſo ſufficient, that he may be amenable to Juſtice.

Mr. Paxton. The Trial was put off upon Mr. Bambridge's own Motion.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. He ought to be admitted to Bail. Mr. Bambridge, have you Bail ready?

Mr. Bambridge. I can't ſay I have this Inſtant; but if it is your Lordſhip's Pleaſure to order Bail, upon giving Notice to the Sollicitor for the Crown, I'll get them ready.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Give the Names of the Bail as ſoon as conveniently you can; for it ſhould be done in Court.

Mr. Wynn. Can you undertake to get them ready in two or three Hours.

Mr. Bambridge. I have two or three ready in Court now.

Mr. Wynn. What Sum, my Lord, ſhall they be bound in?

Mr. Paxton. I deſire, my Lord, they may juſtify in a particular Sum.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. He ſhall enter into a Recognizance himſelf of two thouſand Pounds, and the Bail one thouſand Pounds a-piece.

Mr. Paxton. I ſhould have an Opportunity to enquire into their Circumſtances.

Mr. Williams. You know me.

Mr. Paxton. I know you to be a Tradeſman in Long-Acre; but don't know what you are worth.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. You that are here now may juſtify: You ſay you know one of them, only want to be ſatisfied as to his Circumſtances.

Mr. William Beatniff (Coachmaker in High-Holborn). I am ready, my Lord, to juſtify.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Is he ſworn?—— Mr. Tanner. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Mr. Beatniff, are you worth a Thouſand Pounds when all your Debts are paid?——Mr. Beatniff. I am, my Lord.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Is Williams ſworn?——Mr. Tanner. He is.

Mr. Williams. I cannot ſwear to a thouſand Pounds; but I will ſwear to five hundred Pounds.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Are you worth five hundred Pounds, when all your Debts are paid?——Mr. Williams. I am, my Lord.

Mr. Bambridge. There is one of the Serjeants of the Compter has offered to be the other.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Let him be ſworn.—Titus Parker, are you a Houſekeeper?——Mr. Parker. Yes.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. Are you worth five hundred Pounds, when all your Debts are paid?——Mr. Parker. I am, with my Place.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. I have nothing to ſay how you make it up; but I aſk you, Whether you are worth five hundred Pounds, over and above what is neceſſary to pay your Debts?

Mr. Parker. I really believe I am.

Mr. Juſtice Probyn. That is not enough for you to ſay.

Upon which he would not ſwear otherwiſe, and withdrew; and Mr. Bambridge was directed to get another.

Sabbati, 30° die Auguſti, 1729.

The Calendar being called over, Mr. Bambridge was brought to the Bar.

Mr. Bambridge. The Perſon that I did propoſe for the third Man. I cannot have while the Court is ſitting, for he is out of Town.

Serj. Raby. Then you can't comply with the whole.

Mr. Bambridge. I can't now; therefore I deſire I may be referred to the Lord Mayor to take the Bail.

Mr. Harbing. The third Perſon was juſt now in Town; I ſaw him with an Agent of Mr. Bambridge at Fleet-Ditch.

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, Harbing is one in the Conſpiracy: I ſhall have you, and Comer too, by and bye.

Mr. Harbing. That audacious Front of your's will do you no Service.

Serj. Raby. You ſay you can't be able now to comply; you can't give Security now; and you deſire it may be referred: Whoever takes that Authority upon them, will do it by the Order of the Court. Let it be referred to the Lord Mayor, and any two of the Aldermen upon the Rota. When do you propoſe to give in Bail?

Mr. Bambridge. I propoſe on Tueſday Morning.

Serj. Raby. Let it be Wedneſday, and give three Days Notice: It will be better for you; for the Sollicitor for the Crown may ſay that he had not ſufficient Notice, and that may delay you.

Lord Mayor. You may attend me on Wedneſday Morning at Ten o'Clock. Take care to give Mr. Paxton Notice.

On September 9th, he was bailed before the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, at Guildhall, for the Felony of which he ſtood indicted; having given ſufficient Sureties for his Appearance at the next Seſſions at the Old Bailey; though he was continued a Priſoner in Newgate, being charged on an Appeal for the Murder of Mr. Caſtell.

Dns Rex ver. Bambridge, At the Old Bailey, 20 October, 1729.

THE ſaid Thomas Bambridge being brought to the Bar (the King's Counſel not being then in Court), Proclamation was made for Information.

Clerk of Arraigns. Thou the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death; therefore, if you challenge them, or any of them, your Time to ſpeak is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn. [Then Part of the Pannel was called over, as follows:]

Clerk of Arraigns. Robert Johnſon.

Johnſon. Here.

Mr. Bambridge. I object to him. I am ſurpriſed he ſhould be ſummoned: He was a Priſoner in the Fleet, and was cleared by the late Act of Inſolvency; and ſo are half of the Perſons that are now ſummoned.

Officer. I took the beſt Care I could.

Mr. Bambridge. Theſe ought not to have been upon the Pannel: I am ready to be tried by any twelve honeſt and indifferent Men.

Lord Chief Juſtice Raymond. I don't know how this Matter is; if you have any juſt Cauſe, you may challenge any of them.

Clerk of Arraigns. John Lewis. (Who anſwered, and was ſworn.)

Mr. Bambridge. Half of them were Priſoners.

Mr. Matthews. Have you any other Pannel?

Officer. There is another Pannel.

Clerk of Arraigns. William Berry (not here).

John Fowler (anſwered, and was ſworn).

Clerk of Arraigns. Richard Evans.

Richard Evans. Here.

Clerk of Arraigns. Look upon the Priſoner.

Mr. Kettleby. Let the Priſoner look upon him, to ſee if he knows him.

[Then the King's Counſel came into Court.]

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. My Lord, there is a Witneſs, that is to go through the whole Cauſe, one Turner, who is very ill; and we ſhall have an Affidavit preſently, that he can't, without Peril of his Life, come out. He was here on Friday, and this is the Act of God: Three or four Times the King's Counſel have attended, and hoped this would have been the laſt. It is our Duty to acquaint your Lordſhip, that he goes through the whole Cauſe: We are very ſorry it has ſo happened; but we cannot try it, unleſs we are to try the Cauſe without this Witneſs.

Mr. Attorney General. It is impoſſible for us to go on without this Witneſs; this Accident is what we did not meet withal till the Court was ſitting; there is a Meſſenger ſent, and an Apothecary, to deſire him, if poſſible, to come in any Manner, in a Chair, or otherwiſe; if not, we ſhall lay before your Lordſhips, by Affidavit, the Condition he is in when the Apothecary comes. This Witneſs is the moſt material in the Cauſe; it is impoſſible to charge the Priſoner, or try the Cauſe without him. The Witneſs was here on Friday, and there can be no Inconvenience to the Priſoner, for that in regard to this Indictment he is bailed; he is not in the ſame Caſe where he would be kept in Cuſtody; but if that was the Caſe, it is a ſufficient Cauſe to put off the Trial, ſuppoſing he was not upon Bail. I have attended here ſeveral Times, and ſhould be glad to have done with this Attendance.

Lord Chief Juſtice Raymond. I can't ſay any thing to it till the Affidavit comes.

Mr. Bambridge. I did not hear one Word that that Gentleman ſaid.

Lord Chief Juſtice. They have alledged, that a material Witneſs, that goes through the whole Cauſe, cannot with any Safety to his life attend.

There is no Affidavit come, ſo it cannot be taken Notice of till it does, and they ſay it cannot be any Inconvenience to you, becauſe you are already bailed. I wiſh you hear me, for I am hoarſe.

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, I do hear you, this Cauſe has been depending ever ſince May laſt.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You have no Occaſion to take notice of that.

Mr. Bambridge. I don't know but this Witneſs is one of the People maintained in the Fleet, at Board-wages. It has been put off already ſeveral Times, and your Lordſhip knows, I ſurrendered on Friday to take my Trial.

Mr. Attorney-General. It was not our Fault it was not tried in July laſt, we had all our Witneſſes then ready.

Mr. Strange. An Honourable Gentlemen made the Objection, then upon the Bench.

Mr. Attorney-General. I muſt obſerve, that the Priſoner inſiſted upon it himſelf.

Mr. Bambridge. I am very ſorry, ſo weak a Stratagem as this is made uſe of to put it off.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Have a little Patience till the Affidavit comes, I cannot ſay any thing to it till then.

Mr. Bambridge. I have had a great deal of uncommon Sufferings in this Cauſe.

Lord Chief Juſtice. That is nothing to me, I can't ſay any thing to it; I am here only to try the Cauſe.

Mr. Bambridge. I have brought a Gentleman, Mr. Holder, one hundred Miles, and this Trial being put off from Time to Time, the Expence is ſo great, that it is enough to ruin any Man.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You muſt ſtay till the Affidavit comes.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. This Witneſs ſwears to the ſtealing the Goods.

Then Mr. Bambridge went from the Bar, and the Court waiting ſome time,

Mr. Paxton produced an Affidavit, which the Parties ſwore to in Court.

Mr. Attorney-General. I believe you ſhould bring the Priſoner to the Bar. (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. Now the Affidavit is come, there are three Witneſſes, though I mentioned but one. Now it appears, from the Evidence of three Perſons, that there is another Perſon, a Priſoner in the Fleet, that cannot come; he has had a violent Fever, that fell into one of his Thighs, and cauſed a dangerous Wound to be made, ſix Inches in Length and three in Depth.

Mr. Attorney-General. My Lord, we pray the Affidavit may be read. (which was accordingly done,) and is to the following Effect:

James Current, Surgeon, ——— Goodacre, Apothecary, Nicholas Comer, ſeverally make Oath, each for himſelf; and James Current ſaith, "That "he hath attended Captain John Lillingſton about fourteen Days laſt paſt, "and that he was ſeized with a violent Fever, which fell into his Thigh, "and occaſioned a Tumor, which was forced to be laid open; and Lil- "lingſton now lies dangerouſly ill; that the Wound is ſix Inches long, "and three deep, and he cannot be brought out without manifeſt Danger "of his Life.

"Goodacre; he ſwears that he has been to viſit John Turner, and that "he found him violently ill of a Pleuretick Fever, and he cannot be "brought out of his Lodging without Danger of his Life.

"Nicholas Comer; he ſays, he was employed by Mr. Paxton, and he is "well acquainted with John Turner and John Lillingſton, and is well ac- "quainted with their Affidavits, and ſays, that they are very material "Witneſſes, and it is not ſafe to proceed to Trial, without the Benefit of "their Teſtimony; and that Turner did attend on Friday, though he was "then ill."

Mr. Attorney-General. We that are Counſel for the King, cannot oblige the Attendance of Witneſſes; we cannot keep them in Health; I ſhould have been very glad to have went on with the Trial; what has been one of the Means of putting it off, was the Priſoner's inſiſting upon an Objection, that was made by an honourable Perſon, then upon the Bench. The Affidavit is ſo full, that I need not trouble your Lordſhip with any Obſervations upon it. The Courſe of all Courts is upon ſuch an Affidavit to put off the Cauſe, and it is not ſafe to go to Trial without this Witneſs. By my Brief we cannot ſafely proceed, for the Priſoner was committed upon the Affidavit of Turner.

Mr. Sollicitor-General. I apprehend, that what we apply for, is ſo reaſonable, it will be granted.

Lord Chief Juſtice. The Affidavit is ſworn by three Witneſſes.

Mr. Kettleby. I am Counſel for the Priſoner. In Caſes of Felony, Counſel may be aſſigned for the Priſoner upon Motions, but not upon Trials.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I allow it to be ſo, you may go on.

Mr. Kettleby. I hope the Trial will not be put off at this Time; this is ſo ſmall a Matter to object, to put off the Trial; they don't mention when they firſt came to the Knowledge of this: If they came to the Knowledge of it ſo ſoon, that the Defendant might have had an Opportunity to ſend People to view the Perſons ill too, then this Affidavit is not ſufficient.———

Lord Chief Juſtice. He was here on Friday.

Mr. Strange. It is not ſaid in the Affidavit, that he was ſubpœna'd, he might attend as a Hearer.

Mr. Attorney-General. None of us knew it till juſt now. He don't lye in Priſon upon this; he is confined upon the Appeal.

Mr. Kettleby. He has an Iron knocked off one Leg, and ready to be put upon the other.

And if this holds him, he may be continued for ever. I ſubmit to your Lordſhip, that they muſt give Notice to put off the Trial, if it is to be put off; they don't ſay whether they knew of this Cauſe before, or not; Mr. Attorney ſaid, he did not know of Lillingſton's being ill.

Mr. Attorney-General. I knew Lillingſton's being a Witneſs, by my Brief.

Mr. Kettleby. They ſhould have ſet forth in the Affidavit, that they did not know of the Illneſs till this Morning, and that they did not know it before: If that had been the Caſe, it had been ſome Excuſe; beſides, the Jury has been charged with the Priſoner; the Attorney did not come in ſo ſoon: he has made an Objection againſt the Pannel, before the King's Counſel came in; they ſaid they were to have an Information, of the Diſability of one Witneſs. Now there are two ill, without ſaying when they firſt knew of their Diſability.

Comer ſays, that he was employed under Mr. Paxton, and he knows they are material Witneſſes. If Mr. Paxton had given it upon Oath, that they were material Witneſſes, I ſhould have believed it; I don't know from whence Comer comes, I do not ſee it in the Information; he ſays, that he is acquainted with them, therefore concludes, they are material Witneſſes. I muſt ſubmit it, if they are material Witneſſes or not; it is an eaſy Matter to get three or four People, may be Clerks Clerks, to ſwear, that they are material Witneſſes, who I have no reaſon to believe had ſufficient Reaſons to ground their Belief upon that they were material Witneſſes; ſhould we not have had ſome Information before? Perhaps the Priſoner might have ſent one to viſit theſe People, who might have ſwore, that they were as able to come, as theſe ſay they were unable; and I humbly beg leave to ſay, that the Affidavit is not ſufficient. Beſides, there is another Reaſon, why it ſhould not be put off, he is ſurrendered by his Bail to take his Trial, and we do not know that they will ſtand again.

Mr. Attorney-General. They muſt ſtand till they are diſcharged by the Court.

Mr. Kettleby. They have not ſo much as given Notice to ſtand again, he has not had ſo much as an Opportunity of aſking; I hope he may be tried, or elſe the Conſequence muſt be, that he muſt lye by till December, and then Somebody elſe may have a broken Leg.

Mr. Wynn. I can't paſs over this Affidavit, without making one Obſervation; I ſhall not call it an affected Delay, though it looks exceeding like it. The Affidavit laſt Seſſions was not ſhewed the Beginning of the Seſſions, that he might have had an Opportunity to anſwer it, but the laſt Day of the Seſſions; I am ſure then it looked like an affected Delay. The Affidavit was then not looked upon to be ſufficient; the Objection then to Mr. Comer was, that he was no Sollicitor. Is a Perſon ſufficient to ſwear to Witneſſes being material, that has only ſerved a Subpœna? Mr. Paxton is the only Perſon that has appeared as a Sollicitor. Another thing that is pretty extraordinary is, that the Bail is diſcharged; there may be no Render, but the Goaler will hardly part with him without freſh Bail.

I ſhould be glad to know, if the Goaler will give Liberty for him or no; I would not add more to your Lordſhip's Trouble; but as this Caſe is, there is no Manner of Reaſon to put off the Trial.

Mr. Strange. I am Counſel of the ſame Side, and I muſt obſerve to your Lordſhip, that this Affidavit is not ſufficient as to the Inability or Materialneſs of the Witneſſes; as to the firſt it appears, that they muſt have had fourteen Days Time to have made this Inquiry; as to Lillingſton, and though they pretend to ſay Turner was here on Friday, they do not ſay Lillingſton was; they could have gone on without this Lillingſton then, for it does not appear that he was here on Friday laſt.

That if it had ſuited the Convenience of the Court to have gone on on Friday, they muſt have gone on without Lillingſton. There is a great Ambiguity in the Affidavit; it ſays, that the Tumor had been laid open, and that he had a Hole in his Leg, and lies in the Fleet, and that Lillingſton poſitively cannot be brought out. Really, as to Lillingſton, he has fallen in very particularly; the Objection aroſe as to him above fourteen Days ago, and they might have applied to the Court in time, ſo he ought to be laid out of the Caſe, and he is to be laid out of the Caſe.—It is ſworn as to the other, that he was out on Friday; but whether he was ſubpœna'd or not, is not ſworn. As to their Indiſpoſition, the Apothecary only ſwears, that Turner was ill of a Pleuretick Fever; but I ſubmit it, whether they muſt not ſwear poſitively, that he cannot come out. I dare ſay, there is no ſuch Witneſs wanted. I take notice of this, to ſhew, that when they come to ſpeak of Turner, they cannot ſpeak ſo full as they do to Lillingſton. Comer ſays, that it is not ſafe to go to Trial without this Witneſs, but he don't ſay whether it is ſafe to proceed to Trial with; I don't know whether the Trial is ſafe, if he was tried upon this Witneſs. Here is the Sollicitor for the Crown, to be ſure he knows the Secrets of the Cauſe, if this Man is ſo material a Witneſs, he ought to ſwear to it: We ought to have the beſt Account we can; and now we have not the beſt Account, becauſe the Sollicitor for the Crown does not take upon him to ſwear to the Fact. It is not made out that they are ſo material, that they can't go on without them; nor does it appear, that they are ſo bad not to be able to come out; though Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to ſay, that it cannot be any Injury to the Priſoner, for that his Bail muſt ſtand; I don't believe the Keeper of Newgate will venture to let him go out without freſh Bail, and whether that Bail will ſtand or not, I don't know.

Mr. Bambridge. On the 8th of this Inſtant, I ſerved Notice on Mr. Paxton, that I would ſurrender myſelf on Friday, to take my Trial, and it is fourteen Days ſince Lillingſton has been ſo ill: This is an Indictment for ſtealing the Goods of one Mrs. Berkley, who has lately declared that ſhe is not concerned in the Trial. As to Comer, who has made the Affidavit, he is a common Ubiquitarian, and if I am to be confined upon his Affidavits and Harbing's, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, I ſhall be kept in Gaol to the Day of Judgment; and it is ſuch an Expence, it will ruin any one. I am under a Neceſſity to importune the Court to be put upon my Trial, for there is a Perſon come out in a Chair, that is a material Witneſs for me, that is in danger of his Life, and cannot, in all Probability, live till next Seſſions; it is Mr. John Boncham, the King's Jeweller.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You muſt make an Affidavit of it; I cannot mind any thing but upon Oath. You have mentioned, that there has been great Delays in this Affair: You ſhould acquaint the Court that it has been put off irregularly: Has it not been done in this Place, that the ſame Seſſions, that a Man has been brought to be tried, it has been put off? This is the Act of God.

Mr. Bambridge. They ſhould have ſet forth the Time when they were taken ill.

Mr. Attorney-General. There is no Criticiſm in the Affidavit: I will aſk any of thoſe Gentlemen, whether they ever knew in the King's-Bench, or Court of Exchequer, the Times mentioned?

Mr. Strange. In the laſt Inſtance (that they had been ſubpœna'd).

Lord Chief Juſtice. Subpœna'd is not the Queſtion.

Mr. Attorney-General. Did you ever ſay they were ſubpœna'd in an Affidavit?

Lord Chief Juſtice. As to the Merits, I know nothing of that: This is nothing but a Motion to put off the Trial; I don't ſee any thing diſtinguiſhable in it. It would be very hard for him to lie in Gaol, if he was not admitted to Bail.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. They ſay, it don't appear that the Man was ſubpœna'd: I aſk any of thoſe Gentlemen, to ſhew, if ever they found it ſo in an Affidavit? I was ſurpriſed when either of them mentioned it: They inſiſt ſo much upon it, that they will think there is ſomething in it at laſt.

Lord Chief Juſtice. They muſt ſay what they can for their Clients.

Mr. Kettleby. We don't know who this Comer is: If Mr. Paxton will ſwear theſe People are material Witneſſes, we will give it up.

L. C. J. Has not Comer been employed in the whole Proſecution, and been fully apprized of the Affidavits?

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the ſlighteſt of all their Objections; for they may as well deſire the Attorney General to make an Affidavit: The Court expects no more than that a Perſon, acquainted with the Merits of the Cauſe, ſhould ſwear that they are Material Witneſſes. If it is done by a Perſon to ſhow to the Court, that they have Reaſon to believe that they are material Witneſſes, that is ſufficient. He ſwears, that he had been employed to carry on the Proſecution for Felony againſt Bambridge, of which he is indicted, and acquainted with the Informations taken upon Oath. It is ſaid, why did not Mr. Paxton ſwear it? May there not be two Solicitors in a Cauſe? Does it not often happen, that there is a Clerk in Court and Solicitor concerned in one Cauſe? Why don't they ſay a Clerk in Court ſhould make it? We have done all that is requiſite to ſhow that they are material Witneſſes. He could not ſwear it, unleſs he himſelf had ſeen the Informations.

L. C. J. He ſwears, that they cannot ſafely go to Trial without theſe Witneſſes.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays, they both are material Witneſſes, and it is not ſafe to proceed to Trial without them; and that is taking upon him to ſwear as much as ever was required. It is urged, that Mr. Bambridge's Bail has ſurrendered him: Suppoſing that he was quite out of Cuſtody, and that he gave Notice that ſuch a Day he would take his Trial, is that a Diſcharge of his Bail? No; his Bail is bound till he is diſcharged by the Judgment of the Court: Such Notice to take his Trial can be no Diſcharge. One of the Gentlemen ſays, that there was ſomething like an affected Delay; we were ready to have tried him in July laſt.

L. C. J. That don't appear from you: Who has it ariſen from?

Mr. Att. Gen. It might have been tried in July: There was then a Tenderneſs in the Judge, and a very laudable one; but he ſaid, if Mr. Bambridge did not inſiſt upon it, he would try him. When the Witneſſes are here, then the Priſoner is for having it put off; when they are not here, then he is for having it tried.

Mr. Bambridge. That honourable Gentleman cauſed the Trial to be adjourned; and I muſt ſubmit, whether it was known for a Judge, that was a Party, ever to try any Man. What the Attorney urged before was, that the Court of King's Bench ordered Informations, and then proceeded to the Trial of them. As to Comer, he is not a Clerk of Mr. Paxton's; he is only a Hic & Ubiquitarian.

Mr. Juſtice Denton. I am of the ſame Opinion as my Brother Raymond.

Mr. Bambridge. I will not take up the Time of the Court. If this Gentleman, who I before mentioned to be a material Witneſs for me, ſhould die, it will be greatly detrimental to me; therefore, if your Lordſhip will let him be examined in Court, and leave the Ring in Court, I will conſent to let the Trial be put off.

Mr. Kettleby. I ſhould be very glad the Attorney General will take the Trouble to examine him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't take upon me to conſent to any thing particular; but muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.

Mr. Juſtice Denton. Mr. Bambridge, why won't you bring your Witneſs into Court?

Mr. Bambridge. The High Sheriff, he not being well, was ſo good to let him be in his Room; he is there, and is coming in.

Mr. Att. Gen. I never knew it done in capital Caſes.

L. C. J. I don't know that ever it was done.

Mr. Juſtice Denton. What do you ſay, that he may not live till next Seſſions?

L. C. J. He is weak and aged; but, if I was upon my Oath, I don't ſee any Likelihood of his immediately dying.

Mr. Bambridge. He is ſeventy Years of Age.

L. C. J. He may live five Weeks.

Mr. Bambridge. If you will let him declare, that I bought the Ring of him ——

L. C. J. It can't be done. In ſeveral Caſes, where Witneſſes have been going abroad in Civil Cauſes, it has been done.

Mr. Kettleby. If your Lordſhip don't conſent to this, I hope the Court will indulge us in another Thing we pray ——

Mr. Juſtice Denton. Mr. Attorney General ſays he won't conſent.

Mr. Kettleby. Whether, if you put off the Trial, you won't admit this Gentleman to be examined?

Mr. Att. Gen. It never has been done without Conſent; and I never knew it done in Capital Caſes: I ſhould be very tender to come to make a Precedent in a Capital Caſe: I have known it done in Civil Caſes with Conſent.

Mr. Kettleby. If this Affidavit won't do, I beg Leave further to deſire there may be two Juries.

L. C. J. Let us make an End of one Thing firſt. We are all of Opinion the Affidavit is full.

Mr. Kettleby. I ſubmit it entirely; and when I know your Lordſhip's Opinion, I am not only ready to give over, but am always convinced; and though Mr. Attorney is unwilling to make a bad Precedent in one Caſe, I hope he will be willing to make a good one in another. He was not here when the Priſoner made his Objections to the Jury, to have a diſintereſted Pannel to try him: It would be very odd to try the Warden of the Fleet by a Jury that came out of Domus Manſionalis; Priſoners that have been diſcharged by the late Act.

L. C. J. What would you have me do?

Mr. Kettleby. If it goes over to another Time, I hope the Sheriff will take care to have a good Jury: The firſt Pannel were moſt of them Priſoners; I am ſure the Sheriff will do every thing that is right.

Sir John Williams (one of the Sheriffs). There is a new Pannel, where this Perſon, Johnſon, is not one.

L. C. J. What do you think of the Sheriffs?

Mr. Kettleby. I have no ill Opinion of them; I would be bound Body for Body for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is the firſt time I heard of this Objection: I don't know any Foundation for it; for my Part, I never trouble my Head about Juries, nor ever will. I take it for granted, the Officer that ſummons them will do his Duty; if he don't, the Party has his legal Challenge.

Mr. Strange. If it is ſo underſtood, that he may be let out, according to the former Recognizance, we ſhall ſubmit.

L. C. J. I don't ſee but he may be admitted to Bail upon that.

Mr. Bambridge. The Recognizance is here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it not to appear upon the Party's ſurrendering him in Court?

Clerk of Arraigns. It was.

L. C. J. Let me ſee the Recognizance; don't let me do Things in the Dark.

Clerk of Arraigns. The Recognizance is not returned: All that he prayed was, that the Appearance might be entered.

Mr. Bambridge. The Recognizance was to appear here, and not to be diſcharged without Licence.

L. C. J. The Recognizance is continued; it can't be diſcharged, without all the Conditions are performed.

Mr. Bambridge. I did not hear your Lordſhip before.

Whereupon the Priſoner withdrew.

XIX. The Trial of Thomas Bambridge, Eſq. for Felony, before the Right Hon. Sir Richard Brocas, Knt. Lord Mayor of the City of London, the Right Hon. Lord Chief Juſtice Eyre, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Reynolds, the Hon. Mr. Baron Carter, the Worſhipful Mr. Serjeant Raby, and others, his Majeſty's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal Delivery, for the City of London, and Gaol Delivery of Newgate, for the ſaid City and County of Middleſex, held at Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey, on Wednesday, Thurſday, Friday, and Saturday, being the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th Days of December, 1729, in the third Year of Majeſty's Reign.

Veneris 5° Die Decembris, 1729.

Proclamation was made for all Perſons concerned to attend.

Clerk of Arraigns.

IS the London Jury here?

Officer. Yes.

Clerk of Arraigns. Set Mr. Bambridge to the Bar. (Which was accordingly done.) You ſtand indicted by the Name of Thomas Bambridge, late of the Pariſh of St. Bride's, London; for feloniouſly ſtealing one Feather-Bed, a Bolſter, two Pillows, two Blankets, one Quilt, two Cane Chairs, one Eaſy Chair and Cuſhion, two Stuff Chairs, two Tables, a Looking-Glaſs, Fire-Shovel and Tongs, Gridiron, one Pair of Bellows, three Pair of Window Curtains, China Ware, Value 5*l.* a Head of Mecklin Lace, Value 10*l.* a Head of Flanders Lace, Value 6*l.* ſix Silver-handled Knives, Value 3*l.* ſix Silver Forks, Value 40*s.* two Tea-Spoons, Strainer, and Tongs; four Ounces of Gold Lace, Value 10*l.* two Gold Seals; one Emerald, Value 3*l.* five Diaper Napkins, one Piece of Dimitty, a Sable Tippet, Value 3*l.* a Piece of blue and white Sattin, Value 7*l.* two Stone Seals ſet in Gold, Value 3*l.* three Silk Gowns, Value 6*l.* two Pieces of Sarſenet, Value 55*s.* a Garnet and other Rings, with other Things of conſiderable Value, the Goods of Elizabeth Berkley, on the 31ſt Day of October, 1727.

Clerk of Arraigns. How ſay'ſt thou, Thomas Bambridge, art thou Guilty of the Felony whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Mr. Bambridge. Not Guilty.

Clerk of Arraigns. How wilt thou be be tried?

Mr. Bambridge. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arraigns. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

—— Thou the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that thou ſhalt hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death; therefore, if thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thy time to ſpeak is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Then the Pannel was called over, and the following Perſons challenged by the Priſoner:

Francis Nolder,	Joſ. Hartwell,	John Palmer,
John Mich. Harnick,	Richard Hughes,	John Baſſet,
Thomas Caddey,	John Batler,	Stephen Brin,
Henry Houghton,	John Hopkins,	William Saul.

Then the Jury ſworn were as follows:

Richard Collier,	Hery Palmer,	Auſtin Tyer,
Henry Clark,	Thomas Mallet,	William Lyon,
John Poole,	Joſ. Collier,	John Taylor,
Edward Jones,	John Lyddall,	Thomas Teſt.

Then Proclamation was made for Information.

Clerk. Thomas Bambridge, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You of the Jury look on the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge: He ſtands indicted by the Name of Thomas Bambridge (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis). And as the Clerk was reading the ſeveral Parcels, particularly when he came to the Rings, Mr. Bambridge ſpoke as follows:

Mr. Bambridge. I deſire to know, how many Rings there are mentioned in the Indictment; whether one, two, or three, or four Score.

Then the Clerk did read the ſeveral Rings mentioned in the Indictment, and went on with reading the following Part of the Indictment.

Mr. Bambridge. I will not give your Lordſhip any unneceſſary Trouble; but I deſire the Clerk may read the Form of the Indictment in Latin.

L. C. J. Eyre. What do you deſire?

Mr. Bambridge. The whole Indictment to be read, except the Parcels of the Goods.

L. C. J. Mr. Matthews, ſpeak loud, when you read.

Mr. Bambridge. Is it viceſimo die?

Clerk. It is triceſimo primo Octobris. And then the Clerk of the Arraigns went on with reading the other Part of the Indictment.

Mr. Bambridge. That is not all the Indictment; I am informed, that ſeveral others are mentioned as Accomplices.

Mr. Kettleby. There are Pindar and Douglas.

L. C. J. Mr. Matthews, have you read all the Indictment? Are they mentioned?

Mr Matthews. The latter Part of the Indictment is relating to Pindar and Douglas.

L. C. J. I have not that in my Paper: You ſhould have put it in.

Mr. Matthews. My Lord, they are not here.

L. C. J. Read it.

Mr. Kettleby You ſhould have read it before.

Then Mr. Matthews read the remaining Part of the Indictment relating to them.

Mr. Holland. May it pleaſe your Lordſhp, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King. This is an Indictment againſt Thomas Bambridge, for feloniouſly ſtealing and taking away ſeveral Goods, the Property of Elizabeth Berkley. The Indictment ſets forth, That Thomas Bambridge, late of London, did on the 31ſt of October, 1727, in the firſt Year of his preſent Majeſty, with Force and Arms, in London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Bridget's, alias St. Bride's, in a felonious Manner, and with an evil Intent, ſteal and take away the Goods of Elizabeth Berkley in the Indictment particularly ſet forth, being in a certain Manſion-Houſe, where the ſaid Elizabeth Berkley and divers others did inhabit. This is laid againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Mr. Serj. Cheſhire. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King. Thomas Bambridge, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted upon the Statute of the 12th of the late Queen: He is charged for feloniouſly ſtealing and taking away the Goods of Elizabeth Berkley, to the Value of 40*s.* and upwards, out of a Manſion-Houſe, where ſhe the ſaid Elizabeth Berkley and ſeveral others dwelt. The Evidence, in ſupport of the Indictment, will be this; that ſome Time before the 23d of October, in the Year 1727, the ſaid Thomas Bambridge was Deputy Warden of the Fleet Priſon, under Mr. Huggins; and at that Time the ſaid Elizabeth Berkley was a Priſoner, and lodged in the ſecond Gallery on the Maſter's Side; that ſome Time before the firſt Day of Michaelmas Term in that October, the ſaid Thomas Bambridge, and ſome other Perſons, viz. Pindar, Barnes, King, and Douglas, came in Company together, and entered the Room where the ſaid Elizabeth Berkley was: The Room, Gentlemen, was furniſhed with very good Goods: They did, Gentlemen, pretend to riſle the Room, and take ſome Account of ſome of the Goods; and a Perſon in Company did write down, about twelve Lines, Part of the Effects; and the Man did not proceed any further then; but Bambridge, and the other Perſons with him, hurried Mrs. Berkley away to the Common Side: There, Gentlemen, ſhe was locked up; there ſhe lay five or ſix Weeks, till he had turned her Senſes; and ſhe has continued in that melancholy Condition ever ſince.

The firſt Time, Gentlemen, that they entered the Room, he wrote ſome Lines, and did take ſome Account of the Goods; but did not then proceed any further: But as he turned the Owner out of the Place, he put a Padlock on the Door, and ſhe put her own Key in the Door, and locked the Door; and there was nothing done further at that Time.

Gentlemen, on the 23d of October, Bambridge and others, in Company with him, did come to this Place in the Gallery: He eaſily did remove the Padlock, but it was not ſo eaſy to force open the Door; and therefore, Gentlemen, he ſent for one Greenway, a Carpenter, to bring Tools to force the Door open. He was ſent for, Gentlemen; but they were impatient; and one of the People with the Defendant, in the mean Time with a Poker forced open the Door. When Greenway came, they did bid Greenway ſtay a little; then told him, they had no Occaſion for him. When he came into the Room, the Priſoner himſelf did direct and aſſiſt in breaking open the Trunks and Boxes; and when they were all open, there were found ſeveral Rings, and ſome Jewels; and thoſe Things that were light and portable Bambridge put in his Pocket: There were, Gentlemen, very good Apparel, all of them made up, Linnen and other Things of a conſiderable Value: For theſe, Gentlemen, Bambridge had provided a large Portmanteau, and put them up and carried them away. This, Gentlemen, was the ſecond Time of his entering the ſaid Room; and at this Time, I ſhould tell you, Gentlemen, he did go on with the twelve Lines wrote before, and perfected the ſaid Inventory, I ſuppoſe, by adding ſome more Goods: And then, upon this 23d of October, he was pleaſed Gentlemen to fix a Head to the Paper, and directed in what Words it ſhould be wrote, which were theſe: An Inventory or Appraiſement of Goods, of and belonging to Elizabeth Berkley, diſtrained the 23d of October, 1727, for 56*l. of an Arrear of Rent due to* John Huggins, Eſq. Gentlemen, according to my Inſtructions, it will come from our Witneſſes, that there was a Perſon who pretended to be, and was a Conſtable; and there was a Perſon there who pretended to appraiſe the Goods; but Nobody was ſworn, as by Law they ought: In this Condition he did perfect the Paper before-mentioned.

In looking over the Things, Gentlemen, Bambridge did obſerve there was a Bruſh and a little Chalk, ſomething uſual among Perſons that wear Jewels to clean them: He cried out, 'Look about, there are probably ſome 'Jewels; for there is ſomething to clean them with;' and they looked and found ſome Rings, as Garnets, Emeralds, and Topazes; and when he had done he carried them away: But what he did with all of them afterwards, we cannot tell. Give me leave to ſay, my Brief informs me, that he did ſell Part of them for fourteen Guineas to one Weſt; ſome Gold Lace, near thirty Ounces, to one Mr. Harris; and ſome Silver Tea-ſpoons, gilt with Gold, he ſold or preſented to Corbett's Wife (who was one of his Tipſtaffs): and her Bed and Bedding, which he was pleaſed to think was very good, he cauſed to be delivered to one Wilkins, to deliver to Jenkins a Waterman, to be carried to his Lodgings at Wandſworth: This, Gentlemen, made a great Noiſe, and Mr. Huggins came to hear of it, and expoſtulated with the Priſoner, and ſaid to him, You have taken a good many Goods belonging to Mrs. Elizabeth Berkley, under Pretence of ſeizing for an Arrear of Rent owing to me; how could you do ſo? There is no Rent due to me. Gentlemen, in this Manner he expoſtulated, How came you to do it? There is no Rent due to me, for there is an Agreement with my Deputy, Mr. Gibbons, who was to have the Produce of that Time; to what Value did you take? To which the Priſoner replied, I have only taken to the Value of Ten Pounds; notwithſtanding, Gentlemen, he had ſold a Ring for fourteen Guineas, beſides thirty Ounces of Gold Lace, and ſome Tea-Spoons, and ſent the Bed and Bedding to his Houſe in the Country; this was indeed very extraordinary.

It is plain, Gentlemen, through his whole Conduct, he never intended to uſe this as a Diſtreſs; for when he ſold the Cloaths of Mrs Berkley, he did not ſell them as Goods taken by Diſtreſs, but to conceal from whence he had them; he ſaid, Theſe are my Wife's Goods.

It is very remarkable, and worthy your Obſervation, that though all the Cloaths were made into Garments or Apparel, he ordered and directed the Perſon who took the Inventory, to put down only ſo many Yards, ſufficient to make a Gown or Petticoat; there was, Gentlemen, a Dimity Gown, which he particularly ordered to be put down, Dimity ſufficient to make a Wrapper; which, Gentlemen, you will eaſily gueſs, was only to conceal its being wearing Apparel, that it might not be followed; or otherwiſe, why were they not entered into the Inventory in the Form they were, as made into Apparel? It is very extraordinary, that he ſhould ſay ſo much of ſuch and ſuch a thing, only ſufficient to make a Gown, or whatever it was; this, I hope, he will give a good Account of; this, Gentlemen, he ought to explain to you: After he had got the other Part of the Goods into his Poſſeſſion, as he had ſaid the former were his Wife's, theſe he ſaid, were left in his Hands to make Money of; not ſaying any of them were Mrs. Berkley's, taken by Diſtreſs; but he ſold Part of them as his Wife's Apparel, and Part as left with him by a Friend, to make Money of. We are far from thinking, where a Man takes a Diſtreſs for Rent, where Rent is due, tho' he does not let a Conſtable, or an Appraiſer attend, and demean as they ought, that this is Felony; though this is a great Offence, and an enormous Abuſe, and the Law will puniſh it civilly and criminally, but not capitally. If Landlords ſend Servants to make a Diſtreſs, and they miſconduct themſelves, and do not behave themſelves rightly, it would be very hard to have that turned into Felony: We, Gentlemen, aim at no ſuch thing; but that is to be taken into your Conſideration, with my Lord's Advice. When there is no Pretence of Rent due, no Authority for diſtraining; when he makes uſe of a Pretence of Diſtraining, to get Goods into his Poſſeſſion, to diſpoſe of them as his own, or as left with him to ſell; that Pretence to get them into his Hands, and diſpoſe of them as his own, or as left with him to ſell, and not ſell them as preſcribed by Law, after due Appraiſment, and returning the Surplus to the Owner, will make it Capital. Gentlemen, I need not tell you what the Law is in this Caſe; but, my Lord, I will dare to ſay, that tho' a Man comes by Goods lawfully, by Conſent of the Owner, if he diſpoſes of them to his own Uſe, it is Felony. For if I deliver Goods to a Carrier, to carry them to Deal, and he carries them to Sea; and he ſhould open the Packs, and ſell the Goods, this is Felony: This has been adjudged ſo by all the Judges in England, aſſembled for that Purpoſe.

There is a particular Caſe of an Attorney, which I ſhall take Notice of to you: It was in the 18th Year of King Charles the Second: He had, Gentlemen, a Mind to get Abundance of Goods, belonging to a Woman out of her Houſe, into his Power and Poſſeſſion: He did, Gentlemen, take a Proceſs againſt her, and laid the Woman in Newgate; upon which he gets Judgment in Ejectment, and got Poſſeſſion of her Houſe; and then, Gentlemen, he gets Judgment, and takes the Goods out of the Houſe, and takes them into his own Poſſeſſion: There was a Colour of a Proceſs of Law; but this was a Trick, to get the Goods from the Woman, and done with a felonious Intent; and the Man was hanged for it. Theſe Things are proper for your Conſideration. Without any further Obſervations, we will call our Witneſſes, and ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, whether the Priſoner's Conduct did not ſhew a felonious Intent, and whether the Diſtreſs was not made uſe of to get the Goods into his Poſſeſſion, for his own Uſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am of Counſel of the ſame Side, for the King. The Indictment againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, is founded upon an Act paſſed in the 12th Year of the Reign of the late Queen Anne, Chapter the 7th, for taking away, and ſeizing feloniouſly, Goods of the Value of forty Shillings, in a Dwelling-houſe. Gentlemen, this being the Statute upon which it is founded; the Queſtion before you is, upon the Fact being given in Evidence. At the Time when the Fact was committed in October 1727, T. Lambridge was Deputy Warden of the Fleet Priſon, under Mr. Huggins; an unhappy Woman, Mrs. Berkley, a Priſoner in his Cuſtody, being committed there for Debt, had a Room in the Priſon, where ſhe had ſeveral Things of Value; ſhe being a Priſoner, and there having Goods of Value, the Priſoner at the Bar, who was Gaoler, ought to have ſuffered and permitted her, according to Law, to have the Uſe of her own Goods brought there, and enjoy them quietly, without Diſturbance from him; but, Gentlemen, probably the Value of theſe Goods was the Temptation to the Fact afterwards committed. There were, Gentlemen, two Times that will be mentioned by the Witneſſes, that he entered the Room, both in the Month of October; one ſome Days before the other. I don't find that the firſt Day is particularly fixed, but the ſecond was the 23d of October 1727; and the firſt Time the Priſoner came, was ſome Days before the 23d of October 1727: the Priſoner then, with three or four other Perſons, Pindar, Barnes, and King, came to the Chamber of Mrs. Berkley, in a violent Manner, and cauſed her to be removed out of her Room; and as a preliminary Step to what was intended, cauſed her to be carried down on the Common Side, and there locked her down; after they had diſpoſed of her, they put a Padlock on the Door, and ſhe locked the Door. I don't find that the Goods at that Time were particularly taken away by the Priſoner, but they thought fit to ſecure them; but before they took away Mrs. Berkley, they made her put her Key into the Lock, and lock the Door, and

and they put a Padlock on it; this was the firſt Time of entering the Room; the ſecond Time, after dark, the Priſoner, with Barnes, Douglas, Pindar, and a Perſon to whom they thought fit to give the Title of Conſtable, but whether he had any Authority or not to act as ſuch, that don't appear to us, but it is incumbent on him to ſhew; then pulled off the Padlock; one ſhould have thought, if any Thing fair had been intended, Mrs. Berkley ſhould have been ſent for to have opened, or at leaſt, to have ſeen the Door opened. There was a Lock upon the Door, but the Priſoner ordered the Door to be opened; but he not having Strength enough himſelf, ordered another to break open the Door, which he accordingly did: The Door being opened by Force and Violence, without ſending for Mrs. Berkley, they fell to rifling the Boxes; the Priſoner with his own Hands, broke open the Locks of three Boxes, and two Trunks; Things were taken out, and ſome of thoſe of the moſt Value, the Priſoner thought fit himſelf to take, and put in his Pocket; thoſe were two Cornelian Seals, Gold Rings, in Number five, which were of ſome Value; one a Garnet, another had a ſmall Diamond in it, and another was an Amethiſt Ring of ſome Value, which the Priſoner thought fit to put in his Pocket; a Silver-handle Knife and Fork, in a Shagreen Caſe, and other Things of Value, he put into a Portmanteau, which the Priſoner ſent out of the Priſon. After this was done, the reſt of the Goods were taken away; and as Mr. Serjeant has mentioned to you, there was a Pretence of taking an Inventory of the Goods; if that ſhall appear only a Pretence and Colour, that will not vary the Caſe as to him. The Bed and Bedding (the Priſoner then wanted a Bed and Bedding) he thought fit to take away; and, if my Inſtructions are true, ſent it down by Water to Wandſworth, to his Lodgings; and Mrs. Berkley, ever ſince that, has been kept on the Common Side, without Bed or Bedding, or at leaſt was kept ſo for a Time: We apprehended the Witneſſes will come up to this. This being the Nature of the Caſe, the Queſtion to be ſubmitted to my Lord, is, Gentlemen, what the Deſign of the Tranſactions, and Nature of it was? We apprehend the Deſign was to get theſe Goods wrongfully and felonioufly into his own Cuſtody, and take them to his own Uſe; if that was the Caſe, the Manner of taking them will not alter the Thing; for I muſt obſerve to you, Gentlemen, if a Man deſigns to take Goods felonioufly, let him put it in what Shape he will, if that is only the Pretence and Colour, it is Felony; nay, if by Colour of the Law, any Man poſſeſſes himſelf of Goods with a felonious Intent, in that caſe it is ſo far from being an Excuſe, that it is an Aggravation of the Offence; for the Law will not admit, that under its Colour, a Man ſhould be ſtripped of his Property; that inſtead of being a Defence againſt one Man, it ſhould be an Injury to another; for if any Perſon ſhould poſſeſs himſelf by Force of another Man's Goods, it is Felony. Beſides the Caſe mentioned to you by Mr. Serjeant, I will take notice of one; that after Goods diſtrained, and the Goods carried away, there is got a Replevin of theſe Goods; if that Replevin was only colourably taken out, to get theſe Goods into his Poſſeſſion, that Replevin will not excuſe him from Felony. The Queſtion is, whether if a Diſtreſs is taken, if that Diſtreſs is only colourably taken, it is not Felony? Therefore, though it can't be pretended, and none will have a Thought, I hope, that it is inſiſted on, if a Man intends fairly to make a Diſtreſs, and errs in the doing it, though he errs in a great many Inſtances, that that ſhould ſubject him to Felony; God forbid: Yet if he makes uſe of a Diſtreſs only as a Colour to get Goods into his Poſſeſſion, then it is Felony, and Circumſtances will come to be material, and his not obſerving the Method which the Law directs, will further ſhew with what Intent the Beginning was, and with what Intent he took the Goods, which, we apprehend, is material. But what, I apprehend, is moſt material for your Conſideration, is to ſhew the concealed Manner of deſcribing theſe Goods, the Method of diſguiſing them, and the Manner of ſelling them. As to the firſt of theſe, it will appear, that the Wearing Apparel, inſtead of being deſcribed, as really they were, he ordered to be deſcribed, as ſo much Stuff and Silk ſufficient for to make a Gown, Petticoat, or whatever it was. We apprehend there could be no other View in that, than to diſguiſe it, that the Truth might not appear. And, Gentlemen, as to the Diſpoſal of them, it will appear plainly, we think to you, ſuch as ſhews that the Priſoner had no Intention to make uſe of this Diſtreſs; but that his original Deſign was, to convert them to his own Uſe. It is very truly ſaid, by the learned Gentleman that has ſpoke before me, that where a Man poſſeſſes himſelf of Goods, though lawfully, ſuppoſing he diſpoſes of thoſe Goods for his own Uſe it will make it Felony. There have been Inſtances given you, where Perſons came by Goods lawfully, but their Diſpoſal of them to their own Uſe, made Felony. Now in the preſent Caſe, it will appear, the Goods, Gentlemen, were many: As to the Ring mentioned, particularly that in which the Amethiſt was ſet, the Priſoner, after taking that Ring, ſent it to one Menéz Solas to inquire the Value, and diſpoſed of it to him; as to the Garnet, with a Brilliant in the Middle, that was ſent likewiſe to him to be diſpoſed of, to inquire the Value of that alſo: As to the Wearing Apparel, that was ſold to one Weſt for fourteen Guineas; the Gold Lace was ſold to one Harris; the gilt Tea Spoons were ſold to Corbett's Wife; and as to the Bed and Bedding, he put it at firſt in another Place in the Priſon, and after ſent it to his own Houſe, with the Portmanteau, wherein other Things of Value were put. If he had any Intent to diſpoſe of theſe Goods, as taken by Diſtreſs, as a Satisfaction for any Damand, or Debt he might have, ſhould not he have given an Account to Mrs. Berkley? And if there was any Surplus, ought not he to have paid it over to her? It will be incumbent on the Priſoner, to ſhew that he accounted to her for the Surplus; but if there is no Colour of Right to make the Diſtreſs, no regular Method taken in the Diſpoſal upon the Diſtreſs, no Account thereof given, we apprehend that it will appear a Pretence of Diſtreſs, and that only the Pretence of Diſtreſs was made uſe of to convert the Goods to his own Uſe; if ſo, this will amount to Felony. We will beg Leave to call our Witneſſes, and then leave it to your Lordſhip's Directions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call John Turner. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Bambridge. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General, in his Declamation that he has made, was pleaſed to admit, that if there was a legal Diſtreſs made, there could be no Attempt upon my Life.

Att. Gen. My Declamation!

Mr. Bam. That Mr. Attorney, in his Declamation allowed, if it was a Diſtreſs——

Mr. Att. Gen. My Declamation! I ſaid, that it would appear as a Colour of Diſtreſs to commit a Fraud.

Mr. Bam. You meant in fraudem Legis.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſpoke in Engliſh, believing it to be more intelligible to you; you may make uſe of Latin Words if you will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mrs. Berkley, and when?

Mr. Turner. Yes; I knew her in October, 1727.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you to be acquainted with her?

Mr. Turner. By being a Priſoner in the Fleet Priſon; ſhe was a Priſoner at the ſame Time, and lodged in the ſecond Gallery, within two or three Rooms of mine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Part of the Gaol did you lodge?

Mr. Turner. I lodged on the Maſter's Side, in the ſecond Gallery.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long?

Mr. Turner. I had the Misfortune to be there two Years before this Seizure was made.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You mention a Seizure, give an Account how it was made.---Mr. Turner. I was called in by Pindar.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day?

Mr. Turner. Between the 23d and 27th of October, 1727.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were you called in for? What to do?

Mr. Turner. I was called in by Pindar, and he told me, that a Diſtreſs was to be made; for being an Upholder, Mr. Bambridge called me frequently to make Diſtreſſes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was there?---Mr. Turner. Pindar, and I think King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mrs. Berkley there then?

Mr. Turner. Yes, but not Bambridge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do?

Mr. Turner. I took an Inventory of all that did appear; we did not then open any Boxes; we mentioned them in Groſs, and took every Thing that appeared in the Room, as Earthen-ware, Bed and Bedding, and ſuch like Things. In about fourteen Days afterwards, Mr. Bambridge came again, and I was called in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Thing more done then?

Mr. Turner. Nothing more than taking an Inventory.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Conſtable there?

Mr. Turner. There was a Perſon there, who ſaid he was a Conſtable.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear it ſaid, whilſt Mr. Bambridge was there?

Mr. Turner. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Mr. Bambridge ſay?

Mr. Turner. Mr. Bambridge wondered the Trunks were not opened before, and aſked Mrs. Berkley for the Keys, and when ſhe would not give him the Keys, Mr. Bambridge himſelf broke open the Trunks, and rifled them.

Juryman. Was it in the Preſence of Mrs. Berkley.---Mr. Turner. Yes.

Juryman. Was ſhe there all the Time?

Mr. Turner. She was there all the Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you do then?

Lord Chief Juſtice Eyre. Tell us who broke open the Boxes.

Mr. Turner. Mr. Bambridge himſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the firſt Diſtreſs made? Diſtinguiſh the two Times.

Mr. Turner. I take it the former Diſtreſs was about the 27th of October, and the ſecond, the 3d or 4th of November.

Mr. Turner. Yes, I believe it might be about that Time, but I can't be poſitive, not thinking it would be called in Queſtion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Manner did you make the Inventory?

Juryman. Have you a Copy of that Valuation?

Mr. Turner. No, I gave it to Mr. Bambridge.

L. C. J. When did you give it to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr.

Mr. Turner. When I finiſhed it; a Day or two after the Diſtreſs.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. That was after the 4th of November.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give to my Lord, and the Jury, the Reaſon for giving the Inventory to Mr. Bambridge.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know it when you ſee it?—Mr. Turn. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Who directed you to ſet down a Cryſtal?

Mr. Turn. I do not know particularly, every Body was of Opinion it was a Cryſtal.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Rings were there?

Mr. Turn. I ſaw but one Ring, the others were looſe Stones.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you go off from this Particular, I muſt aſk you a Queſtion or two; theſe mentioned in the Inventory, ſufficient for a Gown and Petticoat, and ſufficient for a Lining; were theſe Pieces of Silk, or were they made up into Cloaths?

Mr. Turn. Theſe were Things that had been ſcowered and rolled up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Dimitty?

Mr. Turn. Yes, it was rolled up as coming from the Scowrers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you to put it down ſo much, ſufficient for a Gown and Petticoat?

Mr. Turn. I obſerved at that very Time to Mr. Bambridge, and told him we uſually did not diſtrain wearing Apparel; upon which he then ſaid, Put it down ſufficient for wearing Apparel.

L. C. J. Give a direct Account of that Particular again.

Mr. Turn. I ſaid to Mr. Bambridge,—Sir, we don't uſually ſet down wearing Apparel; then Mr. Bambridge ſaid, Put it down ſufficient for ſuch and ſuch a Thing, particularly, Sarſenet ſufficient for the Lining of a Gown, which was made up; if it was the Body of a Gown, he bid me put it down ſufficient for a Body, and the reſt of a Lining, ſufficient for a Lining.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Queſtion is, Whether they were actually made up, and ſet down only ſufficient?——Mr. Turn. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mention them particularly.

Mr. Turn. There was Sarſenet ſufficient for a Wrapping-gown, that was actually made up.

Mr. Turn. The total Sum agrees with the ſame as Mr. Bambridge had, Twenty Seven Pounds, Sixteen Shillings and Nine-pence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Diſcourſe you had as to the ſetting the Value?

Mr. Turn. Upon a curſory View of taking the Inventory, I brought it to Thirty Pounds, and Mr. Bambridge ſaid, You have over-rated theſe Things; you muſt conſider there is a Charge attending this Diſtreſs, and paying you beſides, and that would leſſen the Value of the Things; and bid me conſider it again, and upon looking it over again, I brought it to Twenty Seven Pounds Sixteen Shillings and Nine-pence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you upon Oath?

Mr. Turn. When I ſigned the Inventory, and finiſhed it, there was a Conſtable, and I did take an Oath, and I told Mr. Bambridge there ought to be two Perſons to make the Appraiſement; to which Mr. Bambridge ſaid, I might take Pindar; but Pindar refuſed, ſo only myſelf ſigned it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray give an Account, if you know, what is become of the Goods in the Inventory?

Mr. Turn. I do not know any thing of them but by Rumour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee any of the Things carried away by Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Bruſh, ſuch as was uſed to clean Jewels with?

Mr. Turn. Yes; Mr. Bambridge looked very narrowly, and at laſt a Bruſh appeared; and, upon ſeeing of that, he ſaid, certainly there was ſome Diamonds: Upon which Mrs. Berkley was very much chagrined; and ſhe ſaid, if you find them, will you take them? And after that he ſearched, and found the Rings and other Stones.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe about Papers?

Mr. Turn. There was a large Parchment in a Caſe; ſhe ſaid it was a Decree: It was in a great round Caſe, which Mr. Bambridge took; upon which Mrs. Berkley ſaid, What, will you rummage my Papers? Yes, ſays he; and if I find any Bonds or Bills, I will make uſe of them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of her after they entered the Room?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Condition of Mind was ſhe in?

I ſaid he was dead: She made Anſwer, ſhe would not believe me; for they would find him alive to their Coſts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did the Woman behave herſelf?

Mr. Turn. The Woman was much reſerved, and kept herſelf to herſelf very much. She talked much to the Purpoſe when ſhe did talk; but it was difficult to get her into it.

Mr. At. Gen. In diſpoſing of the Goods in the Manner you did, ſufficient for ſuch and ſuch a Thing, what Reaſon had you to do it?

Mr. Turn. It was Mr. Bambridge's poſitive Directions: I ſhould not have thought on it myſelf.

L. C. J. Who made the Difficulty firſt?

Mr. Turn. I did, and ſaid it was not cuſtomary to put down Wearing Apparel in Inventories upon Seizures; upon which he bid me alter the Names: I ſaid it was not proper to alter the Names, and they ought not to be mentioned at all.

L. C. J. What did Mr. Bambridge ſay?

Mr. Turn. Mr. Bambridge ſaid, I muſt have you let them be ſet down, Stuff or Silk ſufficient to make a Gown, or whatever it was.

L. C. J. Did you ſet them down according to the beſt of your Judgment?——Mr. Turn. I did.

L. C. J. Was that the real Value you ſet upon them?

Mr. Turn. The firſt Valuation was the Price I would have given for them; and when Mr. Bambridge ſaid the Coſts on the Diſtreſs would come to more, I reduced them three Pounds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Would you have given the Value firſt ſet upon them?

Mr. Turn. Yes.

Mr. Sel Gen. Had you any other Reaſon to alter the Value, than that Mr. Bambridge bid you?——Mr. Turn. No.

Mr. Bambridge. I deſire, my Lord, he may be aſked, Whether I did not inſiſt upon having every Thing particularized in the Inventory.

Mr. Turn. Yes, you did.

Mr. Bam. You ſay, I did demand the Keys of Mrs. Berkley, and ſhe refuſed to let me have them, and then the Boxes were opened.

Mr. Turn. Yes, I ſaid ſo.

L. C. J. I thought you did.

Mr. Bam. My Lord, Turner ſaid that there was ſome Gold Lace.——Whoſe was that?

Mr. Turn. It was the Trimming of the flowered Suit of Clothes; it was the Trimming of the Suit of Sattin Clothes; Part of the Lace was remaining on them.

Mr. Bam. Was there not ſeveral Things unmade?

Mr. Turn. I ſaid, that called a ſtriped Dimitty came from the Scowrer's.

Mr. Turn. All that I ſaw taken away was in the Inventory.

L. C. J. Is the Inventory the ſame you delivered to Mr. Bambridge?

Mr. Turn. He had every Article here, with the Prices annexed. It is a Wonder I had any Copy; for I did not apprehend that any Perſon would call upon me about it.

Mr. Bam. I deſire Mr. Turner may acquaint your Lordſhip, as to the Converſation that was between me, Mrs. Berkley, and him, at the Time of making the Diſtreſs.

Mr. Turn. Mr. Bambridge ſaid, it was a Shame ſhe ſhould live ſo long, and not to pay any Rent; for that it amounted to Fifty Pounds and upwards, and ſhe had Money enough to pay it; and ſaid, I am informed you have been abuſed, and I will enquire into your Affairs, and ſee if I can't extricate you out of your Difficulties.

L. C. J. I think there was a Demand of Fifty-ſix Pounds; was there not?

Mr. Turn. I did not hear of any Demand; he only talked of it.

L. C. J. What did Mrs. Berkley ſay?

Mr. Turn. She ſaid, it was the Houſe of the King's; and if ſhe was there, the King ſhould find her a Houſe.

Mr. Bam. I deſire he may be aſked, Whether, when I was in the Room, he did conceive what was done was with a felonious Intent.

Mr. Turn. I did think your Power was ſufficient to do it.

Mr. Bam. Have you made any other Appraiſements?

Mr. Turn. Yes.

Mr. Bam. Did you make any Alteration in them?

Mr. Turn. No.

Mr. Bam. Pindar, my Lord, was indicted, to take off his Evidence.

Mr. Juſtice Reynolds. Was there a Conſtable the firſt time of taking the Diſtreſs?---Mr. Turner. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſaid, there was a Man called a Conſtable: Did you know him to be a Conſtable?---Mr. Tur. I believe he was a Conſtable.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you believe the Man that came a ſecond time, to be a real Conſtable?---Mr. Tur. Yes. It has been enquired into ſince.

Mr. Bam. If it was a Felony, it was a Felony committed in Oct. 1727, and not complained of till February or March laſt.

L. C. J. You are not come upon your Defence yet.

Mr. Bam. Do you not know the Name of the Conſtable?

Mr. Tur. I think he was a Currier.

Mr. Bam. Was it the Conſtable that uſually attended upon Seizures?

Mr. Tur. Yes.

Mr. Tur. He was a Diſtiller.

Mr. Fil. Did he not undertake the appraiſing of the Goods?

Mr. Tur. No, he refuſed it.

Mr. Fil. Did not Mr. Bambridge preſs him to it?---Mr. Tur. Yes.

Mr. Fil. Was there a Conſtable a ſecond time?---Mr. Tur. Yes, both times.

Turner was going away; but was called back at the Requeſt of Mr. Bambridge, he deſiring to aſk him a Queſtion or two more.

L. C. J. Propoſe your Queſtions to the Court firſt.

Mr. Bam. I deſire he may acquaint your Lordſhip, whether, at the time when he appraiſed the Goods, I did not recommend it to Mrs. Berkley to pay the Rent; and ſaid, I would ſtay ſome time, and ſave the Goods from being diſpoſed of.

Mr. Tur. Mr. Bambridge did ſay ſhe was impoſed on; and ſaid, he would give her any Aſſiſtance, and bid her ſend to her Friends to get Money to pay the Rent.

L. C. J. He ſaid he would ſtay?---Mr. Tur. I did not hear him ſay it.

Mr. At. Gen. What did he ſay?

Mr. Tur. He ſaid he would aſſiſt her, ſhe being impoſed on; and did deſire her to ſend for Money to pay the Rent; but I did not hear him ſay any Words as to his ſtaying for the Rent.

(Thomas Wilkinſon was ſworn.)

Mr. Willes. Do you know Elizabeth Berkley?---Mr. Wilkin. Yes.

Mr. Willes. Did you know her in Oct. 1727?---Mr. Wilkin. Yes.

Mr. Bam. I deſire, my Lord, before he is further examined, he may be aſked, what Money he has received, and how long he has been kept to give Evidence againſt me?

L. C. J. That is not a Queſtion fit to be aſked.

Mr. Bam. It is true, I am ſure.

Mr. Juſtice Reynolds. You muſt prove that.

L. C. J. You cannot aſk a Man any thing that tends to accuſe himſelf.

Mr. Bam. I don't aſk to the Corruption; but whether he received the Money.

Mr. Juſtice Reynolds. It carries an Imputation with it.

Mr. Willes. He may prove it, if he can.

Mr. At. Gen. If Mr. Bambridge proves it, it will go only to the Credit of the Witneſs.

L. C. J. You ſay that Bambridge had the Ring, what uſe do you make of inquiring into the Value of the Ring, as to the one of them being worth fourteen Pounds, and the other twenty Shillings?

Mrs. How. I do not.

Mr. Willes. Did Bambridge tell you whoſe the Lace was?

Mrs. How. He ſold them as his Wife's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip here.

L. C. J. The King's Counſel have now done, what have you to ſay?

Mr. Bam. I did not hear what the laſt Witneſs ſaid.

L. C. J. She ſays, you ſold a Gown of blue Sattin, flowered, to one Weſt, as your Wife's; ſhe ſays, that one Harris bought the Silver Lace; that the Tea Spoons were offered to be ſold, but ſhe does not know whoſe they were. Now they have done, what have you to ſay?

Mr. Bam. As to my Defence, I ſhall give your Lordſhip but little Trouble. After the general Accuſation brought againſt me, and the Clamour it has made in the World, I don't find that there is any Thing anſwerable to it, or any Thing brought to the Point; the Gentlemen have not proved any felonious Act againſt me, any Thing fraudulent, or any Miſbehaviour whatſoever. If there was any Thing neceſſary to juſtify myſelf in, by giving an Account of my Conduct in my Office, I might do it fully, I have the proper Officer here ready to do it; but as I ſee no Neceſſiy for it, I will not Trouble your Lordſhip, but ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

L. C. J. Then you will reſt it here.—Gentlemen of the Jury,—

Mr. Bam. I muſt deſire one Favour of your Lordſhip, that if any Matter of Law ſhould ariſe, you will let that be reſerved.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What the King's Counsel say is very right, whether it was a fair Distress, or whether it was only the Colour of a Distress, with any felonious Intent: The Attorney-General has stated that very clearly, that a Man may do a lawful Act feloniously. If this was done with a felonious Intent, then this will be Felony; yet if it was not done with a felonious Intent, this will not be Felony. This was the grand Point laid down by the Gentlemen, that the Jury are to judge with what Design these Things were taken away.

Gentlemen, the first Witness for the King, who was John Turner, says, that the Time of taking those Goods was whilst Bambridge was Warden, and that Pindar was Chamberlain; and that Bambridge ordered this Pindar to distrain the Goods of Mrs. Berkley; and that the Time of distraining these Goods was between the 23d and 27th of October, 1727. He says, Gentlemen, that Bambridge was not then there present; and that she, Mrs. Berkley, was put out of her Room. After this, Bambridge came to enquire into this Affair, to see what was done, Mrs. Berkley being then on the Common Side; and he sent down Somebody to call her up, she having locked the Door. The Goods, Gentlemen, were as much under her Key as Bambridge's: Bambridge, I must tell you, put on one Padlock, and she locked the Door, and put on another; and when she refused to open the Door, he caused it to be broke open, and entered the Room. There was, Gentlemen, an Inventory made by one Turner, who had formerly inventoried Goods, and was usually sent to for such Purposes: He says, Gentlemen, he had no Orders to undervalue the Goods: Turner was sent for by Pindar: He valued all the Goods, as the Bed, Bedding, &c. and as to the Boxes, they were not then opened: He did not see what there were in them; but put them in gross in the Inventory. Bambridge, Gentlemen, coming to look after this Affair, on the 3d or 4th of November, sent for Mrs. Berkley to come up; and Mrs. Berkley came up accordingly; and he desired to have the use of her Key, which she refused, and said, I think you are going to rob me. Upon that, Bambridge, before her, sent Barnes for the Hammer, to have it to open the Door; but it would not do; and then he sent down for the Poker, and Barnes forced open the Door, and in they went, Mrs. Berkley along with them. Bambridge asked her for the Keys of her Boxes: She said, he should have no Keys; and asked him, by what Authority he did it: He said, by Authority of Warden; and Bambridge then ordered the Boxes to be broke open. When he had opened the Boxes, Turner was sent for; he was to perfect the Inventory, that was in part before made. It was opened by the Counsel for the King, that it was a fraudulent Inventory; and they, to make this appear clearly to be fraudulent, told you the Goods were set down otherwise than they really were. There was put down, they said, Dimity or Silk sufficient for a Gown, or what it was: They said, there was a flowered blue and white Sattin, that was actually made up, put down only as sufficient: As to the Dimity and Silk, that had been dyed, and Turner said, that it was rolled up; for these had been at the Dyer's, and were not put down as a Gown; but that he had set them down properly, as he thought: But when he came to the flowered Gown, which was made up, he made some Difficulty in putting that in the Inventory, and said, that it was not usual to put them in Distresses; for this was Wearing Apparel. And it was proved, Gentlemen, by one of the Witnesses, that Mrs. Berkley said, it was Felony: This, Gentlemen, might caution Turner; he said it was not usual to put such Things into an Inventory for a Distress. Then Bambridge said, if he would not put it in so, he must put it down so many Yards of flowered Silk, sufficient to make a Gown and Petticoat. The Difficulty arose from himself, and not from the Defendant. He should not have mentioned it Silk sufficient for a Gown; he was asked two or three Times, and Mr. Bambridge said, it must all be in the Inventory; so accordingly it was put in, in this Manner. This is offered to you as Evidence of the Affair: You will consider whether it is so or not. Then these Things were all looked over; and Turner says, they were all put into the Inventory, and the greatest Part put into a Portmanteau; but there were some few Things, as Tea-Spoons, Seals, and Rings, that were put into Bambridge's Pocket; but though he put them into his Pocket, they were in the Inventory; and this Inventory, in the Whole, came to 30*l.* and at last were brought down to 27*l.* He says, Gentlemen, that there was a Brush that was discovered; and Bambridge, upon seeing it, said, Surely there must be some Diamonds; and so he searched for them, and, in making such Search, he found a Piece of Paper: The Witness says, Gentlemen, it was some Decree, which Bambridge took in his Hand. She said to Bambridge, You won't take the Papers too? Yes, said he, I will; and if I find any Bonds or Bills, I will make bold with them. He says, Gentlemen, that Bambridge took the Bed and Bedding away, and offered her another Bed; but she said, she would not lie on it; then she went down to the Common Side. He says, that she talked very much; that she was disordered in her Mind, and talked of Lord Harcourt. This is the Account given of her. He says, Gentlemen, that Bambridge sent for her when the Inventory was taken; and he says, that she was there during all the Time: Though he took these little Things, yet she could not be defrauded in that Manner, because they were put in that Inventory. I must give you an Account of the Evidence of the People, as they are examined. Turner, Gentlemen, says, that Bambridge expostulated with her about the Chamber Rent that was due, which was 56*l.* and said, Why do you not pay it? I am informed that you are very capable: The Woman said, the House was the King's, and the King should find her a House; and Bambridge said, he would do her what Service he could. Gentlemen, it was said by Turner, that he did appraise these Goods; that he did appraise them fairly; and that he was employed by Pindar, who was used to employ him. He said, Gentlemen, that the first Time a real Constable was there; and the second Time the Constable was a real Constable, and he swore him: Now there was, indeed, Pindar pressed by Bambridge to assist in the Appraisement, who did not at all understand it: He was a Distiller, of a quite different Trade. He says, Gentlemen, that Bambridge did desire Mrs. Berkley to send to her Friends to pay the Rent. This, Gentlemen, is the Evidence given by this Man. Another Witness, Gentlemen, is one Wilkinson: He gives an Account that he knew Mrs. Berkley, and where she lodged, and that he was a Prisoner there himself: He spoke of Pindar and Barnes, who were there the last Time of his coming. He says, that the Door was broke open, and that the Padlock was forced off by Bambridge's Order: He says, that Pindar fetched the Poker, and Bambridge ordered Barnes to break open the Door. He says, Gentlemen, he was sent to call Mrs. Berkley from the Common Side before this was done: When she came up, she was asked to part with her Keys; but she refused; and then the Door was broken open. He says, Gentlemen, there were two Boxes locked, and one nailed; and Bambridge asked her for the Keys of her Boxes; but she refused to deliver them to him; upon which Bambridge broke them open; and that Mrs. Berkley was all the Time there, and called it a Robbery. He says, that the Things were taken away by Bambridge's Directions; and that she, Mrs. Berkley, said, that the taking away her Wearing Apparel was Felony. He says, Gentlemen, he was ordered to take the Bed and Bedding, and carry it into the Lumber-Room; that afterwards it was taken from thence, and carried to the Water-side, to be sent to Wandsworth. There were several small Things, as an Emerald and Garnet, and some other Rings, one of them a Stone Ring; all these Mr. Bambridge put in his Pocket, he said for fear of losing them; and at the same Time he called to Savage and Douglas, to see that he put them into his Pocket, for fear they should be lost. Now, Gentlemen, he says further, the Wearing Apparel (which was rich), and such Things, the Prisoner put into the Portmanteau, and ordered it to be carried into the Lumber-Room; and other Things were carried to Will's Coffee-House; and the Prisoner said, he seized for Rent, and would stand by it. What he says farther, in relation to Mrs. Berkley, was, that she was there all the Time, and frequently complained it was Felony, and a Robbery; and says, that the Goods were removed, some at one time, and some at another, in the Day-time, not concealedly. This, Gentlemen, is the Substance of his Evidence: But he says something further, that her Bed being gone, she would not continue in the Room.

Burgess, he says, they had called her up: He spoke to the last Time of their being in the Room, about fourteen Days after the 23d of October. He says, he went up soon after the Door was broke open, and gives much the same Account as the former Witnesses have done; and that Bambridge put some small Stones in his Pocket: He says, that the putting these Things in his Pocket, was for fear they should be lost, and that he told Douglas so.

Savage says, that, hearing a Noise, he went to the Room, and found Mrs. Berkley there. He says, that Bambridge asked her for the Key; Mrs. Berkley said, he should have none, for that he came to rob her; upon which he broke the Boxes open: He says, that there were several good Things in them; there was a Garnet, and a little Stone Ring, two Cornelian Seals, and a loose Stone: These Things Bambridge put in his Pocket; but he does not remember that Bambridge said, he put them in his Pocket for fear of their being lost; nor did he say, that Bambridge bid Douglas, or any one else, take notice, he put them there for fear of being lost. He says, that the Bed was sent down to Wandsworth. He spoke to the Matter of the Fraud, as to the having the Wearing Apparel set down for so much Silk as would be sufficient for such a Purpose; and he was asked, Gentlemen, by Mr. Bambridge, whether any thing clandestine was done in breaking open the Boxes, and he said not. He says, that Bambridge pretended he seized the Goods for Rent, and that the Rings were shewn in the Coffee-House.

Solas, he said, the Rings were shewed to him, not to be sold, but to know the Value of them. He spoke as to that Ring that was brought to him by Coltheart, with a Diamond in the Middle of it, worth 14*l.* Gentlemen, there does not appear to be any such Ring in the Inventory, or the Lady's Boxes; but let that be as it will, it was only sent for him to value it.

The next Witnesses are Howard and his Wife: He says, there were several Things disposed of by Mr. Bambridge: It seems he lodged at their House. She says, this flowered Sattin Gown was carried to their House, and there disposed of: He swapt it for a Gold Watch. There was some Gold and Silver Lace mentioned in the Inventory, which, she says, was sold to one Mr. Harris, who brought the Money, which was not quite Ten Pounds. She says, that he did not say, that it was Mrs. Berkley's, but his Wife's. This, Gentlemen, is all the Evidence given by the Witnesses, from the one Side, or the other. If there is any thing else, that I have omitted, I hope you will put me in mind of it. Now, Gentlemen, what you have to consider is, whether Bambridge did feloniously steal these Goods.

This, Gentlemen, is an Indictment founded upon the Statute of the 12th of the late Queen, the Words are, If any Person shall feloniously steal any Goods worth Forty Shillings out of a Dwelling-House, he shall suffer Death, without the Benefit of his Clergy. Now the Question is, Gentlemen, whether he did steal, or take them away with a felonious Intent, to make it Felony; or whether he took them as a Distress for Rent? Whether the Distress was regular or not, is not the Matter; if the Distress was irregular, he is liable to an Action; if he took them with any View of committing any Theft or Felony, you will find him guilty of Felony; but if that was his real Intention, to levy Rent by Distress, and that he had no Intention to steal the Goods, then he is not guilty of this Felony; but if he made use of this Intent of distraining, with a View of stealing these Goods, and to make them his own, and this was only a Colour, or mere Pretence of his wicked Intention, and that he had it in his View to steal these Goods, though this is a legal Remedy, yet it will not excuse it; for if a Man make use of a legal Process with a felonious Intent, it will be Felony in him; for if a Man gets a Horse that was not his own by Replevin, it is Theft; if a Man gets another's Property into his Possession with a felonious Intent, it is Felony, but if not with a felonious Intent, it is not Felony; if he makes it only a Pretence to get Goods, and then dispose of them, and does this with a felonious Intention, and an Intention to steal them, then he will be guilty of Felony. Gentlemen, you will consider what was his Intention, and consider the Circumstances that have happened, which are fresh in your Memories. If these Goods were taken with a felonious Intent, then you will find him Guilty; but if he only took them as a Distress for Rent, and with no felonious Intent, then you will Acquit him.

Mr. Matthews. (Speaking to the Officer.) Will the Jury withdraw?

Mr. Kettleby. What have you to do with their withdrawing? Let them give their Verdict in Court, if they will.

Mr. Matthews. They are at a Diſtance now, they muſt either withdraw to conſult, or conſult together in Court.

Mr. Kettleby. You and the Proſecution are of a Piece; you juſt now read Part of the Indictment, and left out the other Part.

Mr. Matthews. Officer, clear the Court.

L. C. J. If you pleaſe to withdraw, and conſider of the Verdict.

Then an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, and they withdrew, and returned in a very ſhort Time.

L. C. J. (The Jury being returned.) Call over the Jury. Anſwer to your Names. (Which they did.)

Mr. Matthews. (After he had called them over.) Are you all agreed in your Verdict?—Omnes. Yes.

Mr. Matthews. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Mr. Matthews. Thomas Bambridge, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.) Then, ſpeaking to the Jury, Look upon the Priſoner at the Bar, how ſay you, Is he Guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

It is remarkable, that though the Proſecutions againſt Mr. Huggins, Mr. Bambridge, &c. were ordered by his Majeſty, on an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons, and conducted by ſome of the greateſt Men at the Bar, yet they got off—all being acquitted.

N°. I.

'SIR,

'My ſuppoſed Attachment to the Intereſt of Mr. Bambridge, cannot, 'am ſenſible, but have prejudiced me in the Opinion of all good Men, 'and therefore, before, Sir, I offer my Service to you, and to my Coun-'try, it may not be amiſs to ſay ſomething of the Motives that at firſt in-'duced me to fall in with his Party, and alſo of thoſe which have ſince 'determined me to quit it.

'After the Report of the late Committee, I will not preſume to ſay, I 'thought Mr. Bambridge innocent; but, I confeſs, I looked upon him to 'be far leſs guilty, than ſince, by examining his own Side only of the 'Queſtion, I find he is; the Atrociouſneſs of his Crimes took off to me 'much of the Probability of his committing them; and it was hard for a 'Man who had any Virtue himſelf, to believe there was another ſo per-'fectly abandoned.

'Mr. Bambridge took all the Opportunities he could, of gaining thoſe 'he thought might be of uſe to his Party; amongſt the reſt, he applied 'himſelf to me. I confeſs, at firſt, the Art with which he palliated his 'Offences, deceived me; I went heartily into his Concerns, and did all 'for him in my Power, as for a Man ſtruggling againſt the Current of 'the Times; but as I grew into his Confidence, the Maſk was taken off, 'and I found the Uſe he intended to make of me, was not to aſſiſt an op-'preſſed Man in his Defence, but to ſcreen a guilty Perſon from his juſt 'Puniſhment. As to the perſonal Injuries I have received, (and ſurely 'Nobody has received more) I forbear to mention them, ſince my pri-'vate Pique ſhall never add an Edge to any Informations I may hereafter 'give you. I am weary of the Part, Sir, which hitherto I have acted in 'this Affair; 'tis with Pleaſure I quit the Side of Artifice and Diſſimula-'tion, and with Joy I enter into the Service of Truth, and of my Coun-'try. I heartily beg pardon for any Faults I may already have committed, 'and aſſure you, Sir, it ſhall always be my Study for the future, to teſti-'fy by my Actions, as well as Words, how much

'SIR,

'The laſt Time I did myſelf the Honour of writing to you, I promiſed 'to give you all the Informations in my Power, that might any ways tend 'towards carrying on, with Effect, that generous Inquiry made by the 'late Committee of the Houſe of Commons. In purſuance of which Pro-'miſe, give me Leave, Sir, to lay before you certain Obſervations, which, 'though at preſent little more than Conjecture, yet are ſuch as I deſpair 'not, by Time and Application, to produce the ſtrongeſt Evidence of 'their Truth.

'The late Warden, Mr. Bambridge, notwithſtanding all his Vanity and 'Raſhneſs, could never have been capable of ſo much Folly, as to have 'committed ſo many notorious Offences in his Office, if he had not pre-'ſumed on the Intereſt of ſome ſuperior Power, which (at leaſt as he fan-'cied,) might be able to prevent any Inquiry into his Conduct; or if that 'by no Arts were to be evaded, would at laſt ſcreen him from Puniſhment. 'That this Preſumption of his was but too well founded, I am apt to be-'lieve is pretty apparent; the Behaviour of a certain Court, when Com-'plaints were made againſt him; the Difficulties there were in procuring 'Rules, on the plaineſt Proofs of the moſt flagrant Oppreſſions; the am-'biguous Terms in which ſuch Rules were generally drawn up; the little 'Regard he paid thoſe Orders, when ſerved upon him, and his Impuni-'ty, notwithſtanding ſuch Diſreſpect, are Arguments which amount al-'moſt to a Demonſtration of his being in Confederacy with a certain Per-'ſon, who, no doubt, took care to receive from him an adequate Satisfac-'tion for ſuch Favours.

'But as a Correſpondence of this Nature was equally criminal in the 'Receiver and Giver, it cannot but be ſuppoſed, that the utmoſt Caution 'was uſed, in order to the carrying it on with impenetrable Secrecy. But 'when the Houſe of Commons thought fit to impriſon Bambridge, a third 'Hand became abſolutely neceſſary towards that Purpoſe; and from 'thence ſo much Light has been let into that dark Affair, that by degrees 'I no way doubt, but that a perfect Diſcovery may be effected. I will 'only beg Leave to add one thing to this long Letter, and that is, that 'although Vice be contagious in its Nature, and that I have long con-'verſed in Intimacy with Mr. Bambridge, yet, if I know my own Heart, I 'will venture, Sir, to aſſure you, there is nothing I ſo much hate as Diſ-'ingenuity; and that for the future, I ſhall let ſlip no Opportunity of 'ſhewing with how much ſincerity

N°. III.

'SIR,

'Having, in my former, laid before you thoſe Reaſons which induced 'me to believe a Correſpondence between Bambridge and a certain great 'Man, at whom I have already pointed; I now beg Leave to add ſuch 'Facts, as have at any time come to my Knowledge, and which ſeem to 'confirm it. Firſt, Sir, give me Leave to obſerve, that Bambridge, in 'regard to his Expences in private Life, has, ſince his Impriſonment, 'been very much ſtraitened; but where Counſel, or any thing elſe that 'was neceſſary towards his Defence, was wanting, Money has not only 'been expended, but laviſhed. I lay the more Streſs on this, becauſe in 'ſome reſpect, it falls within the Circle of your own Obſervance. When 'Mr. Bambridge attended laſt at the Houſe of Commons, his Counſel was 'pleaſed to ſay for him, that the preſent Narrowneſs of his Circumſtan-'ces obliged him to appear with but one Counſel; but ſince that fruitleſs 'Negotiation, in which through his Arts I was ſo unlucky to become an 'Agent, we have ſeen a very different Turn. The Courts of Chancery, 'King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Old Bailey, have all in their Turns 'been crowded with Orators in his Favour.

'The Lowneſs of his Fortune at the Time of his coming to his Office 'at the Fleet, is notorious to the World; and though I believe, as to get-'ting of Money, he can by no means be charged with being idle; yet, '(if even the moſt extravagant Calculation ſhould be admitted) the Short-'neſs of his Stay there could not but prevent his acquiring half that Sum 'of Money, which has been already expended in defence of theſe Proſe-'cutions; add to this, that his own Creatures have Imprudence enough 'to mention this, as the ſtrongeſt Part of what they call a formidable In-'tereſt, and that I myſelf have ſeen his Clerk deliver a Letter to that great 'Man, in Weſtminſter-Hall; to which his Lordſhip ſaid, I thank you, 'Sir, I am obliged to you, Sir, or Words to that purpoſe.

'But that which has given me the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances, and ſuch as, 'I hope, will one Day terminate in the cleareſt Evidence, is the Con-'verſation I have had with one Mr. B. who is himſelf perfectly intimate 'with Bambridge, and whoſe Wife has given very extraordinary Inſtan-'ces of her Attachment to his Intereſt. This Gentleman, though he 'ſtill owns the greateſt Friendſhip to him, yet has confeſſed to me, that 'to his own Knowledge, Bambridge had it in his Power to —— that great 'Man, (that was his Expreſſion,) not only in reſpect to things done as to 'the Office of the Fleet, but in other Reſpects alſo; and that he was ſorry 'Bambridge was not to be perſuaded to give him up to Juſtice, which might 'be a means, not only of ſaving himſelf, but would alſo make ſome 'Atonement for his Faults. He promiſed me alſo to make ſo ſtrict an In-'quiry into this Affair, as to furniſh me with a Clue, by which might be 'unravelled this whole Work of Darkneſs. For this purpoſe I was to 'have met on Friday, but ſomething having intervened, he has put it off till 'Tueſday next, till when I ſhould have delayed this Letter, but that I

* Theſe Letters, &c. are taken from the Proceedings, &c. in this Affair, as drawn up by Mr. Luke Kenn, to be laid before the Houſe of Commons. The whole Proceedings are long, being about 142 Folio Pages, wrote cloſe, in a ſmall Round Hand; ſo we have taken only ſo much, as may give ſome Light into the Charge relating to the foregoing Trial, &c.

'was impatient of giving you some further Proof of that Sincerity with 'which

N°. IV.

'SIR,

'Mr. Harbin having acquainted me, that he intended to make you a 'Visit, I was unwilling he should go without carrying with him this, as 'a Mark of my Duty and Respect, especially so remarkable an Event '(I speak with regard to the Prosecution) as the Acquittal of Mr. Bam-'bridge having happened since your going down into the Country. I do 'not pretend, Sir, to give you an exact Detail of that extraordinary Af-'fair, the public Prints having doubtless, and probably a Manuscript 'Copy of his Trial, may long ere now have reached your Hands; all I 'shall endeavour, will be by a short Observation or two upon it, to give 'you some Light into the Means by which that unexpected Event was 'brought about.

'It is agreed, on all hands, that a legal Distress for Rent is a very in-'nocent as well as a lawful Action; but if, under colour of such Distress, 'a Person comes, and, with a felonious Intent, steals and carries away 'Goods, the Pretence of a Distress will be so far from extenuating, that 'it will heighten the Offence, since it is done in fraudem legis; and the 'Law, which is intended to preserve and to protect the Property of the 'Subject, is thereby made a Means to destroy it.

'A felonious Intent is only to be proved from the Actions of him who 'commits the Fact; and that such an Intention actuated Mr. Bambridge 'in this extraordinary Seizure, is pretty apparent, from the two follow-'ing Circumstances which attend it.

'Turner, the Person employed by Mr. Bambridge as an Appraiser (though 'a Prisoner and a Creature of his own), yet thought fit humbly to repre-'sent to him, that he had never seen necessary Wearing Apparel distrained 'before (as indeed by Law it cannot); upon which Mr. Bambridge or-'dered him, in taking the Inventory, instead of setting down a Gown and 'Petticoat, as the Thing really was, to set down Silk sufficient for a Gown 'and Petticoat; and made use, in several Instances, of the same Artifice: 'A thing in itself so plain and flagrant, that even Mr. Bambridge could 'not find out an Evasion; but in that he was kindly helped out by the 'Bench; from whence, in summing up the Evidence, it was declared, 'that the Appraiser's was only an idle Objection, to which Mr. Bambridge 'gave way, merely because he would have nothing left out of the In-'ventory.

'The other was this: It was fully proved, that Mr. Bambridge carried 'away four Rings in his Pocket, though but one is mentioned in the In-'ventory, and that too is called a Crystal, tho' it was indeed an Amethyst. 'To us, who were Spectators, this appeared to have a very great Weight; 'but it seems it appeared in a very different Light to the Gentleman who 'tried him, since it escaped both his Memory and his Notes.

'Having twice mentioned that Gentleman, I cannot help doing him 'Justice, on this Occasion, by observing, that (however in other Re-'spects his Enemies may asperse his Character) there is one Part of the 'Judge, in which I believe no Man ever came up to him; I mean, in 'being Counsel for the Prisoner. I am afraid I have been already too 'prolix, and will therefore lengthen this Letter no further, than to as-'sure you, Sir, of my being,

'Dear Frank,

'I find that Mr. Bambridge, however unlikely he is in succeeding, will 'undoubtedly move the Court of King's-Bench for Judgment and Damages 'upon the Writ of Appeal; and hopes great Advantages from the Favour 'of the Gentleman who tried him, on the first Indictment, for the Mur-'der. I do not find, from Codnor, that he has any Affidavits to support 'this Motion; or, at least, if he has any, he has not trusted him with 'them: However, am to see Codnor this Evening; and if any Thing 'material should occur, shall leave a Line, so that you may have it very 'early in the Morning. I find he and all his Party are very alert at pre-'sent; and are so far from being apprehensive, from the present Temper 'of the House of Commons, that they, on all Occasions, treat the late 'Committee with the utmost Insolence and Contempt. However, as 'there is little Likelihood that his Assurance will be able to defeat the 'united Endeavours of those Gentlemen for the Relief of the Unhappy, 'I please myself with hoping that all will at last go right. I am,

N°. VI.

'SIR,

'Mr. Harbin having informed me, that you have been so good as to 'enquire after me, I thought it necessary for me to excuse myself for not 'attending you, by acquainting you with the Reason; which is, that my 'being seen at the Horse-Guards, as Things stand at present, might be 'some Hindrance to my entering into the Knowledge of some Things, 'about which it is at present my Duty to enquire.

'There is another Motive which induced me to give you this Trouble; 'and that is, that you would be so good as to mention it to the Chair-'man, that as my Time (the only Thing valuable that is left me in my 'Misfortunes) is almost wholly taken up in endeavouring to do Service 'to the present Enquiry; and as it has involved me in the Hatred of a 'Party of the worst of Men, who let slip no Opportunity of making me 'uneasy; I hope it may not be thought unreasonable to give some Di-'rections for my receiving a moderate Subsistence.

'I confess Mr. Harbin has been, in this Respect, very kind; but as I 'have been hitherto unused to ask any body for every Shilling and Six-'pence that is necessary to be laid out, I conceive it would be for both 'our Advantages to have it put into another Channel.

'Before my engaging in this Affair, I confess, I used sometimes to 'prepare some little Labours for the Press; but as these are the Employ-'ments of a Mind at ease, in my present Circumstances, it is no way in 'my Power to compose them. As this is a Subject on which I should 'never have prevailed on myself to speak, and on which I write with the 'greatest Reluctancy, I hope you will forgive this Trouble from

'Your obliged and

Thursday Morning. 'Obedient Servant.'

The Committee thought it their Duty to examine strictly into an Affair of so extraordinary a Nature, when several Persons appeared before them, and endeavoured to make good their several Informations.

Which Persons, having been examined before the Committee in the most solemn manner, relating to the foregoing Charge, grosly prevaricated in their Examinations, contradicted one another in several material Circumstances, and, as to the Facts, were falsified by Persons to whom they referred for the Truth of what they had declared.

It likewise appeared to the Committee, that divers of the said Persons were Prisoners in Newgate, or the Fleet; some of them of vile and infamous Characters; others actuated by a Spirit of Resentment, on account of Causes determined against them before the said Lord Chief Justice; and all of them tampered with, and influenced. It further appeared to the Committee, that several of the said Persons had Meetings and Consultations amongst themselves; and had been guilty of divers evil Practices, in order to set on foot and support the said Charge against the said Lord Chief Justice, and the Matters contained in their said Informations.

After the Committee had spent several Days upon the said Enquiry, and had examined all the Witnesses that appeared before them, the principal Persons concerned in the Conspiracy having Reason to apprehend, that the Evidence given by them to support the said Charge, would not be sufficient to impose upon the Committee, and to obtain Credit to the said Informations, did consult with a Person to fix a new Charge upon the said Lord Chief Justice; not mentioned before in any of their Examinations, by giving Evidence of certain Circumstances, to induce a Belief, that about three Days before the Time appointed for the Trial of the said Thomas Bambridge for Felony, in the last long Vacation, the said Thomas Bambridge did send a Letter to the said Lord Chief Justice for Money; and that, in consequence thereof, he received one hundred Guineas.

Whereupon the Committee thought fit to re-examine the said principal Persons, who before had been examined as to the former Charge, who were not able to give the least Colour of Evidence to support the said new Charge, and were flatly contradicted by the Evidence to whom they referred; and on their Examinations, the Committee being convinced that the said new Charge was only a Continuation of the former Conspiracy, on considering the whole Matter, came to the following Resolutions.

Resolved,

That it appears to the Committee, That there hath been a wicked Conspiracy carried on by certain infamous and profligate Persons, to vilify and asperse the Character of the Right Honourable Sir Robert Eyre, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of his Majesty's Court of Common Pleas;

Resolved,

That it appears to this Committee, That the Informations given to this Committee against the said Lord Chief Justice Eyre, are false, malicious, scandalous, and utterly groundless.

Then Resolved, That Roger Johnson, and a great Number of low, ordinary People (there named), were the Persons concerned in the said Conspiracy.

To which the House agreed.

Thus this great Man had Justice done him, in as honourable a Manner as possibly could be, and cleared of so scandalous and infamous a Charge.

Mr. Parker.

MY Lord, in this Cause, his Majesty is Plaintiff, and Richard Francklin, Defendant. The Information sets forth, That before the Demise of the late King, divers Differences and Controversies arose between his said late Majesty and divers Princes and foreign States, being his Allies, and the King of Spain, concerning the public Safety and Commerce of this Kingdom, and the Peace and Tranquillity of Europe; and that, pending such Differences, to wit, the 30th September, 1725, a certain Treaty, betwixt the said late King, Lewis the French King, and the King of Prussia, was concluded and made at Hanover; and that afterwards, to wit, the 9th of November, 1729, in order to compromise such Differences, and to establish Peace in Europe, a certain Treaty of Peace, Union, Amity, and mutual Defence, was concluded and made, betwixt his Majesty King George the IId. and the said Lewis the French King, and Philip King of Spain, at the City of Seville, in the said Kingdom of Spain. The Information also sets forth, That Richard Francklin, well knowing the Premisses, but being a malicious, seditious, and ill-disposed Person, and a perpetual and diligent Publisher and Seller of seditious and scandalous Libels, and disaffected to his present Majesty and his Government; and wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously contriving and intending to disturb and disquiet the happy State of the Public Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom; and to bring his present Majesty's Treaty of Peace (which, with great Affection towards his Subjects, and for the Advantage of this Kingdom, was concluded) into Contempt and Disgrace among all his liege Subjects of this Kingdom; and also to detract, scandalize, traduce, and vilify the Administration of his present Majesty's Government of this Kingdom, and his principal Officers and Ministers of State; and to represent his said Officers and Ministers of State as Persons of no Integrity and Ability, and as Enemies to the public Good of this Kingdom; and to cause it to be believed, that his said present Majesty, by the Advice of his said principal Officers and Ministers, intended to break and violate the said Treaty last mentioned; and thereby to raise and sow Differences and Discords betwixt his said present Majesty and the said French King, and King of Spain; and also to spread false News and Rumours concerning the State of the public Affairs of this Kingdom; and to bring his said present Majesty, and his Administration of the Government of this Kingdom, into Suspicion and ill Opinion of his said liege Subjects, on the 2d of January, in the 4th Year of his present Majesty's Reign, at the Parish of St. Paul's, Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, a certain false, scandalous, and seditious Libel, [intitled, N°. 235, The Country-Journal; or, the Craftsman. By Caleb D'Anvers, of Gray's-Inn, Esq. Saturday, January 2d, 1730,] wickedly and maliciously did print and publish, and caused to be printed and published. In which Libel, of and concerning his said present Majesty King George the IId. now King of Great-Britain, &c. and his Administration of the Government of this Kingdom, and State of the public Affairs of this Kingdom; and of and concerning his said principal Officers and Ministers of State; and of and concerning the said Treaty, made betwixt his said present Majesty and the said French King, and the said King of Spain; and also of and concerning the said French King, the said King of Spain, and the most Serene Prince Charles, Emperor of Germany; are contained (among other Things) divers false, feigned, scandalous, seditious, and malicious Matters, according to the Tenor following, to wit; [Extract of a private Letter from the Hague.] "A Rumour hath been for some Time privately spread about, "and begins to gain Credit here, that a Misunderstanding will soon dis- "cover itself between the Allies of Seville;" (meaning his said present Majesty, the said French King, and the said King of Spain) "and that "certain Ministers" (meaning the said principal Officers and Ministers of his said Majesty, employed and intrusted in the difficult Affairs of State) "having at length found out, that too close an Union with France, and "a War upon the Foot of the Treaty of Seville, is quite against the "Grain of the People, are endeavouring to bring about an Accommo- "dation with the Emperor, and to undo every Thing they have been "doing for these five Years past. If this should prove true, it will cer- "tainly redound very much to the Honour of those Gentlemen, who "have so vigorously opposed the late Measures; and the Ministers, who "have not only concerted and pursued these Measures, but loaded all Op- "position to them with the foulest Imputations, will be obliged to take "a great deal of Shame to themselves; for what can be a stronger Con- "demnation of their own past Conduct, or the Conduct of those "whom they have employed to write in their Cause, than to see "them wheel about all on a sudden, and pursue Measures directly "opposite, which have been pointed out to them, for several Years to- "gether, by their Adversaries; and for which they have represented "those Gentlemen, in the most opprobrious Colours, as factious Incen- "diaries, Germanized Patriots, and Enemies to their Country? What "can be more ridiculous than to see them desert one Ally, whose good "Faith, Sincerity, and even Cordiality of Friendship, they have so of- "ten extolled, and at last run into the Arms of another, whom they have "so industriously set forth as the most dishonourable, ungrateful, and per- "fidious Prince? They must have altered their Opinion of this Prince "very much (if this Report is true), and seem to rely upon his Good- "nature, putting themselves thus absolutely in his Power; for if he should "refuse to deal with them, after the Usage he hath received, they will "be broke with all the Courts of Europe; and he cannot be insensible of "their Perfidy to others, at the same Time that he is treating with them. "How will they be able to justify those vast Expences which they have "already brought upon their Country, by an obstinate Perseverance in "other Measures, till the last Extremity, as well as those farther Expences "and Hazards, in which such a precipitate Alteration of Counsels, in "the present Circumstances of Europe, will certainly involve it? For "though the Measure, which is now said to be secretly carrying on, was "certainly the most eligible, whilst they remained unembarrassed with "Engagements of another Kind; and though it must be confessed to be "very desirable at present; yet it seems to be attended with very fatal "Consequences, and almost insuperable Difficulties. The People, of "whom I am speaking, had their Hands at Liberty five Years ago, and "might have entered into what Measures they pleased with the Emperor, "without giving Umbrage, or any just Reason of Complaint, to other "Courts; but at present they cannot do it, without an Infraction of so- "lemn Treaties, and drawing upon their Country the Resentments which "usually attend Violations of Faith. One immediate Effect of this Re- "sentment may be the Interruption of Trade, and the Seizure of that vast "Pledge, which Spain hath at this Time in her Hands; so that the only "pretended good Effect of their former Conduct, may be absolutely de- "feated by their present Scheme. Another necessary Effect (for so I "think I may call it) of such a Measure, at present, will be a Con- "junction of France and Spain; and a certain Court may have the Morti- "fication to see those two Crowns united against them more strongly than "ever, by their extraordinary Management, after they have spent so many "Millions to prevent it. I am far from designing to insinuate from hence, "that an Accommodation with the Emperor is a wrong Measure: On "the contrary, I wish it had been thought a right Measure long ago. My "only Intention is to shew how difficult, in my Apprehension, the Con- "duct of some Ministers hath rendered it to their Country, as well as dis- "honourable to themselves, by carrying along with it the severest Censure "of their own Conduct, and the strongest Justification of their Adver- "saries, against all the Aspersions which have been cast upon them."] In Contempt of his said present Majesty, and his Laws; and to the great Disgrace, Scandal, and Infamy of his said present Majesty, and his Administration of the Government of this Kingdom; to the Disturbance of the public Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom; to the evil Example of all others, offending in the like Case; and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Sir Philip York, Attorney-General. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel for the King. This is a Prosecution against the Defendant, Mr. Francklin, for printing and publishing a scandalous and seditious Libel; an Offence (however it hath been treated of late Days) which the Law considers as a very heinous Crime, as it tends to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to bring into Contempt the King's Administration of the Government; and as it tends to create great Jealousy and Dissatisfaction in the Minds of his Majesty's Subjects against his Government; and, indeed, this is the Use you find made of it. The present Libel, for and upon which the Defendant is to be tried, will appear to be a Libel of that Nature, and attended with the most aggravating Circumstances of any ever yet published.

To explain the Nature of this Prosecution and Libel, and to shew the Connection and Tendency thereof, it is necessary to open a little to you the several Parts of it, in order to apply it to the Description of the Persons and Things spoken of. It is described to be a Libel concerning his present Majesty, and his Majesty's Government of the Kingdom, and concerning the public Affairs thereof, and concerning his Ministers; and it is expressed to relate to a Treaty concluded betwixt his present Majesty, and the French King, and the King of Spain, at Seville, in November, 1729. The Liberty that the Defendant, Mr. Francklin, has taken, is from Things done by the Princes in that Treaty, upon a Pretension, that it is an Extract of a private Letter from the Hague: He says, ["A Rumour hath been for some Time privately spread about, "and begins to gain Credit here, that a Misunderstanding will soon dis- "cover itself between the Allies of Seville."] Now the Allies of Seville are well known to be his present Majesty, the King of France, and the King of Spain. Again, the Writer goes on to say, ["That certain Mi- "nisters" (whom the Information explains to be the Ministers of his present Majesty) "having at length found out, that too close an Union with "France, and a War upon the Foot of the Treaty of Seville, is quite "against the Grain of the People, are endeavouring to bring about an "Accommodation with the Emperor, and to undo every Thing they "have been doing for these five Years past,"] which will carry the Calculation back to the 30th Sept. 1725, when the Treaty of Hanover was made. And then afterwards he says, ["If this should prove true, it "will certainly redound very much to the Honour of those Gentlemen, "who have so vigorously opposed the late Measures; and the Ministers,

* Taken down in Short-Hand, and transcribed into Long-Hand, by Mr. J. Weston.

" who have not only concerted and purſued theſe Meaſures, but loaded " all Oppoſition to them with the fouleſt Imputations, will be obliged " to take a great deal of Shame to themſelves."] And then he aſks the Queſtion, [" For what can be a ſtronger Condemnation of their " own paſt Conduct, than to ſee them wheel about all on a ſudden, and " purſue Meaſures directly oppoſite? And what can be more ridiculous " than to ſee them deſert one Ally, whoſe good Faith, Sincerity, " and even Cordiality of Friendſhip, they have ſo often extolled?"] Here is a plain Charge of Perfidy, or breaking of Faith. Again, the Miniſters are repreſented as running into the Arms of another Ally, whom thoſe Miniſters have ſet forth as the moſt diſhonourable, ungrateful, and perfidious Prince. Next, theſe Miniſters are repreſented as putting themſelves in the Power of that Prince; and ſays, [" If this Prince ſhould refuſe " to deal with them, after the Uſage he hath received, they will be broke " with all the Courts of Europe; and he cannot be inſenſible of their Per- " fidy to others," (that is to ſay, the former Allies) " at the ſame time " that he is treating with them."] Gentlemen, you may plainly obſerve here, that this is a poſitive Charge of Perfidy and Breach of Faith on theſe Miniſters. Again, the Libel, or pretended Letter, charges them with bringing on their Country vaſt Expences, not to be juſtified, and a further Expence and Hazard, which their precipitate Alteration of Counſels will certainly involve it in. And then he proceeds to repreſent, that they cannot, at preſent, treat with the Emperor, without Infraction of ſolemn Treaties, and Violation of Faith. Gentlemen, this is a direct Charge of Perfidy, in the ſtrongeſt Terms. In the next place, he repreſents the Effects of the Reſentment that they will draw on their Country by their Violation of Faith: One immediate Effect, he ſays [" may be the Interruption of Trade, and the Seizure of that vaſt " Pledge which Spain hath at this time in her Hands."] Another neceſſary Effect (for ſo he thinks he may call it) will be a Conjunction of France and Spain; and a certain Court (theſe are his Words) may have the Mortification to ſee thoſe two Crowns united againſt them more ſtrongly than ever, by their extraordinary Management, after they have ſpent ſo many Millions to prevent it. Gentlemen, this the Nature and Import of the Libel; and whoever it is that is charged with theſe Things, it is plain, that there cannot be a more evident Charge of Perfidiouſneſs, and purſuing Meaſures deſtructive to their Country. The Reaſon of my opening thus, is to ſhew and make way for the Application of the Libel to the Perſons and Things mentioned in it. And in order to ſhew that the Libel is applied to his preſent Majeſty and his Miniſters, and the Adminiſtration of the Government of this Kingdom, and cannot be applied to any other, it will be neceſſary for you, Gentlemen, to conſider who are the Miniſters thus charged. The Deſcription is, that a Miſunderſtanding will ſoon diſcover itſelf between the Allies of Seville; and that certain Miniſters having at length found out, that too cloſe an Union with France, and ſo on. Gentlemen, who are the Allies of Seville? They are the King of Great Britain, the French King, and the King of Spain. Now, the Miniſters here ſpoken of are charged with Perfidiouſneſs in breaking that Treaty, who, to be ſure, muſt be meant of thoſe Miniſters that were impowered to make that Treaty; for no other could be guilty of breaking it: And, indeed, the Author himſelf hath, in this very pretended Hague Letter, fully explained his Meaning; and that it is not France or Spain, or their Miniſters, that he thus charges with Perfidy; for he tells us, that one neceſſary Effect of ſuch Violation of Faith, will be the Conjunction of France and Spain; and that a certain Court would have the Mortification to ſee thoſe two Crowns united againſt them more ſtrongly than ever. This amounts to a Demonſtration, that neither France nor Spain, nor their Miniſters are charged with breaking this Treaty; for they are plainly excluded: If ſo, then there is but one Party left, to wit, the King of Great Britain and his Miniſters; and it is plain, as if the Miniſters of Great Britain had been in expreſs Words. I am almoſt aſhamed to explain what is ſo plain; though I thought it proper to ſet forth thus at firſt. And, Gentlemen, if more Circumſtances are wanting to confirm this further, they may be added afterwards; ſuch as theſe, to wit, the Perſons who oppoſed them were ſtiled Germanized Patriots: Another Expreſſion is, the Seizure of that vaſt Pledge, which Spain hath at this time in her Hands. Beſides, it is incumbent on them to ſhew what other Court or Miniſters theſe Things can be applied to. There is another Obſervation, which I hinted at before, which is, that theſe Miniſters are endeavouring to undo every Thing they have been doing for theſe five Years paſt; which carries it back to the Time of compleating the Treaty of Hanover, which was in September, 1725. Gentlemen, it is far from our Deſire, that a forced Conſtruction ſhould be made or drawn from this Paper; but ſuch a one only, as every underſtanding Perſon, that takes it up and reads it, would put upon it: But I would not be thought to mean, that every Reader underſtands it as a Libel, or a ſcandalous Libel, as Courts and Juries do: No, the Law is not ſo abſurd to ſuppoſe ſuch a thing. Beſides, it is very well known, that there have been ſeveral Caſes of this Nature, that have been underſtood by the Court and Jury as ſuch, I mean as a Libel, before this Time; and it is neceſſary to mention to you, that a Picture may be drawn very lively, and conſtrued ſo; and that a Libel may be written under feigned Names, and yet plainly underſtood; as in the Caſe of Mr. Miſ's Journal in 1728, wherein the fictitious Names of Eſriff and Sophy of Perſia were inſerted; yet, notwithſtanding theſe aſſumed Names, when it came to be tried by a Jury, they underſtood it, as every honeſt Man would, to be a ſcandalous Libel. I ſhall not take up now any more Time upon this Head. The next Thing is, whether the Defendant, Mr. Franckl.n, is guilty or not of the Facts charged in the Information? And now, Gentlemen, we ſhall give you the ſtrongeſt and cleareſt Proof in the world: We ſhall prove, by a Witneſs who bought ſix of theſe Journals, wherein the pretended Hague Letter is inſerted, of the Defendant himſelf, at his Shop; and that the Defendant ordered his Servant to give him them; and it will appear to you, that the Perſon who bought them, ſold them alſo himſelf; and, if that wants further Confirmation, we can prove, that the Defendant publiſhes ſeditious Papers or Journals every Week. Theſe Things being laid before you, we expect you will do Juſtice betwixt the King and the Defendant; and that is all which is deſired of you.

Charles Talbot, Eſq. Sollicitor General. My Lord and Gentlemen, I am on the ſame Side; and as the Caſe is ſo plain, I would not take up much of your Time. The Libel is againſt his Majeſty, and his principal Officers and Miniſters of State, under the Colour of An Extract of a private Letter from the Hague; and though it is ſaid ſo, yet whoever conſiders it, and attends to the Frame and Stile of it, and Tendency of the Whole, will plainly be convinced, that it is of an Engliſh Breed: But let it be real or fictitious, it is the ſame thing, if it is a Libel, and the Subject-Matter thereof is againſt the Government; nor is it material, whether the Matters or Things publiſhed therein are either true or falſe, if the Publication thereof is detrimental to the Government, and of a malicious, injurious, and ſeditious Deſign, to create a Miſunderſtanding and Diſcord between his Majeſty and his Allies; and to raiſe Jealouſies in the Minds of his Subjects: And, indeed, for what other Purpoſes can it be ſuppoſed to have been publiſhed, but for theſe very Things, of ſowing Sedition and Jealouſy, and diſturbing the publick Peace? Again, the Libel is not only againſt his preſent Majeſty, but alſo againſt his Miniſters; that they were about to make a Treaty with the Emperor, which would be undoing every Thing that they had been doing for theſe five Years paſt, which would occaſion them to take a great deal of Shame to themſelves. The next Thing he charges the Miniſters with is the deſerting of one Ally, and, in conſequence of that, the flying into the Arms of another; and that, if he thought fit not to deal with them, then they would be broke with all the Courts of Europe; and that he could not be inſenſible of their Perfidy to others, at the ſame time that he was treating with them. In the next Part of the Libel, he accuſes them of having brought a vaſt Expence on their Country by their former Meaſures; and that their preſent Meaſures will certainly involve it in a further Expence and Hazard. In the next place, he points out to the People the Conſequences and Difficulties attending theſe Meaſures; the firſt of which, he ſays, in his Apprehenſion, are very fatal; and the ſecond, almoſt inſuperable: He ſays, that one of the Conſequences will be the Infraction of ſolemn Treaties, and drawing on their Country the Reſentments which uſually attend Violation of Faith: Another Conſequence, he ſays, will be the Interruption of Trade; and that another Conſequence will be the Seizure of that vaſt Pledge which Spain hath in her Hands; and the laſt Conſequence, which he mentions, of ſuch Meaſures, (and which he thinks he may call a neceſſary Conſequence) is the Conjunction of France and Spain; and that a certain Court (which, as hath been already mentioned, can only be applied to Great Britain) may have the Mortification to ſee theſe two Crowns united againſt them more ſtrongly than ever, after they have ſpent ſo many Millions to prevent it. Gentlemen, I hope it now plainly appears to you, that this pretended Hague Letter is a Libel, and, I may ſay, a very malicious and ſeditious one too. If any thing may be called a Libel, ſurely Miniſters of State undoing what they have been doing for five Years paſt, and deſerting Allies, perfidiouſly expoſing their Country to Hazards and vaſt Expences, ſeizing their Effects, and occaſioning other Courts to be united againſt their own Country, may well be called a Libel; eſpecially when the Libel alſo carries in it the higheſt Charge againſt his Majeſty's Government, and tending to ſow Sedition, and Jealouſy, and Diſcords, between his Majeſty and his Allies, as well as between his own Subjects, and thereby diſturbing the publick Peace. That which remains is, of whom are theſe defamatory Things ſaid, and what Court and Miniſters are meant, or to whom theſe Expreſſions are applicable? The Expreſſions are, [" certain Miniſters are endeavouring, and a certain Court may " have the Mortification to ſee," &c.] I think every common Reader will preſently underſtand them to be the Court and Miniſters of Great Britain: And I believe I may venture to ſay, that the Gentlemen on the other Side cannot point out what Court and Miniſters are meant by theſe Expreſſions, if it is not the Court and Miniſters of Great Britain. Gentlemen, the whole Connection of the pretended Hague Letter, taking it all together, plainly points out to be meant of his preſent Majeſty and his Miniſters; and there is no Part thereof that can be applied, with any Propriety, to any other Court or Perſon whatſoever. In the Beginning of the Libel, we are told, that a Miſunderſtanding will ſoon diſcover itſelf between the Allies of Seville; and then immediately follows the Charge on certain Miniſters, that they were undoing every Thing that they had been doing five Years paſt. Theſe Words [" Certain Miniſters,"] muſt have a Reference either to the Miniſters of Spain, France, or Great-Britain. With regard to Spain, you have been already told, that it cannot have any Reference to them, becauſe one Effect of this Alteration of Affairs or Meaſures, is, that Spain would ſeize that vaſt Pledge which ſhe hath at this time in her Hands: Is this a Libel on the Miniſters of Spain, and can this give an Occaſion to Spain to lay hold on their own Effects, and ſeize their own Treaſure? No, it is Nonſenſe; ſo that the Miniſters of Spain cannot be meant; beſides, it is notorious to every body that knows any thing of the South-Sea Company, that that Company always have, and will have, while it is a Company, Effects and Treaſures in their Hands liable to be laid hold on and ſeized; ſo that as the Miniſters of Spain are not the Miniſters here meant, ſo likewiſe it ſhews that it cannot be meant of the Miniſters of France; for they are plainly excluded as well as the Miniſters of Spain: The Words are, [" That certain Miniſters having at length found " out, that too cloſe an Union with France, and a War upon the foot of " the Treaty of Seville, is quite againſt the Grain of the People."] Is this applicable to Miniſters of France? No; It is not Senſe to apply it to the Miniſters of any other Court than Great-Britain; but applying it ſo, it is good Senſe, and very proper: So that as the Miniſters of Spain and France are both excluded, it is plain to a Demonſtration, that it muſt be meant of the Miniſters of Great-Britain: And ſeeing every Part of the Libel is applicable thereto, and cannot agree with any other Court than the Court of Great-Britain, I apprehend, it will appear plain to you to be a Libel, and that the Expreſſions are meant of his Majeſty and his Miniſters; and if ſo, then there remains only one thing, and that is, to fix it on the Defendant; and this we will make appear beyond all Contradiction, not only as being the Printer of that Weekly Paper, but as having ſold them himſelf. And, Gentlemen, when this appears plain to you, after the Attorney General hath done his Duty, by laying a full Proof before you, it is hoped you will do yours.

Mr. Attorney General. I do not know whether they will deny the Defendant to be the Author or Publisher of the Paper; if they do, I shall prove it.

Mr. Fazakerley. We do deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Jenkins.

Mr. Jenkins appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Jenkins, look out the Copies of his Majesty's Speech the 20th of January, 1725.

(Here it was produced.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you examine it?——Mr. Jenkins. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where?——Mr. Jenkins. At the Parliament Office.

(Mr. Jenkins cross-examined.)

Mr. Fazak. Hath it been in your Custody ever since?

Mr. Jenkins. No.

Mr. Fazak. How know you that to be the very same that you examin'd?

Mr. Jenkins. Because I marked it.

Mr. Fazak. When, before or after you first parted with it?

Mr. Jenkins. Before.

Mr. Fazak. What Mark? Did you put your Name to it?

Mr. Jenkins. I put the two Initial Letters of my Name, which I will shew you.

Mr. Fazak. Are you sure that it hath not been altered since?

Mr. Jenkins. Yes, I am very sure.

Here his Majesty's Speech to the House of Lords was read, beginning thus: ["My Lords and Gentlemen, I have had such frequent Experience, &c."] Also his Majesty's Speech to the House of Commons.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Speech of the King is general; but I shall be more particular, and shall shew you a Copy of the Address of the House of Lords, when the Treaty of Hanover was laid before them, wherein they express their Satisfaction, and mention the King of Spain particularly.

Mr. Fazak. Though I have all the Honour imaginable for the House of Lords, yet I question whether their Addresses are to be taken as Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall read a Copy of the Journal of the House of Lords.

Mr. Fazak. Originals are the best Evidence of Fact; and whatever Addresses or Proceedings might have been made in the House of Lords, I think they cannot be proper Evidence here.

Mr. Att. Gen. What I produce is a Copy of the Lords Journal concerning the Treaty of Vienna, that the Secretaries of State laid before them.

Mr. Fazak. I own it is a Journal of the House of Lords, but it is not a proper Evidence of the Facts therein mentioned.

Mr. Bootle. My Lord, I apprehend, that the Evidence Mr. Attorney General is now pursuing, in the Course of Evidence is irregular, and on that the Objection doth arise. He says, he will prove the Facts by the Journal of the House of Lords: Suppose the Secretaries of State have failed in the Copy laid before them: I offer this to your Lordship's Consideration.

Lord Chief Justice. I find, Mr. Bootle, that all Manner of Objections will be raised to serve your Client; but I shall not pass away the Time, because you have Redress another Way; you shall have my Opinion about it.

Mr. Strange. Will you produce that Copy?

Mr. Att. Gen. We will do it. Mr. Jenkins, produce the Orders of the House of Lords, the 10th of February, 1725. (Here it was produced.)

Mr. Strange. Is it a true Copy?——Mr. Jenkins. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Have you had it ever since it was given in?

Mr. Jenkins. Yes.

(Here the Copy of the Journal was read; the Purport was a Copy of the Treaty of Peace made at Vienna, 3d April, 1725, a Copy of the Treaty of Commerce made at Vienna, 1st of May, 1725, and a Copy of the Treaty of Hanover, 30th September, 1725.)

Mr. Att. Gen. It is proper to see these Copies.

Mr. Strange. Mr. Jenkins, What is this?

Mr. Jenkins. The Treaty of Peace.

Mr. Strange. Where had you it?

Mr. Jenkins. From the Parliament Office.

Mr. Strange. Have you the Treaty of Commerce made at Vienna?

Mr. Jenkins. Yes, (Here the Title of it was read thus: Treaty between Charles Emperor of Germany, &c. and Philip the Vth, &c. dated 1st May, 1725.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Read the 2d and 3d Articles thereof. (Here they were read.)

Read the 36th Article. (Here it was read.)

Read the 47th Article. (Here it was read.)

The Purport of these Articles was, (as I thought) that they were of great Prejudice to his Majesty's Subjects, and consequently was an Occasion of Difference.

I beg that the Address of the House of Lords to his Majesty may be read, and his Majesty's Answer on the 17th of February, 1725.

Mr. Fazak. For what Purpose would you read them?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will understand that immediately.

[Here the Address was first read, and then his Majesty's Answer;] the Purport was to shew, that there were Differences between his late Majesty and the King of Spain, &c.

Mr. Fazak. Mr. Jenkins, by what did you examine these?

Mr. Jenkins. By the original Journal.

Mr. Att. Gen. I shall prove in the next Place, that the King of Spain, 13th July, 1725, (which was about two Months before the Treaty of Hanover) made an express Demand of Gibraltar.

Mr. Fazak. I do not rightly see through, or understand this Evidence; I suppose it is to make up some Defects.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Tilson. Mr. Tilson, have you any Papers with you?——Mr. Tilson. Yes, a Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Be pleased to give my Lord and Jury an Account how you received that Letter.

Mr. Tilson. My Lord, this is a Letter from the Marquis of Grameldo, Secretary to the King of Spain.

Lord Chief Justice. Where received you this Letter?

Mr. Tilson. I received it at Hanover.

Lord Chief Justice. When received you it?

Mr. Tilson. On the 1st of August New Stile, 1725.

Mr. Attorney General. From whom received you it, and in what Manner?

Mr. Tilson. By a Messenger that came from Sycovy from Mr. Stanhope:

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Messenger's Name?

Mr. Tilson. One Walton, the King's Messenger.

Mr. Att. Gen. How received you it?

Mr. Tilson. In a Packet made up with his Dispatches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where hath the Letter been kept ever since?

Mr. Tilson. In the Secretary of State's Office of the Lord Townshend.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where took you it from?

Mr. Tilson. From the Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was you?

Mr. Tilson. Under-Secretary to my Lord Townshend.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you interpret it immediately?

[No Answer was given.]

Mr. Taylor. I object against this Evidence, by reason it is not the best Evidence, because my Lord Harrington is here in England himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. I apprehend it is sufficient, and it is impossible to prove it otherwise; the Lord Harrington transmits it to his Master.

Mr. Taylor. If my Lord Harrington were here, he could give Evidence himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have found an Interpreter, and he will interprept the Spanish. Call Mr. Bocking.

Lord Chief Justice. What read you it for?

Mr. Att. Gen. For a Proof of the Demand of Gibraltar, by Virtue of the Treaty at Vienna. [Here Mr. Bocking was called.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Bocking, Do you understand the Spanish Tongue?

Mr. Bocking. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you compared it with the original Letter?

Mr. Bocking. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it truly translated?——Mr. Bocking. Yes.

[Here the Letter was read subscribed Grameldo.] The Purport of it was demanding up Gibraltar.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Thing is the Treaty of Hanover, which we have upon Record.

Mr. Fazakerley. I do not think this Evidence full; for the Allegation is, that there were certain Differences and Controversies between his late Majesty and divers Princes and Foreign States, being his Allies, and the King of Spain. I do not find that this Evidence shews any thing of it; the Difference that the Evidence shews, is only between the late King and the King of Spain. I apprehend they ought to make the Evidence agree with the Information; if it varies from that, it is as no Evidence at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. I apprehend this is no Objection at all.

Mr. Fazakerley. The Information is, that before the Demise of the late King, divers Differences and Controversies arose between his said late Majesty and divers Princes and Foreign States, being his Allies, and the King of Spain. Now, the Objection is, that the Evidence they have produced, shews that there were only Differences between Spain and Great-Britain.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Weight in that Objection; for if it were so, as they suppose, I apprehend this is not material to the Information; for it is well known, that there is a Distinction between an Action and an Indictment. Every Thing in an Action, in Case of Contradiction, ought to be proved; but if there be an Allegation in an Indictment, and that the Crime may remain without it, it is well known that that Allegation is not necessary to be proved; and it is sufficient enough to prove him guilty of the Crime that he is indicted for. But what I have proved, shews the Difference and Disputes between his late Majesty and his Allies, and the King of Spain, for the Stipulation relating to the Ostend Company; particularly, by the 36th Article, is, that all the Subjects of the Emperor shall enjoy the same Privileges as the United Provinces, &c. so likewise by the 47th Article, which expressly refers to Spain and Great-Britain; and that is the express Declaration made to the House of Lords, and was the Foundation of the Troubles in Europe, which obliged the late King, without Loss of Time, to enter into the Treaty of Hanover; namely, with the Consideration to the Trade and Commerce of Vienna. And now, all these taken together, I submit it to your Lordship, whether there is not a sufficient Proof, that there were Differences subsisting between his Majesty and his Allies, and the King of Spain.

Mr. Solicitor General. This Allegation is not material; for whether there were Differences or not subsisting, we shall fix it by Evidence that Mr. Francklin is equally guilty, and that it will not alter the Nature of the Offence: Besides, it is admitted by the Gentleman that made the Objection, that the Evidence amounted so far as to prove that there were Differences between the late King and the King of Spain; and we have pointed out two Things which shews there were Differences; the one relating to the Ostend Company, and the other to the Demand of Gibraltar. I agree with that Gentleman, that Great-Britain was concerned in it; but to say that they were alone concerned in it, and that by the Address of the House of Lords the Dutch were not concerned, is a plain Mistake, for they claimed a Right to Trade also; yea, they were more immediately concerned than Great-Britain; and therefore it is rightly stated by the House of Lords Address; though, as I said before, it is not material whether there were Differences subsisting or not.

Mr. Fazakerley. I thought, while the Thing was fresh in Memory, it would have been explained; but since they have gone so far, it will be better to make an End. I shall only say, that as to what they say is immaterial, if they are willing to have that Matter immaterial, I am willing it should be struck out; and if there is a Crime described in the Indictment or Information, I agree it is not necessary to prove every Allegation, if the Crime remains without it; so that, if they will wave it, I am satisfied: Let me get rid of one Thing at a Time. I say, if there be enough left, properly charged on the Defendant, then, my Lord, this ought to be dropt; for they have produced nothing that proves that Allegation: And whatever Differences there might be between the late King and Spain, or any Powers whatsoever, not properly described in this Information, I apprehend, they are not to be taken as a Part of the Charge in this Information. Now the main Thing is, whether they have laid it ſo, and made out theſe Differences. They ſay, that the Differences were between the late King, and divers Princes and Foreign States, being his Allies, and the King of Spain. I think the Letter produced from the Marquis of Grameldo, or take it what Way you pleaſe, it only refers to Differences between the King of Great Britain and Spain. I own there were Grants of Commerce to the Emperor, which might be of Injury to other States; but though they think that there is a Foundation for Differences, yet, if there is none, there is no Reaſon to ſay that there was an actual Difference: They have laid it ſo, my Lord; and as for that other Part of the Evidence of the Houſe of Lords, that is not ſufficient, for it is mentioned there as an Infraction of their Treaty; but whatever Infraction it is, yet, I humbly apprehend, that is not a Reaſon that there were Differences on that Account, for if other States think otherwiſe, or acquieſce to it, then it cannot be called a Difference; beſides, that Addreſs of the Houſe of Lords was only the Sentiments of that great Body; and though a Regard ought to be had to them, yet it is not any Evidence of the Fact, unleſs tranſacted in a judicial Way. They made a Collection or Conſtruction from it; but I think, in my Opinion, it is poſſible they might make a Miſtake: We are now upon Evidence, and it ought to be eſtabliſhed by a proper legal Evidence; for that (as I ſaid before) is only an Evidence that thereby their Treaty was broken, but no Evidence that there was a Difference ariſing from it.

Mr. Beetle. Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to make that a criminal Information, of which a Part may be evidenced, and a Part overlooked,

Lord Chief Juſtice. Is this eſſential or not?

Mr. Attorney General. No.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Why hath there been then almoſt two Hours ſpent about it?

Mr. Att. Gen. This is not between Great Britain and Spain, but other States; and it is to ſhew, that by the Articles of the Treaty of Vienna, there were ſome of them inconſiſtent with thoſe relating to the foreign Powers.

Mr. Noel. As they cannot prove this Allegation an Offence, or Part of the Crime, it is proper to ſtrike it out.

Mr. Beetle. Our Objection is on what is alledged; we are not entering into the Conſideration of the Fact, or how far it is capable of being proved: No; but ſure I am they have not proved the Allegation.

Lord Chief Juſtice. This is not indeed a poſitive Proof, I think.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Thing is the Treaty of Hanover, I have a Copy of it tranſlated.

Mr. Beetle. It is admitted that there were Differences.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Snow. [Who appears.] What Officer are you?

Mr. Snow. Prothonotary of the Chancery.

Mr. Att. Gen. What have you in your Hand?

Mr. Snow. The Treaty of Hanover, dated the 30th of September, 1725.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read it.

Mr. Snow. It is in French.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you a Tranſlation of it?——Mr. Snow. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let it be read. Mr. Buck [or Bocking] what is that Paper?

Mr. Snow. It is the Tranſlation of the Treaty of Hanover.

[Here the Treaty was read.] It is between the late King of Great Britain, the King of France, and the King of Pruſſia.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Thing is the Treaty of Seville. Mr. Snow, What is that?

Mr. Snow. The Treaty of Seville.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Language?

Mr. Snow. In the Spaniſh. I have a Tranſlation of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Buck, Did you tranſlate it?—Mr. Buck. Yes.

[Here they read a Part of it.] It is between the preſent King of Great Britain, the French King, and the King of Spain, dated at Seville, 9th of November, 1729.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſhall now go on to prove that Part of the Libel which relates to Mr. Francklin's publiſhing the Craftſman, the 2d of January laſt. Call John Smith. (Who appears.) Look on that Paper, is that your Hand-writing?

[Here was ſhewn one of the Craftſman, 2d of January marked by Smith.]

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where had you it?

Mr. Smith. In Mr. Francklin's own Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Part of it?

Mr. Smith. In his Shop.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember the Time?

Mr. Smith. Yes, it was on Saturday the 2d of January laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to have that Paper?

Mr. Smith. On the 9th of January, I went into his Shop, where Mr. Francklin himſelf was ſtanding by the Counter, and I aſked him for half a Dozen of his Journals of that Day, and two of the Saturday before; he aſked me whom they were for; I told him for myſelf; then he aſked me if I ſold them; I ſaid, Yes; then he pointed to his Man to look them out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who delivered them to you?

Mr. Smith. His Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whom paid you for them?

Mr. Smith. His Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he preſent himſelf then?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did not he order his Servant to give you them?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Smith croſs-examined.

Mr. Fazakerley. What aſked you for?

Mr. Smith. I aſked for half a Dozen of his Journals of that Day, and two of the Saturday before.

Mr. Fazakerley. Do you ſell them?-----Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Fazakerley. How came you by this when you had ſold it?

Mr. Smith. I ſold it to a Perſon that deſired me to get it for him.

Mr. Fazakerley. To whom ſold you it?----Mr. Smith. To Mr. Ibbot.

Mr. Fazakerley. How ſoon after you bought it did you ſell it him?

Mr. Smith. As ſoon as I could drink two Quarts of Beer, at the Six Can Alehouſe in Holbourn.

Mr. Fazakerley. Are you ſure that this is one of the 2d of January, that you had at Mr. Francklin's?

Mr. Smith. Yes, becauſe I mark'd it.

Mr. Fazak. Are you ſure that he had it not in his Cuſtody before you mark'd it?----Mr. Smith. He had it not.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Who gave you them?----Mr. Smith. His Man.

Lord Ch. J. What ſaid he to his Man?

Mr. Smith. Look out theſe Journals.

Lord Ch. J. You aſked for two of the Saturday before?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Lord Ch. J. What was Mr. Francklin doing?

Mr. Smith. There was a Man with him, who was paying him ten or a dozen Guineas; while I was ſpeaking he had told Part of them: When I came and aſked for the Journals, he aſked me what I wanted; I ſaid, Six of his Journals of that Day, and two of the Week before.

Lord Ch. J. To whom paid you the Money?

Mr. Smith. To his Man; I gave him Half-a-Crown, and he return'd me what was over, as my Change.

[Here the Title of it was read, "No. 235; The Country Journal; or, the Craftſman, by Caleb Danvers, of Gray's Inn, Eſq; Saturday, January 2*d*, 1730;" then the Hague Letter was read thus, "Extract of a private Letter from the Hague: A Rumour hath been for ſome Time privately, &c." as in the Information.]

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſhall call a Witneſs or two to ſupport his Evidence, to ſhew that a great many of them came from the Defendant's Shop. Call John Ibbot. [John Ibbot appears.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Look on that Paper, where bought you that?

Mr. Ibbot. I bought it at Mrs. Dodd's.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where lives ſhe?

Mr. Ibbot. At the Sign of the Peacock, without Temple-bar.

Mr. Ibbot. Of her Servant.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is the Servant's Name?

Mr. Ibbot. Mary Dewy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you order it to be paid to Mr. Francklin?

Mrs. Dodd. Yes.

Mrs. Dodd croſs-examined.

Mr. Fazak. Can you take upon you to ſwear, that all the Country Journals you had came from Mr. Francklin's?

Mrs. Dodd. No: They might fetch them from other Places.

Mr. Fazak. Where ſent you for them?

Mrs. Dodd. To Covent-Garden, to Mr. Francklin's Houſe.

Mr. Fazak. Will you venture to ſay, on your Oath, that you ſent your Servant to Mr. Francklin's for the Craftſman of the 2d of January laſt?

Mrs. Dodd. I think ſo.

Mr. Fazak. Can you be poſitive, or not, that you ſent for this particular Journal of Saturday the 2d of January laſt?

Mrs. Dodd. I cannot be poſitive as to that; but I uſed to give Orders to fetch in theſe Journals every Week.

Mr. Fazak. What were the Orders you gave them; were they general Orders every Week? Do not they ſometimes fetch them without Orders?

Mrs. Dodd. Yes.

Mr. Fazak. You do not know from whence they fetch thoſe without Orders?—Mrs. Dodd. No.

Mr. Fazak. Did you ever ſend for any of them to any other Place than to Mr. Francklin's?

Mrs. Dodd. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Henry Goram. [Who appears.] Whom live you with?—Mr. Goram. With Mrs. Dodd.

Mr. At. Gen. What Quantity, think you, you had at Mr. Francklin's?
Mr. Gor. About threescore Quires a Week.

[Cross-examined.]

Mr. Fazakerley. You said, you cannot say that you fetched every Week the Craftsman from Mr. Francklin's; how comes it that you can be particular as to this Craftsman of the 2d of January last? Have you any thing particular to make you remember that Day?
Mr. Gor. Yes; for a Day or two after I heard that Paper had given Offence, my Mistress desired me to recollect when I had them; which I did.
Mr. Faz. Here your Mistress knows nothing about that of the 2d of January; probably it might have been something else that your Mistress desired you to recollect; Do you know of never another Paper that gave Offence, besides that? Therefore, I say, can you be positive that you fetched all the Craftsman of that Day on Friday Evening?
Mr. Gor. Yes.
Mr. Faz. Did you know of any other Craftsman besides Mr. Francklin's? Or did you ever know that your Mistress bought any Craftsman, but from Mr. Francklin?—Mr. Gor. No.

Mr. Faz. Did not she send her for the Craftsman?—Mr. Gor. No.
Mr. Att. Gen. Call John Smith (aforesaid) who appears. Look on that Paper. [Here another of the Craftsman, of the 2d of January, was produced.] Where bought you that Paper?
Mr. Smith. At Mrs. Smith's under the Piazza's, at the Royal Exchange.
Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember when?
Mr. Smith. The 9th of January, the same Morning that I bought at Mr. Francklin's.
Mr. At. Gen. Of whom bought you it?—Mr. Smith. Of her Servant.
Mr. At. Gen. What is her Name?—Mr. Smith. I know not
Mr. At. Gen. Are you sure that is the same Paper?—Mr. Smith. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. Did you mark it?—Mr. Smith. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. Call Mrs. Ann Pierce. (Who appears.) Did you keep a Shop formerly?
Mrs. Pierce. Yes, though not now.
Mr. At. Gen. How long ago is it since you kept it?
Mrs. Pierce. About three or four Months.
Mr. At. Gen. During the Time of your keeping a Shop, did you sell the Country Journal?—Mrs. Pierce. Yes.
Mr. At Gen. Where bought you them?
Mrs. Pierce. I never went myself.
Mr. At. Gen. Whom sent you?—Mrs Pierce. One David Davies.
Mr. At. Gen. To whom sent you for them?
Mrs. Pierce. To Mr. Francklin.
Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember you had any Craftsman of the 2d of January last?
Mrs. Pierce. To be sure I had.
Mr. At. Gen. Who went for them?—Mrs. Pierce. My Man.
Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever send any body else?
Mrs. Pierce. I cannot tell.
Mr. At. Gen. I would desire you to recollect who fetched those of the 2d of January.—Mrs. Pierce. He always fetched them.
Mr. At. Gen. What Number had you the 2d of January?
Mrs. Pierce. I cannot tell exactly the Number; but I have generally about 7*l.* a Week to pay for the Craftsman.
Mr. At. Gen. Did you pay for them of the 2d of January?
Mrs. Pierce. He had always about 7*l.* a Week, or upwards.
Mr. At. Gen. But do you remember that you paid for them of the 2d of January?
Mrs. Pierce. I do not remember that in particular; for it was about that Time I was married.
Mr. At. Gen. Did you pay for them yourself?
Mrs. Pierce. No; but my Servant, David Davies, did.

[Cross-examined.]

Mr. Bootle. You said, you did not always send your Man, David Davies, for them?
Mrs. Pierce. You are mistaken; for I said I did.
Mr. Bootle. Can you say, on your Oath, Mistress, that you paid for these Craftsman the second of January in particular?
Mrs. Pierce I shall not answer you.
Mr. Bootle. Who bid you not to answer me? You shall do it.
Mrs. Pierce. I don't know you. [Here the Judge reprimanded her, and desired her to give an Answer, which she did thus.] I believe I paid him the Money for the Craftsman of that Day, as well as for those of other Days.
Mr. Bootle. Don't these Papers pay Duty?
Mrs. Pierce. I do not know.
Mr. Willes. Call David Davies. (Who appears.) Was you employed by Mrs. Pierce, before January the 2d, to fetch in her Journals?
Mr. Davies. Yes.
Mr. Willes. Did you fetch in the Craftsman among the rest?
Mr. Dav. Yes.
Mr. Willes. Where did you go for these Craftsman?
Mr. Dav. To Mr. Francklin's.
Mr. Willes. Did you go any where else for them?
Mr. Dav. No.
Mr. Willes. Can you remember that you fetched the Craftsman the 2d of January last?
Mr. Dav. Yes.
Mr. Willes. You did buy all the Craftsman of that Month at Mr. Francklin's—I mean, all that you bought?
Mr. Davies. Yes.
Mr. Willes. When you carried the Money for them, to whom paid you it?
Mr. Dav. Sometimes to Mr. Francklin, and sometimes to his Servants.
Mr. Willes. Can you say, particularly for the Month of January last, that you paid the Money to his Servants?
Mr. Dav. Yes.
Mr. Willes. Did you continue to pay weekly, all the Month of January last, for what you bought of these Papers?
Mr. Dav. Yes.
Mr. Willes. Had you any of these Craftsman any where else that Month?
Mr. Dav. No.
Mr. Willes. Can you remember how many you bought of the 2d of January last?
Mr. Dav. No.
Mr. Willes. How much paid you a Week?
Mr. Dav. About 7*l.* a Week; because I fetched between 40 and 50 Quires weekly.

[Cross-examined.]

Mr. Strange. Can you recollect so exactly, as to tell that you fetched and paid for the Craftsman the 2d of January, and for all that Month?
Mr. Dav. Yes.
Mr. Strange. How can you be so particular as to that Month?
Mr. Dav. Because I did it weekly before that Time.
Mr. At. Gen. There is another Thing, which I shall name, which will likewise prove, that the Defendant published the Craftsman of that Day; and that is the Stamp-Duty, which is one Shilling, paid for every Advertisement; and here I shall shew to your Lordship, that he paid for the Duties of that Day, and for 38 Advertisements of the same Day, which is exactly the Number contained in that Day's Craftsman. Call Mr. Lunnis. (Who appears.) What Officer are you?
Mr. Lun. An Assistant to the Register of the Stamp-Office.
Mr. At. Gen. Do you know any Thing of the Account of the Stamp-Duties at the Office?---Mr. Lun. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. Have you the Book?---Mr. Lun. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. Produce it. [Here it was produced.] What is that Book?
Mr. Lun. An Account of the Advertisements in every Paper.
Mr. At. Gen. Is that the Original of the Stamp-Office Book?
Mr. Lun. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. You know what Entries there are in it concerning Mr. Francklin?
Mr. Lun. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. What are these Entries?
Mr. Lun. They are from about 13th of May, 1727, to this Time, weekly and monthly.
Mr. At. Gen. Who paid for them?
Mr. Lun. Sometimes Mr. Francklin, and sometimes his Servants.
Mr. At. Gen. Was the Payment made in his own Name always?
Mr. Lun. Yes, in his own Name.
Mr. At. Gen. Are there any Advertisements that relate to the 2d of January last?
Mr. Lun. Yes, 38.
Mr. At. Gen. Were they paid for?
Mr. Lun. Yes, in Mr. Francklin's Name.
Mr. At. Gen. Read the Entry. [Here it was read. The Purport was, Received the 29th of July, for the Duty of 38 Advertisements, &c. for the 2d of January last.]
Mr. At. Gen. That is the exact Number in the Craftsman of that Day.

[Cross-examined.]

Mr. Strange. Do you receive the Money?---Mr. Lun. No.
Mr. Strange. How can you tell that he pays it then?
Mr. Lun. Because I make it up to his Account.
Mr. Strange. Do you know it yourself?
Mr. Lun. No.
Mr. Strange. Are the Papers brought to the Office, and are you the Person that receives them?
Mr. Lun. I am the Person that takes in and registers the Number of the Advertisements, and gives a Note, or an Account thereof, to himself, or the Person that brings the Papers.
Mr Strange. What Time does the Act relate to the Advertisements being paid?
Mr. Lun. I don't know.
Mr. Strange. As you make out the Warrants, and keep Account of the Advertisements, explain it; what is its Nature? Does your Warrant express the Number of the Advertisements, and the Sum to be paid for them?---Mr. Lun. Yes.
Mr. Strange. For what Purpose do you make it out?
Mr. Lun. After I have made it out, I give it into the Receiver's Office, and then into the Comptroller's, which is a Check on the Receiver's Office; and then Mr. Francklin hath a Receipt for it.
Mr. Strange. Who receives the Money for these Advertisements, which you make out the Warrant for?
Mr. Lun. They at the Receiver's Office.
Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Webb. (Who appears.) What Place are you in in the Stamp-Office?
Mr. Webb. A Clerk in the Receiver's Office.
Mr. At. Gen. Are you a sworn Clerk?
Mr. Webb. Yes.
Mr. At. Gen. Can you give an Account of any Receipts had of Mr. Francklin, on Account of his Advertisements the 2d of January last?
Mr. Webb. He had one in July last.
Mr. At. Gen. Do you know if the Advertisements of the 2d of January was included in the Money?
Mr. Webb. I cannot tell.
Mr. At. Gen. In whose Name received you it?
Mr. Webb. In the Name of Mr Francklin.
Mr. At. Gen. Whether or not did you receive any Money, on the Account of his Advertisements, before that Time?

Mr. Webb. Yes, I received ſomething on that Account.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was it a long time before July?
Mr. Webb. I cannot juſtly remember.
Mr. Att. Gen. How much was it you received the 29th July?
Mr. Webb. About 10*l.* 18*s.*
Mr. Att. Gen. Whence goes that Receipt?
Mr. Webb. To the Comptroller's Office.
Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Scot. (Who appears.) What is your Office?
Mr. Scot. I am in the Comptroller's Office.
Mr. Att. Gen. Have you an Account of any Money paid on account of Advertiſements in the Craftſman the 2d January laſt?
Mr. Scot. I have them for the whole Month; but not the Day.
Mr. Att. Gen. What come they to?
Mr. Scot. Ten Pounds eighteen Shillings.
Mr. Att. Gen. In whoſe Name was it paid?
Mr. Scot. In the Name of Mr. Francklin.
Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any more Payments before?---Mr. Scot. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who paid them?—Mr. Scot. I cannot tell.
Mr. Att. Gen. On whoſe Account were they paid?
Mr. Scot. On Mr. Francklin's.
Mr. Att. Gen. Have you got any Warrants?---Mr. Scot. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Have you got a particular Warrant for every Month?
Mr. Scot. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Look out the Warrant for the Month of January.
[Here it was read. The Purport was, That there was received 10*l.* 18*s.* on Mr. Francklin's Account.]
L. C. J. What is the Nature of that Warrant?
Mr. Scot. It is a Warrant given from one Office to another, containing the Number of the Advertiſements, and Sum for the Duty.
Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the other Side have owned, that there were Differences between his late Majeſty and the King of Spain, becauſe we have fully proved it; but they ſay we have ſhewn no Evidence of any Difference between his late Majeſty and his Allies, and the King of Spain, which I apprehend we have; though, as I ſaid before, it is not material: But, if they pleaſe, I ſhall call other Witneſſes to prove it further; particularly Differences relating to the Dutch, who claimed the ſole Trade to the Eaſt Indies, excluſive of all the Subjects of the Emperor, &c. and yet, my Lord, by the 36th Article, Spain ſtipulates to let all the Subjects of the Emperor enjoy the ſame Privileges as the United Provinces; which is an Infraction of the Treaty of Munſter, 1648. (Call Mr. Payſant.)
[Mr. Payſant appears.]
Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Payſant, give an Account of theſe Papers.
Mr. Payſant. I brought them from my Lord Harrington's Office.
Mr. Att. Gen. What is their Import?
Mr. Payſant. They contain the Acceſſion of the States General to the Treaty of Hanover.
Mr. Att. Gen. Are they kept there?---Mr. Payſant. Yes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Is the Act of Acceſſion inrolled?
Mr. Payſant. Yes; but this is the original one.
Mr. Fazakerley. My Lord, I apprehend the Inrolment is a proper Evidence.
[Here that Part of it was read and interpreted, (it being in French) which complained of the Infraction of the Treaty of Munſter, made in 1648.]
Mr. Att. Gen. By this Act of Acceſſion, which was about a few Months after the Treaty, the Dutch inſiſt, that it is wholly their Right to enjoy the ſole Privileges of trading to the Eaſt Indies, excluſive of all the Subjects of the Emperor, &c. and accordingly they enter into, or accede to the Treaty of Hanover; which, I think, is a ſufficient Evidence of Differences ſubſiſting between his late Majeſty and his Allies, and the King of Spain. We ſhall not take up any more Time in examining other Witneſſes, for a further Proof of the Information againſt the Defendant; having, as we apprehend, ſufficiently proved it already.
Mr. Fazakerley. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counſel for the Defendant. As the King's Counſel have been very long, and thought nothing unneceſſary; and, indeed, I cannot help ſaying, that I think a great deal of Labour and Pains have been made uſe of, to ſhew that the Defendant is guilty of the Fact of Publication; and I believe it was only to give a reaſonable Suſpicion thereof, becauſe it was not ſufficiently proved by the firſt Witneſs, and they have ſpent about one Hour and a half ſince, to ſupport that: So, Gentlemen, I hope that you will not think that they have ſufficiently proved the Information; and that you will not reſt on what the firſt Witneſs ſays as a full Proof, who is as liable to a Proſecution as the Defendant. But I apprehend, that of a Printer is different from a Publiſher; and that a Printer's Buſineſs relates to all the Subjects of the Kingdom, and he may eaſily be impoſed upon. As to their Evidence, you will find that they intirely ſeem to rely on the firſt Witneſs, who ſays, he went to Mr. Francklin's Shop, and that he was buſy, and that he interrupted him by aſking him for ſome of the Journals of that Day, and that he did not deliver them himſelf. Now, as he aſked for Journals in general, and did not tell whoſe; and that he was buſy, and did not deliver any to that Witneſs, nor receive any Money from him; and how he came by theſe Journals, it is not known; he might have ſome in his Pocket that he got elſewhere, and by Miſtake put his Mark to them: Beſides, there were only two of theſe Journals produced. As to the reſt of the Witneſſes, they are only brought in, in order to endeavour to ſupport this firſt Witneſs's Evidence, and to prove that they received Journals from the Defendant's Servants only, and paid the Money to them. As to the Stamp-Office Accounts or Books, I ſuppoſe they only ſhew what Money is raiſed to the Crown: So, Gentlemen, I believe it will depend chiefly on the Evidence of the firſt Witneſs; and the Defendant is puniſhable for none but theſe two Journals produced (if he is guilty of that); for if he had ſold a Thouſand more, it ſignifies nothing to this Information. I ſhall not trouble you with other Obſervations on it; but only take notice of the great Conveniency of publiſhing Letters of this Kind, and other News. Gentlemen, it is well known that News-Papers are allowed not only in this, but in other Nations; and, indeed, it is reaſonable that private People ſhould know theſe News as well as others: And therefore, when we are under a Caſe of this Kind, we ought not to be ſtrict in ſcanning Things that come from foreign Parts; for to do ſo, may put many under great Difficulties; and, indeed, if Men were to be puniſhed therefore, it would be a great Means to have no News at all publiſhed; for it is an eaſy thing to ſcan them amiſs: And therefore, Gentlemen, when you are in a Caſe of this Kind, conſider how many Witneſſes they have produced againſt the Defendant, and that none of them proves any thing but the firſt, on whom (as I ſaid before) they ſeem intirely to rely: I hope they are Perſons of Veracity, or elſe they would not have produced them. Next, do you think that the Defendant did it out of a criminal Deſign? And I think it is pretty hard, unleſs this ſeem extremely plain, and unleſs he was offending in his Mind, as the Counſel on the other Side have alledged, and endeavoured to make out (though, I think, they have not proved it). Next, I would have you take notice of this Information in the general: He is indicted of two Offences; the one is only to ſupport the other: The ſecond he is not guilty of, becauſe they have produced no Evidence. Again, the next Thing they have proved is only, that he is guilty of the Publication (let me get free of as much as I can), though I think he is innocent. Gentlemen, you cannot but conſider the Evidence that hath been given you; and therefore I hope you will not think that he is guilty of any thing further, I mean the Act of Publication. Next, take notice, that there are a great many Aggravations in the Information; ſo that if you find the Verdict general, then theſe Aggravations muſt be publiſhed on Record, and he puniſhed for them. For, firſt, in the Information it is laid, "That there "were ſeveral Differences and Controverſies between his late Majeſty and "divers Princes and foreign States, being his Allies, and the King of "Spain." I ſhall not trouble you with any thing concerning this; but only name the laſt, to wit, the Acceſſion of the Dutch, which leaves it where we found it; for the Time laid in the Information was, that the Differences were antecedent to the Treaty of Hanover, which was made the 30th of September, 1725. But the Evidence they have produced is about a Year after that, to wit, about Auguſt 1726; and probably there might have been no Difference at all then. I ſhall go on to make a few Obſervations on the reſt of the Matter charged; to wit, "That he in-"tended to diſturb and diſquiet the happy State of the publick Peace and "Tranquility of this Kingdom, and likewiſe to traduce and vilify the "Adminiſtration, and his preſent Majeſty's principal Officers and Mini-"ſters of State; and to repreſent them as Perſons of no Integrity and Abi-"lity, and as Enemies to the publick Good of this Kingdom; and like-"wiſe to reflect on the King:" Far be it from me to think that his Majeſty ought, in any wiſe, to be reflected on; and I think my Client is of the ſame Opinion, and that he would abhor any thing to the contrary; and therefore I apprehend, that there is nothing in this Paper (take it in the ſtrongeſt Senſe) that ſhews any Deſign of reflecting on his Majeſty; and ſuppoſe it does on his Miniſters, yet not one of his Miniſters have been yet mentioned, on whom the Reflection is ſaid to be made. Sometimes it is ſaid, that a Reflection againſt the Miniſters is one againſt the King: But, with Submiſſion, I think it is not; for Princes may ſometimes have the Misfortune of bad Miniſters, as well as private Perſons have the Misfortune of bad Servants; but I believe that Nobody can imagine, that his Majeſty hath any ſuch Miniſters. And then obſerve, What have the King's Counſel opened, with reſpect to the preſent Miniſters of his Majeſty? What Evidence have they given of the Defendant's reflecting on theſe Miniſters in the Hague Letter? I apprehend, there hath none at all been given, but what intirely depends upon the Conſtruction of that Paper itſelf; and therefore, in Caſes of this Kind, the Queſtion is, How you are to conſtrue that Paper, eſpecially when there is an Information thereon againſt any Perſon ſuppoſed to be the Publiſher thereof? The Gentlemen of the other Side have told you, that you are to underſtand it in the ſame Senſe as any other Perſon does; but I apprehend you are not to judge ſo, becauſe here is a Proſecution againſt a Perſon, wherein Facts are undertaken to be proved, which, if done, will ſubject the Perſon to Puniſhment; and that you are to find a Verdict according to the Evidence laid before you; for there is a great Difference between one Perſon's reading, underſtanding, and judging of it, for his own Information, and another's doing it, on a Proſecution, in order to convict or acquit the Perſon charged: So that the Queſtion here is, Whether you think that the Defendant is guilty of reflecting upon the preſent Miniſters of Great Britain, or not, upon the Conſtruction of that Paper, and upon due Conſideration of what follows? though I think he is not: For you have heard mentioned to you, from the ſeveral Treaties opened, as well as from the Hague Letter itſelf, that there are ſeveral Courts mentioned as well as Great Britain; to wit, Pruſſia, France, Spain, and Germany; and that the Words [certain Miniſters] may have a Reference to the Miniſters of one of thoſe Courts, and not to the Court of Great Britain: And I hope you have a better Opinion of his Majeſty's preſent Miniſters of State, than to think that the Expreſſions are applicable to them; and, indeed, when you are to make a Conſtruction on that Paper, you muſt conſider, and judge for yourſelves, Whether theſe Miniſters deſerve ſuch Things to be ſaid of them, or not? And I hope you will be of the ſame Opinion as I am of; which is, that they deſerve them not. In the Beginning of that Hague Letter the Words are, ["A Rumour hath been for ſome time "privately ſpread about, that a Miſunderſtanding will ſoon diſcover itſelf "between the Allies of Seville; and that certain Miniſters are endea-"vouring, &c."] The Gentlemen on the other Side are pleaſed to ſay, that theſe Words [certain Miniſters] muſt be underſtood of the Miniſters either of Great Britain, or France, or Spain; but I beg Leave to ſay, that no ſuch Inference can be naturally drawn, or that no other Miniſters of any other Court can be intended but one of theſe three. Then the Letter goes on, and ſays, ["that certain Miniſters having at "length found out, that too cloſe an Union with France, and a War "upon the Foot of the Treaty of Seville, is quite againſt the Grain of "the People, are endeavouring to bring about an Accommodation with "the Emperor."] The Gentlemen ſay, that this muſt be applied to the Miniſters of Great Britain only. Gentlemen, I believe any Miniſter of any Court whatſoever muſt be of that Opinion, and that it is not fitting that there ſhould be a War on the Foot of any Treaty; and I hope that that all the Miniſters of theſe three Courts are of the ſame Opinion; though the Gentlemen would fix it only upon the Miniſters of Great-Britain: Nor can I ſee how it can be ſaid or applied to our Miniſters, when the following Words are mentioned, to wit, ["that certain Miniſters having at length "found out, that too cloſe an Union with France."] Why ſhould this be mentioned as a Reaſon of its being applicable to the Miniſters of Great-Britain? Have not we had all this time an Alliance, a cloſe Alliance, with France? And can it be ſtrengthened by a further or cloſer Alliance? So that, I think, it is more applicable to the Miniſters of other Courts. Gentlemen, I will take a little Notice of what the King's Counſel ſaid, with reſpect to theſe Words [certain Miniſters]. They told you, that they could not be underſtood to refer to the Miniſters of France, becauſe that theſe Words ["certain Miniſters having at length found out, that too cloſe an "Union with France, and a War, &c."] excluded the Miniſters of France; tho' I apprehend, as I have ſaid already, that, from thence, they are more applicable to the Miniſters of other Courts than our's. Then they told you, that theſe Words [certain Miniſters] could not refer to the Miniſters of Spain, becauſe of the ill Effects which, the Letter mentions, would follow, on endeavouring to bring about an Accommodation with the Emperor, one of which is called a neceſſary Effect: ["Another neceſſary Effect (for "ſo I think I may call it) of ſuch a Meaſure, at preſent, will be a Con"junction of France and Spain; and a certain Court may have the Mor"tification to ſee thoſe two Courts united againſt them more ſtrongly than "ever, by their extraordinary Management, &c."] Gentlemen, how is it poſſible to apply this to the Court of Great-Britain, or its Miniſters, when we were, at the ſame time, in Amity and Alliance with France; and likewiſe when there was an Alliance or Treaty entered into between Great-Britain, France, and Spain? Was there any Likelihood for us to ſee ſuch a Conjunction? Again, the King's Counſel ſaid, that it would be hard for us to tell what Miniſters were meant by theſe Expreſſions: To this I muſt anſwer, that I think it will be very hard, indeed, to make a Publiſher liable to be puniſhed, becauſe he cannot explain or make out a Piece of foreign News ſent him; eſpecially when the other Side hath got all the Treaties of the publick Affairs in their own Cuſtody: For my Part, I know nothing about them, and I am ſure that my Client knows as little; and therefore I don't think that this Piece of News is any Reflection on our preſent Miniſters, eſpecially if you compare it with their Actions and Merits; and conſequently you would not, I hope, make a Perſon guilty of that, when you cannot ſay, that that Charge is the leaſt applicable to them; and I hope that you, and every Perſon here, have a better Opinion of our preſent Miniſters; and therefore hope, that you will put ſuch a Conſtruction on it, as that it is not a Reflection on them, and conſequently that you will not find the Defendant guilty of publiſhing any Libel againſt them, though he cannot explain that Piece of foreign News. The Gentlemen of the other Side ſay, that there are other Parts or Expreſſions in the Paper that give a Light to it, ſuch as Germanized Patriots: I don't pretend to underſtand the Meaning thereof, and I hope you will as little pretend thereto: They ſaid, they who were Enemies to the Miniſtry were called ſo; but as they have given no Evidence thereof, you are not to take notice of it. Again, they ſay, that theſe Words ["one immediate Effect "may be the Seizure of that vaſt Pledge which Spain hath at this time in "her Hands"] ſerve to explain and refer to the Court of Great-Britain, though they have given no Evidence thereof; nor do I ſee why this ſhould be applied to Great-Britain only, becauſe there are other Courts or States that have conſiderable Stocks and Effects, that may be applicable thereto. And then they mentioned another Thing, which they wanted to make the Expreſſion refer to Great-Britain, [which is, "that the Miniſters had been "undoing what they had been doing for five Years paſt;"] which they ſay carries it back to the Treaty of Hanover, entered into in September, 1725: But I think it proper to remark to you, that the Gentlemen themſelves have acquainted you, that, about that time, the Dutch were as much diſſatisfied as we were; and therefore I think it is hard to conjecture whoſe Miniſters are meant by that Expreſſion. Gentlemen, I ſhall not trouble you with further Obſervations on that Paper; but leave it to your own Conſideration: Only obſerve, though the King's Counſel were pleaſed to ſay, that the Hague Letter was of an Engliſh Growth, yet they have not proved it to be ſo, nor have they told you who is the Author of it; though I think, from the Import of it, it plainly appears to be of a foreign Growth, and is placed under the Article of foreign News: And we can prove, that (if we had not been deprived of the Means of doing it) the Letter came from abroad as a Piece of foreign News: for you are to conſider, that when the Defendant was ſeized upon that Account, the Perſons employed therein broke open his Scrutore, and ſearched his Pockets, and took away, in a moſt unwarrantable Manner, his Papers and Letters, and other Things, which they ſtill retain; and, amongſt the reſt, this Hague Letter, which has deprived him of ſome Part of his Defence, by diſabling him to produce that Letter, though he is expected to produce that original Letter ſtill, which is impoſſible to be done now; therefore we expect, when you conſider theſe Circumſtances, that you will, in point of Evidence, expect leſs from us, and more from them. I ſhall not trouble you, at preſent, any further. My Lord, I apprehend they have failed in the Deſcription of their pretended Libel: They have ſtiled it a certain falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libel, (intituled, N°. 235, The Country Journal; or, the Craftſman, by Caleb D'Anvers, &c.) I apprehend that this Number 235, being at the End of the Paper, cannot be the Title, or any Part of it; I believe there have been ſome Precedents to the contrary.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I don't know how you, or any other Perſon, can diſtinguiſh one Journal from another after a better Manner: I ſhall not go contrary to my own Conſcience, nor overturn the Opinion of thoſe before me: If you think otherwiſe, you know where to apply to.

Mr. Bootle. My Lord, and Gentlemen, I am alſo Counſel for the Defendant: And though he is the Perſon that is now more immediately ſtanding before you, and concerned in this Proſecution; yet I think it is not confined to him only, but will extend to Things of a more publick Nature, and conſequently to the Publick in general; I mean the Suppreſſion of the Liberty of the Preſs, which Liberty hath been always eſteemed as a great Privilege, and of great Advantage to this Nation: That this Proſecution is of ſuch Extent, will appear from the Paper itſelf complained of, and the Evidence relating thereto. The Caſe hath been fully opened by the Gentlemen on the other Side, with many Aggravations pretended to be attending it; and theſe Aggravations are not confined to this Paper only, but extend to all the other News-papers in general: And ſhould I have the Liberty to mention the common Opinion of Mankind, with relation to this Weekly Journal, I believe that Aſſertion of its being a falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Paper, would be thought groundleſs; but that it hath tended very much to their Satisfaction, in foreign and home Affairs. But we are now confined to this Paper, which is dated the 2d of January, 1730. Gentlemen, this Paper contains a Paragraph of foreign News, or Intelligence; for ſuch are oftentimes of Uſe to thoſe who deal in foreign Trade: Now, this foreign Intelligence complained of, and for which the Defendant is proſecuted, is not poſitively aſſerted as a Truth, but only as a Saying; ["A Rumour hath been for ſome time ſpread a"bout privately, &c.] Beſides, it is added in the Concluſion thereof, ["I cannot take upon me to juſtify the Truth of this Report; but, as it "hath been pretty confidently buzzed about, I thought proper to let you "know what is ſaid upon it; and if it ſhould appear to have any Foun"dation, you may expect to hear further from me on the Subject."] Gentlemen, the Information contains two Charges, with regard to this Paper: The firſt is, for ſpreading falſe News; and the ſecond is, for publiſhing a falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libel againſt his Majeſty's Adminiſtration of the Government, and againſt his principal Officers and Miniſters of State, and alſo againſt the Treaty of Seville. Gentlemen, as theſe Things are only aſſerted and averred in the Information, by Innuendoes, it is incumbent on them to prove them: And, in order to this, they have produced this News-paper, which is publiſhed for the Entertainment and Uſe of the Publick, containing foreign and home News, or Affairs; among which there is a Paragraph which ſays, (as from the Hague) ["A Rumour "hath been for ſome time privately ſpread about, and begins to gain Cre"dit here, that a Miſunderſtanding will ſoon diſcover itſelf between the "Allies of Seville; and that certain Miniſters are endeavouring to bring "about an Accommodation with the Emperor."] This is all that is aſſerted; for all the reſt of the Letter are only as an Induction, or Inferences drawn from the Suppoſition that ſuch a Piece of Intelligence is true; and if ſo, then it ſays, that the Conduct of theſe certain Miniſters hath been wrong before, and hath occaſioned unneceſſary Expences to be laid out, and will occaſion further Expences to be laid out; and adds, ["I am far "from deſigning to inſinuate from hence, that an Accommodation with "the Emperor is a wrong Meaſure; on the contrary, I wiſh it had "been thought a right Meaſure long ago."] And in another Part of it he ſays, ["and though it muſt be confeſſed to be very deſirable at pre"ſent; yet it ſeems to be attended with very fatal Conſequences, and al"moſt inſuperable Difficulties."] And then he mentions the Conſequences; as the Interruption of Trade, and the Conjunction of France and Spain againſt a certain Court, in general, without naming it; and adds ſome other Effects or Conſequences; but then theſe Effects or Conſequences are all upon this Suppoſition, that theſe certain Miniſters do bring about an Accommodation with the Emperor; though he adds, at the Concluſion of the Letter (as I ſaid before) ["that I cannot take upon me to "juſtify the Truth of this Report; but as it hath been pretty confidently "buzzed about, I thought proper to let you know what is ſaid upon it; and "if it ſhould appear to have any Foundation, you may expect to hear fur"ther from me on the Subject."] Now, Gentlemen, the Queſtion is, Who is meant by theſe Words [certain Miniſters]? And by the way, though it is ſaid in the Information, that this Piece of foreign News was a high Reflection on his preſent Majeſty, yet I cannot ſee any Thing therein that hath the leaſt Tendency to ſuch a Reflection; nor is there indeed ſo much as the Word [Majeſty], or [King of Great-Britain], or even the Word [Britain] itſelf, in any Part of that Letter; nor hath there been the leaſt Evidence offered to you, that it does any ways reflect on his Majeſty; ſo that this does not fall under your Conſideration: And this being laid aſide, the next Thing to be known is, what Miniſters theſe are that are meant by theſe Words, ["and that certain Miniſters having at length found out, "that too cloſe an Union with France, and a War upon the Foot of the "Treaty of Seville, is quite againſt the Grain of the People, are endeavour"ing to bring about an Accommodation with the Emperor."]? The Information hath averred, that by theſe Words [certain Miniſters] are implied and meant the principal Officers and Miniſters employed and intruſted by his preſent Majeſty; but who are they then? To be ſure it will not be ſaid, that the Paper does in the leaſt mention them to be our preſent Miniſters; or that any of you, I hope, hath ſuch Thoughts concerning them, as to believe that they are guilty of that which is charged on them by the Information: Nor do I think that they are meant by other Parts of the Paper; becauſe you have heard already, that theſe Things may be applied to the Miniſters of other Courts and Countries, as well as England or Great-Britain. The Paper hath left the Meaning very much in the Dark, and to a Conjecture only; for it may refer to one Set of Miniſters as well as another. I ſay, Gentlemen, that the pretending to aſcertain or determine whoſe Miniſters are meant by theſe general and indefinite Words, is at the beſt only a Conjecture. And with Submiſſion to my Lord's Directions and Judgment, I muſt tell you, that with relation to Scandal or Slander, the Law lays it down as a Rule to be obſerved, that there are two Things neceſſary: The firſt is, that the Perſon, of whom the Slander is uſed or ſpoke, ought to be certain, and ought not to be left to People's Imagination or Conjecture: And the next Thing is, that the Slander ſhall be evident and plain from the Words themſelves, and not ſupported by any Innuendo; I ſay, they muſt be plain, poſitive, and direct. You have been told, that you are to underſtand this Paper, as every common Reader in a Coffee-houſe; but I beg Leave to ſay that you are not; for when you are in a Coffee-houſe, you have the Liberty to conjecture and gueſs at the Meaning of a Piece of News, as well as any other Perſon there; and Nobody can be ſubjected to any Puniſhment, if you are miſtaken therein: But when you are here, in a Court of Judicature, you muſt conſider that you are upon your Oath, and that you are not to take that Liberty to conjecture or gueſs at the Meaning of Things; becauſe, if you happen to be miſtaken in your Conjecture, you will make him guilty of the criminal Charge which he is accuſed of, and ſubject him to the Puniſhment inflicted thereon; and you are likewiſe wiſe to conſider, as I hinted before, that, in Scandal, the Law requires that both the Perſon ſlandered, and the ſcandalous Words themſelves, ought to be certain, and not want Innuendos to make them out; and that an Innuendo ought neither to alter, enlarge, or ſupply the Senſe of the Words, when doubtful or defective, becauſe it would be unjuſt: And, indeed, whenever an Innuendo is allowed, in other Caſes, to explain a doubtful Matter, it ſhould be rather in Favour of the Perſon accuſed than againſt him, eſpecially where the Words ſpoken may be applied and referred more Ways than one: So here, in fixing a Meaning on the Words [certain Miniſters], which the Information, by an Innuendo, explains to be the principal Officers and Miniſters employed by his preſent Majeſty, you are to conſider whether theſe Words may not be applied to the Miniſters of other Courts and Countries; and likewiſe to conſider, whether theſe Words [certain Miniſters] (ſo underſtood by the Information to be his Majeſty's) are to be underſtood or meant by thoſe Officers or Miniſters employed by his Majeſty at Sea or Land? Or are they his Miniſters at Home or Abroad; or whether they are his Officers civil or military? Now, I ſay, ſuppoſe you ſhould find this Paragraph of foreign News to be a Libel, or a Scandal thrown upon his Majeſty's Officers and Miniſters (as I hope you will not), can you ſay or declare on Oath, who are the particular Perſons thus ſlandered or defamed? Have you any certain Rule, by this Paper, to guide your Judgments? Can you ſay, on your Oath, with any Certainty, whether theſe Officers or Miniſters, ſo defamed, are thoſe at Home or Abroad, or civil or military? Again, I ſuppoſe, for Argument's Sake, that though you ſhould be of Opinion, that this Piece of foreign News is a Libel or Scandal upon his Majeſty's Officers or Miniſters; yet I ſubmit it to you, whether you can ſay, on your Oaths, that that Piece of News, contained in this Journal, does amount to a falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libel, as it is aſſerted and averred, by an Innuendo, in the Information? And I ſubmit it to you, with all Deference to my Lord's Judgment and Directions, whether it is not incumbent on them to prove, that that Piece of foreign News is falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious, before you can find it, by your Verdict, to be ſo? And, indeed, the chief Thing in this Paper, or Letter, that the Defendant is charged with in the Information, is; [" That a Rumour hath been for ſome Time pri-" vately ſpread about, that certain Miniſters are endeavouring to bring " about an Accommodation with the Emperor."] I ſay, this is the chief Thing that is mentioned in the Hague Letter; though, in the Concluſion of it, it is ſaid, [" I cannot take upon me to juſtify the Truth of " this Report."] For all the reſt of that Letter (as I ſaid before) are mentioned, or ſet down, only by way of Concluſion or Inference, that ſuch and ſuch Things will be the Effect or Conſequence, if theſe [certain Miniſters] can bring about that Accommodation with the Emperor. Now, let us take it either Way; ſuppoſe that, at the Time of the Publication of this Hague Letter, that this Accommodation or Treaty with the Emperor had not been brought about; how can it be ſaid to be falſe, and ſo on, when the Letter does not affirm it for a Truth; but only ſays, that [" a Rumour hath been for ſome Time privately ſpread about, that " certain Miniſters are endeavouring to bring about an Accommodation " with the Emperor;"] and adds, in the Concluſion of it, [" that he " cannot take upon him to juſtify the Truth of this Report."] And then let us ſuppoſe, that they were endeavouring to bring about that Accommodation or Treaty with the Emperor; and that it was actually brought about and concluded about the Time of the Publication of that Letter, which was in the Year 1730; then, to be ſure, the Allegation was true, and therefore could not be falſe and ſcandalous, or ſeditious. As to that Accommodation or Treaty with the Emperor's being true, I hope we ſhall give you full Satisfaction, notwithſtanding the great Difficulties that the Defendant at preſent labours under: We ſhall give you the beſt Evidence that the Nature of Things will admit of, and which is always allowed to be ſufficient; for there are ſome Things which are ſelf-evident, and there are ſome Things that carry in them what every body knows.

Lord Chief-Juſtice. I don't altogether know what you aim at: I ſhould be glad to know how you would really underſtand theſe Expreſſions. And as for your ſaying, that you can prove what is charged on the Defendant to be true, it is my Opinion, that it is not material whether the Facts charged in a Libel be true or falſe, if the Proſecution is by Indictment or Information; and that Writing or Printing may be libellous, though the Scandal is not charged in direct Terms, but only ironically; or although there be only the initial Letters of the Name, or even a fictitious Name, if the Jury plainly perceives it to point at a particular Perſon; and that not only the Contriver and Procurer, but even the Publiſher of a Libel, are puniſhable; and that even a private Man's Character is not to be ſcandalized, either directly or indirectly; becauſe there are Remedies appointed by the Law, in caſe he has injured any Perſon, without maliciouſly ſcandalizing him in his Character: And much leſs is a Magiſtrate's, Miniſter of State, or other public Perſon's Character to be ſtained, either directly or indirectly; becauſe the Law hath pointed out another Remedy than publiſhing Libels, if they have injured any Perſon, either in a public or private Capacity; and the Law always puniſhes Libels, even among private Perſons, becauſe they flow from Malice, and tend to create Diſturbance, Quarrels, and Revenge between them, their Families and Kindred, and diſturb the public Peace: And the Law reckons it a greater Offence when the Libel is pointed at Perſons in a public Capacity, as it is a Reproach to the Government to have corrupt Magiſtrates, &c. ſubſtituted by his Majeſty, and tends to ſow Sedition, and diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom: Therefore, I ſhall not here allow of any Evidence to prove that the Matters charged in the Libel are true; for I am only abiding by what have been formerly done, in other Caſes of the like Nature. If you think it wrong, apply to the Court, and they will do you Juſtice.

Mr. Bootle. My Lord, then I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this will not tend to the utter Suppreſſion of the Liberty of the Preſs, which hath been ſo beneficial to the Nation in general: And, my Lord, I humbly apprehend, tho' a Publiſher of News happens to be miſtaken in what he publiſhes, it cannot be called malicious nor ſeditious, eſpecially when no particular Perſon is mentioned; but only an Error, committed thro' Ignorance, or Miſrepreſentation of his Correſpondents. Again, my Lord, if the Defendant is not allowed to bring in his Evidence that ſome Parts of his News are true; then, if he is found guilty, he is found guilty of all that is charged on him in the Information, though he is only guilty of Part thereof. I think this Evidence will be allowed between particular Perſons, with relation to their private Affairs; for they will not be found guilty of the Whole, when they are only guilty of a Part; and why ſhould not the ſame be allowed with reſpect to public Affairs? As the Star-chamber is now aboliſhed, I don't know how far that Doctrine may be adhered to. I ſhould be glad to have one Inſtance or Authority of this, and of there being no need to prove News to be true; and alſo where a Publiſher of News is not allowed to ſay that this Piece of News is true, becauſe it relates to the public Affairs of the Nation. Is there no Diſtinction to be made between falſe News and true News; and cannot we now animadvert, or take notice of public Affairs, and inſert them in the Papers, as well as formerly? If this is the Caſe, it will be of dangerous and fatal Conſequence indeed, if Matters of State, or public Affairs, are not to be meddled with, or inſerted in the News-papers, notwithſtanding they are true, but at the Peril of him that does it? They may as well, at once, take away the Liberty of the Preſs; and then we ſhall all live in Darkneſs and Ignorance, which may occaſion Diſorders enough in the Nation. Therefore, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip, whether this will not be of dangerous Conſequence, to puniſh a Perſon for publiſhing true News as well as falſe; and whether it can be juſtly ſaid in the Information, that the Defendant intended to publiſh falſe News?

Mr. Strange. My Lord, I beg Leave to call a Witneſs or two. It was inſinuated, by the Gentlemen on the other Side, that the Extract of the Hague Letter was of the Growth of our own Country; and put it upon us to prove that it came from the Hague, by producing the Letter itſelf. My Lord, in order to take off that Imputation, it will be neceſſary to ſhew, that they have put it out of our Power to do ſo; therefore our Evidence will be, in the firſt Place, to ſhew, that when the Defendant, Mr. Francklin, was taken into Cuſtody by the Meſſengers, they broke open the Defendant's Scrutoire: and, I think, they alſo ſearched his Pockets, and took away his Papers, and among which were Letters, and this amongſt the reſt. The next Part of our Evidence ſhall be to prove, as have been opened, that we have publiſhed true News, and not falſe, as is charged in the Information; and, indeed, the Information ought rather to have been for foreſtalling true News, and not for publiſhing falſe News; for the endeavouring to bring about that Accommodation with the Emperor took Effect: For, my Lord, we will ſhew, that we applied in a public Manner, that the Defendant might be at Liberty to take Copies of the Treaties of Hanover, Seville, and Vienna, in order to make uſe of them at his Trial; and when we had taken all proper Methods to have Copies of them, we were told, that the Treaty of Vienna was a ſecret one, and not yet made public, and conſequently not inrolled in any of the public Offices; and that no Copy could be given of it, to produce in Court: When we have proved this, we hope it will be ſufficient to ſhew, that we have not publiſhed falſe News, as charged in the Information; eſpecially as we have done all that can be be done, in order to produce a Copy thereof.

Call William Ayers. (Who appears.)

Mr. Strange. Do you know the Defendant, Mr. Francklin?

Mr. Ayers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Was you preſent when he was taken into Cuſtody, for publiſhing the Craftſman the 2d of January, 1730?

Mr. Ayers. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Will you give an Account of what happened?

Mr. Ayers. The Meſſengers came to my Houſe, for I was a Conſtable, and deſired my Aſſiſtance, to go with them to Mr. Francklin's, which I did; and they ſearched for Papers in his Houſe and Shop, and they broke open his Scrutoire, and took away what Papers they could find; and Mr. Francklin deſired them to leave ſome of the Papers, becauſe they would be of Service to him, but not to them; but they would not, but took them away.

Mr. Strange. Did he endeavour to ſave his Papers as much as he could?

Mr. Ayers. He did not; but his Wife endeavoured to do it, by ſnatching at them, though to no Purpoſe.

Mr. Strange. Did they ſearch his Pockets?

Mr. Ayers. I did not obſerve them do that.

Mr. Strange. Did they ſuffer him to take an Account of theſe Papers, in order to know what they were?---Mr. Ayers. No.

Mr. Strange. Do you know what they did with theſe Papers?

Mr. Ayers. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you go along with them?---Mr. Ayres. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Did you know they were Meſſengers?

Mr. Ayers. Yes; he ſhewed me his Authority, and told me that he was the King's Meſſenger.

Mr. Strange. Hath Mr. Francklin had them again?

Mr. Ayers. I believe not.

Mr. Strange. Hath he aſked for them?---Mr. Ayers. I know not.

Mr. Strange. Were they ſealed up or not?

Mr. Ayers. I cannot remember that.

Mr. Strange. Was Mr. Francklin deſired to ſet his Seal to them?

Mr. Ayers. I cannot be ſure; but I believe he was not deſired to do ſo.

Mr. Strange Where were theſe Papers found?

Mr. Ayers. I think they were in the one End of the Shop; they were wrapped up in a Bundle.

Mr. Strange. Was the Inſide of them printed?---Mr. Ayers. I know not.

Mr. Strange. Call Thomas Rawlins. (Who appears.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I find that they are to call this Witneſs to prove that they deſired Copies of the Treaties; which is to no Purpoſe, and cannot be allowed.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I am very well ſatisfied, that I cannot admit it.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, it is only to ſhew, that the Hague Letter was not a Piece of falſe News.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, did ever any Man think it neceſſary to prove every Part of the Libel, when it is not material whether the Matter, or ſcandalous Words, or News in the Libel, be true or falſe, or charged in direct Terms or not; or whether the Perſons be named, or only pointed at, as have been already hinted; though Mr. Bootle has called on me to ſhew ſome Authority or Precedent for ſome of theſe

Things? I do say, that on the Cases mentioned in the 5th of Coke's Report, p. 125. and also in Hobart's Reports, p. 215. and 5th of Modern Reports, p. 167. and 9th of Coke's Reports, p. 59. The first says, That every Libel is made either against a private Man, or against a Magistrate or publick Person: If it be made against a private Person, it deserves a severe Punishment; and if it be made against a Magistrate, or other publick Person, that is still a greater Offence, and deserves a greater Punishment; because this concerns not only the Breach of the Peace, but is a Scandal to the Government. The other Reports take Notice of the other Points which I have mentioned: And I must say, that it would be the most absurd Thing in the World to imagine, that the Law had taken a better Care of the Character of a private Person, than of a Magistrate, or publick Person, employed and intrusted by his Majesty in the Affairs of State. Therefore, I submit it to your Lordship, whether such an Evidence, to prove that the News published is true, ought to be admitted.

Lord Chief Justice. I have given Mr. Beetle my Opinion already about it; and if it is not according to their Liking, they know where to apply to have it rectified.

Mr. Beetle. My Lord, in effect, it hath been called an Absurdity to think, that speaking the Truth of any Magistrate, or other publick Person, in the News, can go unpunished; because if that Magistrate or publick Person have done any Injury, then it was said, that there is a Remedy provided another Way than by publickly exposing him, and defaming his Character; as well as there is a Remedy provided for having Satisfaction of a private Person, for any Injury done by him, without scandalizing him, directly or indirectly, in any publick Paper. But I should be glad to know how it must be gone about: For Example, here is a principal Minister of State, that hath injured a Person that is a Publisher of a Paper; where can he have Redress, supposing the Parliament not sitting?

Lord Chief Justice. I am of the same Opinion as before.

Mr. Solicitor General. I thought, that really such a Thing as that would not have been taken Notice of; because it is plain to every Person, that we have a Remedy against a Minister of State, as well as against any other Man, without defaming him publickly; and likewise any Author, Printer, or Publisher, or other Person, may apply to a proper Place for a Remedy against him, if they think that any Court, or Jury, have not done them Justice.

Mr. Noel. My Lord, I beg Leave to say a few Words on the Defendant's Behalf. It is well known, that the Design of this Paper of the Craftsman, which is published weekly, is to entertain and benefit the Publick, and I believe it has answered these Ends: And I hope the Jury will consider the Intention thereof, with the Circumstances and Inconveniencies that the Printer or Publisher of News-papers lie under; and I hope you will consider the Defendant only as a Collector of News from all Parts of the Country, and likewise from foreign Parts, for the Advantage of those People here that trade to and from those Parts; and that it is possible for the Defendant's Correspondents, after all the Care they have taken, sometimes to be a little mistaken in their Intelligence, or not so correct in wording them as they ought or might be, without any Intention or malicious Design of Injury to any Person; and therefore, if such Things were to be always punctually and precisely scanned, and the Printers and Publishers thereof prosecuted, and subjected to Punishment, it will be of very dangerous Consequence; because we should not have any Intelligence or News-papers at all, and consequently be ignorant of what happens daily at home or abroad, and thereby occasion an Interruption in Trade, so beneficial to this Nation. Besides, it is hoped that you will consider, that this Piece of News, in the Hague Letter, is not laid down as a Truth to be depended upon, but only as a Rumour that had been spread about in that Place: And the Writer of the Letter adds, in the Conclusion thereof, that he does not take upon him to justify this Report; and that if it should appear to have any Foundation, he should hear further from him. Again you will consider, as have been already mentioned to you, that the Parts of the same are applicable to other Courts, and that it cannot be applicable to Great-Britain, or its Ministers, without Innuendos, which are not to be used in Prosecutions for Slander or scandalous Words. Also consider, that they could not draw an Innuendo in the Information to include his present Majesty; nor have his Counsel pretended to shew any Evidence, that the Hague Letter had any Tendency to reflect that Way; and, indeed, the Innuendo to include his Ministers is very far fetched, and very much forced. Besides, the Writer of that Letter does seem to approve of these certain Ministers Measures of endeavouring to bring about an Accommodation with the Emperor, by saying, ["That "it must be confessed, that these Measures are very desirable at present."] So that, upon the whole, I cannot see that the Letter is applicable to our Ministers, or that it contains a Libel upon them, or that it any ways answers their Character; and I hope, Gentlemen, that you will be of the same Opinion in your Verdict.

Mr. Taylor. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will likewise indulge me with a very few Words on the Behalf of the Defendant: As the Government is concerned in this Cause, so the Liberty of the Subject is also greatly concerned therein. The Facts which you, Gentlemen, are to try, are, whether the Defendant, Mr. Franeklin, printed and published this Paper; and whether you can, upon your Oath, say, that it is a false, scandalous, and seditious Libel; and, for that End, it will be necessary that you take the Paper into your serious Consideration, not as it is inserted in the Information, with a great Number of Innuendos, but as it was originally; and see if it contains any scandalous Reflections on our present Ministers particularly. Gentlemen, it is not sufficient to say, that the Information is a Libel; but you are to judge of its being one by the Words themselves, and as they stand in the Paper abstracted from the Innuendos; and I do say, that it will be impossible to find it a Libel on our present Ministers, if you judge of it so; for there are no such Words therein as the Ministers of Great-Britain; I believe there are no less than thirty-seven Innuendos in this Information, and you cannot find it a Libel when stuffed with these Innuendos. Gentlemen, in the former Part of it, you will be pleased to observe, that they say, that the Defendant is a constant Publisher of these Libels; and yet they have not proved that so much as one of them was ever sold by the Defendant himself. And, Gentlemen, with respect to the Innuendos, it is to be observed, that there was a famous Cause in in King Charles the Second's Time. In the 14th May, 1669, there was a Writ of Error, and the Judgment or Sentence reversed; and their Lordships declared, that Innuendos ought not to be allowed. Nor are you to understand it here, on Oath, as you may do in a Coffee-house by Conjectures; therefore I hope, upon Consideration of these Things, that you will not find this Piece of News a Libel.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, I beg Leave to make a short Reply, not for what they have said, nor for our want of Proof; but I think some Things very strange which they have insisted on. One of them is, that there is not sufficient Proof of the Publication of this Paper. As to that, I beg Leave to say, that I never saw the Publication of a Paper more clearly proved; and I believe they never saw it themselves in any Instance whatsoever; for your Lordship may remember, that Mr. Smith, the first Witness, swears, that he applied to the Defendant, Mr. Francklin himself, when he was in his Shop, and asked for six Journals of that Day, the 9th of January, 1730, and two of the Saturday before; and that the Defendant ordered his Servant, then in the Shop, to deliver them to Mr. Smith, which he did; and the Servant received the Money for them; and therefore his ordering his Servant to deliver them, is the same as if he had delivered them himself; there cannot be a clearer Proof. They make a Scruple, because he did not ask particularly by Name for such a Journal, though I think he asked to the same Effect, by asking for six of his Journals of that Day; for the Word [his] may take in the Words [Country Journal, or Craftsman] because that is the Journal which he prints and sells; besides, have they done any thing on their Part to prove that other Persons sold other Journals of that Name or otherwise? or have they offered any thing to contradict or weaken his Evidence? Therefore I think that our Witness is the strongest for the King that can be. It was said that great Inconveniences and Dangers might happen to Publishers, if News were so scanned or sifted. As to that, I think every Publisher ought to be careful of what he publishes; for it is no Part of the Printer or Publisher's Trade to scandalize whom they please, for that would be turning Printing and Book-selling into libelling; nor is the Liberty of the Press, which they so much cry up, and say is in Danger of being utterly suppressed, to be turned into a licentious and disorderly Abuse of the Press. Again, it hath appeared before your Lordship, with respect to the Proof of the Defendant's being the Publisher, that there is not only this Witness's Evidence thereof, (against the Credit of which no Evidence hath been offered) but there are other Witnesses who confirm his Evidence, such as Mrs. Dodd and her Servants, and Mrs. Pierce and her's, who had great Numbers at his Shop weekly, and paid for them; and that Mrs. Pierce used to have about 7 l. worth weekly; it is likewise confirmed by the Collectors and Servants at the Stamp-Office. After all this, can it be doubted that the Defendant is guilty of the Publication of this Paper, especially when the Defendant's Counsel have not contradicted them, or offered any thing to invalidate or weaken their Evidence? I take the Publication to be undeniably proved; and it would be but mispending of Time to say any more on that Head. The next Thing is, whether we have sufficiently proved that the pretended Hague Letter inserted in that Paper, is a Libel as charged in the Information; as to that, I may say that there hath not been so much as one single Objection offered against the Construction we put upon it, I mean of its being all applicable to his present Majesty, and his principal Officers and Ministers of State; I mean not one of any Weight, or which has the least Colour of being applicable to any other Court, Country, or Person whatsoever. The Words are [certain Ministers.] These are the Persons that the pretended Hague Letter charges with Perfidy, ruining their Country, &c. and want to have a Meaning put upon them; that is to say, to what Court or Country are they applicable. Now, consider what is said of these certain Ministers: The Letter says, ["A Rumour hath been for some time spread abroad, "that a Misunderstanding will soon discover itself between the Allies of "Seville; and that certain Ministers having at Length found out, that "too close an Union with France, and a War upon the Foot of the Trea"ty of Seville, is quite against the Grain of the People, are endeavour"ing to bring about an Accommodation with the Emperor."] Now, Gentlemen, you know that the Allies of Seville are the King of Great-Britain and the French King, and the King of Spain. And then consider, that these certain Ministers are charged with Perfidy in breaking that Treaty, who, to be sure, must be one of these three Courts, Great-Britain, France, or Spain, who were empowered to make it; for no other could be guilty of breaking it, but one of these three who made it: Now the Letter-writer tells us plainly, that it is neither the Ministers of France, nor the Ministers of Spain, that he thus charged with Perfidy in breaking that Treaty; for he tells us, that one necessary Effect of such Perfidy will be the Conjunction of France and Spain; and that a certain Court would have the Mortification to see these two Crowns united against them more strongly than ever: This, as I said before, amounts to a Demonstration, that neither the Ministers of France nor Spain are charged with that Perfidy, in breaking that Treaty: If so, then there is but the Ministers of one Party left, to wit, of Great-Britain; and I must say, that it is as plain as if the Ministers of Great Britain had been in express Words. Gentlemen, this is no forced nor strained Innuendo; but an Innuendo that naturally and necessarily flows of itself, and which you all cannot but presently draw. Gentlemen, there are other Parts of the Letter, which serve to support and confirm this Construction, which I mentioned in the Opening; such as these, to wit, that another Effect of that Perfidy would be the Seizure of that vast Pledge, which Spain hath at this Time in her Hands; and that these Ministers were undoing every Thing they had been doing for five Years past; which carries it back to September, 1725, when the Treaty of Hanover was concluded. It was said, that you must not understand it as you would do in a Coffee-house, because of its dangerous Consequences. To which I answer, That there is no more Danger in understanding Things here than there, if they are plain (as this is), and do but exercise their Sense and Reason in both Places. Gentlemen, if you acquit the Defendant, you must say on your Oath, that the Letter-Writer did not mean the Ministers of Great-Britain; and can you say that he did not, and that it is not applicable to them? I told you in the Opening, to this or the like Effect: That Writing or Printing may be a Libel, though the Persons are not particularly named therein; and that it is no hard Matter to scandalize any Person by by Circumlocution, fictitious Names, &c. as plainly to be underſtood as if their Names were particularly mentioned; and that the Law conſtrues them accordingly, by Innuendos, becauſe they cannot be otherwiſe conſtrued; and this hath been the Practice of the Law for ſome Hundreds of Years; and therefore the Defendant's Counſel telling you that it is doing People Harm to bring Things in by Innuendos, is only amuſing you with Words; for it is a plain and a juſt Law, and the Law would be defective, if it were otherwiſe, and People would be always defaming one another by the like Methods. I told you of the Caſe of Mr. Miſt's Journal, in 1728: it was a ſcandalous Libel, under the fictitious Names of Eſreff and Sophi; which the Jury underſtood plainly to be ſo, and brought in their Verdict accordingly againſt the Printer and Publiſher thereof *. I ſhall mention another Caſe, of Mr. Matthews the Printer, for High-Treaſon: This was a very notorious and publick Caſe, relating to a certain Perſon called the Chevalier de St. George: There are a thouſand Chevaliers in the World, and yet the Meaning was plainly underſtood to be the Pretender; no leſs a Crime than High Treaſon. There were eleven Judges, I think, that ſat on the Bench, and the preſent Lord Chancellor (King) preſided; and they underſtood the Queries publiſhed as every common Reader would; and the Jury, being convinced in their own Conſcience, underſtood it in the ſame Manner; I mean, no leſs a Crime than High Treaſon, and he was executed for the ſame. And, indeed, any Man may write Treaſon at his Pleaſure, after that Manner, if there was not this Way of conſtruing it. Again, it is ſaid, that this cannot be a Libel, though the Words were underſtood to be applicable to the Perſons mentioned in the Information; becauſe what is affirmed in the Letter, about the Accommodation or Treaty with the Emperor, can be proved to be true: As to that, I muſt ſay, that it is no matter whether the Words be true or falſe, if it is publiſhed as a Libel, and the Proſecution be by Indictment or Information. Then it hath been ſaid, that the Defendant is a Publiſher of News, and that this Letter was ſent to him from the Hague, and that he inſerted it as ſuch in his Journal: As to that, I do ſay, that if this Letter had been really ſent to him from the Hague, it would be ſtill a Libel; becauſe it is not in his Power to publiſh what he pleaſes, or what may be conſtrued defamatory, let it come from what Quarter it will, whether from abroad or at home; for, as I ſaid before, it is no Part of his Trade to ſcandalize whom he pleaſes. But they have not even proved, that that Letter was ſent to him from the Hague: All that they have done it, that they have called a Conſtable, who ſays, that the Meſſengers ſearched for Papers, and took away ſome; but does not ſay that they were written Papers, or that this Hague Letter was among them; no, the Papers he means were only ſome criminal Craftſman. Beſides, if any other Thing had been ſeized, ſuch as that pretended Hague Letter, upon Application made to his Majeſty, or the Secretaries, he might have had them returned; but the Gentlemen do not pretend that they made any ſuch Application. Then they ſay, if this Piece of News is deemed as a Libel, it will have a bad Conſequence; for no Perſon will print any News at all, and then the People will not know how Things or Affairs go: This is very extraordinary, indeed; for the Defendant is not charged in the Information for publiſhing the Piece of pretended News, to wit, [" That a Rumour hath for ſome Time privately been ſpread " about, &c."] No; but he is charged for making an Application, and ſaying, that the Miniſters are guilty of Perfidy, and ruining their Country, &c. Next, Gentlemen, I would have you to obſerve, that it is no Part of your Office to conſider or determine, whether this Hague Letter is a Libel or not (though the Defendant's Counſel inſinuated that it was a Part thereof): You are only to conſider, whether the Expreſſions therein are meant to refer to the preſent King and his Miniſters, and are properly applicable to them. But whether this amounts to a Libel or Crime, is only the Office of the Court to determine: For, ſuppoſe a Man was accuſed of Felony, the Court will determine whether it amounts to it, or not. It is ſo in High-Treaſon, and all Miſdemeanours, in which the Jury is to determine the Facts, and the Judges are to determine the Crime and Puniſhment, as being Matters of Law: And it is confounding the Office of the Court, and of the Jury, to pretend to do otherwiſe; and it is likewiſe a perverting of the Law: This I ſay, with great Submiſſion to your Lordſhip. Then it was ſaid, that there was nothing in that Hague Letter, that did relate to or imply any Reflection upon his preſent Majeſty: But, Gentlemen, that you may not be led into any Error by ſuch an Aſſertion, and Diſtinction between the King and his Miniſters, I would have you to conſider, that here is a Charge on the King's Miniſters for Mal-adminiſtration, and for carrying on a Treaty, which occaſions Perfidy, &c. Now, I would aſk you, can Treaties be carried on without his Majeſty's Direction? And therefore I ſay, that ſuch a Charge as that is a Libel on the King himſelf, as well as on his Miniſters, who are impowered and directed by him. The ſame may be ſaid with reſpect to Magiſtrates and Judges; for they are originally of his Appointment, and the Courts are the King's, and he makes them, and is at the Head of them, and without him they cannot ſubſiſt: So that I ſay, that a Reflection on the King's Miniſters, Officers, Magiſtrates, &c. is a high Reflection on the King himſelf. There have been ſeveral other Things mentioned, which I ſhall not touch at, becauſe I think they are not material. There was another thing mentioned, which was, that if this Hague Letter was conſtrued a Libel, it would tend to the utter Deſtruction of the Liberty of the Preſs. My Lord, I am really at a Loſs to know what Sort of Liberty they mean by it; I hope they don't mean a licentious and an unbounded Liberty, to libel and ſcandalize his Majeſty, or his principal Officers and Miniſters of State, or his Magiſtrates, or even any of the meaneſt of his Subjects, whenever they think fit; for that would be a dangerous Liberty indeed, and be of a very pernicious Conſequence. Gentlemen, I would have you to conſider, that even the Prerogatives of the King are founded on the Law and limited by it, and ſo are all other Things relating to his Subjects; and it cannot be ſuppoſed, that a Printer only is exempted, and at Liberty to uſe his Preſs for what Purpoſes he pleaſes; if he is, I deſire now, that the Defendant's Counſel would point out that Law: No, the Law is not ſo abſurd as to allow ſuch a Liberty of the Preſs. The Liberty meant, is to be underſtood of a legal one: He may lawfully print and publiſh what belongs to his own Trade; but he is not to publiſh any Thing reflecting on the Character, and Reputation, and Adminiſtration of his Majeſty, or his Miniſters; nor yet to ſtain the Character or Reputation of any of his Subjects; for, as I ſaid before, that to ſcandalize and libel People is no Part of his Trade, ſo I ſay, that it is only that Liberty of the Preſs, which he is to uſe, that is regulated by Law and ſubjected to it; and if he breaks that Law, or exceeds that Liberty of the Preſs, he is to be puniſhed for it, as well as for breaking other Laws or Liberties. And, Gentlemen, though it has been inſinuated to you, by the other Side, that the making of ſuch Things a Libel came from the Star-Chamber; yet I muſt tell you, that printing ſuch defamatory Expreſſions, or ſlanderous News, was deemed a Libel, and puniſhed accordingly, long before the Star-Chamber. It is a Law made in 1275, in the third of King Edward I. intitled, An Act that none ſhall report ſlanderous News, whereby Diſcord may ariſe. The Words of that Law are, " [Foraſmuch as there have been oftentimes found, in the Country, Deviſors of Tales, whereby Diſcord, or Occaſion of Diſcord, hath many " Times ariſen between the King and his People, or great Men of this " Realm; for the Damage that hath and may thereof enſue, it is commanded, that from henceforth none be ſo hardy to tell or publiſh any " falſe News or Tales, whereby Diſcord, or Occaſion of Diſcord, or " Slander, may grow between the King and his People, or the great " Men of the Realm; and he that do ſo, ſhall be taken and kept in " Priſon," &c.] So, Gentlemen, you ſee that this of Libels is not a new Law, or one that came from the Star-Chamber; but one that has been almoſt of 500 Years ſtanding; therefore I hope you will not ſuffer yourſelves to be amuſed by ſuch Things. That Court of the Star-Chamber puniſhed without Juries; but though Juries were taken away, yet the Law remained the ſame as to Libels and Crimes: So I hope it appears to you to be very plain, that the Liberty of the Preſs is limited and governed by Law; and that the Law ſets Limits both to the King and his Subjects. Laſtly, I think it was ſaid to this Effect, that it would be making Mr. Francklin a great Politician in the World, to ſuppoſe that he knew any Thing of the Meaning of that pretended Hague Letter which he printed and publiſhed: As to that, I think I may venture to ſay, that he could not nor cannot be ignorant of the Meaning thereof, becauſe it is plain to any common Reader, that by the Words [certain Miniſters], are and muſt be meant the Miniſters of Great-Britain: And I believe that the Treaties of Hanover and Seville have been heard of, and known by you all; and that you likewiſe have heard, and know, that there have been Differences between Great-Britain and Spain. So, Gentlemen, I ſubmit it to you, whether you are not convinced in your Conſciences, that Mr. Francklin, the Defendant, is the Publiſher of that Craftſman, the 2d of January laſt, wherein the pretended Hague Letter is inſerted; and ſecondly, Whether you are not likewiſe convinced, that theſe Expreſſions in that Letter, to wit, [certain Court], and [certain Miniſters], and what is ſpoken againſt them, are to be underſtood of the Court and Miniſters of Great Britain? Theſe are the two Things now under your Conſideration; for as to the Queſtion, Whether theſe Words amount to a Libel or not, you have nothing to do with that, it being the Office of the Court to determine whether they do, or do not. So we doubt not but you will give your

* This Letter, dated Auguſt 24, 1728, ſigned Amos Dudge, was ſuppoſed to be written by the late Philip Duke of Wharton; wherein were contained, under the Characters of Mireweis, Eſreff, and Sophi, many ſcandalous Reflections, and odious Compariſons between his late Majeſty King George II. of glorious Memory, and the Pretender. It was ſo virulent a Letter, that it was preſented by the Grand Juries of Middleſex, Weſtminſter, and the City of Briſtol; and the Printers, Publiſhers, Preſs-men, &c. concerned in printing it were all taken into Cuſtody by Meſſengers.

On Feb. 25, 1729, at the Sittings of the Court of King's-Bench at Guildhall, John Clarke, the Preſſman, was tried upon an Information filed againſt him by the Attorney-General, for printing and publiſhing a Libel, intitled, Miſt's Weekly Journal, No. 175, dated Auguſt 24, 1728, " containing falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Reflections on his late and " preſent Majeſty, by drawing odious Parallels, and thereby maliciouſly and falſly inſinuating our Government to be tyrannical, and our Miniſtry corrupt and abominable. " To ſupport the Charge, there were called James Ford and Thomas Randal, two Boys concerned in the Printing-Office, who proved that the ſaid Clarke worked upon the " ſaid Journal, and aſſiſted in printing 9000 at Mr. Wolfe's in Carter-Lane; that from thence (for fear of Meſſengers) the Forms were carried to Mr. Burton's, a Printer, " where the ſaid Clarke aſſiſted in working off 1750 more; and that the ſaid Clarke ordered, that Nobody ſhould ſee or have any of them, till all were printed off, and " publiſhed together. It appeared alſo, that Clarke owned, in his Examination before Mr. Delafay, that he aſſiſted in working off the ſaid Journal. His publiſhing it was proved " by Mr. Maſkall, who bought half a Quire, which was delivered out to him by Clarke himſelf. The Counſel for the Defendant alledged, that the Characters of Mireweis " and Eſreff did not in the leaſt correſpond with his late or preſent Majeſty: Upon which the Court ſaid, the Crime was the greater in making the Parallel. The De- " fendant's Counſel further alledged, that Clarke being a poor ignorant Workman, he could not be ſuppoſed to underſtand the Compariſons, or to know the Characters; " nor could have any malicious Intention againſt the Government: To which the Court anſwered, it was the Facts of Printing and Publiſhing only that lay in Iſſue; which " the Jury conſidering, they brought him in Guilty of both.

" Robert Knell was alſo tried upon an Information filed againſt him, for printing and publiſhing the ſame Libel. It was proved, that he aſſiſted in compoſing it; and ſaid, " as he was about it, Mr. Wolfe and I, and the reſt of us, will all be taken up for this Journal. The Defendant's Counſel inſiſted, that compoſing was not printing; to " which the Attorney-General anſwered, that though, abſtractly conſidered, it was not the very Act, yet it was an Act preparatory to it; and Mr. Roberts, a Printer, " being examined, declared, it was not only Part, but the principal Part of Printing; upon which the Objection was over-ruled. Another Point was alſo objected to; that " as there were two Compoſitors, each having a ſeparate Form allotted to compoſe, one of them could not be charged with the whole Libel, as laid in the Information: To " which the Court anſwered, that when a Crime is perpetrated by more than one, and by joint Conſent, any one of them, being guilty of Part, is guilty of the Whole. " The Defendant was therefore found Guilty of printing the ſaid Libel; but not of publiſhing it.

" Joſeph Carter (Wolfe's Apprentice) was alſo tried on the ſaid Information; and the Evidence againſt him being the ſame as before, he was found guilty of printing only.

" May 19 following, being the laſt Day of the Term, the following Perſons, for being concerned in printing and publiſhing Miſt's Journal of Auguſt 24, received Judg- " ment as follows:

" John Clarke, the Preſſman, for printing and publiſhing the ſaid Libel, to ſtand thrice in the Pillory; once at the Royal Exchange, once at Temple-Bar, and once at Charing- " Croſs; to be committed to Bridewell for ſix Months, and there kept to hard Labour.

" Robert Knell, the Compoſitor, for printing the ſaid Libel, to ſtand twice in the Pillory, once at the Royal Exchange, and once at Charing-Croſs; and to be committed to " Bridewell for ſix Months, and there to be kept to hard Labour.

" Joſeph Carter, the Apprentice, for printing the ſaid Libel, to go round the four Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, on the firſt Day of next Term, with a Paper fixed upon " his Head, denoting his Offence; to be ſent to Bridewell for one Month, and kept to hard Labour." Monthly Chronicle for 1728, 1729."

your Verdict according to your Conſcience; and do Juſtice between the King and the Defendant, which is all that is required of you. My Lord, the Importance of the Cauſe hath occaſioned me to take up much of your Time, which I hope your Lordſhip will excuſe.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Information, wherein the King is Plaintiff, and Mr. Francklin Defendant, for printing and publiſhing the Country Journal or Craftſman, the 2d of January 1730, wherein is inſerted an Extract of a private Letter from the Hague, reflecting on his Majeſty and his principal Officers and Miniſters of State. In this Information or Libel, there are three Things to be conſidered, whereof two by you the Jury, and one by the Court. The firſt Thing under your Conſideration is, whether the Defendant, Mr. Francklin, is guilty of the Publication of this Craftſman or not? The ſecond is, Whether the Expreſſions in that Letter refer to his preſent Majeſty and his principal Officers and Miniſters of State, and are applicable to them or not? This is the chief Thing in the Information; for if you think that theſe defamatory Expreſſions are not applicable to them, then the Defendant is not guilty of what is charged upon him; but if you think that they are applicable to them, then the Defendant is guilty thereof; upon this Suppoſition, that you find him to be the Publiſher of that Paper. Theſe are the two Matters of Fact that come under your Conſideration; and of which you are proper Judges. But then there is a third Thing, to wit, Whether theſe defamatory Expreſſions amount to a Libel or not? This does not belong to the Office of the Jury, but to the Office of the Court; becauſe it is a Matter of Law, and not of Fact; and of which the Court are the only proper Judges; and there is Redreſs to be had at another Place, if either of the Parties are not ſatisfied; for we are not to invade one another's Province, as is now of late a Notion among ſome People who ought to know better; for Matters of Law and Matters of Fact are never to be confounded. As to the firſt Thing, whether the Defendant is guilty of the Publication of that Craftſman which is under your Conſideration. And here in this and the ſecond Head I ſhall not be long, becauſe Things have been ſo often repeated, and all Sorts of Obſervations made on both Sides that is poſſible to be made on this Occaſion; and my Endeavours ſhall be to hinder you from running away with Notions which are not right. As to the Evidence offered to prove the Defendant the Publiſher of that Craftſman, the Plaintiff's Counſel called one Mr. Smith, againſt whom the Defendant's Counſel could not ſay any Thing material. This Mr. Smith gives an Account, that on the 9th of January laſt, he went to Mr. Francklin's Shop to buy ſome Craftſman or Journals; he ſaid he wanted half a Dozen of that Day, and two of the Week before; he ſays, when he came he found Mr. Francklin in his Shop, and aſked him for half a Dozen of his Journals of that Day, and two of the Saturday before; and that Mr. Francklin aſked him whom they were for; who anſwered that they were for himſelf; and that Mr. Francklin aſked him if he ſold them again; who anſwered, Yes; and that afterwards Mr. Francklin pointed to his Servant, and told him to look out theſe Journals for him; which he accordingly did; and that he ſold one of the Journals of the 2d of January again to another Perſon; but before he ſold it he marked it; and that Mr. Smith paid his Servant for theſe 8 Journals. I think he ſaid, that the two Journals were thoſe of the ſecond of January. This Evidence is very poſitive and full; for he bought them in the Defendant's Shop; and the Defendant's Servant delivered them to him by his Maſter's Direction, and paid the Servant for them; which is an undeniable Proof of the Defendant's being the Publiſher thereof; and unleſs Mr. Smith is wilfully forſworn, his Evidence alone is ſufficient. Then the King's Counſel went on, and called other Witneſſes to prove the Defendant the Publiſher, though I thought there was no Occaſion for more; but they produced other Witneſſes (I ſhall not be long, or name every one). They produced Mrs. Dodd, who ſays, that ſhe uſed to ſend her Servant, Goram, to Mr. Francklin's weekly for his Craftſman, or Country Journal; and he brought them from thence; and theſe of the 2d of January among the reſt; and gave the Money to another Servant, in order to pay Mr. Francklin for them. Goram tells you, that he went about a Year and a half together, weekly, to Mr. Francklin's, for theſe Craftſman or Country Journals, and brought them into his Miſtreſs's Shop; and that he brought ſome of the 2d of January, and brought no Country Journals of that Day from any other Place; and that he had great Quantities of theſe Country Journals weekly. Mrs. Pierce ſays, that ſhe ſent her Man, David Davies, to Mr. Francklin's weekly, for ſome Time, for his Country Journals, and for that of the 2d of January among the reſt; and had ſuch a Quantity of them as came to about £7. weekly. David Davies ſays, that he was employed by Mrs. Pierce to fetch her Journals, the Craftſman, from Mr. Francklin's; and that of the 2d of January among the reſt; and paid the Money for them to the Amount of about £7. weekly. Then they called an Officer of the Stamp-Office, who ſays, that he regiſtered thirty-eight Advertiſements that were in the Craftſman of the 2d of January laſt; and that the Account of the Advertiſements for that Month of January came to 10 l. 18 s. So, Gentlemen, you are to conſider whether or not you are ſatisfied with the Evidence produced to prove the Defendant to be the Publiſher of that Craftſman of the 2d of January laſt. The next Thing which you are to conſider is, whether the Expreſſions in that Hague Letter, refer to his preſent Majeſty and his principal Officers and Miniſters of State, and are applicable to them as in the Information or not; for when People's Names are not ſet down at length, but pointed at by Circumlocution, or Pieces of Words, or by initial Letters, &c. the Law always allows Innuendos in Informations, which explain and tell what the Defendant meant by them; and the Law likewiſe allows Juries to give their Verdict on Oath, whether they think that theſe dark, defamatory Speeches have the ſame Meaning as mentioned in the Information or not. The Counſel for the King have gone on and explained and applied theſe defamatory Expreſſions exactly as in the Information; and they have given their Arguments and Reaſons for ſo doing; drawn from the ſeveral Parts of that Letter, which I ſhall not trouble you with, becauſe they have been ſo often repeated in your hearing; I ſay, they have explained them as mentioned in the Information; that is to ſay, that by theſe defamatory Expreſſions, are meant his preſent Majeſty and his principal Officers and Miniſters of State; and indeed they muſt be applicable, and refer to them or to ſomebody elſe; and if they do mean them, then I muſt ſay that they are very ſcandalous and reflecting Expreſſions; becauſe they charge them with Perfidy in breaking of Treaties, ruining in a manner their Country, &c. as you may ſee at large in the Letter; and it is very evident that theſe Treaties could not be made without the Knowledge and Direction of his Majeſty. The Counſel for the Defendant ſaid, that theſe ſcandalous Expreſſions could not be underſtood to refer to his Majeſty or his Miniſters; but they did not tell to whom they referred; I ſhould have been glad to have heard them do ſo; ſo that you are to conſider of whom theſe defamatory Expreſſions are meant, or to whom they are applicable; and as to the Rule and Manner of underſtanding them, you are to do it, on Oath, after the ſame Manner and Way as you do privately by yourſelves, taking all the Parts of the Letter together. I ſhall not repeat the ſeveral Parts of it now which the King's Counſel did uſe, to ſhew that they were meant of his Majeſty and his Miniſters, becauſe you are to have the Letter along with you; for it is plain, that the Conſtruction of it depends on the Words themſelves and their Connection. Gentlemen, I have been very ſhort in ſumming up the Evidence; and laid aſide the Points of the Law; I mean, whether theſe defamatory Expreſſions amount to a Libel or not; becauſe the Court can only determine that: And if not ſatisfactory to either of the Parties, there is a proper Redreſs to be had at another Place, as I ſaid before. There was one Thing more mentioned by the Defendant's Counſel, which was, that there is no Room to think that Letter libellous; becauſe there could be no Malice ſuppoſed by inſerting it in the Craftſman, being only deſigned as a Piece of foreign News; and that the latter Part of the Letter qualifies it, by ſaying that the Letter-Writer does not take upon him to juſtify the Truth of that Report; but that will not do; for the Injury is the ſame to the Perſons ſcandalized, whether the Letter was inſerted out of Malice or not; beſides, there is no knowing or proving particular Malice, otherwiſe than from the Act itſelf; and therefore if the Act imports as much, it is ſufficient; nor is he to take the Liberty to print what he pleaſes; for the Liberty of the Preſs is only a legal Liberty, ſuch as the Law allows; and not a licentious Liberty. Gentlemen, I tell you again, that I have deſignedly ſhortened Things, becauſe it hath been ſo fully again and again laid before you. But if there is any Thing afterwards that you want to know, after you have conſidered theſe Things, I deſire you would acquaint me. So, Gentlemen, if you are ſenſible, and convinced that the Defendant publiſhed that Craftſman of the 2d of January laſt; and that the defamatory Expreſſions in the Letter * refer to the Miniſters of Great Britain; then you ought to find the Defendant guilty; but if you think otherwiſe, then you ought not to find him guilty.

The Jury found the Defendant guilty of publiſhing the ſaid Libel.

The Term following, Mr. Richard Francklin received Sentence to pay a Fine of One Hundred Pounds, to be impriſoned for one Year, and to find Security for his good Behaviour for ſeven Years; himſelf in One Thouſand Pounds Penalty, and his two Sureties in Five Hundred Pounds each.

* This Hague Letter was ſaid to be written by the late Henry Lord Viſcount Bolingbroke. Ex Infor. Mr. R. Francklin.

XXII. The Trial of Mr. John Peter Zenger, of New-York, Printer, for printing and publiſhing a Libel againſt the Government; before the Honourable James de Lancey, Eſq; Chief Juſtice of the Province of New-York; and the Honourable Frederick Phillipſe, Eſq; ſecond Judge; at New-York, on Auguſt 4th, 1735 †.

AS there was but one Printer in the Province of New-York, that printed a public News-Paper, I was in hopes, if I undertook to publiſh another, I might make it worth my while; and I ſoon found my Hopes were not groundleſs. My firſt Paper was printed, Nov. 5*th*, 1733, and I continued printing and publiſhing of them, I thought to the Satisfaction of every Body, 'till the January following; when the Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to animadvert upon the Doctrine of Libels, in a long Charge given in that Term to the Grand Jury; and afterwards on the third Tueſday of October, 1734, was again pleaſed to charge the Grand Jury in the following Words:

'Gentlemen, I ſhall conclude with reading a Paragraph or two out of 'the ſame Book, concerning Libels; they are arrived to that Height, 'that they call loudly for your Animadverſion; it is high Time to put a 'Stop to them; for at the rate Things are now carried on, when all Or-'der and Government is endeavoured to be trampled on, Reflections are 'caſt upon Perſons of all Degrees. Muſt not theſe Things end in Sedi-'tion, if not timely prevented? Lenity, you have ſeen, will not avail; 'it becomes you then to enquire after the Offenders, that we may, in a 'due Courſe of Law, be enabled to puniſh them. If you, Gentlemen, do 'not interpoſe, conſider whether the ill Conſequences that may ariſe

† This Trial (or rather Part of a Trial) publiſhed by Mr. Zenger himſelf, having made a great Noiſe in the World, is here inſerted; though the Doctrines advanced by Mr. Hamilton in his Speeches, are not allowed in the Courts here to be Law.——See Lord Raymond's Opinion in the foregoing Trial, p. 275.——To which we have ſubjoined ſome Remarks on this Trial, publiſhed ſoon after it made its firſt Appearance.

‘ from any Diſturbances of the publick Peace, may not in part lie at your ‘ Door?’

‘ Hawkins, in his Chapter of Libels, conſiders three Points: 1ſt. ‘ What ſhall be ſaid to be a Libel. 2dly. Who are liable to be pu- ‘ niſhed for it. 3dly. In what Manner they are to be puniſhed.’ Under the 1ſt, he ſays, §. 7. “ Nor can there be any Doubt, but that a Wri- “ ting, which defames a private Perſon only, is as much a Libel as “ that which defames Perſons intruſted in a publick Capacity, in “ as much as it manifeſtly tends to create ill Blood, and to cauſe “ a Diſturbance of the publick Peace; however it is certain, that it “ is a very high Aggravation of a Libel, that it tends to ſcandalize the “ Government, by reflecting on thoſe who are entruſted with the Admini- “ ſtration of publick Affairs, which does not only endanger the publick “ Peace, as all other Libels do, by ſtirring up the Parties immediately “ concerned in it, to Acts of Revenge, but alſo has a direct Tendency to “ breed in the People a Diſlike of their Governors, and incline them to “ Faction and Sedition.” ‘ As to the 2d Point he ſays, §. 10.’ “ It “ is certain, not only he who compoſes or procures another to compoſe “ it, but alſo that he who publiſhes, or procures another to publiſh it, are “ in Danger of being puniſhed for it; and it is ſaid not to be material, “ whether he who diſperſes a Libel, knew any Thing of the Contents or “ Effects of it or not; for nothing could be more eaſy than to publiſh the “ moſt virulent Papers with the greateſt Security, if the concealing the “ Purport of them from an illiterate Publiſher would make him ſafe in “ the Diſperſing them. Alſo, it has been ſaid, that if he who hath “ either read a Libel himſelf, or hath heard it read by another, do after- “ wards maliciouſly read or report any Part of it in the Preſence of others, “ or lend or ſhew it to another, he is guilty of an unlawful Publication “ of it. Alſo, it hath been holden, that the copying of a Libel ſhall be “ a concluſive Evidence of the Publication of it, unleſs the Party can “ prove, that he delivered it to a Magiſtrate to examine it, in which “ Caſe the Act ſubſequent is ſaid to explain the Intention precedent. But “ it ſeems to be the better Opinion, that he who firſt writes a Libel, “ dictated by another, is thereby guilty of making of it, and conſe- “ quently puniſhable for the bare Writing; for it was no Libel till it “ was reduced to Writing.”

‘ Theſe, Gentlemen, are ſome of the Offences which are to make Part ‘ of your Enquiries; and if any other ſhould ariſe in the Courſe of your ‘ Proceedings, in which you are at a Loſs, or conceive any Doubts, upon ‘ your Application here, We will aſſiſt and direct you.’

The Grand Jury not indicting me as was expected, the Gentlemen of the Council proceeded to take my Journals into Conſideration, and ſent the following Meſſage to the General Aſſembly.

‘ Die Jovis, 3 ho. P. M. 17th of October, 1734.

‘ A Meſſage from the Council by Philip Cortlandt, in theſe Words, to wit,

‘ That Board having had ſeveral of Zenger’s New-York Weekly Jour- ‘ nals laid before them, and other ſcurrilous Papers, tending to alienate ‘ the Affections of the People of this Province from his Majeſty’s Go- ‘ vernment, to raiſe Seditions and Tumults among the People of this Pro- ‘ vince, and to fill their Minds with a Contempt of his Majeſty’s Go- ‘ vernment: And conſidering the pernicious Conſequences that may at- ‘ tend ſuch growing Evils, if not ſpeedily and effectually put a Stop to: ‘ And conceiving that the moſt likely Method to put a Stop to ſuch bold ‘ and ſeditious Practices, to maintain the Dignity of his Majeſty’s Go- ‘ vernment, and to preſerve the Peace thereof, would be by a Conference ‘ between a Committee of this Board, and a Committee of the Aſſembly; ‘ It is therefore ordered, That the Gentlemen of this Board, now aſſembled, ‘ or any ſeven of them, be a Committee, to join a Committee of the ‘ Houſe of Repreſentatives, in order to confer together, and to ex- ‘ amine and enquire into the ſaid Papers, and the Authors and Writers ‘ thereof.’

‘ Which Meſſage being read,

‘ Ordered, That the Members of this Houſe, or any fourteen of them, ‘ do meet a Committee of the Council, at the Time and Place therein ‘ mentioned.’

‘ Die Veneris, 9 ho. A. M. 18 October, 1734.

‘ Mr. Garretſon, from the Committee of this Houſe, reported, That ‘ they laſt Night met the Committee of the Council, on the ſubject ‘ Matter of their Meſſage of Yeſterday to this Houſe; and that after ſe- ‘ veral Preliminaries between the ſaid Committees, the Gentlemen of the ‘ Council reduced to Writing, what they requeſted of this Houſe, and de- ‘ livered the ſame to the Chairman, who delivered it in at the Table, and ‘ being read, is in the Words following:

‘ At a Committee of the Council held the 17th of October, 1734.

PRESENT,

Mr. Clarke. Mr. Harriſon. Dr. Colden.
Mr. Livingſton. Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Chief-Juſtice.
Mr. Cortlandt. Mr. Lane. Mr. Horſmanden.

‘ Gentlemen,

‘ The Matters we requeſt your Concurrence in are, That Zenger’s ‘ Papers, N°. 7. 47, 48, 49. which were read, and which we now deliver, ‘ be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman, as containing in ‘ them many Things derogatory of the Dignity of his Majeſty’s Govern- ‘ ment, reflecting upon the Legiſlature, upon the moſt conſiderable Per- ‘ ſons in the moſt diſtinguiſhed Stations in the Province, and tending to ‘ raiſe Seditions and Tumults among the People thereof.

‘ That you concur with us in the addreſſing the Governor, to iſſue his ‘ Proclamation, with a Promiſe of Reward for the Diſcovery of the Au- ‘ thors or Writers of theſe ſeditious Libels.

‘ That you concur with us in an Order for proſecuting the Printer ‘ thereof.

‘ That you concur with us in an Order to the Magiſtrates, to exert ‘ themſelves in the Execution of their Offices, in order to preſerve the ‘ publick Peace of the Province.

‘ By Order of the Committee,
‘ FRED. MORRIS, Cl. Con.’

‘ Mr. Garretſon delivered likewiſe to the Houſe the ſeveral Papers re- ‘ ferred to in the ſaid Requeſt.

‘ Ordered, That the ſaid Papers be lodged with the Clerk of this Houſe; ‘ and that the Conſideration thereof; and the ſaid Requeſt, be referred till ‘ Tueſday next.

‘ Die Martis, 9 ho. A. M. 22 October, 1734.

‘ The Houſe according to Order proceeded to take into Conſideration ‘ the Requeſt of a Committee of Council, delivered to a Committee of ‘ this Houſe, on the 16*th* Inſtant, as likewiſe of the ſeveral Papers there- ‘ in referred to. And after ſeveral Debates upon the ſubject Matters, it ‘ was ORDERED, That the ſaid Papers and Requeſts lie on the Table.’

The Council finding the General Aſſembly would not do any Thing about it, they ſent the following Meſſage to the Houſe.

‘ Die Sabbati, 9 ho. A. M. 2 November, 1734.

‘ A Meſſage from the Council by Mr. Livingſton, deſiring this Houſe ‘ to return by him to that Board the ſeveral ſeditious Journals of Zenger’s, ‘ N°. 7. 47, 48, 49. which were delivered by a Committee of that Board ‘ to a Committee of this Houſe the 17th of October laſt, together with the ‘ Propoſals of the Committee of that Board, delivered therewith to a ‘ Committee of this Houſe; and then withdrew.’

On Tueſday the 5th of November, 1734, the Quarter-Seſſions for the City of New-York began, when the Sheriff delivered to the Court an Or- der, which was read in theſe Words:

“ At a Council held at Fort George, in New-York, the 2d of Novem- ber, 1734.

PRESENT,

His Excellency William Coſby, Captain General and Governor in Chief, &c.

Mr. Clarke. Mr. Harriſon. * Dr. Colden.
Mr. Livingſton. Mr. Kennedy. Mr. Chief-Juſtice.
Mr. Cortlandt. Mr. Lane. Mr. Horſmanden.

“ Whereas by an Order of this Board, of this Day, ſome of John “ Peter Zenger’s Journals, entitled, The New-York Weekly Journal, con- “ taining the freſheſt Advices, foreign and domeſtic, N°. 7. 47, 48, 49. were “ ordered to be burnt by the Hands of the Common Hangman, or Whip- “ per, near the Pillory in this City, on Wedneſday the 6th Inſtant, be- “ tween the Hours of Eleven and Twelve in the Forenoon, as contain- “ ing in them many Things tending to Sedition and Faction, to bring his “ Majeſty’s Government into Contempt, and to diſturb the Peace there- “ of, and containing in them likewiſe not only Reflections upon his Ex- “ cellency the Governor in particular, the Legiſlature in general, but “ alſo upon the moſt conſiderable Perſons in the moſt diſtinguiſhed Sta- “ tions in this Province: It is therefore ordered, That the Mayor and “ Magiſtrates of this City do attend at the Burning of the ſeveral Papers “ or Journals aforeſaid, numbered as above mentioned.

“ FRED. MORRIS, D. Cl. Con.”

‘ To Robert Lurting, Eſq. Mayor of the City of New-York, and the ‘ reſt of the Magiſtrates for the ſaid City and County.’

Upon reading of which Order, the Court forbad the Entering thereof in their Books at that Time; and many of them declared, that if it ſhould be entered, they would have their Proteſt entered againſt it.

On Wedneſday the 6th of November, the Sheriff of New-York moved the Court of Quarter-Seſſions to comply with the ſaid Order; upon which one of the Aldermen offered a Proteſt, which was read by the Clerk, and ap- proved of by all the Aldermen, either expreſly, or by not objecting to it, and is as followeth:

‘ Whereas an Order has been ſerved on this Court, in theſe Words.

[The Order as above inſerted.]

‘ And whereas this Court conceives, they are only to be commanded ‘ by the King’s mandatory Writs, authorized by Law, to which they ‘ conceive they have the Right of ſhewing Cauſe why they don’t obey ‘ them, if they believe them improper to be obeyed; or by Orders, which ‘ have ſome known Laws to authorize them; and whereas this Court ‘ conceives this Order to be no mandatory Writ warranted by Law, nor ‘ knows of no Law that authorizes the making the Order aforeſaid; ſo ‘ they think themſelves under no Obligation to obey it: Which ‘ Obedience, they think would be in them, an opening a Door for arbi- ‘ trary Commands, which, when once opened, they know not what dan- ‘ gerous Conſequences may attend it. Wherefore this Court conceives ‘ itſelf bound in Duty (for the Preſervation of the Rights of this Corpo- ‘ ration, and, as much as they can, the Liberty of the Preſs, and the Peo- ‘ ple of the Province, ſince an Aſſembly of the Province, and ſeveral ‘ Grand Juries, have refuſed to meddle with the Papers, when applied ‘ to by the Council) to proteſt againſt the Order aforeſaid, and to forbid all ‘ the Members of this Corporation to pay any Obedience to it, until it be ſhewn ‘ to this Court, that the ſame is authorized by ſome known Law, which ‘ they neither know, nor believe that it is.’

Upon reading of which, it was required of the Honourable Francis Harriſon, Recorder of this Corporation, and one of the Members of the Council, (preſent at making the ſaid Order) to ſhew by what Law or Authority the ſaid Order was made; upon which he ſpoke in Support of it, and cited the Caſe of Doctor Sacheverel’s Sermon, which was by the Houſe of Lords ordered to be burnt by the Hands of the Hangman, and that the Mayor and Aldermen of London ſhould attend the doing of it. To which one of the Aldermen anſwered to this Purpoſe: That he conceived the Caſe was no ways parallel, becauſe Dr. Sacheverel and his Sermon were impeached by the Houſe of Commons of England, which is the Grand Jury of the Nation, and Repreſentative of the whole People of England: That this their Impeachment they proſecuted before the Houſe of Lords, the greateſt Court of Juſtice of Britain, and which, beyond Memory of Man,

* N. B. Dr. Colden was that Day at Eſopus, 90 Miles from New-York, though mentioned as preſent in Council.

has

has had Cognizance of Things of that Nature: That there Sacheverel had a fair Hearing in Defence of himself and of his Sermon; and after that fair Hearing, he and his Sermon were justly, fairly, and legally condemned: That he had read the Case of Dr. Sacheverel, and thought he could charge his Memory, that the Judgment of the House of Lords in that Case was, That the Mayor and Sheriffs of London and Middlesex only should attend the Burning of the Sermon, and not the Aldermen; and farther he remembered, that the Order upon that Judgment was only directed to the Sheriffs of London, and not even to the Mayor, who did not attend the doing it: And farther said, that would Mr. Recorder shew, that the Governor and Council had such Authority as the House of Lords, and that the Papers ordered to be burnt were in like manner legally prosecuted and condemned, there the Case of Dr. Sacheverel might be to the Purpose; but without shewing that, it rather proved that a Censure ought not to be pronounced, till a fair Trial by a competent and legal Authority were first had. Mr. Recorder was desired to produce the Books from whence he cited his Authorities, that the Court might judge of them themselves, and was told, that if he could produce sufficient Authorities to warrant this Order, they would readily obey it, but otherwise not. Upon which he said, he did not carry his Books about with him. To which it was answered, he might send for them, or order a Constable to fetch them. Upon which he arose, and at the lower End of the Table he mentioned, that Bishop Burnet's Pastoral Letter was ordered, by the House of Lords, to be burnt by the High Bailiff of Westminster *; upon which he abruptly went away, without waiting for an Answer, or promising to bring his Books, and did not return sitting the Court.

After Mr. Recorder's Departure, it was moved, that the Protest should be entered; to which it was answered, that the Protest could not be entered, without entering also the Order, that it was not fit to take any Notice of it; and therefore it was proposed that no Notice should be taken in their Books of either, which was unanimously agreed to by the Court.

The Sheriff then moved, that the Court would direct their Whipper to perform the said Order; to which it was answered, That as he was the Officer of the Corporation, they would give no such Order. Soon after which the Court adjourned, and did not attend the Burning of the Papers. Afterwards about Noon, the Sheriff, after reading the Numbers of the several Papers which were ordered to be burnt, delivered them unto the Hands of his own Negroe, and ordered him to put them into the Fire, which he did; at which Mr. Recorder, Jeremiah Dunbar, Esq. and several of the Officers of the Garrison, attended.]

On the Lord's Day, the 17th of November, 1734, I was taken and imprisoned by virtue of a Warrant in these Words.

'At a Council held at Fort George in New York, the 2d Day of November, 1734.

PRESENT,

His Excellency William Cosby, Capt. General and Governor in Chief, &c.

Mr. Clarke. Mr. Harrison. Mr. Livingston.
Mr. Kennedy. Chief-Justice. Mr. Cortlandt.
Mr. Lane. Mr. Horsmanden.

'It is ordered, that the Sheriff for the City of New York do forthwith 'take and apprehend John Peter Zenger, for printing and publishing several seditious Libels, dispersed throughout his Journals or News-papers, 'intituled, The New York Weekly Journal, containing the freshest Advices, foreign and domestick; as having in them many Things tending to raise 'Factions and Tumults among the People of this Province, inflaming 'their Minds with Contempt of his Majesty's Government, and greatly 'disturbing the Peace thereof; and upon his taking the said John Peter 'Zenger, to commit him to the Prison or common Jail of the said City and 'County.'

FRED. MORRIS, D. Cl. Con.

And being, by virtue of that Warrant, so imprisoned in the Jail, I was for several Days denied the Use of Pen, Ink, and Paper, and the Liberty of Speech with any Persons.——Upon my Commitment, some Friends soon got a Habeas Corpus to bring me before the Chief-Justice, in order to my Discharge, or being bailed; on the Return whereof, on Wednesday the 20th of November, my Counsel delivered Exceptions to the Return, and the Chief-Justice ordered them to be argued publickly at the City Hall, on the Saturday following.

On Saturday the 23d of November, the said Exceptions came to be argued, by James Alexander and William Smith, of Counsel for me, and by Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Warrel, of Counsel against me, in Presence of some Hundreds of the Inhabitants; where my Counsel (saving the Benefit of Exception to the Illegality of the Warrant) insisted that I might be admitted to reasonable Bail. And to shew that it was my Right to be so, they offered Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, 3 Car. the Habeas Corpus Act of 31 Car. II. which directs the Sum, in which Bail is to be taken, to be, 'according to the Quality of the Prisoner, and Nature of 'the Offence.' Also 2. Hawkins, cap. 15. §. 5. in these Words, 'But 'Justices must take care, that, under Pretence of demanding sufficient 'Security, they do not make so excessive a Demand as, in effect, amounts 'to a Denial of Bail; for this is looked on as a great Grievance, and is 'complained of as such, by 1 W. & M. Sess. 2. by which it is declared, 'That excessive Bail ought not to be required.' It was also shewn, that the seven Bishops, who, in King James the IId's Time, were charged with the like Crime that I stood charged with, were admitted to Bail on their own Recognizances, the Archbishop in 200 l. and each of the other six in 100 l. a-piece only. Sundry other Authorities and Arguments were produced and insisted on by my Counsel, to prove my Right to be admitted to moderate Bail, and to such Bail as was in my Power to give; and sundry Parts of History they produced, to shew how much the requiring excessive Bail had been resented by Parliament. And, in order to enable the Court to judge what Surety was in my Power to give, I made Affidavit, That (my Debts paid) I was not worth forty Pounds, (the Tools of my Trade, and Wearing-Apparel excepted.)

Some warm Expressions (to say no worse of them) were dropt on this Occasion, sufficiently known and resented by the Auditory, which, for my part, I desire may be buried in Oblivion: Upon the Whole, it was ordered, that I might be admitted to Bail, myself in 400 l. with two Sureties, each in 200 l. and that I should be remanded till I gave it. And as this was ten times more than was in my Power to counter-secure any Person in giving Bail for me, I conceived I could not ask any to become my Bail on these Terms; and therefore I returned to Jail, where I lay until Tuesday the 28th of January, 1734-5, being the last Day of that Term; and the Grand Jury having found nothing against me, I expected to have been discharged from my Imprisonment: But my Hopes proved vain; for the Attorney General then charged me, by Information, for printing and publishing Parts of my Journals N°. 13 and 23, as being false, scandalous, malicious, and seditious.

To this Information my Counsel appeared, and offered Exceptions, leaving a Blank for inserting the Judges Commissions, which the Court were of Opinion not to receive till those Blanks were filled up. In the succeeding Vacation the Judges gave Copies of their Commissions; and on Tuesday the 15th of April last, the first Day of the succeeding Term, my Counsel offered these Exceptions; which were as follow.

The Attorney General, v. John Peter Zenger. } On Information for a Misdemeanour.

'Exceptions humbly offered by John Peter Zenger, to the Honourable 'James de Lancey, Esq. to judge in this Cause.

'The Defendant comes and prays Hearing of the Commission, by virtue of which the Honourable James De Lancey, Esq. claims the Power 'and Authority to judge in this Cause, and it is read to him in these 'Words:

"George the Second, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain, "France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our trusty "and well beloved James De Lancey, Esq. We, reposing special Trust "and Confidence in your Integrity, Ability and Learning, have assigned, "constituted and appointed, and We do by these Presents assign, constitute, and appoint you, the said James De Lancey, to be Chief-Justice "in and over our Province of New York, in America, in the room of Lewis "Morris, Esq. giving and by these Presents granting unto you full "Power and lawful Authority to hear, try, and determine all Pleas whatsoever, civil, criminal, and mixt, according to the Laws, Statutes, "and Customs of our Kingdom of England, and the Laws and Usages of "our said Province of New York, not being repugnant thereto, and Executions of all Judgments of the said Court to award, and to make such "Rules and Orders in the said Court, as may be found convenient and "useful, and, as near as may be, agreeable to the Rules and Orders of "our Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer in England. To have, hold, and enjoy the said Office or Place of Chief-"Justice in and over our said Province, with all and singular the Rights, "Privileges, Profits and Advantages, Salaries, Fees and Perquisites unto the said Place belonging, or in any ways appertaining, in as full and "ample Manner as any Person heretofore Chief-Justice of our said Province hath held and enjoyed, or of Right ought to have held and enjoyed the same, To you the said James De Lancey, Esq. for and during "our Will and Pleasure. In Testimony whereof We have caused these our "Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our Province of New "York to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well-beloved William Cosby, Esq. our Captain-General and Governor in Chief of our "Provinces of New York, New Jersey, and the Territories thereon depending in America, Vice-Admiral of the same, and Colonel in our Army, "at Fort George in New York, the twenty-first Day of August, in the seventh Year of our Reign, Annoq; Domini, 1733."

'Which being read and heard, the said John Peter Zenger, by Protestation not confessing nor submitting to the Power of any other Person to 'judge in this Cause, doth except to the Power of the Honourable James 'De Lancey, Esq. aforesaid, to judge in this Cause, by virtue of the Commission aforesaid, for these Reasons, viz.

'1st. For that the Authority of a Judge of the King's Bench, in that 'Part of Great Britain called England, by which the Cognizance of this 'Cause is claimed, is by the said Commission granted to the Honourable 'James De Lancey, Esq. aforesaid, only during Pleasure; whereas that Authority (by a Statute in that Case made and provided) ought to be granted during good Behaviour.

'2d. For that, by the said Commission, the Jurisdiction and Authority of a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, in that 'Part of Great Britain called England, is granted to the said James De 'Lancey, Esq. which Jurisdiction and Authority cannot be granted to, 'and exercised by, any one of the Justices of the King's Bench.

'3d. For that the Form of the said Commission is not founded on, nor 'warranted by the Common Law, nor any Statute of England, nor of 'Great Britain, nor any Act of Assembly of this Colony.

'4th. For that it appears, by the Commission aforesaid, that the same 'is granted under the Seal of this Colony by his Excellency William Cos-'by, Esq. Governor thereof; and it appears not, that the same was granted, neither was the same granted, by and with the Advice and Consent 'of his Majesty's Council of this Colony; without which Advice and 'Consent, his Excellency could not grant the same.

'Wherefore, and for many other Defects in the said Commission, this 'Defendant humbly hopes, that the Honourable James De Lancey, Esq. 'will not take Cognizance of this Cause, by virtue of the Commission 'aforesaid.'

The Exceptions to the Commission of the Honourable Frederick Phillipse, Esq. were the same with the oregoing, including therein his Commission, which is in these Words.

FRED. MORRIS, D. Secry.

Tueſday the 15th of April, 1735.

Mr. Alexander offered the above Exceptions to the Court, and prayed that they might be filed. Upon this the Chief Juſtice ſaid to Mr. Alexander and Mr. Smith, That they ought well to conſider the Conſequences of what they offered. To which both anſwered, That they had well conſidered what they offered, and all the Conſequences. And Mr. Smith added, That he was ſo well ſatisfied of the Right of the Subject to take an Exception to the Commiſſion of a Judge, if he thought ſuch Commiſſion illegal,— that he durſt venture his Life upon that Point. As to the Validity of the Exceptions then offered, he ſaid, he took that to be a ſecond Point; but was ready to argue them both, if their Honours were pleaſed to hear him. To which the Chief Juſtice replied, That he would conſider the Exceptions in the Morning; and ordered the Clerk to bring them to him.

Wedneſday the 16th of April, 1735.

The Chief Juſtice delivered one of the Exceptions to the Clerk, and Juſtice Phillipſe the other; upon which Mr. Smith aroſe, and aſked the Judges, whether their Honours would hear him upon theſe two Points. 1ſt. That the Subject has a Right to take ſuch Exceptions, if they judged the Commiſſion illegal. 2dly, That the Exceptions tendered were legal and valid. To which the Chief Juſtice ſaid, That they would neither hear nor allow the Exceptions; for (ſaid he) you thought to have gained a great deal of Applauſe and Popularity by oppoſing this Court, as you did the Court of Exchequer; but you have brought it to that Point, That either we muſt go from the Bench, or you from the Bar: Therefore we exclude you and Mr. Alexander from the Bar; and delivered a Paper to the Clerk, and ordered it to be entered; which the Clerk entered accordingly, and returned the Paper to the Chief Juſtice; after which the Chief Juſtice ordered the Clerk to read publickly what he had written; an atteſted Copy whereof follows.

At a Supreme Court of Judicature held for the Province of New York, at the City-Hall of the City of New York, on Wedneſday the 16th Day of April, 1735.

PRESENT,

The Hon. James De Lancey, Eſq. Chief Juſtice.
The Hon. Frederick Phillipſe, Eſq. Second Juſtice.

" James Alexander, Eſq. and William Smith, Attornies of this Court, " having preſumed, (notwithſtanding they were forewarned by the Court of their " Diſpleaſure, if they ſhould do it) to ſign, and having actually ſigned, and " put into Court, Exceptions, in the Name of John Peter Zenger; there- " by denying the Legality of the Judges their Commiſſions; though in the " uſual Form, and the Being of this Supreme Court. It is therefore ordered, " That, for the ſaid Contempt, the ſaid James Alexander, and William " Smith, be excluded from any farther Practice in this Court; and that " their Names be ſtruck out of the Roll of Attornies of this Court.

per Cur'. JAMES LYNE, Cl."

After the Order of the Court was read, Mr. Alexander aſked, whether it was the Order of Mr. Juſtice Phillipſe as well as of the Chief-Juſtice? To which both anſwered, that it was their Order; upon which Mr. Alexander added, That it was proper to aſk that Queſtion, that they might know how to have their Relief: He farther obſerved to the Court, upon reading of the Order, That they were miſtaken in their wording of it, becauſe the Exceptions were only to their Commiſſions, and not to the Being of the Court, as is therein alledged; and prayed that the Order might be altered accordingly. The Chief-Juſtice ſaid, they conceived the Exceptions were againſt the Being of the Court. Both Mr. Alexander and Mr. Smith denied that they were, and prayed the Chief-Juſtice to point to the Place that contained ſuch Exceptions; and further added, That the Court might well exiſt, though the Commiſſions of all the Judges were void; which the Chief-Juſtice confeſſed to be true: And therefore they prayed again, that the Order in that Point might be altered; but it was denied.

Then Mr. Alexander deſired to know, whether they over-ruled or rejected the Exceptions? The Chief-Juſtice ſaid, He did not underſtand the Difference; to which ſaid Alexander replied, that if he rejected the Exceptions, then they could not appear upon the Proceedings, and in that Caſe the Defendant was intitled to have them made Part of the Proceedings by Bills of Exceptions: But if they over-ruled them, then, by ſo doing, they only declared them not ſufficient, to hinder them from proceeding by virtue of thoſe Commiſſions; and the Exceptions would remain as Records of the Court, and ought to be entered on the Record of the Cauſe, as Part of the Proceedings. The Chief-Juſtice ſaid, they muſt remain upon the File, to warrant what we have done: As to being Part of the Record of the Proceedings in that Cauſe, he ſaid, you may ſpeak to that Point To-morrow.

Friday, April 18th, 1735.

Mr. Alexander ſignified to the Court, That on Wedneſday laſt their Honours had ſaid, That the Counſel for Mr. Zenger might ſpeak to the Point, concerning the rejecting or over-ruling of Mr. Zenger's Exceptions, on the Morrow: To which the Chief-Juſtice anſwered, That he ſaid, You may get ſome Perſon to ſpeak to that Point on the Morrow, not meaning that the ſaid Alexander ſhould ſpeak to it, that being contrary to the Order. Both Mr. Alexander and Mr. Smith ſaid, they underſtood it otherwiſe.

They both alſo mentioned, that it was a Doubt, whether, by the Words of the Order, they were debarred of their Practice as Counſel, as well as Attornies, whereas they practiſed in both Capacities. To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, That the Order was plain, 'That James 'Alexander, Eſq. and William Smith, were debarred and excluded from 'their whole Practice at this Bar; and that the Order was intended to 'bar their acting both as Counſel and as Attornies, and that it could not 'be conſtrued otherwiſe.' And it being aſked Mr. Phillipſe, whether he underſtood the Order ſo? He anſwered, That he did.

Upon this Excluſion of my Counſel, I petitioned the Court to order Counſel for my Defence; who thereon appointed John Chambers, Eſq; who pleaded Not Guilty for me to the Information. But as to the Point, whether my Exceptions ſhould be Part of the Record, as was moved by my former Counſel, Mr. Chambers thought not proper to ſpeak to it. Mr. Chambers alſo moved, that a certain Day in the next Term might be appointed for my Trial, and for a Struck Jury; whereupon my Trial was ordered to be on Monday the 4th of Auguſt, and the Court would conſider till the firſt Day of next Term, whether I ſhould have a Struck Jury or not; and ordered, that the Sheriff ſhould, in the mean Time, at my Charge, return the Freeholders Book.

At a Supreme Court of Judicature held for the Province of New York, before the Honourable James De Lancey, Eſq. Chief-Juſtice of the ſaid Province; and the Honourable Frederick Phillipſe, Eſq. Second Juſtice Juſtice of the ſaid Province.

On Tueſday the 29th of July, 1735, the Court opened; and on Motion of Mr. Chambers for a Struck Jury, purſuant to the Rule of the preceding Term, the Court were of Opinion, that I was intitled to have a Struck Jury; and that Evening, at five of the Clock, ſome of my Friends attended the Clerk, for ſtriking the Jury; when, to their Surprize, the Clerk, inſtead of producing the Freeholders Book, to ſtrike the Jury out of it in their Preſence, as uſual, he produced a Liſt of 48 Perſons, who, he ſaid, he had taken out of the Freeholders Book: My Friends told him, that a great Number of theſe Perſons were not Freeholders; that others were Perſons holding Commiſſions and Offices at the Governor's Pleaſure; that others were of the late diſplaced Magiſtrates of this City, who muſt be ſuppoſed to have Reſentment againſt me, for what I had printed concerning them; that others were the Governor's Baker, Taylor, Shoe-maker, Candle-maker, Joiner, &c. that as to the few indifferent Men that were upon that Liſt, they had Reaſon to believe (as they had heard) that Mr. Attorney had a Liſt of them, to ſtrike them out; and therefore requeſted, that he would either bring the Freeholders Book, and chuſe out of it 48 unexceptionable Men in their Preſence, as uſual; or elſe, that he would hear their Objections, particularly to the Liſt he offered; and that he would put impartial Men in the Place of thoſe againſt whom they could ſhew juſt Objections. Notwithſtanding this, the Clerk refuſed to ſtrike the Jury out of the Freeholders Book, and refuſed to hear any Objections to the Perſons on his Liſt; but told my Friends, if any Objections they had to any Perſons, they might ſtrike thoſe Perſons out; to which they anſwered, There would not remain a Jury, if they ſtruck out all the exceptionable Men; and, according to the Cuſtom, they had only a Right to ſtrike out 12.

But finding no Arguments could prevail with the Clerk to hear their Objections to his Liſt, nor to ſtrike the Jury as uſual, Mr. Chambers told him, he muſt apply to the Court, which the next Morning he did; and the Court, upon his Motion, ordered, That the 48 ſhould be ſtruck out of the Freeholders Book, as uſual, in the Preſence of the Parties; and that the Clerk ſhould hear Objections to Perſons propoſed to be of the 48, and allow of ſuch Exceptions as were juſt. In purſuance of that Order, a Jury was that Evening ſtruck, to the Satisfaction of both Parties, though my Friends and Counſel inſiſted on no Objections but want of Freeholders; and though they did not inſiſt, that Mr. Attorney General (who was aſſiſted by Mr. Bladge) ſhould ſhew any particular Cauſe, againſt any Perſons he diſliked, but acquieſced that any Perſon he diſliked ſhould be out of the 48.

Before James De Lancey, Eſq. Chief-Juſtice of the Province of New York, and Frederick Phillipſe, ſecond Judge, came on my Trial, on the fourth Day of Auguſt, 1735, upon an Information for printing and publiſhing two News-papers, which were called Libels againſt our Governor and his Adminiſtration.

The Defendant John Peter Zenger, being called, appeared.

And the Sheriff returned his Venire for the Trial of this ſaid Cauſe.

Mr. Chambers, of Counſel for the Defendant. I humbly move your Honours, that we may have Juſtice done by the Sheriff, and that he may return the Names of the Jurors in the ſame Order as they were ſtruck.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. How is that? Are they not ſo returned?

Mr. Chambers. No, they are not; for ſome of the Names that were laſt ſet down in the Pannel, are now placed firſt.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Make out that, and you ſhall be righted.

Mr. Chambers. I have the Copy of the Pannel in my Hand, as the Jurors were ſtruck; and if the Clerk will produce the Original, ſigned by Mr. Attorney and myſelf, your Honour will ſee our Complaint is juſt.

Mr. Chief-Juſtice. Clerk, is it ſo? Look upon that Copy; is it a true Copy of the Pannel as it was ſtruck?

Clerk. Yes, I believe it is.

Mr. Chief-Juſtice. How came the Names of the Jurors to be miſplaced in the Pannel annexed to the Venire?

Mr. Sheriff. I have returned the Jurors in the ſame Order in which the Clerk gave them to me.

Mr. Chief-Juſtice. Let the Names of the Jurors be ranged in the Order they were ſtruck, agreeable to the Copy here in Court.

Which was done accordingly. And the Jury, whoſe Names were as follow, were called and ſworn:

Hermanus Rutgers,	Egbert Van Borſon,
Stanley Holmes,	Thomas Hunt, Foreman,
Edward Man,	Benjamin Hildreth,
John Bell,	Abraham Keteltas,
Samuel Weaver,	John Goelet,
Andries Marſchalk,	Hercules Wendover.

Mr. Attorney General opened the Information, which was as follows:

Mr. Attorney General. May it pleaſe your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Information now before the Court, and to which the Defendant, Zenger, has pleaded Not Guilty, is an Information for printing and publiſhing a falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious Libel, in which his Excellency, the Governor of this Province, who is the King's immediate Repreſentative here, is greatly and unjuſtly ſcandalized, as a Perſon that has no Regard to Law nor Juſtice; with much more, as will appear upon reading the Informations. This of Libelling is what has always been diſcouraged, as a Thing that tends to create Differences among Men, ill Blood among the People, and oftentimes great Bloodſhed between the Party libelling and the Party libelled. There can be no doubt but you, Gentlemen of the Jury, will have the ſame ill Opinion of ſuch Practices, as the Judges have always ſhewn upon ſuch Occaſions: But I ſhall ſay no more at this Time, until you hear the Information, which is as follows.

'New-York, Supreme Court.

'Of the Term of January, in the eight Year of the Reign of our Sove-
'reign Lord King George the Second, &c.

'New York, ſs. BE it remembered, That Richard Bradley, Eſq. 'R. Bradley, Attorney-General.'

To this Information the Defendant has pleaded Not Guilty and we are ready to prove it.

Mr. Chambers has not been pleaſed to favour me with his Notes, ſo I cannot, for fear of doing him Injuſtice pretend to ſet down his Argument; but here Mr. Chambers ſet forth very clearly, 'the Nature of a Libel, the great Allowances that ought to be made for what Men ſpeak or write; that in all Libels there muſt be ſome particular Perſons ſo clearly pointed out that no Doubt muſt remain about who is meant; that he was in hopes Mr. Attorney would fail in his Proof, as to this Point; and therefore deſired that he would go on to examine his Witneſſes.'

Then Mr. Hamilton, who at the Requeſt of ſome of my Friends, was ſo kind as to come from Philadelphia to aſſiſt me on the Trial, ſpoke.

Mr. Hamilton. May it pleaſe your Honour: I am concerned in this Cauſe on the Part of Mr. Zenger, the Defendant. The Information againſt my Client was ſent me, a few Days before I left Home, with ſome Inſtructions to let me know how far I might rely upon the Truth of thoſe Parts of the Papers ſet forth in the Information, and which are ſaid to be libellous. And though I am perfectly of the Opinion with the Gentleman who has juſt now ſpoke, on the ſame Side with me, as to the common Courſe of Proceedings, I mean in putting Mr. Attorney upon proving, that my Client printed and publiſhed thoſe Papers mentioned in the Information; yet I cannot think it proper for me (without doing Violence to my own Principles) to deny the Publication of a Complaint, which, I think, is the Right of every free-born Subject to make, when the Matters ſo publiſhed can be ſupported with Truth; and therefore I'll ſave Mr. Attorney the Trouble of examining his Witneſſes to that Point; and I do (for my Client) confeſs, that he both printed and publiſhed the two News Papers ſet forth in the Information, and I hope in ſo doing he has committed no Crime.

Mr. Attorney. Then, if Your Honour pleaſes, ſince Mr. Hamilton has confeſſed the Fact, I think our Witneſſes may be diſcharged; we have no further Occaſion for them.

Mr. Hamilton. If you brought them here only to prove the printing and publiſhing of theſe News-Papers, we have acknowledged that, and ſhall abide by it.

Here my Journeyman and two Sons (with ſeveral others ſubpœna'd by Mr. Attorney, to give Evidence againſt me) were diſcharged, and there was Silence in the Court for ſome Time.

Mr. Chief-Juſtice. Well, Mr. Attorney, will you proceed?

Mr. Attorney. Indeed, Sir, as Mr. Hamilton has confeſſed the printing and publiſhing theſe Libels, I think the Jury muſt find a Verdict for the King; for ſuppoſing they were true, the Law ſays that they are not the leſs libellous for that; nay indeed the Law ſays, their being true is an Aggravation of the Crime.

Mr. Hamilton. Not ſo neither, Mr. Attorney, there are two Words to that Bargain: I hope it is not our bare printing and publiſhing a Paper, that will make it a Libel; You will have ſomething more to do, before you make my Client a Libeller; for the Words themſelves muſt be libellous, that is falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious, or elſe they are not guilty.

As Mr. Attorney has not been pleaſed to favour us with his Argument which he read, or with the Notes of it, we cannot take upon us to ſet down his Words, but only to ſhew the Book Caſes he cited, and the general Scope of his Argument, which he drew from thoſe Authorities. 'He obſerved upon the Excellency, as well as Uſe of Government, and the great Regard and Reverence which had been conſtantly paid to it, both under the Law and the Goſpel. That by Government we were protected in our Lives, Religion and Properties; and that, for theſe Reaſons, great Care had always been taken to prevent every thing that might tend to ſcandalize Magiſtrates, and others concerned in the Adminiſtration of the Government, eſpecially the ſupreme Magiſtrate. And that there were many Inſtances of very ſevere Judgments, and of Puniſhments inflicted upon ſuch as had attempted to bring the Government into Contempt; by publiſhing falſe and ſcurrilous Libels againſt it, or by ſpeaking evil and ſcandalous Words of Men in Authority; to the great Diſturbance of the publick Peace.' And to ſupport this, he cited, 5 Coke 121. (I ſuppoſe it ſhould be 125.) Wood's Inſtit. 430. 2 Lilly 168. 1 Hawkins 73. 11. 6. From theſe Books he inſiſted, 'That a Libel was a malicious Defamation of any Perſon, expreſſed either in Printing or Writing, Signs or Pictures, to aſperſe the Reputation of one that is alive, or the Memory of one that is dead; if he is a private Man, the Libeller deſerves a ſevere Puniſhment, but if it is againſt a Magiſtrate, or other publick Perſon, it is a greater Offence; for this concerns not only the Breach of the Peace, but the Scandal of the Government; for what greater Scandal of Government can there be, than to have corrupt or wicked Magiſtrates to be appointed by the King, to govern his Subjects under him? And a greater Imputation to the State cannot be, than to ſuffer ſuch corrupt Men to ſit in the ſacred Seat of Juſtice, or to have any meddling in, or concerning the Adminiſtration of Juſtice.' And from the ſame Books Mr. Attorney inſiſted, that whether the Perſon defamed is a private Man or a Magiſtrate, whether living or dead, whether the Libel is true or falſe, or if the Party againſt whom it is made is of good or evil Fame, it is nevertheleſs a Libel. For in a ſettled State of Government, the Party grieved ought to complain for every Injury done him, in the ordinary Courſe of the Law. And as to its Publication, the Law had taken ſo great Care of Men's Reputations, that if one maliciouſly repeats it, or ſings it in the Preſence of another, or delivers the Libel or a Copy of it over, to ſcandalize the Party, he is to be puniſhed as a Publiſher of a Libel. He ſaid it was likewiſe evident, that Libelling was an Offence againſt the Law of God. Acts xxiii. 5. Then, ſaid Paul, I wiſt not, Brethren, that he was the High-Prieſt: For it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the Ruler of the People. 2 Pet. ii. 10. Deſpiſe Government, preſumptuous are they, ſelf-willed, they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of Dignities, &c. He then inſiſted that it was clear, both by the Law of God and Man, that it was a very great Offence to ſpeak evil of, or to revile thoſe in Authority over us; and that Mr. Zenger had offended in a moſt notorious and groſs Manner, in ſcandalizing His Excellency our Governor, who is the King's immediate Repreſentative, and the ſupreme Magiſtrate of this Province: For can there be any thing more ſcandalous ſaid of a Governor than what is publiſhed in thoſe Papers? Nay, not only the Governor, but both the Council and Aſſembly are ſcandalized; for there it is plainly ſaid, That 'as Matters now ſtand, their Liberties 'and Properties are precarious, and that Slavery is like to be entailed on 'them and their Poſterity. And then again Mr. Zenger ſays, The Aſſem-'bly ought to deſpiſe the Smiles or Frowns of a Governor; that he 'thinks the Law is at an End; that we ſee Men's Deeds deſtroyed, 'Judges arbitrarily diſplaced, new Courts erected, without Conſent of 'the Legiſlature; And, that it ſeems Trials by juries are taken away 'when a Governor pleaſes; that none can call any thing their own, 'longer than thoſe in the Adminiſtration will condeſcend to let them do 'it. - - - - - - - - - - -' And Mr. Attorney added, 'That he did not know what could be ſaid in Defence of a Man, that had ſo notoriouſly ſcandalized the Governor and principal Magiſtrates and Officers of the Government, by charging them with depriving the People of their Rights and Liberties, and taking away Trials by Juries; and in ſhort, putting an End to the Law itſelf.——If this was not a Libel, he ſaid, he did not know what was one. Such Perſons as will take thoſe Liberties with Governors and Magiſtrates, he thought, ought to ſuffer for ſtirring up Sedition and Diſcontent among the People. And concluded, by ſaying, that the Government had been very much traduced and expoſed by Mr. Zenger, before he was taken Notice of; that at laſt it was the Opinion of the Governor and Council, that he ought not to be ſuffered to go on, to diſturb the Peace of the Government, by publiſhing ſuch Libels againſt the Governor, and the chief Perſons in the Government; and therefore they had directed this Proſecution, to put a Stop to this ſcandalous and wicked Practice, of libelling and defaming his Majeſty's Government, and diſturbing his Majeſty's Peace.'

Lives

Mr. Chambers then ſummed up to the Jury, obſerving with great Strength of Reaſon on Mr. Attorney's Defect of Proof, that the Papers in the Information were falſe, malicious or ſeditious, which was incumbent on him to prove to the Jury, and without which they could not on their Oaths ſay, that they were ſo as charged.

Mr. Hamilton. "May it pleaſe your Honour: I agree with Mr. Attorney, that Government is a ſacred Thing; but I differ very widely from him, when he would inſinuate, that the juſt Complaints of a Number of Men, who ſuffer under a bad Adminiſtration, is libelling that Adminiſtration. Had I believed that to be Law, I ſhould not have given the Court the Trouble of hearing any thing that I could ſay in this Cauſe. I own, when I read the Information, I had not the Art to find out (without the Help of Mr. Attorney's Innuendos) that the Governor was the Perſon meant in every Period of that News Paper; and I was inclined to believe, that they were wrote by ſome, who from an extraordinary Zeal for Liberty, had miſconſtrued the Conduct of ſome Perſons in Authority into Crimes; and that Mr. Attorney, out of his too great Zeal for Power, had exhibited this Information, to correct the Indiſcretion of my Client; and at the ſame Time, to ſhew his Superiors the great Concern he had, leſt they ſhould be treated with any undue Freedom. But from what Mr. Attorney has juſt now ſaid, to wit, That this Proſecution was directed by the Governor and Council, and from the extraordinary Appearance of People of all Conditions, which I obſerve in Court upon this Occaſion, I have Reaſon to think, that thoſe in the Adminiſtration have by this Proſecution ſomething more in View, and that the People believe they have a good deal more at Stake than I apprehended: And, therefore, as it is become my Duty, to be both plain and particular in this Cauſe, I beg Leave to beſpeak the Patience of the Court.

I was in hopes, as that terrible Court, where thoſe dreadful Judgments were given, and that Law eſtabliſhed, which Mr. Attorney has produced for Authorities to ſupport this Cauſe, was long ago laid aſide, as the moſt dangerous Court to the Liberties of the People of England that ever was known in that Kingdom; that Mr. Attorney knowing this, would not have attempted to ſet up a Star-Chamber here, nor to make their Judgments a Precedent to us: For it is well known, that what would have been judged Treaſon in thoſe Days for a Man to ſpeak, I think, has ſince not only been practiſed as lawful, but the contrary Doctrine has been held to be Law.

In Brewſter's Caſe, for Printing, That the Subjects might defend their Rights and Liberties by Arms, in caſe the King ſhould go about to deſtroy them, he was told, by the Chief-Juſtice, that it was a great Mercy he was not proceeded againſt for his Life; for that to ſay the King could be reſiſted by Arms in any Caſe whatſoever, was expreſs Treaſon. And yet we ſee, ſince that Time, Dr. Sacheverell was ſentenced in the higheſt Court in Great-Britain, for ſaying, That ſuch a Reſiſtance was not lawful. Beſides, as Times have made very great Changes in the Laws of England, ſo in my Opinion, there is good Reaſon that Places ſhould do ſo too.

Is it not ſurpriſing to ſee a Subject, upon his receiving a Commiſſion from the King to be a Governor of a Colony in America, immediately imagining himſelf to be veſted with all the Prerogatives belonging to the ſacred Perſon of his Prince? And which is yet more aſtoniſhing, to ſee that a People can be ſo wild as to allow of and acknowledge thoſe Prerogatives and Exemptions, even to their own Deſtruction? Is it ſo hard a Matter to diſtinguiſh between the Majeſty of our Sovereign, and the Power of a Governor of the Plantations? Is not this making very free with our Prince, to apply that Regard, Obedience and Allegiance to a Subject which is due only to our Sovereign? And yet in all the Caſes which Mr. Attorney has cited, to ſhew the Duty and Obedience we owe to the Supreme Magiſtrate, it is the King that is there meant and underſtood, tho' Mr. Attorney is pleaſed to urge them as Authorities to prove the Heiniouſneſs of Mr. Zenger's Offence againſt the Governor of New-York. The ſeveral Plantations are compared to ſo many large Corporations, and perhaps not improperly; and can any one give an inſtance, that the Mayor or Head of a Corporation ever put in a Claim to the ſacred Rights of Majeſty? Let us not (while we are pretending to pay a great Regard to our Prince and his Peace) make bold to transfer that Allegiance to a Subject, which we owe to our King only. What ſtrange Doctrine is it, to preſs every Thing for Law here, which is ſo in England? I believe we ſhould not think it a Favour, at preſent at leaſt, to eſtabliſh this Practice. In England ſo great a Regard and Reverence is had to the Judges, (C. 3. Inſt. 140.) that if any Man ſtrikes another in Weſtminſter-Hall, while the Judges are ſitting, he ſhall loſe his Right-Hand, and forfeit his Land and Goods for ſo doing. And though the Judges here claim all the Powers and Authorities within this Govenment, that a Court of King's-Bench has in England, yet I believe Mr. Attorney will ſcarcely ſay, that ſuch a Punithment could be legally inflicted on a Man for committing ſuch an Offence, in the Preſence of the Judges ſitting in any Court within the Province of New-York. The Reaſon is obvious; a Quarrel or Riot in New-York cannot poſſibly be attended with thoſe dangerous Conſequences that it might in Weſtminſter-Hall; nor (I hope) will it be alledged, that any Miſbehaviour to a Governor in the Plantations will, or ought to be judged of or puniſhed, as a like Undutifulneſs would be to our Sovereign. From all which, I hope Mr. Attorney will not think it proper to apply his Law-Caſes (to ſupport the Cauſe of his Governor), which have only been judged, where the King's Safety or Honour was concerned. It will not be denied but that a Freeholder, in the Province of New-York, has as good a Right to the ſole and ſeparate Uſe of his Lands, as a Freeholder in England, who has a Right to bring an Action of Treſpaſs againſt his Neighbour, for ſuffering his Horſe or Cow to come and feed upon his Lands, or eat his Corn, whether incloſed or not incloſed; and yet I believe it would be looked upon as a ſtrange Attempt for one Man here to bring an Action againſt another, whoſe Cattle and Horſes feed upon his Grounds not incloſed, or indeed for eating and treading down his Corn, if that were not incloſed. Numberleſs are the Inſtances of this Kind that might be given, to ſhew, that what is good Law at one Time, and in one Place, is not ſo at another Time, and in another Place; ſo that I think the Law ſeems to expect, that in theſe Parts of the World, Men ſhould take Care, by a good Fence, to preſerve their Property from the Injury of unruly Beaſts. And perhaps there may be as good a Reaſon why Men ſhould take the ſame Care, to make an honeſt and upright Conduct a Fence and Security againſt the Injury of unruly Tongues.

Mr. Attorney. I don't know what the Gentleman means, by comparing Caſes of Freeholders in England with the Freeholders here. What has this Caſe to do with Actions of Treſpaſs, or Men's fencing their Ground? The Caſe before the Court is, Whether Mr. Zenger is guilty of libelling his Excellency the Governor of New-York, and indeed the whole Adminiſtration of the Government? Mr. Hamilton has confeſſed the printing and publiſhing, and I think nothing is plainer, than that the Words in the Information are ſcandalous, and tend to Sedition, and to diſquiet the Minds of the People of this Province. And if ſuch Papers are not Libels, I think it may be ſaid, there can be no ſuch Thing as a Libel.

Mr. Hamilton. May it pleaſe your Honour, I cannot agree with Mr. Attorney; for though I freely acknowledge that there are ſuch Things as Libels, yet I muſt inſiſt at the ſame Time, that what my Client is charged with, is not a Libel; and I obſerved juſt now, that Mr. Attorney, in defining a Libel, made uſe of the Words, ſcandalous, ſeditious, and tend to diſquiet the People; but (whether with Deſign, or not, I will not ſay) he omitted the Word falſe.

Mr. Attorney. I think I did not omit the Word falſe: But it has been ſaid already, that it may be a Libel, notwithſtanding it may be true.

Mr. Hamilton. In this I muſt ſtill differ with Mr. Attorney; for I depend upon it, we are to be tried upon this Information now before the Court and Jury, and to which we have pleaded Not Guilty, and by it we are charged with printing and publiſhing a certain falſe, malicious, ſeditious and ſcandalous Libel. This Word falſe muſt have ſome Meaning, or elſe how came it there? I hope Mr. Attorney will not ſay he put it there by Chance, and I am of Opinion his Information would not be good without it. But to ſhew that it is the principal Thing, which, in my Opinion, makes a Libel, I put the Caſe, the Information had been for printing and publiſhing a certain true Libel, would that be the ſame Thing? Or could Mr. Attorney ſupport ſuch an Information by any Precedent in the the Engliſh Law? No, the Falſhood makes the Scandal, and both make the Libel. And to ſhew the Court that I am in good earneſt, and to ſave the Court's Time, and Mr. Attorney's Trouble, I will agree, that if he can prove the Facts charged upon us to be falſe, I'll own them to be ſcandalous, ſeditious, and a Libel. So the Work ſeems now to be pretty much ſhortened, and Mr. Attorney has now only to prove the Word falſe, in order to make us Guilty.

Mr. Attorney. We have nothing to prove; you have confeſſed the printing and publiſhing; but if it was neceſſary (as I inſiſt it is not), how can we prove a Negative? but I hope ſome Regard will be had to the Authorities that have been produced; and that ſuppoſing all the Words to be true, yet that will not help them; that Chief Juſtice Holt, in his Charge to the Jury, in the Caſe of Tutchin, made no Diſtinction, whether Tutchin's Papers were true or falſe; and as Chief Juſtice Holt has made no Diſtinction in that Caſe, ſo none ought to be made here; nor can it be ſhewn in all that Caſe, there was any Queſtion made about their being falſe or true.

Mr. Hamilton. I did expect to hear, that a Negative cannot be proved; but every body knows there are many Exceptions to that general Rule; For if a Man is charged with killing another, or ſtealing his Neighbour's Horſe; if he is innocent in the one Caſe, he may prove the Man ſaid to be killed to be really alive; and the Horſe ſaid to be ſtolen, never to have been out of his Maſter's Stable, &c. and this I think is proving a Negative. But we will ſave Mr. Attorney the Trouble of proving a Negative, and take the Onus Probandi upon ourſelves, and prove thoſe very Papers that are called Libels to be true.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. You cannot be admitted, Mr. Hamilton, to give the Truth of a Libel in Evidence. A Libel is not to be juſtified; for it is nevertheleſs a Libel that it is true.

Mr. Hamilton. I am ſorry the Court has ſo ſoon reſolved upon that Piece of Law; I expected firſt to have been heard to that Point. I have not in all my Reading met with an Authority that ſays, we cannot be admitted to give the Truth in Evidence, upon an Information for a Libel.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. The Law is clear, that you cannot juſtify a Libel.

Mr. Hamilton. I own that, may it pleaſe your Honour, to be ſo; but with Submiſſion I underſtand the Word, juſtified there, to be a Juſtification by Plea, as it is in the Caſe upon an Indictment for Murder, or an Aſſault and Battery; there the Priſoner cannot juſtify, but plead Not Guilty: Yet it will not be denied but he may, and always is admitted to give the Truth of the Fact, or any other Matter in Evidence, which goes to his Acquittal; as in Murder he may prove it was in Defence of his Life, his Houſe, &c. and in Aſſault and Battery, he may give in Evidence, that the other Party ſtruck firſt, and in both Caſes he will be acquitted. And in this Senſe I underſtand the Word juſtify, when applied to the Caſe before the Court.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. I pray ſhew that you can give the Truth of a Libel in Evidence.

Mr. Hamilton. I am ready, both from what I underſtand to be the Authorities in the Caſe, and from the Reaſon of the Thing, to ſhew that we may lawfully do ſo. But here I beg leave to obſerve, That Informations for Libels is a Child, if not born, yet nurſed up, and brought to full Maturity, in the Court of the Star-Chamber.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Mr. Hamilton, you'll find yourſelf miſtaken; for in Coke's Inſtitutes you'll find Informations for Libels, long before the Court of Star-Chamber.

Mr. Hamilton. I thank Your Honour; that is an Authority I did propoſe to ſpeak to by and bye: But as you have mentioned it, I'll read that Authority now. I think it is in the 3 Co. Inſt. under Title Libel; it is the Caſe of John de Northampton for a Letter wrote to Robert de Ferrers, one of the King's Privy-Council, (Coke 3. Inſt. 174.) concerning Sir William Scot, Chief Juſtice, and his Fellows; but it does not appear to have been upon Information; and I have good Grounds to ſay it was upon Indictment, as was the Caſe of Adam de Ravenſworth, juſt mentioned before by Lord Coke under the ſame Title; and I think there cannot be a greater, at leaſt a plainer Authority for us, than the Judgment in the Caſe of John de Northampton, which my Lord has ſet down at large. Et quia prædictus Johannes cognovit dictam Literam per ſe ſcriptam Roberto de Ferrers, qui eſt de Concilio Regis, quæ litera continet in ſe nullam veritatem, &c. Now Sir, by this Judgment it appears the libellous Words were utterly falſe, and there the Falſhood was the Crime, and is the Ground of that Judgment: And is not that what we contend for? Do not we inſiſt that the Falſhood makes the Scandal, and both make the Libel? And how ſhall it be known whether the Words are libellous, that is, true or falſe, but by admitting us to prove them true, ſince Mr. Attorney will not undertake to prove them falſe? Beſides, is it not againſt Common Senſe, that a Man ſhould be puniſhed in the ſame Degree for a true Libel (if any ſuch Thing could be) as for a falſe one? I know it is ſaid, That Truth makes a Libel the more provoking, and therefore the Offence is the greater, and conſequently the Judgment ſhould be the heavier. Well, ſuppoſe it were ſo, and let us agree for once, That Truth is a greater Sin than Falſhood: Yet as the Offences are not equal, and as the Puniſhment is arbitrary, that is, according as the Judges in their Diſcretion ſhall direct to be inflicted; is it not abſolutely neceſſary that they ſhould know whether the Libel is true or falſe, that they may by that Means be able to proportion the Puniſhment? For would it not be a ſad Caſe, if the Judges, for want of a due Information, ſhould chance to give as ſevere a Judgment againſt a Man for writing or publiſhing a Lie, as for writing or publiſhing a Truth! And yet this (with Submiſſion), as monſtrous and ridiculous as it may ſeem to be, is the natural Conſequence of Mr. Attorney's Doctrine, That Truth makes a worſe Libel than Falſhood, and muſt follow from his not proving our Papers to be falſe, or not ſuffering us to prove them to be true. But this is only reaſoning upon the Caſe, and I will now proceed to ſhew, what in my Opinion will be ſufficient to induce the Court to allow us to prove the Truth of the Words, which in the Information are called libellous. And firſt I think there cannot be a greater Authority for us, than the Judgment I juſt now mentioned in the Caſe of John de Northampton, and that was in early Times, and before the Star-Chamber came to its Fulneſs of Power and Wickedneſs. In that Judgment, as I obſerved, the Falſhood of the Letter which was wrote, is aſſigned as the very Ground of the Sentence. And agreeable to this it was urged by Sir Robert Sawyer, (State Trials, Vol. IV.) in the Trial of the Seven Biſhops, That the Falſity, the Malice, and Seditious of the Writing, were all Facts to be proved. But here it may be ſaid, Sir Robert was one of the Biſhops Counſel, and his Argument is not to be allowed for Law: But I offer it only to ſhew, that we are not the firſt who have inſiſted, that to make a Writing a Libel, it muſt be falſe. And if the Argument of a Counſel muſt have no Weight, I hope there will be more Regard ſhewn to the Opinion of a Judge; and therefore I mention the Words of Juſtice Powel in the ſame Trial, where he ſays (of the Petition of the Biſhops, which was called a Libel, and upon which they were proſecuted by Information), that, to make it a Libel, it muſt be falſe and malicious, and tend to Sedition; and declared, as he ſaw no Falſhood or Malice in it, he was of Opinion, that it was no Libel. Now, I ſhould think this Opinion alone, in the Caſe of the King, and in a Caſe which that King had ſo much at Heart, and which to this Day has never been contradicted, might be a ſufficient Authority, to intitle us to the Liberty of proving the Truth of the Papers, which in the Information are called falſe, malicious, ſeditious, and ſcandalous. If it be objected, that the Opinion of the other three Judges were againſt him, I anſwer, that the Cenſures the Judgments of theſe Men have undergone, and the Approbation Juſtice Powel's Opinion, his Judgment and Conduct upon that Trial, has met with, and the Honour he gained to himſelf, for daring to ſpeak Truth at ſuch a Time, upon ſuch an Occaſion, and in the Reign of ſuch a King, is more than ſufficient, in my humble Opinion, to warrant our inſiſting on his Judgment, as a full Authority to our Purpoſe; and it will lie upon Mr. Attorney to ſhew, that this Opinion has, ſince that Time, been denied to be Law; or that Juſtice Powel, who delivered it, has ever been condemned or blamed for it, in any Law-Book extant at this Day; and this, I will venture to ſay, Mr. Attorney cannot do. But, to make this Point yet more clear, if any Thing can be clearer, I will, on our Part, proceed and ſhew, that in the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, his Counſel, notwithſtanding he ſtood before one of the greateſt Monſters that ever preſided in an Engliſh Court (Judge Jefferies), inſiſted on the want of Proof to the Malice and ſeditious Intent of the Author, of what was called a Libel. And in the Caſe of Tutchin, which ſeems to be Mr. Attorney's chief Authority, that Caſe is againſt him; for he was, upon his Trial, put upon ſhewing the Truth of his Papers, but did not; at leaſt the Priſoner was aſked by the King's Counſel, (State Trials, Vol. V.) whether he would ſay they were true? And as he never pretended that they were true, the Chief Juſtice was not to ſay ſo. But the Point will ſtill be clearer, on our Side, from Fuller's Caſe, (State Trials, Vol. V.) For falſely and wickedly cauſing to be printed a falſe and ſcandalous Libel, in which (amongſt other Things) were contained theſe Words. 'Mr. Jones has alſo made Oath, That he paid 5000*l.* more, by the late 'King's Order, to ſeveral Perſons in Places of Truſt, that they might 'compleat my Ruin, and invalidate me for ever. Nor is this all; for the 'ſame Mr. Jones will prove, by undeniable Witneſs and Demonſtration, 'that he has diſtributed more than 180,000*l.* in eight Years laſt paſt, by 'the French King's Order, to Perſons in publick Truſt in this Kingdom.' Here, you ſee, is a ſcandalous and infamous Charge againſt the late King; here is a Charge, no leſs than High Treaſon, againſt the Men in publick Truſt, for receiving Money of the French King, then in actual War with the Crown of Great-Britain; and yet the Court were far from bearing him down with that Star-chamber Doctrine, to wit, That it was no matter, whether what he ſaid was true or falſe; no, on the contrary, Lord Chief Juſtice Holt aſks Fuller, Can you make it appear they are true? Have you any Witneſſes? You might have had Subpœna's for your Witneſſes againſt this Day. If you take upon you to write ſuch Things as you are charged with, it lies upon you to prove them true, at your Peril. If you have any Witneſſes, I will hear them. How came you to write thoſe Books which are not true? If you have any Witneſſes, produce them. If you can offer any Matter to prove what you have wrote, let us hear it. Thus ſaid, and thus did, that great Man, Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, upon a Trial of the like Kind with ours; and the Rule laid down by him, in this Caſe, is, That he who will take upon him to write Things, it lies upon him to prove them at his Peril. Now, Sir, we have acknowledged the printing and publiſhing of thoſe Papers, ſet forth in the Information, and (with the Leave of the Court) agreeable to the Rule laid down by Chief Juſtice Holt, we are ready to prove them to be true, at our Peril.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Let me ſee the Book.

[Here the Court had the Caſe under Conſideration a conſiderable time, and every one was ſilent.]

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Mr. Attorney, you have heard what Mr. Hamilton has ſaid, and the Caſes he has cited, for having his Witneſſes examined, to prove the Truth of ſeveral Facts contained in the Papers ſet forth in the Information. What do you ſay to it?

Mr. Attorney-General. The Law, in my Opinion, is very clear: They cannot be admitted to juſtify a Libel; for, by the Authorities I have already read to the Court, it is not the leſs a Libel becauſe it is true. I think I need not trouble the Court with reading the Caſes over again; the Thing ſeems to be very plain, and I ſubmit it to the Court.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Mr. Hamilton, the Court is of Opinion, you ought not to be permitted to prove the Facts in the Papers: Theſe are the Words of the Book, 'It is far from being a Juſtification of a Libel, that the 'Contents thereof are true, or that the Perſon upon whom it is made had 'a bad Reputation, ſince the greater Appearance there is of Truth in any 'malicious Invective, ſo much the more provoking it is.'

Mr. Hamilton. Theſe are Star-chamber Caſes; and I was in hopes, that Practice had been dead with the Court.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Mr. Hamilton, the Court have delivered their Opinion, and we expect you will uſe us with good Manners: You are not to be permitted to argue againſt the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Hamilton. With Submiſſion, I have ſeen the Practice in very great Courts, and never heard it deemed unmannerly to——

Mr. Chief Juſtice. After the Court have declared their Opinion, it is not good Manners to inſiſt upon a Point in which you are over-ruled.

Mr Hamilton. I will ſay no more at this Time: The Court, I ſee, is againſt us in this Point; and that I hope I may be allowed to ſay.

Mr.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Uſe the Court with Good-Manners, and you ſhall be allowed all the Liberty you can reaſonably deſire.

Mr. Hamilton. I thank your Honour. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, it is to you we muſt now appeal, for Witneſſes to the Truth of the Facts we have offered, and are denied the Liberty to prove; and let it not ſeem ſtrange, that I apply myſelf to you in this manner; I am warranted ſo to do, both by Law and Reaſon. The Law ſuppoſes you to be ſummoned out of the Neighbourhood where the Fact is alledged to be committed; and the Reaſon of your being taken out of the Neighbourhood is, becauſe you are ſuppoſed to have the beſt Knowledge of the Fact that is to be tried. And were you to find a Verdict againſt my Client, you muſt take upon you to ſay, the Papers referred to in the Information, and which we acknowledge we printed and publiſhed, are falſe, ſcandalous, and ſeditious; but of this I can have no Apprehenſion. You are Citizens of New York; you are really, what the Law ſuppoſes you to be, honeſt and lawful Men; and, according to my Brief, the Facts which we offer to prove were not committed in a Corner; they are notoriouſly known to be true; and therefore in your Juſtice lies our Safety. And as we are denied the Liberty of giving Evidence, to prove the Truth of what we have publiſhed, I will beg Leave to lay it down as a ſtanding Rule in ſuch Caſes, That the ſuppreſſing of Evidence ought always to be taken for the ſtrongeſt Evidence; and I hope it will have that Weight with you. But ſince we are not admitted to examine our Witneſſes, I will endeavour to ſhorten the Diſpute with Mr. Attorney; and to that End, I deſire he would favour us with ſome ſtandard Definition of a Libel, by which it may be certainly known, whether a Writing be a Libel, yea or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Books, I think, have given a very full Definition of a Libel: They ſay (1 Hawk. chap. 73. §. 1. & ſeq.) it is, 'in a ſtrict 'Senſe, taken for a malicious Defamation, expreſſed either in Writing or 'Printing, and tending either to blacken the Memory of one who is dead, 'or the Reputation of one who is alive, and to expoſe him to publick Ha'tred, Contempt, or Ridicule. §. 2. But it is ſaid, That, in a larger Senſe, 'the Notion of a Libel may be applied to any Defamation whatſoever, ex'preſſed either by Signs or Pictures, as by fixing up a Gallows againſt a 'Man's Door, or by painting him in a ſhameful and ignominious Man'ner. §. 3. And ſince the chief Cauſe for which the Law ſo ſeverely pu'niſhes all Offences of this Nature, is the direct Tendency of them to a 'Breach of publick Peace, by provoking the Parties injured, their Friends 'and Families, to Acts of Revenge, which it would be impoſſible to re'ſtrain by the ſevereſt Laws, were there no Redreſs from publick Juſtice 'for Injuries of this Kind, which, of all others, are moſt ſenſibly felt; 'and ſince the plain Meaning of ſuch Scandal, as is expreſſed by Signs or 'Pictures, is as obvious to common Senſe, and as eaſily underſtood by 'every common Capacity, and altogether as provoking as that which is 'expreſſed by Writing or Printing, why ſhould it not be equally crimi'nal? §. 4. And from the ſame Ground it ſeemeth alſo clearly to follow, 'That ſuch Scandal, as is expreſſed in a ſcoffing and ironical Manner, 'makes a Writing as properly a Libel, as that which is expreſſed in direct 'Terms; as where a Writing, in a taunting manner reckoning up ſe'veral Acts of publick Charity done by one, ſays, You will not play the 'Jew, nor the Hypocrite, and ſo goes on in a Strain of Ridicule to inſinu'ate, that what he did was owing to his Vain-Glory; or where a Writ'ing, pretending to recommend to one the Characters of ſeveral great 'Men for his Imitation, inſtead of taking notice of what they are gene'rally eſteemed famous for, pitched on ſuch Qualities only which their 'Enemies charge them with the want of; as by propoſing ſuch a one to 'be imitated for his Courage, who is known to be a great Stateſman, but 'no Soldier; and another to be imitated for his Learning, who is known 'to be a great General, but no Scholar, &c. which Kind of Writing is as 'well underſtood to mean only to upbraid the Parties with the want of theſe 'Qualities, as if it had directly and expreſsly done ſo.'

Mr. Hamilton. Ay, Mr. Attorney; but what certain ſtandard Rule have the Books laid down, by which we can certainly know, whether the Words or the Signs are malicious? Whether they are defamatory? Whether they tend to the Breach of the Peace, and are a ſufficient Ground to provoke a Man, his Family, or Friends, to Acts of Revenge, eſpecially thoſe of the ironical Sort of Words? And what Rule have you to know when I write irronically? I think it would be hard, when I ſay, Such a Man is a very worthy, honeſt Gentleman, and of fine Underſtanding, that therefore I meant he was a Knave or a Fool.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think the Books are very full: It is ſaid in 1 Hawk. p. 193. juſt now read, 'That ſuch Scandal as is expreſſed in a ſcoffing 'and ironical Manner, makes a Writing as properly a Libel, as that 'which is expreſſed in direct Terms; as where a Writing, in a taunting 'manner ſays, reckoning up ſeveral Acts of Charity done by one, You will 'not play the Jew or the Hypocrite; and ſo goes on to inſinuate, that what he 'did was owing to his Vain-Glory, &c. which Kind of Writing is as 'well underſtood to mean only to upbraid the Parties with the want of 'theſe Qualities, as if it had directly and expreſsly done ſo.' I think nothing can be plainer or more full than theſe Words.

Mr. Hamilton. I agree the Words are very plain; and I ſhall not ſcruple to allow (when we are agreed that the Words are falſe and ſcandalous, and were ſpoken in an ironical and ſcoffing Manner, &c.) that they are really libellous; but here ſtill occurs the Uncertainty, which makes the Difficulty to know what Words are ſcandalous, and what not; for you ſay, they may be ſcandalous, true or falſe: Beſides, how ſhall we know whether the Words were ſpoke in a ſcoffing and ironical Manner, or ſeriouſly? Or how can you know, whether the Man did not think as he wrote? For, by your Rule, if he did, it is no Irony, and conſequently no Libel. But, under Favour, Mr. Attorney, I think the ſame Book, and the ſame Section, will ſhew us the only Rule by which all theſe Things are to be known. The Words are theſe; 'which Kind of Writing is as well underſtood to mean 'only to upbraid the Parties with the want of theſe Qualities, as if they 'had directly and expreſsly done ſo.' Here, it is plain, the Words are ſcandalous, ſcoffing, and ironical, only as they are underſtood; I know no Rule laid down in the Books but this; I mean, as the Words are underſtood.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Mr. Hamilton, do you think it ſo hard to know when Words are ironical, or ſpoke in a ſcoffing Manner?

Mr. Hamilton. I own it may be known; but I inſiſt, the only Rule to know is, as I do or can underſtand them: I have no other Rule to go by, but as I underſtand them.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. That is certain. All Words are libellous, or not, as they are underſtood. Thoſe who are to judge of the Words, muſt judge whether they are ſcandalous or ironical, tend to the Breach of the Peace, or are ſeditious: There can be no Doubt of it.

Mr. Hamilton. I thank your Honour; I am glad to find the Court of this Opinion. Then it follows, that thoſe twelve Men muſt underſtand the Words in the Information to be ſcandalous, that is to ſay, falſe; for I think it is not pretended they are of the ironical Sort; and when they underſtand the Words to be ſo, they will ſay we are guilty of publiſhing a falſe Libel, and not otherwiſe.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. No, Mr. Hamilton; the Jury may find that Mr. Zenger printed and publiſhed thoſe Papers, and leave it to the Court to judge whether they are libellous: You know this is very common; it is in the Nature of a Special Verdict, where the Jury leave the Matter of Law to the Court.

Mr. Hamilton. I know, may it pleaſe your Honour, the Jury may do ſo; but I do likewiſe know they may do otherwiſe. I know they have the Right, beyond all Diſpute, to determine both the Law and the Fact; and where they do not doubt of the Law, they ought to do ſo. This of leaving it to the Judgment of the Court, whether the Words are libellous or not, in effect, renders Juries uſeleſs (to ſay no worſe) in many Caſes; but this I ſhall have Occaſion to ſpeak to by-and-bye: And I will, with the Court's Leave, proceed to examine the Inconveniencies that muſt inevitably ariſe from the Doctrines Mr. Attorney has laid down; and I obſerve, in ſupport of this Proſecution, he has frequently repeated the Words taken from the Caſe of Libel, Famoſus, in 5 Co. This is indeed the leading Caſe, and to which almoſt all the other Caſes upon the Subject of Libels do refer; and I muſt inſiſt upon ſaying, that, according as this Caſe ſeems to be underſtood by the Court and Mr. Attorney, it is not Law at this Day: For though I own it to be baſe and unworthy to ſcandalize any Man, yea, I think it is even villainous to ſcandalize a Perſon of publick Character; and I will go ſo far into Mr. Attorney's Doctrine as to agree, that if the Faults, Miſtakes, nay even the Vices, of ſuch a Perſon be private and perſonal, and don't affect the Peace of the Publick, or the Liberty or Property of our Neighbour, it is unmanly and unmannerly to expoſe them, either by Word or Writing. But when a Ruler of the People brings his Perſonal Failings, but much more his Vices, into his Adminiſtration, and the People find themſelves affected by them, either in their Liberties or Properties, that will alter the Caſe mightily; and all the high Things that are ſaid in favour of Rulers, and of Dignities, and upon the Side of Power, will not be able to ſtop People's Mouths when they feel themſelves oppreſſed, I mean in a free Government. It is true, in Times paſt, it was a Crime to ſpeak Truth; and in that terrible Court of Star-Chamber, many worthy and brave Men ſuffered for ſo doing; and yet, even in that Court, and in thoſe bad Times, a great and good Man durſt ſay, what I hope will not be taken amiſs of me to ſay in this Place, to wit, 'The 'Practice of Informations for Libels is a Sword in the Hands of a wicked 'King, and an arrand Coward, to cut down and deſtroy the Innocent; 'the one cannot, becauſe of his high Station, and the other dares not, 'becauſe of his Want of Courage, revenge himſelf in another manner.'

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Hamilton, have a care what you ſay; don't go too far neither: I don't like thoſe Liberties.

Mr. Hamilton. Sure, Mr. Attorney, you won't make any Applications: All Men agree, that we are governed by the beſt of Kings; and I cannot ſee the Meaning of Mr. Attorney's Caution: My well-known Principles, and the Senſe I have of the Bleſſings we enjoy under his preſent Majeſty, makes it impoſſible for me to err, and, I hope, even to be ſuſpected, in that Point of Duty to my King. May it pleaſe your Honour, I was ſaying, that notwithſtanding all the Duty and Reverence claimed by Mr. Attorney to Men in Authority, they are not exempt from obſerving the Rules of common Juſtice, either in their private or publick Capacities; the Laws of our Mother-Country know no Exception. It is true, Men in Power are harder to be come at, for Wrongs they do, either to a private Perſon, or to the Publick; eſpecially a Governor in the Plantations, where they inſiſt upon an Exemption from anſwering Complaints of any Kind in their own Government. We are indeed told, and it is true, they are obliged to anſwer a Suit in the King's Courts at Weſtminſter, for a Wrong done to any Perſon here: But do we not know how impracticable this is to moſt Men among us, to leave their Families, (who depend upon their Labour and Care for their Livelihood) and carry Evidences to Britain, and at a great, nay, a far greater Expence, than almoſt any of us are able to bear, only to proſecute a Governor for an Injury done here? But when the Oppreſſion is general, there is no Remedy even that Way: No, our Conſtitution has (bleſſed be God) given us an Opportunity, if not to have ſuch Wrongs redreſſed, yet, by our Prudence and Reſolution, we may in a great meaſure prevent the committing of ſuch Wrongs, by making a Governor ſenſible, that it is his Intereſt to be juſt to thoſe under his Care; for ſuch is the Senſe that Men in general (I mean Freemen) have of common Juſtice, that when they come to know that a chief Magiſtrate abuſes the Power with which he is intruſted for the Good of the People, and is attempting to turn that very Power againſt the Innocent, whether of high or low Degree, I ſay, Mankind in general ſeldom fail to interpoſe, and, as far as they can, prevent the Deſtruction of their Fellow Subjects. And has it not often been ſeen (and, I hope, it will always be ſeen) that when the Repreſentatives of a free People are, by juſt Repreſentations or Remonſtrances, made ſenſible of the Sufferings of their Fellow Subjects, by the Abuſe of Power in the Hands of a Governor, they have declared (and loudly too) that they were not obliged by any Law to ſupport a Governor who goes about to deſtroy a Province or Colony, or their Privileges, which by his Majeſty he was appointed, and by the Law he is bound, to protect and encourage. But I pray it may be conſidered, of what Uſe is this mighty Privilege, if every Man that ſuffers muſt be ſilent?

And if a Man muſt be taken up as a Libeller, for telling his Sufferings to his Neighbour, I know it may be anſwered, Have you not a Legiſlature? Have you not a Houſe of Repreſentatives, to whom you may complain? And to this I anſwer, We have: But what then? Is an Aſſembly to be troubled with every Injury done by a Governor? Or are they to hear of nothing but what thoſe in the Adminiſtration will pleaſe to tell them? Or what Sort of a Trial muſt a Man have? And how is he to be remedied; eſpecially if the Caſe were, as I have known it to happen in America in my Time, that a Governor who has Places (I will not ſay Penſions, for, I believe, they ſeldom give that to another which they can take to themſelves) to beſtow, and can or will keep the ſame Aſſembly (after he has modelled them ſo as to get a Majority of the Houſe in his Intereſt) for near twice Seven Years together? I pray, what Redreſs is to be expected for an honeſt Man, who makes his Complaint againſt a Governor to an Aſſembly, who may properly enough be ſaid to be made by the ſame Governor againſt whom the Complaint is made? The Thing anſwers itſelf. No, it is natural, it is a Privilege—I will go farther, it is a Right which all Freemen claim, and are intitled to, to complain when they are hurt; they have a Right publickly to remonſtrate the Abuſes of Power, in the ſtrongeſt Terms, to put their Neighbours upon their Guard, againſt the Craft or open Violence of Men in Authority, and to aſſert with Courage the Senſe they have of the Bleſſings of Liberty, the Value they put upon it, and their Reſolution at all Hazards to preſerve it, as one of the greateſt Bleſſings Heaven can beſtow. And when a Houſe of Aſſembly, compoſed of honeſt Freemen, ſees the general Bent of the People's Inclinations, that is it which muſt and will (I'm ſure it ought to) weigh with a Legiſlature, in ſpite of all the Craft, Careſſing, and Cajoling, made uſe of by a Governor, to divert them from hearkening to the Voice of their Country. As we all very well underſtand the true Reaſon, why Gentlemen take ſo much Pains, and make ſuch great Intereſt, to be appointed Governors, ſo the Deſign of their Appointment is not leſs manifeſt. We know his Majeſty's gracious Intentions to his Subjects; he deſires no more than that his People in the Plantations ſhould be kept up to their Duty and Allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain; that Peace may be preſerved amongſt them, and Juſtice impartially adminiſtered; that we may be governed ſo as to render us uſeful to our Mother-Country, by encouraging us to make and raiſe ſuch Commodities as may be uſeful to Great Britain. But will any one ſay, that all or any of theſe good-Ends are to be effected by a Governor's ſetting his People together by the Ears, and by the Aſſiſtance of one Part of the People to plague and plunder the other? The Commiſſion which Governors bear, while they execute the Powers given them, according to the Intent of the Royal Grantor, expreſſed in their Commiſſions, requires and deſerves very great Reverence and Submiſſion; but when a Governor departs from the Duty enjoined him by his Sovereign, and acts as if he was leſs accountable than the Royal Hand that gave him all that Power and Honour which he is poſſeſſed of, this ſets People upon examining and inquiring into the Power, Authority, and Duty of ſuch a Magiſtrate, and to compare thoſe with his Conduct; and juſt as far as they find he exceeds the Bounds of his Authority, or falls ſhort in doing impartial Juſtice to the People under his Adminiſtration, ſo far they very often, in return, come ſhort in their Duty to ſuch a Governor. For Power alone will not make a Man beloved; and I have heard it obſerved, that the Man who was neither good nor wiſe before his being made a Governor, never mended upon his Preferment, but has been generally obſerved to be worſe: For Men who are not endued with Wiſdom and Virtue, can only be kept in Bounds by the Law; and by how much the further they think themſelves out of the Reach of the Law, by ſo much the more wicked and cruel they are. I wiſh there were no Inſtances of the Kind at this Day. And wherever this happens to be the Caſe of a Governor, unhappy are the People under his Adminiſtration, and in the end he will find himſelf ſo too; for the People will neither love him nor ſupport him. I make no doubt but there are thoſe here, who are zealouſly concerned for the Succeſs of this Proſecution, and yet I hope they are not many; and even ſome of thoſe, I am perſuaded (when they conſider to what Lengths ſuch Proſecutions may be carried, and how deeply the Liberties of the People may be affected by ſuch Means) will not all abide by their preſent Sentiments; I ſay, not all: For the Man who, from an Intimacy and Acquaintance with a Governor, has conceived a perſonal Regard for him; the Man who has felt none of the Strokes of his Power; the Man who believes that a Governor has a Regard for him, and confides in him; it is natural for ſuch Men to wiſh well to the Affairs of ſuch a Governor; and as they may be Men of Honour and Generoſity, may, and no doubt will, wiſh him Succeſs, ſo far as the Rights and Privileges of their Fellow-Citizens are not affected. But as Men of Honour, I can apprehend nothing from them; they will never exceed that Point. There are others that are under ſtronger Obligations, and thoſe are ſuch as are in ſome Sort engaged in Support of a Governor's Cauſe, by their own or their Relations Dependance on his Favour for ſome Poſt or Preferment: Such Men have, what is commonly called, Duty and Gratitude to influence their Inclinations, and oblige them to go his Lengths. I know Men's Intereſts are very near to them, and they will do much, rather than forego the Favour of a Governor, and a Livelihood at the ſame Time; but I can with very juſt Grounds hope, even from thoſe Men, whom I will ſuppoſe to be Men of Honour, and Conſcience too, that when they ſee the Liberty of their Country is in Danger, either by their Concurrence, or even by their Silence, they will, like Engliſhmen, and like themſelves, freely make a Sacrifice of any Preferment or Favour, rather than be acceſſary to deſtroying the Liberties of their Country, and entailing Slavery upon their Poſterity. There are indeed another Set of Men, of whom I have no Hopes; I mean, ſuch who lay aſide all other Conſiderations, and are ready to join with Power in any Shape, and with many or any Sort of Men, by whoſe Means or Intereſt they may be aſſiſted to gratify their Malice and Envy, againſt thoſe whom they have been pleaſed to hate; and that for no other Reaſon, but becauſe they are Men of Abilities and Integrity, or at leaſt are poſſeſſed of ſome valuable Qualities far ſuperior to their own. But as Envy is the Sin of the Devil, and therefore very hard, if at all, to be repented of, I will believe there are but few of this deteſtable and worthleſs Sort of Men, nor will their Opinions or Inclinations have any Influence upon this Trial. But to proceed: I beg Leave to inſiſt, that the Right of complaining or remonſtrating is natural; and the Reſtraint upon this natural Right is the Law only, and that thoſe Reſtraints can only extend to what is falſe: For as it is Truth alone which can excuſe or juſtify any Man for complaining of a bad Adminiſtration, I as frankly agree, that nothing ought to excuſe a Man who raiſes a falſe Charge or Accuſation, even againſt a private Perſon, and that no Manner of Allowance ought to be made to him who does ſo againſt a public Magiſtrate. Truth ought to govern the whole Affair of Libels, and yet the Party accuſed runs Riſk enough even then; for if he fails of proving every Tittle of what he has wrote, and to the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury too, he may find to his Coſt, that when the Proſecution is ſet on foot by Men in Power, it ſeldom wants Friends to favour it. And from thence (it is ſaid) has ariſen the great Diverſity of Opinions among Judges, about what Words were or were not ſcandalous or libellous. I believe it will be granted, that there is not greater Uncertainty in any Part of the Law, than about Words of Scandal: It would be miſpending of the Court's Time to mention the Caſes; they may be ſaid to be numberleſs; and therefore the utmoſt Care ought to be taken in following Precedents; and the Times when the Judgments were given, which are quoted for Authorities in the Caſe of Libels, are much to be regarded. I think it will be agreed, that ever ſince the Time of the Star-Chamber, where the moſt arbitrary and deſtructive Judgments and Opinions were given, that ever an Engliſhman heard of, at leaſt in his own Country: I ſay, Proſecutions for Libels ſince the Time of that arbitrary Court, and until the glorious Revolution, have generally been ſet on foot at the Inſtance of the Crown, or its Miniſters; and it is no ſmall Reproach to the Law, that theſe Proſecutions were too often and too much countenanced by the Judges, who held their Places at Pleaſure (a diſagreeable Tenure to any Officer, but a dangerous one in the Caſe of a Judge). To ſay more to this Point may not be proper. And yet I cannot think it unwarrantable, to ſhew the unhappy Influence that a Sovereign has ſometimes had, not only upon Judges, but even upon Parliaments themſelves.

It has already been ſhewn, how the Judges differed in their Opinions about the Nature of a Libel, in the Caſe of the ſeven Biſhops. There you ſee three Judges of one Opinion, that is, of a wrong Opinion, in the Judgment of the beſt Men in England, and one Judge of a right Opinion. How unhappy might it have been for all of us at this Day, if that Jury had underſtood the Words in that Information as the Court did? Or if they had left it to the Court to judge, whether the Petition of the Biſhops was or was not a Libel? No! they took upon them, to their immortal Honour, to determine both Law and Fact, and to underſtand the Petition of the Biſhops to be no Libel, that is, to contain no Falſhood nor Sedition, and therefore found them Not Guilty. And remarkable is the Caſe of Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, who was fined 10,000 l. for writing a Letter, in which, it may be ſaid, none ſaw any Scandal or Falſhood but the Court and Jury; for that Judgment was afterwards looked upon as a cruel and deteſtable Judgment, and therefore was reverſed by Parliament. Many more Inſtances might be given of the Complaiſance of Court-Judges about thoſe Times, and before; but I will mention only one Caſe more, and that is the Caſe of Sir Edward Hales, who, though a Roman Catholick, was by King James II. preferred to be a Colonel of his Army, notwithſtanding the Statute of 25 Cha. II. Chap. 2. by which it is provided, That every one that accepts of an Office, Civil or Military, &c. ſhall take the Oaths, ſubſcribe the Declaration, and take the Sacrament, within three Months, &c. otherwiſe he is diſabled to hold ſuch Office, and the Grant for the ſame to be null and void, and the Party to forfeit 500 l. Sir Edward Hales did not take the Oaths or Sacrament, and was proſecuted for the 500 l. for exerciſing the Office of a Colonel by the Space of three Months, without conforming as in the Act is directed. Sir Edward pleads, That the King, by his Letters Patent, did diſpenſe with his taking the Oaths and Sacrament, and ſubſcribing the Declaration, and had pardoned the Forfeiture of 500 l. And whether the King's Diſpenſation was good, againſt the ſaid Act of Parliament? was the Queſtion. I ſhall mention no more of this Caſe, than to ſhew how in the Reign of an arbitrary Prince, where Judges hold their Seats at Pleaſure, their Determinations have not always been ſuch as to make Precedents of, but the contrary; and ſo it happened in this Caſe, where it was ſolemnly judged, That, notwithſtanding this Act of Parliament, made in the ſtrongeſt Terms, for Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, that yet the King had, by his Royal Prerogative, a Power to diſpenſe with that Law; and Sir Edward Hales was acquitted by the Judges accordingly. (State Trials, Vol. VII. p. 612.) So the King's diſpenſing Power being by the Judges ſet up above the Act of Parliament, this Law, which the People looked upon as their chief Security againſt Popery and arbitrary Power, was, by this Judgment, rendered altogether ineffectual. But this Judgment is ſufficiently expoſed by Sir Edward Atkins, late one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, in his Enquiry into the King's Power of diſpenſing with penal Statutes; wherein it is ſhewn, who it was that firſt invented Diſpenſations; how they came into England; what ill Uſe has been made of them there; and all this principally owing to the Countenance given them by the Judges. He ſays of the diſpenſing Power, The Pope was the Inventor of it; our Kings have borrowed it from them; and the Judges have, from Time to Time, nurſed and dreſſed it up, and given it Countenance; and it is ſtill upon the Growth, and encroaching, till it has almoſt ſubverted all Law, and made the Regal Power abſolute, if not diſſolute. This ſeems not only to ſhew how far Judges have been influenced by Power, and how little Caſes of this Sort, where the Prerogative has been in queſtion in former Reigns, are to be relied upon for Law: But I think it plainly ſhews too, that a Man may uſe a greater Freedom with the Power of his Sovereign, and the Judges in Great Britain, than it ſeems he may with the Power of a Governor in the Plantations, who is but a Fellow-Subject. Are the Words with which we are charged, like theſe? Do Mr. Zenger's Papers contain any ſuch Freedoms with his Governor, or his Council, as Sir Edward Atkins has taken with the Regal Power and the Judges in England? And yet I never heard of any Information brought againſt him for theſe Freedoms.

If then, upon the Whole, there is ſo great an Uncertainty among Judges (learned and great Men) in Matters of this Kind; if Power has had ſo great an Influence on Judges, how cautious ought we to be in determining by their Judgments, eſpecially in the Plantations, and in the Caſe of Libels? There is Hereſy in Law as well as in Religion, and both have have changed very much; and we well know that it is not two Centuries ago that a Man would have been burnt as an Heretick, for owning ſuch Opinions in Matters of Religion as are publicly wrote and printed at this Day. They were fallible Men, it ſeems, and we take the Liberty not only to differ from them in religious Opinions, but to condemn them and their Opinions too; and I muſt preſume, that in taking theſe Freedoms in thinking and ſpeaking about Matters of Faith or Religion, we are in the right: For, tho' it is ſaid there are very great Liberties of this Kind taken in New-York, yet I have heard of no Information preferred by Mr. Attorney for any Offences of this Sort. From which I think it is pretty clear, that in New-York a Man may make very free with his God, but he muſt take ſpecial Care what he ſays of his Governor. It is agreed upon by all Men, that this is a Reign of Liberty; and while Men keep within the Bounds of Truth, I hope they may with Safety both ſpeak and write their Sentiments of the Conduct of Men in Power, I mean of that Part of their Conduct only, which affects the Liberty or Property of the People under their Adminiſtration; were this to be denied, then the next Step may make them Slaves. For what Notions can be entertained of Slavery, beyond that of ſuffering the greateſt Injuries and Oppreſſions, without the Liberty of complaining; or if they do, to be deſtroyed, Body and Eſtate, for ſo doing.

It is ſaid, and inſiſted upon by Mr. Attorney: That Government is a ſacred Thing; that it is to be ſupported and reverenced; it is Government that protects our Perſons and Eſtates; that prevents Treaſons, Murders, Robberies, Riots, and all the Train of Evils that overturns Kingdoms and States, and ruins particular Perſons; and if thoſe in the Adminiſtration, eſpecially the ſupreme Magiſtrates, muſt have all their Conduct cenſured by private Men, Government cannot ſubſiſt. This is called a Licentiouſneſs not to be tolerated. It is ſaid, That it brings the Rulers of the People into Contempt, and their Authority not to be regarded, and ſo in the End the Laws cannot be put in Execution. Theſe, I ſay, and ſuch as theſe, are the general Topics inſiſted upon by Men in Power, and their Advocates. But I wiſh it might be conſidered at the ſame Time, how often it has happened, that the Abuſe of Power has been the primary Cauſe of theſe Evils, and that it was the Injuſtice and Oppreſſion of theſe great Men, which has commonly brought them into Contempt with the People. The Craft and Art of ſuch Men is great, and who, that is the leaſt acquainted with Hiſtory or Law, can be ignorant of the ſpecious Pretences, which have often been made uſe of by Men in Power, to introduce arbitrary Rule, and deſtroy the Liberties of a free People. I will give two Inſtances, and as they are Authorities not to be denied, nor can be miſunderſtood, I preſume they will be ſufficient.

The firſt is the Statute of 3*d* of Hen. VII. Cap. 1. The Preamble of the Statute will prove all, and more than I have alledged. It begins: The King Our Sovereign Lord remembereth, how by unlawful Maintenances, giving of Liveries, Signs and Tokens, &c. untrue Demeanings of Sheriffs in making of Pannels, and other untrue Returns, by taking of Money, by Injuries, by great Riots and unlawful Aſſemblies; the Policy and good Rule of this Realm is almoſt ſubdued; and for the not puniſhing theſe Inconveniencies, and by Occaſion of the Premiſſes, little or nothing may be found by Inquiry, &c. to the Increaſe of Murders, &c. and Unſureties of all Men living, and Loſſes of their Lands and Goods. Here is a fine and ſpecious Pretence for introducing the Remedy, as it is called, which is provided by this Act; that is, inſtead of being lawfully accuſed by twenty-four good and lawful Men of the Neighbourhood, and afterwards tried by twelve like lawful Men, here is a Power given to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, the Keeper of the King's Privy Seal, or two of them, calling to them a Biſhop, a temporal Lord, and other great Men mentioned in the Act; (who, it is to be obſerved, were all to be Dependants on the Court) to receive Information againſt any Perſon for any of the Miſbehaviours recited in that Act, and by their Diſcretion to examine, and to puniſh them according to their Demerit.

The ſecond Statute I propoſed to mention, is the 11*th* of the ſame King, Chap. 3*d*, the Preamble of which Act has the like fair Pretences as the former; for the King calling to his Remembrance the good Laws made againſt the receiving of Liveries, &c. unlawful Extortions, Maintenances, Embracery, &c. unlawful Games, &c. and many other Great Enormities, and Offences committed againſt many good Statutes, to the Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, which, the Act ſays, could not, nor yet can, be conveniently puniſhed by the due Order of the Law, except it were firſt found by Twelve Men, &c. which, for the Cauſes aforeſaid, will not find nor yet preſent the Truth. And therefore the ſame Statute directs, that the Juſtices of Aſſize, and Juſtices of the Peace, ſhall upon Information for the King before them made, have full Power, by their Diſcretion, to hear and determine all ſuch Offences. Here are two Statutes that are allowed to have given the deepeſt Wound to the Liberties of the People of England of any that I remember to have been made, unleſs it may be ſaid that the Statute made in the Time of Henry VIII*th*, by which his Proclamations were to have the Effect of Laws, might in its Conſequence be worſe. And yet we ſee the plauſible Pretences found out by the great Men to procure theſe Acts. And it may juſtly be ſaid, that by thoſe Pretences the People of England were cheated or awed into the delivering up their antient and ſacred Right of Trials by Grand and Petit Juries. I hope to be excuſed for this Expreſſion, ſeeing my Lord Coke calls it (4 Inſt.) unjuſt and ſtrange Act, that tended in its Execution to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and the utter Subverſion of the Common Law.

Theſe, I think, make out what I alledged, and are flagrant Inſtances of the Influence of Men in Power, even upon the Repreſentatives of a whole Kingdom. From all which, I hope, it will be agreed, that it is a Duty which all good Men owe to their Country, to guard againſt the unhappy Influence of ill Men when intruſted with Power, and eſpecially againſt their Creatures and Dependents, who, as they are generally more neceſſitous, are ſurely more covetous and cruel. But it is worthy of Obſervation, that though the Spirit of Liberty was borne down and oppreſſed in England that Time, yet it was not loſt; for the Parliament laid hold of the firſt Opportunity to free the Subject from the many inſufferable Oppreſſions and Outrages committed upon their Perſons and Eſtates by Colour of theſe Acts, the laſt of which being deemed the moſt grievous, was repealed in the firſt Year of Hen. VIII*th.* Tho' it is to be obſerved, that Hen. VII*th*, and his Creatures, reaped ſuch great Advantages by the grievous Oppreſſions and Exactions, grinding the Faces of the poor Subjects, as my Lord Coke ſays, by Colour of this Statute by Information only, that a Repeal of this Act could never be obtained during the Life of that Prince. The other Statute being the favourite Law for ſupporting arbitrary Power, was continued much longer. The Execution of it was by the great Men of the Realm; and how they executed it, the Senſe of the Kingdom, expreſſed in the 7*th* of Charles I*ſt.* (by which the Court of Star-Chamber, the Soil where Informations grew rankeſt) will beſt declare. In that Statute Magna Charta, and the other Statutes made in the Time of Edw. III*d.* which, I think, are no leſs than five, are particularly enumerated as Acts, by which the Liberties and Privileges of the People of England were ſecured to them, againſt ſuch oppreſſive Courts as the Star-Chamber, and others of the like Juriſdiction. And the Reaſon aſſigned for their pulling down the Star-Chamber, is, That the Proceedings, Cenſures and Decrees of the Court of Star Chamber, even though the great Men of the Realm, nay, and a Biſhop too (holy Man) were Judges, had by Experience been found to be an intolerable Burthen to the Subject, and the Means to introduce an arbitrary Power and Government. And therefore that Court was taken away, with all the other Courts in that Statute mentioned, having like Juriſdiction.

I do not mention this Statute, as if by the taking away the Court of Star-Chamber, the Remedy for many of the Abuſes or Offences cenſured there, was likewiſe taken away; no, I only intend by it to ſhew, that the People of England ſaw clearly the Danger of truſting their Liberties and Properties to be tried, even by the greateſt Men in the Kingdom, without the Judgment of a Jury of their Equals. They had felt the terrible Effects of leaving it to the Judgment of theſe great Men to ſay what was ſcandalous and ſeditious, falſe or ironical. And if the Parliament of England thought this Power of judging was too great to be truſted with Men of the firſt Rank in the Kingdom, without the Aid of a Jury, how ſacred ſoever their Characters might be, and therefore reſtored to the People their original Right of Trial by Juries, I hope to be excuſed for inſiſting, that by the Judgment of a Parliament, from whence no Appeal lies, the Jury are the proper Judges of what is falſe at leaſt, if not of what is ſcandalous and ſeditious. This is an Authority not to be denied, it is as plain as it is great, and to ſay, that this Act indeed did reſtore to the People Trials by Juries, which was not the Practice of the Star-Chamber, but that it did not give the Jurors any new Authority, or any Right to try Matters of Law, I ſay this Objection will not avail; for I muſt inſiſt, that where Matter of Law is complicated with Matter of Fact, the Jury have a Right to determine both. As for Inſtance; upon Indictment for Murder, the Jury may, and almoſt conſtantly do, take upon them to judge whether the Evidence will amount to Murder or Manſlaughter, and find accordingly; and I muſt ſay, I cannot ſee, why in our Caſe the Jury have not at leaſt as good a Right to ſay, whether our News Papers are a Libel or no Libel, as another Jury has to ſay, whether killing of a Man is Murder or Manſlaughter. The Right of the Jury to find ſuch a Verdict as they in their Conſcience do think is agreeable to their Evidence, is ſupported by the Authority of Buſhel's Caſe, in Vaughan's Reports, pag. 135, beyond any doubt. For, in the Argument of that Caſe, the Chief-Juſtice who delivered the Opinion of the Court, lays it down for Law: (Vaughan's Rep. p. 150.) That in all General Iſſues, as upon Non. Cul. in Treſpaſs, Non Tort. Nul Diſſeizin in Aſſize, &c. though it is Matter of Law, whether the Defendant is a Treſpaſſer, a Diſſeizer, &c. in the particular Caſes in Iſſue, yet the Jury find not (as in a ſpecial Verdict) the Fact of every Caſe, leaving the Law to the Court; but find for the Plaintiff or Defendant upon the Iſſue to be tried, wherein they reſolve both Law and Fact complicately. It appears by the ſame Caſe, that though the diſcreet and lawful Aſſiſtance of the Judge, by way of Advice to the Jury, may be uſeful, yet that Advice or Direction ought always to be upon Suppoſition, and not poſitive and upon Coercion. The Reaſon given in the ſame Book is, page 144, 147.) becauſe the Judge (as Judge) cannot know what the Evidence is which the Jury have, that is, he can only know the Evidence given in Court; but the Evidence which the Jury have, may be of their own Knowledge, as they are returned of the Neighbourhood. They may alſo know from their own Knowledge, that what is ſworn in Court is not true; and they may know the Witneſſes to be ſtigmatized, to which the Court may be Strangers. But what is to my Purpoſe, is, that ſuppoſe that the Court did really know all the Evidence which the Jury know, yet in that Caſe it is agreed, That the Judge and Jury may differ in the Reſult of their Evidence, as well as two Judges may, which often happens. And in page 148. the Judge ſubjoins the Reaſon, why it is no Crime for a Jury to differ in Opinion from the Court, where he ſays, That a Man cannot ſee with another's Eye, nor hear by another's Ear; no more can a Man conclude or infer the Thing by another's Underſtanding or Reaſoning. From all which (I inſiſt) it is very plain, That the Jury are by Law at Liberty (without any Affront to the Judgment of the Court) to find both the Law and the Fact, in our Caſe, as they did in the Caſe I am ſpeaking to, which I will beg leave juſt to mention, and it was this: Mr. Penn and Mead being Quakers, and having met in a peaceable Manner, after being ſhut out of their Meeting-Houſe, preached in Grace-Church-Street, in London, to the People of their own Perſuaſion, and for this they were indicted; and it was ſaid, That they with other Perſons, to the Number of 300, unlawfully and tumultuouſly aſſembled, to the Diſturbance of the Peace, &c. To which they pleaded, Not Guilty. And the Petit Jury being ſworn to try the Iſſue between the King and the Priſoners, that is, whether they were Guilty, according to the Form of the Indictment? Here there was no Diſpute but they were aſſembled together, to the Number mentioned in the Indictment; but, whether that Meeting together was rioteuſly, tumultuouſly, and to the Diſturbance of the Peace? was the Queſtion. And the Court told the Jury it was, and ordered the Jury to find it ſo; For (ſaid the Court) the Meeting was the Matter of Fact, and that is confeſſed, and we tell you it is unlawful, for it is againſt the Statute; and the Meeting being unlawful, it follows of courſe that it was tumultuous, and to the Diſturbance of the Peace. But the Jury did not think fit to take the Court's Word for it, for they could neither find Riot, Tumult, or any Thing tending to the Breach of the Peace committed at that Meeting; and they acquitted Mr. Penn and Mead. In doing of which they took upon them to judge both the Law and the Fact; at which the Court (being themſelves true Courtiers) were ſo much offended, that they fined the Jury 40 Marks a-piece, and committed them 'till paid. But Mr. Buſhel, who valued the Right of a Juryman and the Liberty of his Country more than his own, refuſed to pay the Fine, and was reſolved (though at a great Expence and Trouble too) to bring, and did bring, his Habeas Corpus, to be relieved from his Fine and Imprisonment, and he was released accordingly; and this being the Judgment in his Case, it is established for Law, That the Judges, how great soever they be, have no Right to fine, imprison, or punish a Jury, for not finding a Verdict according to the Direction of the Court. And this, I hope, is sufficient to prove, that Jurymen are to see with their own Eyes, to hear with their own Ears, and to make use of their own Consciences and Understandings in judging of the Lives, Liberties, or Estates of their Fellow-Subjects. And so I have done with this Point.

This is the second Information, for libelling of a Governor, that I have known in America. And the first, though it may look like a Romance, yet, as it is true, I will beg Leave to mention it. Governor Nicholson, who happened to be offended with one of his Clergy, met him one Day upon the Road; and as it was usual with him (under the Protection of his Commission) used the poor Parson with the worst of Language, threatened to cut off his Ears, slit his Nose, and at last to shoot him through the Head. The Parson, being a reverend Man, continued all this Time uncovered in the Heat of the Sun, until he found an Opportunity to fly for it; and coming to a Neighbour's House, felt himself very ill of a Fever, and immediately writes for a Doctor; and that his Physician might the better judge of his Distemper, he acquainted him with the Usage he had received; concluding, that the Governor was certainly mad; for that no Man in his Senses would have behaved in that Manner. The Doctor unhappily shews the Parson's Letter: The Governor came to hear of it, and so an Information was preferred against the poor Man for saying, He believed the Governor was mad; and it was laid in the Information to be false, scandalous, and wicked, and wrote with Intent to move Sedition among the People, and bring his Excellency into Contempt. But by an Order from the late Queen Anne, there was a Stop put to the Prosecution, with sundry others set on Foot by the same Governor, against Gentlemen of the greatest Worth and Honour in that Government.

And may not I be allowed, after all this, to say, that, by a little Countenance, almost any Thing which a Man writes, may, with the Help of that useful Term of Art called an Innuendo, be construed to be a Libel, according to Mr. Attorney's Definition of it, That whether the Words are spoke of a Person of a publick Character, or of a private Man, whether dead or living, good or bad, true or false, all make a Libel; for, according to Mr. Attorney, after a Man hears a Writing read, or reads and repeats it, or laughs at it, they are all punishable. It is true, Mr. Attorney is so good as to allow, after the Party knows it to be a Libel; but he is not so kind as to take the Man's Word for it.

Here were several Cases put to shew, that though what a Man writes of a Governor was true, proper, and necessary, yet, according to the foregoing Doctrine, it might be construed to be a Libel. But Mr. Hamilton, after the Trial was over, being informed, that some of the Cases he had put had really happened in this Government, he declared he had never heard of any such; and as he meant no personal Reflections, he was sorry he had mentioned them, and therefore they are omitted here.

Mr. Hamilton. If a Libel is understood in the large and unlimited Sense urged by Mr. Attorney, there is scarce a Writing I know that may not be called a Libel, or scarce any Person safe from being called to Account as a Libeller: For Moses, meek as he was, libelled Cain; and who is it that has not libelled the Devil? For, according to Mr. Attorney, it is no Justification to say one has a bad Name. Echard has libelled our good King William; Burnet has libelled, among many others, King Charles and King James; and Rapin has libelled them all. How must a Man speak or write, or what must he hear, read, or sing? Or when must he laugh, so as to be secure from being taken up as a Libeller? I sincerely believe, that were some Persons to go through the Streets of New York now-a-days, and read a Part of the Bible, if it was not known to be such, Mr. Attorney, with the Help of his Innuendos, would easily turn it into a Libel. As for Instance, Is. xi. 16. The Leaders of the People cause them to err, and they that are led by them are destroyed. But should Mr. Attorney go about to make this a Libel, he would read it thus: The Leaders of the People [Innuendo, the Governor and Council of New-York] cause them [Innuendo, the People of this Province] to err, and they [the Governor and Council meaning] are destroyed [Innuendo, are deceived into the Loss of their Liberty]; which is the worst Kind of Destruction. Or if some Persons should publickly repeat, in a Manner not pleasing to his Betters, the 10th and the 11th Verses of the lvith Chap. of the same Book, there Mr. Attorney would have a large Field to display his Skill, in the artful Application of his Innuendos. The Words are; His Watchmen are blind, they are ignorant, &c. Yea, they are greedy Dogs, that can never have enough. But to make them a Libel, there is, according to Mr. Attorney's Doctrine, no more wanting but the Aid of his Skill, in the right adapting his Innuendos. As for Instance; His Watchmen [Innuendo, the Governor's Council and Assembly] are blind, they are ignorant, [Innuendo, will not see the dangerous Designs of his Excellency.] Yea, they [the Governor and Council meaning] are greedy Dogs, which can never have enough [Innuendo, enough of Riches and Power.] Such an Instance as this seems only fit to be laughed at; but I may appeal to Mr. Attorney himself, whether these are not at least equally proper to be applied to his Excellency, and his Ministers, as some of the Inferences and Innuendos in his Information against my Client. Then if Mr. Attorney is at Liberty to come into Court, and file an Information in the King's Name, without Leave, who is secure, whom he is pleased to prosecute as a Libeller? And as the Crown Law is contended for in bad Times, there is no Remedy for the greatest Oppression of this Sort, even though the Party prosecuted is acquitted with Honour. And give me Leave to say, as great Men as any in Britain have boldly asserted, that the Mode of prosecuting by Information (when a Grand Jury will not find Billa vera) is a national Grievance, and greatly inconsistent with that Freedom which the Subjects of England enjoy in most other Cases. But if we are so unhappy as not to be able to ward off this Stroke of Power directly, let us take care not to be cheated out of our Liberties by Forms and Appearances; let us always be sure that the Charge in the Information is made out clearly, even beyond a Doubt; for though Matters in the Information may be called Form upon Trial, yet they may be; and often have been found to be, Matters of Substance upon giving Judgment.

Gentlemen, the Danger is great, in Proportion to the Mischief that may happen through our too great Credulity. A proper Confidence in a Court is commendable; but as the Verdict (whatever it is) will be yours, you ought to refer no Part of your Duty to the Discretion of other Persons. If you should be of Opinion, that there is no Falsehood in Mr. Zenger's Papers, you will, nay, (pardon me for the Expression) you ought to say so; because you don't know whether others (I mean the Court) may be of that Opinion. It is your Right to do so, and there is much depending upon your Resolution, as well as upon your Integrity.

The Loss of Liberty, to a generous Mind, is worse than Death; and yet we know there have been those in all Ages, who, for the Sake of Preferment, or some imaginary Honour, have freely lent a helping Hand to oppress, nay, to destroy their Country. This brings to my Mind that Saying of the immortal Brutus, when he looked upon the Creatures of Cæsar, who were very great Men, but by no Means good Men: "You "Romans, said Brutus, if yet I may call you so, consider what you are doing; "remember that you are assisting Cæsar to forge those very Chains, which one "Day he will make yourselves wear." This is what every Man (that values Freedom) ought to consider: He should act by Judgment, and not by Affection or Self-interest; for where those prevail, no Ties of either Country or Kindred are regarded; as, upon the other Hand, the Man who loves his Country, prefers its Liberty to all other Considerations, well knowing that without Liberty Life is a Misery.

A famous Instance of this you will find in the History of another brave Roman, of the same Name; I mean Lucius Junius Brutus, whose Story is well known; and therefore I shall mention no more of it, than only to shew the Value he put upon the Freedom of his Country. After this great Man, with his Fellow-Citizens, whom he had engaged in the Cause, had banished Tarquin the Proud, the last King of Rome, from a Throne which he ascended by inhuman Murders, and possessed by the most dreadful Tyranny and Proscriptions, and had by this Means amassed incredible Riches, even sufficient to bribe to his Interest many of the young Nobility of Rome, to assist him in recovering the Crown; but the Plot being discovered, the principal Conspirators were apprehended, among whom were two of the Sons of Junius Brutus. It was absolutely necessary that some should be made Examples of, to deter others from attempting the restoring of Tarquin, and destroying the Liberty of Rome. And to effect this it was, that Lucius Junius Brutus, one of the Consuls of Rome, in the Presence of the Roman People, sat Judge, and condemned his own Sons, as Traitors to their Country: And to give the last Proof of his exalted Virtue, and his Love of Liberty, he, with a Firmness of Mind, (only becoming so great a Man) caused their Heads to be struck off in his own Presence; and when he observed that his rigid Virtue occasioned a Sort of Horror among the People, it is observed he only said, 'My Fel-' low-Citizens, do not think that this proceeds from any Want of natural Affec-' tion! No, the Death of the Sons of Brutus can affect Brutus only; but the ' Loss of Liberty will affect my Country.' Thus highly was Liberty esteemed in those Days, that a Father could sacrifice his Sons to save his Country. But why do I go to Heathen Rome, to bring Instances of the Love of Liberty? The best Blood in Britain has been shed in the Cause of Liberty; and the Freedom we enjoy at this Day, may be said to be (in a great Measure) owing to the glorious Stand the famous Hampden, and others of our Countrymen, [in the Case of Ship-Money; see his Trial in State Trials, Vol. I. p. 505.] made against the arbitrary Demands, and illegal Impositions, of the Times in which they lived; who, rather than give up the Rights of Englishmen, and submit to pay an illegal Tax of no more, I think, than three Shillings, resolved to undergo, and, for the Liberty of their Country, did undergo the greatest Extremities in that arbitrary and terrible Court of Star-Chamber; to whose arbitrary Proceedings (it being composed of the principal Men of the Realm, and calculated to support arbitrary Government) no Bounds or Limits could be set, nor could any other Hand remove the Evil but a Parliament.

Power may justly be compared to a great River; while kept within its due Bounds, it is both beautiful and useful; but when it overflows its Banks, it is then too impetuous to be stemmed; it bears down all before it, and brings Destruction and Desolation wherever it comes. If then this is the Nature of Power, let us at least do our Duty, and like wise Men (who value Freedom) use our utmost Care to support Liberty, the only Bulwark against lawless Power, which, in all Ages, has sacrificed to its wild Lust, and boundless Ambition, the Blood of the best Men that ever lived.

I hope to be pardoned, Sir, for my Zeal upon this Occasion: It is an old and wise Caution, That when our Neighbour's House is on Fire, we ought to take care of our own. For though, blessed be God, I live in a Government where Liberty is well understood, and freely enjoyed; yet Experience has shewn us all (I'm sure it has to me), that a bad Precedent in one Government, is soon set up for an Authority in another; and therefore I cannot but think it mine, and every honest Man's Duty, that (while we pay all due Obedience to Men in Authority) we ought at the same time to be upon our Guard against Power, wherever we apprehend that it may affect ourselves or our Fellow-Subjects.

I am truly very unequal to such an Undertaking, on many Accounts. And you see I labour under the Weight of many Years, and am borne down with great Infirmities of Body; yet old and weak as I am, I should think it my Duty, if required, to go to the utmost Part of the Land, where my Service could be of any Use, in assisting to quench the Flame of Prosecutions upon Informations, set on Foot by the Government, to deprive a People of the Right of remonstrating, (and complaining too) of the arbitrary Attempts of Men in Power. Men who injure and oppress the People under their Administration, provoke them to cry out and complain; and then make that very Complaint the Foundation for new Oppressions and Prosecutions. I wish I could say there were no Instances of this Kind. But to conclude; the Question before the Court, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, is not of small nor private Concern; it is not the Cause of a poor Printer, nor of New-York alone, which you are now trying: No! It may, in its Consequence, affect every Freeman that lives under a British Government on the Main of America. It is the best Cause; it is the Cause of Liberty; and I make no not doubt but your upright Conduct, this Day, will not only intitle you to the Love and Eſteem of your Fellow-Citizens; but every Man, who prefers Freedom to a Life of Slavery, will bleſs and honour you, as Men who have baffled the Attempt of Tyranny; and, by an impartial and uncorrupt Verdict, have laid a noble Foundation for ſecuring to ourſelves, our Poſterity, and our Neighbours, that to which Nature and the Laws of our Country have given us a Right—the Liberty—both of expoſing and oppoſing arbitrary Power (in theſe Parts of the World, at leaſt) by ſpeaking and writing Truth.

Here Mr. Attorney obſerved, that Mr. Hamilton had gone very much out of the Way, and had made himſelf and the People very merry; but that he had been citing Caſes not at all to the Purpoſe. He ſaid, there was no ſuch Cauſe as Mr. Buſhel's, or Sir Edward Hale's, before the Court; and he could not find out what the Court or Jury had to do with Diſpenſations, Riots, or unlawful Aſſemblies: All that the Jury had to conſider of, was Mr. Zenger's printing and publiſhing two ſcandalous Libels, which very highly reflected on his Excellency, and the principal Men concerned in the Adminiſtration of this Government, which is confeſſed; that is, the Printing and Publiſhing of the Journals ſet forth in the Information is confeſſed. And concluded, that as Mr. Hamilton had confeſſed the Printing, and there could be no doubt but they were ſcandalous Papers, highly reflecting upon his Excellency, and the principal Magiſtrates in the Province; and therefore he made no doubt but the Jury would find the Defendant guilty, and would refer to the Court for their Direction.

Mr. Chief Juſtice. Gentlemen of the Jury, the great Pains Mr. Hamilton has taken to ſhew how little Regard Juries are to pay to the Opinion of the Judges, and his inſiſting ſo much upon the Conduct of ſome Judges in Trials of this Kind, is done, no doubt, with a Deſign that you ſhould take but very little Notice of what I may ſay upon this Occaſion. I ſhall therefore only obſerve to you, that, as the Facts or Words in the Information are confeſſed, the only Thing that can come in queſtion before you is, whether the Words, as ſet forth in the Information, make a Libel; and that is a Matter of Law, no doubt, and which you may leave to the Court. But I ſhall trouble you no further with any Thing more of my own; but read to you the Words of a learned and upright Judge, in a Caſe of the like Nature. [Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, in Tutchin's Caſe, State Trials, Vol. V. p. 542.]

'To ſay that corrupt Officers are appointed to adminiſter Affairs, is 'certainly a Reflection on the Government. If People ſhould not be call-'ed to account for poſſeſſing the People with an ill Opinion of the Go-'vernment, no Government can ſubſiſt; for it is neceſſary for all Govern-'ments that the People ſhould have a good Opinion of it; and nothing 'can be worſe to any Government, than to endeavour to procure Ani-'moſities. As to the Management of it, this has been always looked 'upon as a Crime, and no Government can be ſafe without it be pu-'niſhed.

'Now you are to conſider, whether theſe Words I have read to you do 'not tend to beget an ill Opinion of the Adminiſtration of the Government; 'to tell us, that thoſe that are employed know nothing of the Matter, 'and thoſe that do know are not employed. Men are not adapted to Offices, 'but Offices to Men, out of a particular Regard to their Intereſt, and not 'to their Fitneſs for the Places. This is the Purport of theſe Papers.'

Mr. Hamilton. I humbly beg your Honour's Pardon; I am very much miſapprehended, if you ſuppoſe what I ſaid was ſo deſigned.

Sir, you know I made an Apology for the Freedom I found myſelf under a Neceſſity of uſing upon this Occaſion. I ſaid, there was nothing perſonal deſigned; it aroſe from the Nature of our Defence.

The Jury withdrew, and in a ſmall time returned; and being aſked by the Clerk,

Whether they were agreed of their Verdict, and whether John Peter Zenger was guilty of printing and publiſhing the Libels in the Information mentioned?

They anſwered, by Thomas Hunt, their Foreman, Not Guilty.

Upon which there were three Huzzas in the Hall, which was crouded with People; and the next Day I was diſcharged from my Impriſonment.

XXIII. Remarks on the Trial of JOHN PETER ZENGER, Printer of the NEW-YORK Weekly Journal, who was lately tried and acquitted, for printing and publiſhing two Libels againſt the Government of that Province *.

SIR,

IT has been a common Remark among thoſe who have obſerved upon the capricious Diſpenſations of Fortune, that great Events are often produced by Inſtruments that are not ſeemingly adequate; nay, that the ſame apparent Cauſes have quite contrary Effects; and the Road that leads one Man to Wealth, Honour, and Power, ſometimes carries another to Poverty, Infamy, and Ruin. Hence comes that confuſed Diſtribution of Axes and Coronets, Halters and Ribbons, which Hiſtory diſplays by numerous ſhocking Examples; and thus it is, that Fate ſeems to play at Croſs-purpoſes with Mankind; or to ſpeak in Scripture-phraſe, in this Senſe as well as many others, the Wiſdom of this World is Foolishneſs.

I find myſelf drawn into theſe grave Reflections, by reading the Trial of John Peter Zenger, at New-York, upon an Information for printing and publiſhing a Libel. This Piece, it ſeems, has been lately printed there, and was put into my Hand t'other Day by a Friend, who has both a general Acquaintance and a Correſpondence with the Northern Colonies, as a rare Production, containing many Things new and ſurpriſing. And, in truth, I muſt ſay it affords a lively Specimen, in Miniature, of the Juſtneſs of the foregoing Remarks: I mean that Part of it which is attributed to Andrew Hamilton, Eſq. of Philadelphia, Barriſter at Law; together with the Sequel, deſcribing the munificent Behaviour of the Citizens, in Common Council aſſembled, to the learned Gentleman, for his ſingular Performance on that Occaſion.

I muſt at the ſame Time aſſure you, that if Zenger's Trial had been printed by Order of the Court that tried him, or from a Copy taken by a private Hand at the Trial, or by any other Means that excluded Mr. Hamilton's Approbation or Privity, I ſhould have enjoyed my own Opinion, without troubling you or any body elſe about it, and had the Charity to reſolve all the Extravagancies that occur throughout his Declamation, into a right Diſcernment of the People he talked to, and a Dexterity in captivating them, which had its Effect in the Acquittal of his Client. But when a Gentleman of the Bar takes the Pains to write over a long Diſcourſe (he being the only Lawyer, of either Side, who gave the Printer his Notes), in order to ſend it abroad through the World, as a Specimen of his Abilities, Sentiments and Principles; as a ſolemn Argument in the Law, fit to ſee the Light, and abide the Teſt in all Places; and, above all, as a Taſk of Duty, which he thought himſelf bound to perform, even by going to the utmoſt Parts of the Land for the Purpoſe; and all this, without Fee or Reward, under the Weight of many Years, and great Infirmities of Body: When a Barriſter, I ſay, thus becomes a Volunteer for Error, and preſumes to obtrude bad Law and falſe Reaſoning upon the Senſe of Mankind, becauſe the ſage Magiſtrates of New-York have put their Seal to it; I think myſelf at Liberty, without uſing any other Apology, to exerciſe the judging Privilege of a Reader, ſince the Gentleman himſelf has put me into the Poſſeſſion of it.

In doing this, I ſhall not in the leaſt gratify a vain Itch of Writing; for there are no extraordinary Talents neceſſary for refuting groſs Abſurdities; but I ſhall have the honeſt Merit of endeavouring to undeceive ſuch of my Fellow-Subjects in the Plantations as may, from the late uncommon Succeſs of the Doctrine, miſtake the Liberty of the Preſs for a Licence to write and publiſh infamous Things of their Superiors, and of all others, at their Pleaſure, provided they write and publiſh nothing but what is true. In the next Place, I would preſerve, as far as I am able, the Dignity of the Profeſſion of the Law in theſe remote Parts of the Britiſh Dominions; and prevent its learned Profeſſors in England, who probably will ſee the renowned Piece above mentioned (if we may judge from the Induſtry uſed in diſperſing it), from ſuſpecting that all their American Brethren uſe the like Arts to gain Popularity and honourable Rewards. The former, having the Advantage of going daily to the great School of Law at Weſtminſter, are already apt enough to think meanly of the Accompliſhments of the latter, who are far removed from Inſtruction; and their Opinion muſt be ſtrongly confirmed in this Reſpect, if ſuch a Rhapſody, as was uttered at New-York, ſhould not only be applauded and rewarded publickly there, but printed and ſcattered in Reams through the other Colonies, without being followed by a ſuitable Animadverſion.

Neither will it be amiſs to take ſome Notice, in this Place, of the Quackery of the Profeſſion in general, without any particular Application, as it has been practiſed with vaſt Succeſs in ſome of our Colonies. You will often ſee (if common Fame may be truſted) a ſelf-ſufficient enterpriſing Lawyer, compounded of ſomething between a Politician and a Broker, who, making the Foibles of the Inhabitants his capital Study, and withal taking Advantage of the Weakneſs of his Judges, the Ignorance of ſome of his Brethren, the Modeſty of others, and the honeſt Scruples of a third Sort (without having any of his own), becomes inſenſibly an Oracle in the Courts, and acquires by Degrees a Kind of Dominion over the Minds, as well as the Eſtates of the People; an Influence never to be obtained but by the Help of Qualities very different from Learning and Integrity. Wherever ſuch a Man is found, the Wonder is not great, if, from a long Habit of advancing what he pleaſes, and having it received for Law, he comes in Time to fancy that what he pleaſes to advance is really Law.

I have taken the Pains, during this ſhort Vacation between our monthly Courts, candidly to examine this new Syſtem of Libels, lately compoſed and propagated on the Continent; the Diſcovery of which coſt the good City of New-York five Ounces and a half of Gold, a Scrip of Parchment, and three Latin Sentences. My Intention is to conſider Things, not Perſons, having no other Knowledge of the Gentleman principally concerned, than what is derived from the Paper now before me; and being wholly a Stranger to the Merit of thoſe Diſputes that gave Riſe to the Proſecution of this Printer.

Much leſs ſhall I turn Advocate for any lawleſs Power in Governors: God forbid I ſhould be guilty of ſuch a Proſtitution, who know by Experience of what Stuff they are commonly made; the wrong Impreſſions they are apt to receive of themſelves and others; their Paſſions, Prejudices, and Purſuits; though, when all reaſonable Allowances are made for certain Circumſtances that attend their Miſſion from home, and their Situation abroad, a conſiderate Perſon may be tempted to think—it is well they are no worſe than they are.

But to come to my Remarks on Mr. Zenger's Trial.

In conſidering the Defence made for the Defendant (Mr. Zenger) by his Counſel (Mr. Hamilton), upon Not Guilty pleaded to an Information for printing and publiſhing a Libel, it is not to the Purpoſe to inquire how far the Matters charged in the Information are in their Nature libellous; nor whether the Innuendoes are properly uſed, to apply the Matters to Perſons, Things and Places. It is only neceſſary to examine the Truth of this ſingle Propoſition, upon which the whole Defence is grounded, and to which the ſeveral Parts of it refer; namely, That the ſeveral Matters charged in the Information are not, and cannot be libellous, becauſe they are true in fact.

This is the cardinal Point upon which the learned Gentleman's whole Argument turns, and which he lays down, over and over, as the firſt Principle that governs the Doctrine of Libels; and accordingly he confeſſes the printing and publiſhing of the Papers laid in the Information, and puts it upon the King's Counſel to prove the Facts contained in them to be falſe; alledging, at the ſame Time, that, unleſs that were done, the Defendant could not be guilty; but if the ſame were proved to be falſe, he would own the Papers containing them to be Libels. To this, it ſeems, the Attorney General anſwered, that a Negative is not to be proved; and the other replied in theſe Words, which I chooſe to ſet down, that I may not be thought to do him wrong—I did expect to hear that a Negative cannot be proved; but every body knows, there are many Exceptions to that general Rule: For if a Man is charged with killing another, or ſtealing his Neighbour's Horſe; if he is innocent in the one Caſe, he may prove the Man ſaid to be killed to be ſtill alive; and the Horſe ſaid to be ſtolen, never to have been out of his Maſter's Stable, &c. and this, I think, is proving a Negative. Now, I muſt think, that it is ſtrange a Gentleman of his Sagacity, who owns he was prepared for the Objection, could not yet hit upon ſome of theſe many Exceptions which every body knows; for he does no more than give two Inſtances of one Affirmative being deſtroyed by another, that infers a Negative of the firſt; at which Rate moſt Negatives may be proved, and then the old Rule may be diſcarded. Thus, if it is ſhewn that a Man is alive, it follows clearly that he was not killed; and if a Horſe is proved to have been always in his Maſter's Stable (for this is what muſt be underſtood of his being never out of the Stable), it certainly follows that he could not be ſtolen. So that, according to this new Scheme of Proof, he who is accuſed of killing a Man, or ſtealing an Horſe, is to be put upon proving that he did not kill or ſteal, becauſe it is poſſible that ſuch Proof may be had ſometimes: And ſo, in the principal Caſe, if a Queſtion ariſes whether a certain Magiſtrate has done particular Acts of Injuſtice or not, the Method is to ſhew that he did not do ſuch Acts, not that he did them. I have touched upon this, not for its Importance, but as a Specimen of the learned Barriſter's Manner of Reaſoning, and of the Spirit with which he ſets out from the Beginning.

At length, however, he takes the Onus probandi upon himſelf; and, rather than the Thing ſhould go unproved, generouſly undertakes, at his Client's Peril, to prove the Matters, charged in the Information as libellous, to be true. But I would be glad to know, by the way, how this undertaking Gentleman could have proved the Truth of divers Facts contained in the Paper which the Defendant publiſhed, ſuppoſing the Court had been ſo much overſeen as to let him into a Proof of this Sort. Could he prove, for Example, that Judges were arbitrarily diſplaced, and new Courts erected, in the Province of New-York, without Conſent of the Legiſlature? For, I am credibly informed, there never was a Pretence or Surmiſe of more than one

* 'Theſe Remarks were written by two eminent Lawyers in one of our Colonies in America, immediately after the Publication of the Trial of Mr. Zenger, which 'it ſeems had been induſtriouſly ſpread over that Part of the World, before it reached England.

'As the Doctrines contained in that Trial, or rather in the Speech of Mr. Hamilton, are of ſo new a Caſt, and ſo abſolutely contradictory to all the Reſolutions and 'Judgments that have been ſettled and eſtabliſhed for ſo many Ages, and by Judges of the higheſt Reputation, and moſt unqueſtionable Characters, for their Integrity, 'Virtues and Abilities, it could not be imagined ſo wild and idle an Harangue could have had any Weight, or have met with any Reception here, where the Laws 'relating to Libels have been ſo often canvaſſed, and are generally ſo well underſtood; and therefore the Perſon to whom theſe Remarks were ſent, never thought of 'making any other Uſe of them than to ſatisfy his own Curioſity, and that of his Friends.

'But ſeeing, to his great Surprize, that this extraordinary Declamation has been mentioned with an Air of Applauſe and Triumph in ſeveral News Papers, as ſtriking 'out ſome new Lights with regard to the Doctrine of Libels; and, upon the Credit of that Recommendation, the whole Trial not only twice printed here, but retailed 'out in Scraps in the publick News-Papers, whereby many well meaning People may be deceived, and led into wrong Notions concerning the Laws of their Country in 'this Point: He has thought fit to communicate theſe Remarks to the Publick, in order to remove any Miſtakes or Errors that Perſons may fall into for want of an ade'quate Judgment in theſe Matters; and the rather, becauſe if ſuch falſe Opinions ſhould happen to influence the Conduct or Practice of any, the Conſequences may be 'very dangerous; it being an eſtabliſhed Maxim in our Law, that neither Ignorance nor Miſtake is an Excuſe to any one who has broke it, from the Penalty of it.' Preface to the Remarks.

Judge

Judge being diſplaced, or more than one Court erected, under Mr. Coſby's Adminiſtration, both which happened upon one and the ſame Occaſion. Now I would not have this eſteemed a captious Exception, when I have to deal with a Man of Law, who muſt or ought to know, that, if ſuch a Juſtification as he offered were at all allowable, it ought to be full and expreſs, ſo as to leave no Room for a Libeller to multiply and exaggerate Facts at his Pleaſure, when he is diſpoſed to traduce Perſons in Authority; there being a manifeſt Difference between a ſingle Act of Power without or againſt Law (from which perhaps few Governments have been free), and an habitual Abuſe of Power in repeated inſtances of the ſame Species. I would further aſk, how he could prove, that the Law itſelf was at an End, and that Trials by Juries were taken away when a Governor pleaſed; for, if I miſtake not, he was at that Time ſpeaking to a Jury in a regular Court of Law, and in a Proſecution which the Governor had much at Heart (as the Gentleman himſelf inſinuates), and would have been highly pleaſed to convict his Client; yet would not attempt it, but in the ordinary Courſe of Trial by a Jury; and then too, could not find a Jury that would convict him. I think I am warranted in putting theſe Queſtions, even by the Authority of the Barriſter himſelf, who ſays,——Truth ought to govern the whole Affair of Libels, and yet the Party accuſed runs Riſque enough even then; for if he fails of proving every Tittle he has wrote, and to the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury too, he may find to his Coſt, &c.

But, for the preſent, I will ſuppoſe Mr. Hamilton was able to prove all theſe Things; nay, that the Jury knew them all to be true. I will go farther, and allow, that Juries in criminal Caſes may determine both Law and Fact, when they are complicated, if they will take ſuch a Deciſion upon their Conſciences (which is almoſt the only Point in which I can have the Honour of agreeing with him); yet, after all theſe Conceſſions, the main Queſtion reſts ſtill between us, viz. Whether a Writing can be a Libel, in legal Acceptation, if the Matter contained in it be true? He is pleaſed, indeed, to expreſs his Diſlike of infamous Papers, even when they are true, if levelled againſt private Vices and Faults; and in this Caſe he calls them baſe, unworthy, ſcandalous, unmanly and unmannerly. But ſurely it might be expected, when a Point of Law was in queſtion, that he would have told us, whether they were lawful or unlawful, innocent or criminal, ſince theſe laſt are the only Epithets that were relative to his Subject, though the firſt might have their Weight in a Sermon or moral Eſſay. But, it is plain, he was aware of the Conſequence of being explicit upon this Head; for had he owned ſuch Writings to be lawful, becauſe true, he would have alarmed the common Senſe of Mankind, by opening a Door for expoſing at Mercy the Frailties, Vices, Defects and Misfortunes of every Perſon, high and low, which muſt inevitably deſtroy the Peace of Families, and beget ill Blood and Diſorders. If, on the other Hand, he had acknowledged ſuch Writings to be unlawful, inaſmuch as they concerned private Miſcarriages and Tranſactions; but that every Man might write as much Truth as he pleaſed about the Adminiſtration of the Government, not only by pointing out Faults and Miſtakes, but by publiſhing his own Comment and Inferences, in order to fill the Minds of the People with all the Jealouſies and Apprehenſions his Imagination can form; it muſt have ſhocked Men of Underſtanding to be thus told, that the Law had provided againſt private Quarrels and Breaches of the Peace, occaſioned by virulent Writing; but had taken no care to prevent Sedition and publick Diſturbance ariſing from the ſame Cauſe.

His favourite Poſition, however, was to be maintained at all Events; and therefore, when the Chief-Juſtice rightly inſtructed him, that he could not be admitted to give the Truth of a Libel in Evidence, that the Law was clear that he could not juſtify a Libel; for it is nevertheleſs a Libel, though it is true; the diſcerning Gentleman was pleaſed to underſtand by the Word juſtify, a Juſtification by Plea, as it is in the Caſe of an Indictment for Murder, or an Aſſault and Battery: There (ſays he) the Priſoner cannot juſtify, but plead Not Guilty; yet in Murder, he may prove it was in Defence of his Life, his Houſe, &c. and in Aſſault and Battery, he may give in Evidence, that the other Party ſtruck firſt; and in both theſe Caſes he will be acquitted.

If the Party in either Caſe is acquitted, the Reaſon is, I preſume, becauſe the Matter given in Evidence amounts to a Juſtification in Law of the Fact charged on him, and is equivalent to a Confeſſion and Avoidance in pleading. In like manner, if Truth be a ſufficient Juſtification of a Libel, the Defendant will be acquitted upon proving the Contents of his Paper to be true. Now let it be obſerved, that the Words of the Book which the Chief-Juſtice relied on are theſe:——It is far from being a Juſtification of a Libel, that the Contents thereof are true----ſince the greater Appearance there is of Truth in any malicious Invective, ſo much the more provoking it is. That this is good Law, I hope I ſhall be able to ſhew fully hereafter, as I ſhall ſhew, in the mean Time, that it is an expreſs Authority againſt the well-read Barriſter, who declares, he has not in all his reading met with an Authority that ſays, he cannot be admitted to give the Truth in Evidence, &c.

He ſeems to take it for granted (and I ſhall not diſpute it with him now) that Matter of Juſtification cannot, in any Caſe, be pleaded ſpecially to an Indictment of Aſſault or Murder; but the Party is to take Advantage of it in Evidence upon Not Guilty pleaded. Let it be ſo; yet ſtill this Matter muſt be a ſufficient Juſtification, or the Party can have no Benefit from it any way. In an Action of Aſſault and Battery, where the firſt Aſſault muſt be pleaded ſpecially; the Matter of Juſtification is juſt the ſame, as in an Indictment for the ſame Offence, where it muſt be given in Evidence upon the general Iſſue. I aſk then, Whether the firſt Aſſault is a Juſtification in an Indictment of Aſſault and Battery? If the Barriſter ſhould anſwer negatively, ſuch Anſwer is againſt all Senſe, for the Party is acquitted by Virtue of the Juſtification only. If he ſhould anſwer affirmatively, he is inconſiſtent with himſelf; for he has but juſt affirmed that when the Book ſays, Truth is no Juſtification, it muſt be underſtood of a Juſtification by Plea, by which he muſt mean that nothing elſe is a Juſtification but what is pleaded, or he muſt mean nothing at all. For the Words of the Book are,---it is far from being a Juſtification, &c. it is not ſaid,---you are far from being at Liberty to plead it in Bar. In Truth, the Author is not there ſpeaking of the Forms and Rules of Proceedings upon Libels, (1 Hawk. Ch. 73. § 5, 6, 7.) but upon the Subſtance and Nature of the Crime, what ſhall and what ſhall not excuſe or juſtify it. This is manifeſt from the Reaſon ſubjoined to ſupport his Aſſertion, viz. ſince the greater Appearance there is of Truth, &c. which is a ſolid Reaſon grounded on the Wiſdom of the Law, which puniſhes Libels even againſt private Perſons, as publick Offences, becauſe they provoke Men to Acts of Revenge and Breaches of the Peace. I hope it will not be ſaid that a Libel is leſs provoking, becauſe the Truth of it is to be given in Evidence, than if it was to be pleaded in Bar.

But all this is Star-Chamber Doctrine with the Barriſter, and the very Mention of that Court ſerves him for an Anſwer to every Thing, for which he has no other Anſwer; becauſe the Memory of that Tribunal is juſtly deteſted on Account of many illegal and exorbitant Proceedings. No; this is the Authority of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins (though he uſes marginal References to ſome Star-Chamber Caſes), whoſe name is too great to receive any Addition from this Paper, and who, after a long and ſtudious Search in the Crown-Law, laid down this Propoſition for Law at the Time he wrote his Book; and I believe it will appear in the Sequel that he was not miſtaken. And now I come to join Iſſue with the Barriſter upon this Point, whether Mr. Serjeant or he is in the right; or, in other Words, whether Falſity in Fact be eſſential to a Libel, ſo that the Truth of the Fact may be given in Evidence to prove a Writing to be no Libel.

He maintains the Affirmative of the Queſtion, both from what he underſtands to be the Authorities in the Caſe, and from the Reaſon of the Thing. All which ſhall be conſidered in their Order.

The Authorities cited by Mr. Hamilton to ſupport the Propoſition formerly ſtated, conſiſt principally of four Caſes, which I ſhall conſider in the Order as they were produced.

The firſt is the Caſe of John de Northampton, 18 Edw. III. 3 Inſt. 174. which he obſerves does not appear to have been a Caſe upon an Information, but that he has good Grounds to ſay it was upon an Indictment. This is what I ſhall not conteſt with him, becauſe it is not material, or indeed eaſy to be determined, without ſeeing the Record; though I conceive there are Grounds to ſay it was not upon an Indictment, as was the Caſe of Adam de Ravenſworth, mentioned by Lord Coke in the ſame Chapter. The Caſe, however, ſtands thus: ‘ John de Northampton, an Attorney of ‘ the King's-Bench, wrote a Letter to one Ferrers, one of the King's ‘ Council, that neither Sir William Scot, Chief-Juſtice, nor his Fellows ‘ the King's Juſtices, nor their Clerks, any great Thing would do by the ‘ Commandment of our Lord the King, &c. which ſaid John being called, ‘ confeſſed the Letter, &c. Et quia prædictus Johannes cognovit dictam literam per ſe ſcriptam Roberto de Ferrers, qui eſt de concilio Regis, quæ litera continet in ſe nullam veritatem: Prætextu cujus Dom. Rex erga Curiam & Juſticiarios ſuos habere poſſet indignationem, quod eſſet in ſcandalum Juſtic. & Curiæ. Ideo dictus Johannes committitur, &c.’ Here ſays the Barriſter, by this Judgment it appears the libellous Words were utterly falſe, and there the Falſhood was the Crime, and is the Ground of the Judgment. For my own Part, I can neither ſee Truth nor Falſhood in the Words at the Time they were wrote, for they refer to a future Contingency that might, or might not be as he ſaid; and in this Reſpect, they were the ſame as if the Man had ſaid, the Roof of Weſtminſter-Hall would fall upon Sir William Scot and his Fellows. Beſides, the Words taken by themſelves have no ill Meaning; for I imagine it will be allowed that moſt of the great Things which Judges do, as Judges, are ſuch as ought neither to be done nor left undone by the King's Commandment. Where then was the Offence? The Record, I think, ſhews that in the following Words: prætextu cujus Dom. Rex erga Curiam & Juſtic. ſuos habere poſſet indignationem, &c. Ideo dictus Johannes committitur, &c. It is obſervable, that the Author of this Letter was an Attorney of the Court, and by the Contents thereof he preſumes to undertake for the Behaviour of the Judges in ſome great Matters that concerned their Office. The Letter was addreſſed to a Perſon who was of the King's Council, and might poſſibly communicate the Contents of ſuch a Letter to the King; the Conſequence of which might naturally be, that Dom. Rex habere poſſet indignationem erga Curiam, &c. for great Things were ſometimes done, in thoſe Days, by the King's Commandment; and the Judges, beſides, held their Poſts at Will and Pleaſure.

The Words, quæ litera continet in ſe nullam veritatem, were therefore proper for the Judges to inſert, in order to acquit themſelves to the King; but they are no more the Ground of the Judgment than theſe other Words, qui eſt de Concilio Regis; both being only incidental Clauſes that come in by way of Deſcription; for it is not ſaid, Quia litera prædicta continet in ſe nullam veritatem. After all, I would not have this Conſtruction of the Caſe, plain and natural as it is, paſs merely upon my own Credit; for I ſhall ſhew that this Caſe was ſo underſtood by one of the greateſt Lawyers of his Time, before Lord Coke's 3d Inſt. appeared in the World.

21 Jac. B. R. Tanfield v. Hiron. Godbolt 405, 6.

The Plaintiff brought an Action upon the Caſe againſt the Defendant, for delivering of a ſcandalous Writing to the Prince, &c. Noy for the Plaintiff cited, 18 Ed. III. a Letter was ſent to Ferrers, one of the King's Council, the Effect of which was, that Scot Chief-Juſtice, and his Companions of the ſame Bench, would not do a vain Thing at the Command of the King; yet becauſe he ſent ſuch a Letter to the King's Council, although he ſpake no Ill, yet becauſe it might incenſe the King againſt the Judges, he was puniſhed. If no Ill was ſaid, will it be pretended that the Falſhood of what was ſaid could be a Reaſon for puniſhing a Man? Is it not ridiculous to ſay, that the Falſhood of innocent or inſignificant Words can be Criminal? This Book, therefore, follows the Record of Northampton's Caſe, and ſays, becauſe it might incenſe the King againſt the Judges, he was puniſhed; which is almoſt a Tranſlation of prætextu cujus, &c. which was the Ground of the Judgment, Ideo committitur.

The next Caſe which the Barriſter called to his Aid, is that of the Seven Biſhops. State Trials, Vol. IV. And here he relies on a Flouriſh of one of the Counſel for the Biſhops, and a dubious Expreſſion of one of the Judges, ſeparated from the reſt of his Diſcourſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer, tis true, ſays, Both the Falſity of it (the Libel) and that it was malicious and ſeditious, are all Matters of Fact, which they (the King's Counſel) have offered to the Jury no Proof of, &c. This, I muſt confeſs, proves one Point to which the Barriſter adduced it, viz. that he was not the firſt who inſiſted that to make a Writing a Libel, it muſt be falſe. And when I have allowed this, I may almoſt venture to ſay, it is the only Point he does prove from the Beginning to the Ending of his long, elaborate elaborate Speech.——Let me, however, oppoſe to this the Reply of Sir Thomas Powis, in theſe Words; Whether a Libel be true or not, as to the Matter of Fact; was it ever yet permitted in any Court of Juſtice to be made a Queſtion, whether the Party be puniſhable for it? And therefore I wonder to hear theſe Gentlemen ſay, that becauſe it is not a falſe one, therefore it is not a Libel. Fol. 382.

Mr. Juſtice Powel alſo does ſay, that to make it a Libel, it muſt be falſe; it muſt be malicious; and it muſt tend to Sedition. Upon which Words of this learned and worthy Judge, I would not preſume to offer any Comment, except that which other Words of his own afford, that plainly ſhew in what Senſe he then ſpoke. His ſubſequent Words are theſe: They (the Biſhops) tell his Majeſty, it is not out of Averſeneſs to pay all due Obedience; nor want of Tenderneſs to their Diſſenting Fellow-Subjects; but becauſe they do conceive the Thing that was commanded them, was againſt the Law of the Land. They ſay, they apprehend the Declaration is illegal, becauſe it is founded on a diſpenſing Power. I do not remember in any Caſe in all our Law, that there is any ſuch Power in the King; and the Caſe muſt turn upon that. In ſhort, if there be no ſuch diſpenſing Power in the King, then that can be no Libel which they preſented to the King, which ſays that the Declaration, being founded upon ſuch a pretended Power, is illegal. So that the Judge put the whole upon that ſingle Point, whether it be true that the King had ſuch a diſpenſing Power, or not; which is a Queſtion of Law, and not of Fact; and accordingly the Judge appeals to his own Reading in the Law, not to Witneſſes or other Teſtimony, for a Deciſion of it. In Truth, the Petition of the Biſhops is not capable of having Falſhood or Truth applied to it in any other Senſe, there being nothing elſe affirmed or denied in it, but that they thought they could not do what was commanded them, becauſe it was againſt the Law. This was the Behaviour, theſe were the Sentiments of that upright Judge, that gained him ſo much Honour among all good Men, as the Barriſter takes notice; not any Opinion of his, that the Contents of a Libel muſt be falſe in Fact, to make it a Libel; as he would unfairly inſinuate.

Sir Samuel Barnardiſton's Caſe is the third that is touch'd upon; and here too the Gentleman finds nothing that can be ſtrain'd to his Purpoſe, but the Defendant's Counſel inſiſting on the Want of Proof to the Malice and ſeditious Intent of the Author. He ſeems to have forgot that the ſame Gentleman inſiſted alſo to have it proved, that the Defendant was a Perſon of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit, becauſe theſe Words were ſet forth in the Information; and he takes no manner of Notice how all this was anſwered, which I muſt now do for him, in the Words of the Court: Certainly the Law ſupplies the Proof, if the Thing itſelf ſpeaks Malice and Sedition. As it is in Murder; we ſay always in the Indictment, he did it by the Inſtigation of the Devil: Can the Jury, if they find the Fact, find he did it not by ſuch Inſtigation? No, that does neceſſarily attend the very Nature of ſuch an Action or Thing. So in Informations for Offences of this Nature, we ſay, he did it falſely, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly, which are the formal Words; but if the Nature of the Thing be ſuch as neceſſarily imports Malice, Reproach and Scandal to the Government, there needs no Proof but of the Fact done; the Law ſupplies the reſt. How ſhall any Man prove another Perſon's Malice, which is a Thing that lies only in a Man's Mind? How ſhould any Man know that I am malicious againſt the Government, but by my Actions? Theſe Words, indeed, were pronounced by the Chief Juſtice Jefferies, who was then the Mouth of the Court; but tho' he was really an intemperate Judge, (or a Monſter, as the Barriſter, in his Bar-Language, delights to call him) yet I may ſafely refer it to all Men of Law, whether theſe Words could have diſcredited the beſt Mouth that ever ſpoke upon that Bench. State-Trials, Vol. III. 939.

An Inſtance of this Sort may not be impertinent, where a Chief Juſtice (who was no Monſter) addreſſes himſelf to a Jury, that was trying a Libel, in this Manner: I will not repeat the Particulars to you, only ſomething to what the Defendant has ſaid, that you may not be miſled. He ſays, it does not appear that he did it maliciouſly or knowingly. There are ſome Things that you that are of the Jury are not to expect Evidence for, which it is impoſſible to know but by the Act itſelf. Malice is conceived in the Heart; no Man knows it, unleſs he declares it: As in Murder, I have Malice to a Man; no Man knows it. I meet this Man and kill him; the Law calls this Malice. If a Man ſpeak ſcandalous Words againſt a Man in his Calling or Trade, he lays his Action, Malice; though he cannot prove it but by the Words themſelves; you may ſee, there is Malice ſuppoſed to a private Perſon in that Slander, much more to the King and the State. State-Trials, Vol. II. 537.

Tutchin's Caſe, the Barriſter does not properly cite, but endeavours to anſwer as a Caſe urged againſt him by the King's Counſel; and therefore I ſhall obſerve upon it in another Place.

But the Caſe of Caſes is ſtill behind, which he reſerved for the laſt, to make the Point clearer on his Side, than all the reſt put together could do. It is Fuller's Caſe, State-Trials, Vol. V. 441. And it deſerves Notice, that although Fuller was charged with writing a Libel, yet that was not the Giſt of the Information. He was, in Truth, proſecuted for being a Cheat and Impoſtor, by Order of the Houſe of Lords, as the King's Counſel declare in the Opening.

The Information accordingly ſets forth, 'That W. F. intending the 'late King William and his Subjects to deceive, and to get ſeveral great 'Sums of Money fraudulently and deceitfully from the ſaid King, con-'cerning a Correſpondency between divers Officers and Subjects of the 'ſaid late King, and the late King James, falſely pretended to be had; did 'write and print a Libel, intituled, Original Letters, &c. with the Depo-'ſition of T. J. and T. F. Eſqrs. proving the Corruption lately practiſed 'in this Nation; and the ſaid W. F. afterwards did publiſh, utter, and 'for Truth affirm, the ſaid ſeveral falſe and ſcandalous Libels, without 'any lawful Authority; whereas in Truth, the ſaid T. J. did not depoſe, upon 'his Oath, as is contained in the ſaid falſe and ſcandalous Libel; but the ſaid 'ſcandalous Libels are falſe, feigned, and altogether contrary to Truth, &c.' Here it is manifeſt he was accuſed of a Cheat, in forging the Correſpondence and the Depoſitions juſt mentioned, with a Deſign of getting Money by his pretended Diſcovery. And hence it comes, that the Judge very properly aſks him, Have you any Witneſſes? If you take upon you to write ſuch Things as you are charged with, it lies upon you to prove them true, at your Peril. How come you to write thoſe Books that are not true? If you have any Witneſſes, produce them. Thus ſaid and thus did that great Man, Lord Chief Juſtice Holt; but not upon a Trial of the like Kind with Mr. Zenger's, as his Counſel would have it thought. For, in this Caſe, the Cheat and the Impoſture was the Offence, which conſiſted wholly in the Falſity; that is, in affirming ſuch Things for Realities, when they were nought but Fictions. On the contrary, had he been able to prove thoſe Letters and thoſe Depoſitions to be authentick, the Diſcovery would have been valuable, and might intitle him perhaps to Favour and Protection, inſtead of Puniſhment, however irregular he was in taking ſuch a Method to publiſh Matters of that high Conſequence. After this, let the learned Barriſter, in all his Reading, ſhew an Information or Indictment for a Libel, where the Falſity is aſſigned in Form with an ubi re vera, as the Foundation of the Offence, which is done in Fuller's Caſe; and then I will acknowledge, that the Queſtions put here by Lord Holt would have been proper, upon the Trial of his Client.

This is the Sum of the Barriſter's Law-Caſes. And is it not high Time to aſk, whether ſuch groſs Miſrepreſentations of the Books can proceed from Ignorance or Diſingenuity? Be that as it will, it might certainly be expected, that a Propoſition, advanced with ſo much Aſſurance, by a Man of Years and Reading, ſhould have been ſupported by ſome one Authority in Point, rather than by a Series of low Prevarication and Quibble. Could he not find, in all the Book-Caſes and Trials at large, concerning Libels (which are ſufficient of themſelves to make a large Volume), one Example of Proof being received to the Truth or Falſity contained in a libellous Writing? Indeed, there is nothing like it to be found; though the Occaſions have been many, where ſuch Proof might be had, if it were proper; nay, where the Truth of the Thing was notorious to all Men, and yet no Queſtion ever moved concerning it. This ſhall fully appear in the Sequel.

If any Thing can be neceſſary further to expoſe Mr. Hamilton's Doctrine of Libels, after anſwering his own Caſes, it is only to ſubjoin ſome others, that will ſhew how much he is miſtaken in almoſt every Thing he has offered on the Subject. I ſhall therefore mention a very few, that will bear a particular Application to his crude Notions, without entering into a Multitude of others, to tire the Reader.

16 Car. II. the King v. Pym, 1 Sid. 219. B. R.

Pym was indicted at Exeter for a Libel, which he delivered to a Parſon to be publiſhed in Church there, and was to this Effect: 'You are de-'ſired to bewail the Sodomitry, Wickedneſs, Whoredom, Lewdneſs, that 'is of late broken out in this formerly well-governed City; that God 'would turn their Hearts from committing thoſe Wickedneſſes which go 'unpuniſhed by the Magiſtrates.' Pym confeſſed the Indictment, and was fined 100*l.* He afterwards brought a Writ of Error, and aſſigned for Error, that this was no Offence, becauſe though he ſays, go unpuniſhed by the Magiſtrates; yet he does not ſay that the Magiſtrates knew of it, and Wickedneſs unknown cannot be puniſhed. It was anſwered by the Court, that this contains Matter of great Scandal to the Government of the City; for it makes the late Government better than the preſent, &c. Hide, Twiſden, Keelyng, Windham, Juſt.

I have pitched upon this Caſe, becauſe the Barriſter is fond of comparing the Plantations to large Corporations; and he will find here, that even thoſe are not left to the Mercy of Libellers, altho' they do not put in a Claim to the ſacred Rights of Majeſty: And that a Miſbehaviour of this Kind to the Magiſtrates of a Corporation is not intirely innocent, becauſe it is not to be judged of, or puniſhed, as a like Undutifulneſs would be to our Sovereign.

This Caſe was adjudged about four Years after the Reſtoration, when the Memory of the preceding Uſurpation was freſh in every Body's Mind. It is ſtrange, therefore, Mr. Pym did not put himſelf on his Trial at Exeter; for it was evident, beyond Contradiction, to the People of that Age, from their own Knowledge, as it is now to us from Hiſtory, that the Wickedneſs ſpecified in the Libel was reſtrained by a ſtricter Hand before, than after the Reſtoration. But this notorious Truth, it ſeems, did not avail Mr. Pym.

22 Car. II. the King v. Saunders. Raym. 201. B. R.

Information for writing a ſcandalous Libel to H. Rich, who was indebted to him, and kept him out of his Money three Years by obtaining a Protection, and at length getting into the Priſon of the King's Bench. Saunders wrote him a Letter, wherein he tells him, That if he had any Honeſty, Civility, Sobriety, or Humanity, he would not deal ſo by him; and that he would one Day be damned, and be in Hell for his Cheating; and cited ſeveral Places of Scripture to make good his Allegations. The Defendant was found Guilty, and moved in Arreſt of Judgment, that the Subſtance of the Letter is not ſcandalous, but impertinent and inſignificant, &c. Cur. The Letter is provocative, and tends to the incenſing Mr. Rich to break the Peace. The Court adjudged the Letter ſcandalous, and fined him 40 Marks. Keelyng, Twiſden, Rainsford, Moreton, Juſt.

I would intreat the clear-ſighted Barriſter to look carefully into the Words of this Libel, and try if he can diſcover any Truth or Falſhood in them that was capable of Proof. And I muſt remark upon both theſe Caſes, that though they were adjudged in the Reign of K. Charles II. yet neither of them was upon a State-Proſecution, or at a Time when the Spirit of Plots and Factions had infected the Courts of Juſtice; but they remain unqueſtionable Authorities at this Day.

State-Trials, Vol. V. The Caſe of Tutchin is ſtrong againſt him; a Caſe adjudged ſince the Revolution, before that learned and upright Judge Sir John Holt, and plainly ſhews the Fallacy that runs throughout his whole Argument.

The Points inſiſted on by this Chief Juſtice, in his Charge to the Jury, were theſe: 'To ſay that corrupt Officers are appointed to adminiſter Af-'fairs, is certainly a Reflection on the Government. If People ſhould not 'be called to an Account for poſſeſſing the People with an ill Opinion of 'the Government, no Government can ſubſiſt: Now you are to con-'ſider, whether theſe Words I have read to you do not tend to beget an 'ill Opinion of the Adminiſtration of the Government; to tell us, that 'thoſe that are employed know nothing of the Matter, and thoſe that do 'know are not employed. Men are not adapted to Offices, but Offices 'to Men, out of a particular Regard to their Intereſt, and not to their 'Fitneſs for the Places. This is the Purport of theſe Papers.' If this was the Purport of the Papers, and ſo criminal as hath been juſt ſaid, it is amazing ſurely, that Mr. Tutchin did not offer to prove the Truth of theſe Allegations, and thereby take out their Sting! Could not he poſſibly think of as many corrupt or incompetent Officers, Eccleſiaſtical ſiaſtical, Civil, or Military in England, preferred by Intereſt rather than Merit, as there were Judges diſplaced and Courts erected in New York? Or if he was reſtrained, by the hard-hearted Judge, from deſporting himſelf in this pleaſant and ſpacious Field, could he not apply to the private Knowledge which the Jurors (as well as the reſt of Mankind) had of theſe Matters? For I imagine it will be allowed, that if no Inſtances of this Sort could be ſhewn at the Time of Tutchin's Trial, it was the only Period within the Memory of Man, or the Reach of Hiſtory, that wanted the like.

But the Misfortune was, the poor Man was not bleſſed with ſuch ſkilful Counſel as is to be had in Philadelphia, to think of theſe good Things for him; otherwiſe you might have heard an alert Advocate (after returning Thanks to his Lordſhip for nothing) addreſs himſelf to the Jury in this or the like eloquent Strain: 'Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, it is to you 'we muſt appeal for Witneſſes to the Truth of the Facts we have offered, 'and are denied the Liberty to prove: The Law ſuppoſes you to be ſum-'moned out of the Neighbourhood where the Fact is alledged to be com-'mitted; and the Reaſon of your being taken out of the Neighbourhood 'is, becauſe you are ſuppoſed to have the beſt Knowledge of the Fact that 'is to be tried. And were you to find a Verdict againſt my Client, you 'muſt take upon you to ſay, the Papers referred to in the Information, 'and which are proved to be written and publiſhed by us, are falſe, ſcan-'dalous, and ſeditious. You are Citizens of London, honeſt and lawful 'Men, and the Facts which we offer to prove were not committed in a 'Corner; they are notoriouſly known to be true. And as we are denied 'the Liberty of giving Evidence to prove the Truth of what we have pub-'liſhed, I will beg Leave to lay it down as a ſtanding Rule in ſuch Caſes, 'that the ſuppreſſing of Evidence ought always to be taken for the ſtrongeſt 'Evidence; and I hope it will have that Weight with you. Lay your 'Hands upon your Hearts, Gentlemen, and recollect: Do none of you 'know, nay, do not all of you know, certain Perſons, who ſhall be 'nameleſs, that have been lately promoted, by Favour and Intereſt, to 'Places of Truſt and Profit, both in Church and State, Army and Navy, 'whom you muſt know and believe in your Conſciences to be ill Men, 'and no way qualified for ſuch Preferment; as my ſagacious Client has 'moſt ſeaſonably remonſtrated to the Neighbours, by virtue of that Right 'which every free-born Subject hath of publiſhing his Complaints, when 'the Matters ſo publiſhed can be ſupported with Truth?' But is Lord Holt aſleep all this time? Can any reaſonable Man, who has but common Notions of Judicature, imagine that this great Judge would ſuffer ſuch Traſh as this to be thrown out in any Court where he ſat in Judgment? But what muſt he have ſaid, if the Libeller before him had offered to prove, that the Law itſelf was at an end; that Trials by Juries were taken away when a Miniſter pleaſed; that no Man could call any Thing his own, or enjoy any Liberty, longer than thoſe in the Adminiſtration would condeſcend to let him do it? Would he have ſaid, that theſe Things did not tend to poſſeſs the People with an ill Opinion of the Government; and that Governments might well ſubſiſt, though Men ſhould not be called to an Account for publiſhing the like? Or would he have ſaid, it was no matter what Opinion the People had of the Government, nor whether it ſubſiſted or not, provided theſe Aſſertions were true; and ſo have diſcharged the Man as a Publiſher of precious and uſeful Truths, to put the Neighbours on their Guard?

But here alſo the Barriſter lays hold of a random Queſtion, put by one of the King's Counſel to Mr. Montague, who was for the Defendant, and was then touching upon the Affairs of the Navy: Saith the former, Will you ſay they are true? Now the latter had hinted as much as that theſe Things were true; but did it with that Caution which a Man of Skill uſes, when he would ſay ſomething in ſupport of a lame Cauſe, but don't care to preſs an Impropriety too far. For that learned Gentleman was very ſenſible, that if he had preſumed to inſiſt expreſly on the Truth of the Matters contained in his Client's Papers, a ſevere Reprimand was the beſt Thing that could have befallen him. His Words are theſe: Nobody can ſay, that we never had any Miſmanagements in the Royal Navy; and whenever that has happened, the Merchants of England, in all probability, have ſuffered for it. But does the Judge, in his Charge to the Jury, vouchſafe to give this Matter any Anſwer, or ſo much as to mention it? Lord Holt did not uſually paſs by material Things, that were offered in Defence of Perſons tried before him; yet, in this Caſe, he makes no Queſtion or Scruple about the Truth or Falſhood of Tutchin's Papers, although they contained many Things which his Lordſhip, the Jury, and all the World knew to be *. This candid Judge, however, puts the Merits of the Whole upon the Scandal of the Government, and the evil Tendency of ſuch Writings. And therefore I muſt once more call upon the Northern Barriſter to ſhew a ſingle Inſtance, where Witneſſes have been produced by Counſel, and admitted by the Court to prove the Truth of a Libel. When he does this, it will deſerve Conſideration; but till then, he may talk by the Hour without any Meaning.

I could mention ſome Caſes of a more modern Date, that have been adjudged in Weſtminſter-Hall, when this wild Doctrine was not ſo much as thought of, and when it would not have been altogether uſeleſs, had it been practicable; but I have choſe to mention ſuch only as are reported, that the Books may ſpeak for themſelves, and judge between us.

But this Lawyer ſeems to be above having his Points of Law decided by the Authorities of the Law; and has ſomething in Reſerve, which may ſerve to overthrow not only what has been offered in this Paper, but even all the Books of the Law. This is what he calls the Reaſon of the Thing; but is truly and properly a Sketch of his own Politicks; which leads me to ſhew, that the true Reaſon of the Thing here agrees with the Law, and conſequently both theſe are againſt this expert Maſter of Law and Reaſon.

The Reaſon of the Thing, as well as it can be collected from a Heap of Particulars huddled together without Order and Method, may be reduced to the three following Heads:

1. The Form of an Information for a Libel, and the Neceſſity of knowing the Truth or Falſhood of its Contents, in order to direct the Judges in awarding arbitrary Puniſhment.

2. The Right every Man hath of publiſhing his Complaints, when the Matters ſo publiſhed can be ſupported with Truth.

3. The Neceſſity there is of uſing this Right, in the Plantations eſpecially, by reaſon of the Difficulty of obtaining Redreſs againſt evil Governors by any other Means.

1. It will not be improper to premiſe, under the firſt Head, that a Gentleman of the Law, who takes upon him to pronounce ſo magiſterially as the Northern Barriſter has done concerning Libels, ought to have conſidered well the Nature and Extent of his Subject. It might be expected, that he is not unknowing in any Part of Learning neceſſary to fix his Idea of a Libel; and yet the preſent Caſe would appear to be quite different. This learned Gentleman might have informed himſelf, by reading ſome of the ancient Laws before the Conqueſt, that when the Falſity of virulent Writings and Speeches was taken into the Deſcription of the Crime, there was a ſpecifick Penalty annexed, viz. Cutting out the Offender's Tongue, Lamb. Sax. Laws. But this Severity ſeems to have fallen into Diſuſe under the Norman Kings; and accordingly Bracton, who wrote in the Reign of Henry III. gives a Deſcription of theſe Offences, as they were underſtood in his Days, wherein Falſity is neither expreſſed nor implied. Theſe are his Words: Fit autem injuria, non ſolum cum quis pugno percuſſus fuerit, verberatus, vulneratus, vel fuſtibus cæſus; verum cum ei Convitium dictum fuerit, vel de eo factum Carmen famoſum & hujuſmodi, Fol. 155. Indeed, here is no mention of Libels againſt the King, or the State; the Reaſon of which ſeems plainly to be, that Offences of this Sort were conſidered as a Species of Treaſon, not only in that Age, but in ſeveral Ages after, notwithſtanding the Statute 25 Ed. III. and though they have by happy degrees dwindled into Miſdemeanors, yet nobody, except the Barriſter, will ſay they are come to have a greater Indulgence from the Law, than the like Offences againſt private Perſons. How far, therefore, Bracton's Acceptation of a Libel has prevailed ever ſince, muſt be ſubmitted upon what has been offered in the preceding Part of the Remarks.

Here the Barriſter throws in a ſhrewd Queſtion, ariſing from the Form of the Information, which charges the Libel to be falſe: This Word falſe, ſays he, muſt have ſome Meaning, elſe how came it there? I hope Mr. Attorney will not ſay he put it there by chance; and, I am of Opinion, his Information would not be good without it. By way of Anſwer to this, I muſt take Leave to put a Queſtion or two in the ſame Strain. Suppoſe a Man brings an Action of Treſpaſs for violating his Wife, and he fairly ſets forth the Truth of the Caſe, viz. That the Defendant, by amorous Addreſſes, Letters, Preſents, &c. did gain the Conſent of the Plaintiff's Wife, and at length debauched her: I would aſk, whether an Action of Treſpaſs thus laid can be ſupported? I fancy not; and yet this is a more juſt Account of the Matter, than when Vi et Armis, viz. Swords, Staves, Knives, &c. are introduced as Inſtruments of invading this tender Part of our Neighbour's Property. Suppoſe further, a Man kills another, whom he never ſaw or heard of before, and he is accuſed of murdering him of Malice fore-thought, How come ſuch Words to be put into an Indictment for a Fact ſo circumſtanced? They muſt have ſome Meaning; ſurely they are not put there by Chance; and, I am of Opinion, the Indictment would not be good without them? Why, there is this ſhort Anſwer to be given to all theſe childiſh Queſtions: There are many Words uſed in Pleadings of moſt Kinds, ſometimes for Aggravation, ſometimes for Comprehenſion, often in compliance with antient Uſage, which are not traverſable, and many times are incapable of Proof. The Form of Indictments and Informations follows the Nature of the Fact, and ſets it out in its worſt Dreſs; and if the Fact is made appear to be unlawful, all the hard Names are ſupplied by Implication of Law.

This is not all, quoth the Counſellor: 'It is ſaid, that Truth makes a 'Libel the more provoking: Well, let us agree for once, that Truth is 'a greater Sin than Falſhood; yet, as the Offences are not equal, and as 'the Puniſhment is arbitrary, is it not abſolutely neceſſary that they ſhould 'know whether the Libel is true or falſe, that they may by that means 'be able to proportion the Puniſhment? For would it not be a ſad Caſe, 'if the Judges, for want of a due Information, ſhould chance to give as 'ſevere a Judgment againſt a Man for writing or publiſhing a Lye, as for 'writing or publiſhing a Truth?' Now is it not a ſad Caſe, that he ſhould want to be told, that human Laws don't ſtrictly regard the moral Pravity of Actions, but their Tendency to hurt the Community, whoſe Peace and Safety are their principal Objects; ſo that by this Standard only are Puniſhments meaſured? If this profound Sophiſter is of another Opinion, let him give a Reaſon why it ſhould be a greater Crime in our Law for a Man to counterfeit a Silver Shilling, than to cut his Father's Throat.

2. The Right of remonſtrating or publiſhing juſt Complaints, the Barriſter thinks the Right of all Freemen; and ſo think I, provided ſuch Remonſtrances and Complaints are made in a lawful Way. But when he comes to explain, it is not a Court of Juſtice, it is not a Houſe of Repreſentatives, it is not a Legiſlature that is to be troubled (as he phraſes it) with theſe Things. Who then, I pray, is to be troubled with them; for the King, it ſeems, is out of the Queſtion? Let the Barriſter ſpeak for himſelf: They have a Right (ſays he) publickly to remonſtrate againſt the Abuſes of Power in the ſtrongeſt Terms, to put their Neighbours upon their Guard, &c. and in another Place, he ſpeaks of it as a Hardſhip, if a Man muſt be taken up as a Libeller, for telling his Sufferings to his Neighbour. Now, though I wiſh and hope, as earneſtly as he can do, that a free People may never want the Means of uttering their juſt Complaints, and of redreſſing their Wrongs too, when their Complaints are not heard; yet I always thought theſe Things were better underſtood than expreſſed in a Court of Law; and I ſhall probably remain in that Opinion, till the learned Gentleman can produce ſomething from the Common or Statute Law to ſhew, that a Britiſh Subject has a Right of appealing publickly to his Neighbours (that is, to the Collective Body of the People), when he is injured in his Perſon, Rights, or Poſſeſſions. When I am aſſured that he can do this, I promiſe him I ſhall not grudge a Voyage to that Country, where Liberty is ſo well underſtood, and ſo freely enjoyed, that I may receive the important Diſcovery from his own inſtructive Mouth.

I know the Law-Books aſſert the Right of complaining to the Magiſtrates and Courts of Juſtice, to the Parliament, to the King himſelf; but a Right of complaining to the Neighbours is what has not occured to me. After all, I would not be thought to derogate, by any Thing I have ſaid, or ſhall ſay, from that noble Privilege of a free People, the Liberty of the Preſs. I think it the Bulwark of all other Liberty, and the ſureſt Defence againſt Tyranny and Oppreſſion. But ſtill it is a two-edged Weapon, capable of cutting both ways, and is not therefore to be truſted in the hands of every diſcontented Fool, or deſigning Knave. Men of Senſe and Addreſs (who alone deſerve publick Attention) will ever be able to convey proper Ideas to the People, in a Time of Danger, without running counter to all Order and Decency, or crying Fire and Murder through the Streets, if they chance to awake from a frightful Dream. But I muſt again urge, that theſe Points are not fit to be diſcuſſed in a Court of Juſtice, whoſe Juriſdiction is circumſcribed by poſitive and known Laws: Beſides, they take place properly in a ſovereign State, which has no Superior on Earth; and where an injured People can expect no Relief, but from an Appeal to Heaven. This is far from being the Caſe of Colonies; and therefore I come to ſhew, under the third Head, that the Barriſter's Reaſon of the Thing is no other than Reaſon inverted, which poſſibly may help the Projects of a Demagogue in America, but can never be reconciled to the Sentiments of a Lawyer, or the Principles of a Patriot, conſidered as a Subject of Great Britain.

3. I have hitherto been taught to believe, that when a brave and free People have reſorted to Meaſures unauthorized by the ordinary Courſe of the Laws, ſuch Meaſures have been juſtified by the extraordinary Neceſſity of the Caſe, which excluded all other Means of Redreſs: And, as far as I underſtand the Conſtitution, and have heard Accounts of the Britiſh Colonies, ſuch a Caſe cannot well happen, and has never yet happened among them. But here the Barriſter is ready to aſk, how muſt we behave when we are oppreſſed by a Governor, in a Country where the Courts of Law are ſaid to have no coercive Power over his Perſon, and where the Repreſentatives of the People are, by his Intrigues, made Accomplices of his Iniquity? Certainly it can't be a new Diſcovery to tell this Lawyer, that as the Governor is a Creature of the Crown, ſo the moſt natural and eaſy Courſe is to look up to the Hand that made him. And I imagine it may be affirmed (without catching an Occaſion of offering Incenſe to Majeſty), that if one Half of the Facts contained in Zenger's Papers, and vouched for true by his Counſel, had been fairly repreſented and proved at home, Mr. Coſby would not have continued much longer in his Government; and then the City of New York might have applied to itſelf the Inſcription of the Gold Box, Demerſæ Leges, timefacta Libertas hæc tandem emergunt, with greater Propriety and Security, than could poſſibly be derived from the impetuous Harangue of any Lawyer whatſoever. I am the more emboldened to ſay thus much, becauſe though it is my Lot to dwell in a Colony where Liberty has not always been well underſtood, at leaſt not freely enjoyed, yet I have known a Governor brought to Juſtice, within theſe laſt twenty Years, who was not only ſupported by a Council and Aſſembly, beſides a numerous Party here, but alſo by powerful Friends at home; all which Advantages were not able to ſcreen him from Cenſure, Diſgrace, and a Removal from the Truſt he had abuſed.

It is not always neceſſary, that particular Perſons ſhould leave their Affairs and Families in the Plantations to proſecute a Governor in Weſtminſter-Hall, unleſs their Fortunes are equal to the Expence; for it is ſeldom ſeen, that the Violence of a bad Governor terminates in private Injuries, inaſmuch as he can't find his Account in any Thing leſs than what is of a general and publick Nature. And when this is the Caſe, I hope none of our Colonies are, even at this Time, ſo deſtitute, but that they can find the Means of making a regular Application to their Sovereign, either in Perſon, or in his Courts at Weſtminſter, as their Caſe may require.

But the wild Inconſiſtency that ſhines through moſt Parts of this Orator's Speech, is peculiarly glaring in that Part of it now before me. The Remedy which he ſays our Conſtitution preſcribes, for curing or preventing the Diſeaſes of an evil Adminiſtration in the Colonies, I ſhall give in his own Words: 'Has it not been often ſeen (and I hope it will always 'be ſeen), that when the Repreſentatives of a free People are, by juſt Re'preſentations or Remonſtrances, made ſenſible of the Sufferings of their 'Fellow-Subjects, by the Abuſe of Power in the Hands of a Governor, 'they have declared (and loudly too), that they were not obliged by any 'Law to ſupport a Governor, who goes about to deſtroy a Province or 'Colony,' &c. One would imagine, at firſt ſight, that this Man had the ſame Notion, with the reſt of Mankind, of juſt Repreſentations and Remonſtrances to the Repreſentatives of a free People, which has ever been underſtood to be by way of Petition or Addreſs, directed and preſented to them in Form; in which Caſe it is hoped that they, being moved by the Complaints of the People, will ſtretch forth their Arms to help them. But, alas! we are all miſtaken; for he tells us, in the ſame Breath, that the right way is by telling our Sufferings to our Neighbours in Gazettes and News-papers; for the Repreſentatives are not to be troubled with every Injury done by a Governor; beſides, they are ſometimes in the Plot with the Governor, and the injured Party can have no Redreſs from their Hands; ſo that the firſt Complaint (inſtead of the laſt Reſort) muſt be to the Neighbours, and ſo come about to the Repreſentatives through that Channel.

Now I would be very glad to know, what the Neighbours can do towards effecting the deſired Reformation, that will be attended with ſo good Succeſs, and ſo few ill Conſequences, as a regular Application to his Majeſty would be. It would be pleaſant, doubtleſs, to hear this Politician ſpeak out and explain himſelf at large upon this Subject. I confeſs it ſurpaſſes my Comprehenſion to conceive what the Neighbours, inſpired with weekly Revelations from the City Journaliſt, can do with their Governor and Aſſembly, unleſs it be to reform them by thoſe perſuaſive Arguments which the major vis never wants good Store of. If this be the Patriot's Meaning, his Words may poſſibly be underſtood; but without this Meaning they are mere Jargon.

In a word, I ſhall agree with the Barriſter (and ſo take my Leave of him), that the Liberty of expoſing and oppoſing arbitrary Power is the Right of a free People; and he ought, at the ſame time, to admit, that the Order of Things, and the Peace of Society, require that extraordinary Means ſhould not be uſed for this Purpoſe, till the ordinary have failed in the Experiment. The ſupreme Magiſtrate of an independent Kingdom or State, cannot always be controuled by the one, and then the other is juſtified by that Conſideration. But in Colonies, that are from their Creation ſubordinate to their Mother-Country, there is no Perſon who is not controulable by regular and well-known Methods of proceeding; and conſequently there can be no abſolute Neceſſity of flying to Extremities, at leaſt in the firſt Inſtance. From all which, I conceive, it follows, that local Conſiderations, upon which the Gentleman lays ſo great Streſs, conclude directly againſt him; and I hope the Security which the Britiſh Conſtitution affords to every Man's Perſon, Property, and Reputation, as well as to the publick Tranquility, is not leſſened by any Diſtance from the Fountain of Power and Juſtice; but that a Libel is a Libel, and puniſhable as ſuch in America, as well as in Europe.

I am ſenſible, there is a Freedom of Expreſſion uſed in theſe Papers, of which I ſhould diſapprove in the common Caſes of Controverſy; but I found myſelf under a Neceſſity of ſhewing no Reſpect to the Performance under Conſideration, unleſs I were to forfeit the little that might be due to the Remarks. For though a Lawyer is free, nay obliged by the Duty of his Profeſſion, to make the moſt of the Cauſe he eſpouſes, (his real Sentiments being ſuſpended for that Time, by reaſon of the Bias under which he acts) yet, when he draws his private Opinion into the Debate, and intereſts his Paſſions in the Succeſs of it, he then departs from his Character, and becomes a Party, rather than an Advocate. In ſhort, there is an Air of Self-ſufficiency and Confidence mixed with the whole Lump, enough to give a Diſreliſh even to good Senſe and good Law; but is nauſeous, beyond all bearing, when neither of theſe is found. Among Lawyers, I was ſure this Lawyer deſerved no Anſwer; and yet an Anſwer ſeemed indiſpenſible, not only for the Reaſons given at my ſetting out, but alſo in order to ſave many well-meaning People from reverencing a Piece of Buffoonery, that had been thruſt into the World with ſo much florid Conceit, and a Gold Box tagged to the End of it: A Piece, wherein the whole Common-place of popular Declamation (equally adapted to all popular Occaſions) is exhauſted, and the Holy Scriptures brought in to ſeaſon his Jokes. But as this laſt ſeems deſigned only for a Sally of Wit and Humour, I ſhall not offer to detract from its Merit; conſidering too, it had ſo happy an Effect as to ſet the good People a-laughing, when they heard the Word of God moſt ingeniouſly burleſqued in a Chriſtian Court: A Piece that hardly ſhews the Author to have been ſerious when he pronounced it, or his wiſe Benefactors when they rewarded him; but that his ſolemn Profeſſions of Principle and Duty compel a charitable Mind to ſuſpect his Knowledge rather than his Sincerity; and Citizens are ever thought to be in earneſt, when they part with their Gold and ſhew their Learning.

Sir, I ought to make an Apology to you for treſpaſſing ſo long upon your Patience, which might have been better employed; but I flatter myſelf with the Hopes of having ſome Allowance made for an honeſt, though weak Attempt to reſcue the Profeſſion of the Law, and the Intereſt of lawful Liberty, from the Diſgrace thrown upon both in one of our Siſter-Colonies. This is the Truth, and let it be my Excuſe.

I am yours, &c.

ANGLO-AMERICANUS.

LETTER II.

SIR,

IT muſt be mortifying, no doubt, to a Perſon who has received peculiar Marks of publick Approbation to be told, that the very Act which procured it was ſo far from being commendable, that it really deſerved a ſevere Cenſure; and one would the rather decline ſuch an Office, how juſt ſoever the Occaſion, becauſe it cannot be done without condemning at the ſame time the Judgment of thoſe whoſe Suffrage had been thus unworthily obtained. But when the Laws are openly perverted, and Courts of Juſtice, with an Air of Gravity, drolled out of their eſtabliſhed Rules, by ſuch whoſe Profeſſion ſuppoſes them Miniſters of Juſtice; and when this too ſhall be dignified with Applauſe, and made highly meritorious; I conceive neither Good-nature, nor the Solemnity of Publick Seals, ſhould reſtrain an honeſt Pen from exploding the Practice, in order as well to ſtop the Progreſs of its evil Effects, as to prevent the like Attempts for the future.

Virtue and Merit, it is moſt certain, ought to be encouraged, eſpecially by all in Authority; but when that which is merely counterfeit ſhall gain Eſteem, ſtand in the room of what is truly genuine, and be actually loaded with the Rewards thereof, it does not only fruſtrate the original Intention of ſuch Rewards, but likewiſe give Countenance to the Impoſtor, and furniſh him with ſtill further Means of vending his falſe Wares, in prejudice of the Publick. Now this, with all due Submiſſion, I take to be the Caſe of the Corporation in North America, with regard to the Honours they were lately pleaſed to confer on a noted Barriſter in thoſe Parts, for his ſuppoſed Services in the Affair of Zenger the Printer, whoſe Trial has been ſo plentifully diſperſed here, and in other Places. Aggregate Bodies, we find, may be miſtaken, and too often are, as well as private Men; and when they do err, it is of the more dangerous Conſequence, on account of the Extent of their Power and Influence. The Province in general of New York, or the City in particular, might, for aught I know, have ſufficient Cauſe of Complaint, in ſome Reſpects, againſt their then Commander in Chief, and his Adminiſtration; but it is to be conſidered, that as there never was one abſolutely free from Faults, ſo it is the great Privilege of the Inhabitants of every Britiſh Government, that a proper Channel is chalked out, in all ſuch Events, and a Way open for Relief. The Method, therefore, which the Conſtitution preſcribes ought to be ſtrictly purſued; and any illegal Deviation is not only inconſiſtent, and unjuſtifiable in itſelf, but has, beſides, a Tendency to introduce Miſchiefs more to be dreaded even than thoſe that were ſought to be redreſſed. It is the Law which muſt be the Standard of Right and Wrong; and whoever has Recourſe to any other Aid, or knowingly adviſes thereto, in the Caſe of particular Grievances, cannot act on a true Principle of Publick Spirit, but muſt be influenced by unworthy Motives, and is always more or leſs an Enemy to the Community, according to his Situation, and in proportion to the Talents he happens to poſſeſs. If Mr. Zenger then will avowedly publiſh ſeditious Libels againſt the Government under which he lives, and his Counſel will offer to ſupport him by Artifices unbecoming the Long Robe, and advancing Propoſitions manifeſtly contrary to Law; as the former deſerves to be puniſhed by it, ſo the latter, I humbly preſume to ſay, whatever he may claim from his Client, ought not to be paid his Wages by any Sett of Men who owe their Being to the Law, and cannot exiſt without it.

But I ſhall not ſcruple to acknowledge here, and I do it on no ſuperficial Obſervation, that there can't be a more pernicious Creature, in a diſtant Colony, than that of a Practitioner of the Law, with much Aſſurance, little Knowledge, and no Morals; a Character not unheard of in more than one of his Majeſty's Plantations, and which yet I would by no Means apply to Mr. Hamilton, any otherwiſe than may appear to be juſt, from the Performance he has, it ſeems, taken ſo much Pains to publiſh to the World. The judicious Remarks already made upon it by Anglo-Americanus, will hardly leave Room for any Thing to be added that is very material; and therefore I ſhall content myſelf with a few Gleanings only, and make ſome curſory Reflections thereon, whilſt they afford me an Opportunity of bearing my Teſtimony alſo againſt what I think the moſt indecent Behaviour at leaſt, if it may not be called the boldeſt Outrage, that ever was exhibited from the Bar, without a ſuitable Chaſtiſement.

Whoever has enquired into the Doctrine of Libels, and the Reaſon of their Puniſhment, will perceive, that they take their Degrees as they affect private Perſons, particular Magiſtrates, or are aimed againſt the Government itſelf; and I may venture to ſay, that no Lawyer of Reputation will deny but what is ſet forth in the Information againſt John Peter Zenger was of this laſt Kind, and that too conceived in the groſſeſt Terms, ſuch as will not admit of a different Conſtruction, or of any other Meaning than what is put upon them by the Proſecutor for the Crown. Now I am ſenſible, that great Allowances are, with good Reaſon, made to Counſel in the Heat of Argument, and when ſuppoſed to be animated with a laudable Zeal for their Clients. Nor has it been uſual to correct them for every harſh and haſty Expreſſion, provided they keep within Bounds, and ſtick to that which is their Duty, without running into Matters that have no Relation to the Iſſue, and cannot fairly ſerve the Side they eſpouſe. Yet, as the Lord Chancellor Nottingham occaſionally ſaid, Counſel ſhould not ſpeak as if they would abet the Guilt of their Clients rather than advocate for their Innocency. And ſince your ingenious Correſpondent has clearly evinced, that the Truth of a Libel cannot be given in Evidence, that it is no Juſtification, on the general Iſſue, and conſequently no proper Defence to a Charge of that Nature (of all which Mr. Hamilton could not, or ought not to have been ignorant), it is worthy of Conſideration whether he did not involve himſelf in his Client's Crime, and partake of his Guilt, by declaring in the moſt publick Manner, that the Facts publiſhed in the News-Papers, and contained in the Information, were true; and offering to prove them to be ſo before a Court, which had no Power to redreſs the Grievances complained of, 4 Co. 14. Hob. 166. 7.

Sir Bartholomew Shower, I remember, in his Argument in the Caſe of the King againſt Berchet & al. aſſerts, that 'in all Caſes of Contempts 'to a Court, no Preſentment is neceſſary, no not ſo much as to convict; 'for if done in Facie Curiæ, a Record may be made of it, and a Puniſh-'ment judicially inflicted, and that executed immediately, Show. Rep. 110.' And agreeable hereto, we find, that in a late Caſe of the King againſt Thorogood, Trin. 9 Geor. primi, the Defendant having made an Affidavit in C. B. and appearing on Summons, confeſſed that he made it, and that it was falſe; whereupon the Court recorded his Confeſſion, and ordered that he ſhould be taken into Cuſtody and ſtand in the Pillory, &c. which was executed accordingly the laſt Day of the Term. Mod. Ca. in Law & Eq. 179, 180. This is the more remarkable, becauſe it was in the Court of Common-Pleas, which has ordinarily no Juriſdiction in Criminal Caſes.—May it not from hence be inferred (I hint it with a due Saving to all the juſt Privileges of the Bar) that the Court at New-York might well have recorded ſome of the moſt ſeditious Expreſſions in Mr. Hamilton's Rhapſody, and committed him for the ſame, &c.? If they had, I doubt the Blame muſt have centered in himſelf, and his own Conduct; of which therefore he might then have had Leiſure to repent, as well as of his long Journey to ſo ill a Purpoſe.

But it will not be amiſs, perhaps for Example Sake, to give an Inſtance of what has been done on the like Occaſion with that before us; and to this End I ſhall cite a Caſe in the Court of King's-Bench, many Years after that of the Star-Chamber was at an End, and which, in the Words of Sir Thomas Raymond, was as followeth: 'Memorandum, June 18, 1680, 'Mr. Nathaniel Reading having been convicted (before Juſtices of Oyer 'and Terminer by vertue of a ſpecial Commiſſion) for endeavouring to 'perſuade Bedlow, who was a Witneſs againſt the Noblemen impriſoned 'in the Tower of London, to forbear his Proſecution of them; and he the 'ſaid Mr. Reading having had Judgment executed upon him, by being ſet 'in the Pillory, and fined 1000 l. and impriſoned for the ſame, but his 'Fine ſince pardoned by the King, came this Day into Court, and demanded that an Information, which he there brought in his Hand, might 'be received by Mr. Aſtrey againſt the Commiſſioners who condemned 'him, of which my Brother Jones and Brother Dolben were two, and that 'the Information might be filed. But the Court did declare, that he was 'in the wrong Way to exhibit any Information in this Manner, and did 'cauſe his Words, whereby he did accuſe the two Judges of Oppreſſion, 'to be recorded; and for theſe Words, and for that he was infamous by 'having been on the Pillory, the Gentlemen at the Bar did pray that his 'Gown might be pulled over his Ears, he having been formerly a Practicer at the Bar, which was ordered and executed in Court; and he was 'alſo condemned in Court to pay the King 500 l. and to lie in Priſon till 'he paid it, Raym. Rep. 376.' The Trial of this Gentleman referred to here, may be ſeen in the State Trials, Vol. II. p. 253. on which Occaſion the Lord Chief-Juſtice North made a Speech aggravating the Defendant's Offence as he was a Counſel, one who ought to be a Man of Knowledge, and a Miniſter of Juſtice to aſſiſt the Court wherein he pleaded. He ſaid, he thought the Court ought to ſhew a more than ordinary Severity againſt ſuch an one; and that 'tis a great Credit and Benefit to the Profeſſion, that the Members of it for ſuch Offences ſhould be dealt with more ſeverely than we ſhould deal in other Caſes. Id. p. 374, 5. Far be it from me to make any invidious Compariſon here betwixt the preſent Practicer in Pennſilvania, and the quondam one in Weſtminſter-Hall, though they are both celebrated, the one in the Trial of Mr. Zenger, and the other in his own. It may however be noted, that the latter was ſaid to be artful and affectedly eloquent, and to have ſtreve to lead the Judges out of the Way, while he was told by the Chief-Juſtice, that his Defence was artificial, becauſe it was nothing to the Purpoſe; and by another of the Judges, that he diſgraced his Profeſſion by making ſo weak a Defence. But without adverting to any particular Beauties in the modern Performance, this is certain, that Counſellor Reading loſt the Bar-Gown by his Art, and Counſellor Hamilton got a Gold-Box of five Ounces, with the Freedom of the City of New-York, by his. A pregnant Inſtance of the Capriciouſneſs of Fate, and of the Juſtneſs of your late Correſpondent's Obſervation at the Entrance to his excellent Remarks!

The Gentlemen at the Bar (as indeed it might well be expected from their Education, and the Nature of their Buſineſs) have been remarkable for obſerving the Regard that is due to all in Authority with the utmoſt Delicacy; and in Return have always been uſed with ſuitable Reſpect. But that the Lawyer of Philadelphia may ſee the Courts of Juſtice in former Ages, as well as of late Years, did not ſpare the unruly Members of the Profeſſion any more than others, for much leſs faulty Behaviour than that of the leading Counſel in Zenger's Trial, I will refer him to a Caſe which happened Mich. 13 Eliz. Rot. 39. when Henry Blaundford, a Counſellor at Law, was committed to the Fleet, and fined, for falſely reporting the Opinion of the Lord Leiceſter and Secretary Cecil with theſe Words, Humanum eſt errare. And that even Noblemen met with the like Treatment on ſuch Occaſions, will appear from the Caſe of the Lord Stourton, who, 19 Hen. VIII. was committed by the Court, and fined for ſaying theſe Words, I am ſorry to ſee Rhetorick rule where Law ſhould.

Before I proceed, I will mention one Caſe more, purely to ſhew how dangerous it is to afford any unlawful Helps to Perſons on their Trials in Criminal Proſecutions, even though it be merely by Way of private Inſtructions, when ſuch Inſtructions are to be publickly made uſe of, and import Scandal to the Government. It is the Caſe of the King againſt Aaron Smith, Mich. 35 Car. II. in B. R. 'This Term (ſays the Book 'which has the Allowance of all the Judges) Aaron Smith was brought into 'Court, being formerly Convicted on a Trial at Bar, for delivering to 'Stephen College, being upon his Trial at Oxford for High-Treaſon, a Pa-'per of Inſtructions, full of ſcandalous Reflections upon the King and 'Government; as, that they might as well have hanged him at Tyburn as 'he came by, as brought him thither, only to murder him with a little 'more Formality. For which the Court gave Judgment, that he ſhould 'pay a Fine of 500 l. ſtand on the Pillory twice, and be of the good Be-'haviour for a Twelve-month, Skinner's Rep. 124.' I ſhall only obſerve this Caſe was on an Information, ſo much inveighed againſt by Zenger's Counſel, and yet I never heard it cenſured at all, as was that of poor College, I own, with too good Reaſon.

It is now Time to take Notice, that there is, amidſt a Heap of Jargon and Abſurdities, one obvious Miſtake, which runs throughout Mr. Hamilton's oſtentatious Harangue, and that is in Relation to the Court of Star-Chamber. He would ſuggeſt, that becauſe that Court was aboliſhed by Act of Parliament, on Account of ſome inſufferable Abuſes that had crept into it, all the Caſes that had been adjudged there, on Informations for Libels, were conſequently of no Authority. Whereas the Judgments given there, in Matters properly cognizable before them, which Libelling eſpecially was, are allowed to be good Law at this Day, and are conſtantly quoted as ſuch in the Court of King's-Bench. Indeed it is ſaid, that the Reaſon of diſallowing the Star-Chamber Court, was becauſe their Authority was before, and now is, in B. R. and conſequently that Court unneceſſary, Comb. 36. So the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt declared, that B. R. poſſeſt all the lawful Power the Star-Chamber had, Id. 142. And that the Court of Star-Chamber was taken away, becauſe the Crimes were puniſhable here, 5 Mod. 464. which is likewiſe intimated by the Statute itſelf. Now though I am as well ſatisfied perhaps with the taking away of the Court of Star-Chamber, conſidering the Occaſion that had been given, as our Northern Barriſter can poſſibly be, and ſhould equally rejoice, I hope, at the redreſſing any other publick Grievance; yet I cannot, with him, condemn by the Lump, and argue, that becauſe that Court did ſome things amiſs, therefore it did nothing right. At this Rate, every Court that had, or has a Being, may be in Danger of the ſame Epithets he loves to beſtow on that we are ſpeaking of; and it may as well be ſuppoſed, that becauſe a certain Sett of Citizens, not unknown to Mr. Hamilton, lately did a very ſilly Thing, they therefore never did a wiſe one. For which Reaſon I preſume it will not be altogether impertinent to produce the Sentiments of that Oracle of the Law, Sir Edward Coke, concerning the Court of Star-Chamber. 'It is (ſays he) the moſt honourable 'Court, our Parliament excepted, that is in the Chriſtian World, both 'in reſpect of the Judges, and of their honourable Proceedings according 'to their juſt Juriſdiction, and the ancient and juſt Orders of the Court. 'For the Judges of the ſame are, the Grandees of the Realm, the Lord 'Chancellor, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Preſident of the King's 'Council, the Lord Privy Seal, all the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, 'and others of the King's moſt Honourable Privy Council, and the Prin-'cipal Judges of the Realm, and ſuch other Lords of Parliament as the 'King ſhall name. And they judge upon Confeſſion, or Depoſition of 'Witneſſes. And the Court cannot ſit for hearing of Cauſes under the 'Number of eight at the leaſt. And it is truly ſaid, Curia Cameræ Stellatæ, ſi vetuſtatem ſpectemus, eſt antiquiſſima, ſi dignitatem, honoratiſſima. 'This Court, the right Inſtitution and ancient Orders thereof being ob-'ſerved, doth keep all England in Quiet.' (4th Inſt. p. 64.) Conformable hereto, a late learned Writer, who was advanced to the higheſt Poſts in the Law in a neighbouring Kingdom to that of our Mother Country, and wherein he died, has a Paragraph, which I believe will give us a truer Account of the Court itſelf, and the Aboliſhment of it, than what is to be learned from our Barriſter's Speech at New-York, and therefore I will inſert it here *. 'The Court of Star-'Chamber, whilſt kept within due Bounds, was certainly of the great-'eſt Uſe to preſerve the Peace and Security of the Kingdom; and 'perhaps was the only Court which by its ordinary and proper Juriſdic-'tion, could effectually prevent and puniſh Riots, Perjuries, and other

* See A Diſcourſe concerning Treaſons and Bills of Attainder, p. 94. Printed Anno 1716, wrote by Mr. Weſt, afterwards Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who alſo wrote an ingenious and learned Treatiſe, entitled, An Inquiry into the Manner of creating Peers.

'Miſdemeanours

'Misdemeanors of the highest Nature. But being made use of by the 'Court to support Proclamations and Orders of State, and to vindicate 'illegal Commissions and Monopolies, that Extension of their Power be-'came a Grievance insupportable, and the Nation was never easy 'till 'that Court was entirely suppressed by Act of Parliament. The House of 'Commons were so eager in their Zeal to destroy what they called a Court 'of Inquisition, that though the Bill was of so great Consequence, yet 'they sent it up to the Lords, with only once reading it, and without its 'being ever committed, which was a Thing, perhaps, never before heard 'of in Parliament. Cla. V. 1. 223.'

I need only add on this Head, that the Crime of Libelling is the same now as it was while the Court of the Star-Chamber subsisted, and the Nature of the Offence the same then as now; a Crime that must necessarily be punished as long as there are States and Communities established in the World. And our assuming Barrister will not find an Author that treats of the Crown Law since the Statute of 16 Cha. I. Ch. 10. any more than before, but makes use of the Cases adjudged in the Star-Chamber generally as good Law, and of equal Authority in those Matters with such as were afterwards adjudged in the King's Bench. Some indeed are justly liable to Exception in the former, as we have also known too many in the latter, particularly during the next succeeding Reign of Ch. II. none whereof are, however, God be praised, to be met with, or heard of since the glorious and happy Revolution in 1688, which, I trust, has for ever excluded all Partiality and Oppression from Westminster-Hall.

But the learned Lawyer of Philadelphia declares, That he has not, in all his reading, met with an Authority that says we cannot be admitted to give the Truth in Evidence upon an Information for a Libel. I don't know what this Gentleman's reading may be; but if he had read some of the Cases above-mentioned, which could not well escape him, it might reasonably have been expected he would have taken Warning, been a little more cautious, and not have ventured to incur the Penalties which others before him had so justly suffered. By all his reading, he would insinuate, I suppose, that he had read all: and if that was true, it might well be thought he had read to very little Purpose, who could make so ill an Use of it, or think it a Duty on him to go to the utmost Parts of the Land, to propagate Doctrines and Principles diametrically opposite to, and just the Reverse of what he must have read. We shall soon discover that the Barrister's Reading is not quite so extensive as he would have it imagined. But it is previously to be observed, that if there was no such Authority in terminis as that he calls for, a Man who reads with any tolerable Understanding would of course infer the same Thing, when all the Books on the Subject of Libels lay it down as a Rule, which they unanimously do, that it is not material whether the Libel be true or false. For if that be not material, to what End should the Truth be offered in Evidence? Or, how should it be rejected before it was offered, which undoubtedly is the Reason that there have been no late Instances of that Sort. It might suffice therefore to undertake, as often as this well-read Lawyer produced a Precedent of its being demanded from the Bar to give Evidence of the Truth of a Libel, to shew that it was as often denied by the Court. And though I admit it has been attempted before, on Trials for Libels of the less enormous Kinds, yet he is probably the only one that has done it in any Case within these hundred Years. However, if we would find an Instance of that Sort, we must necessarily have Recourse to the Proceedings of the Court where that Crime was usually punished. The Star-Chamber Reports then may satisfy Mr. Hamilton, that Term Pasc. 7 Car. I. there was the Case of Coston, Gent. v. Hitcham, Mil. Servient. ad legem, as follows: 'The De-'fendant, the Morning before he went to the Sessions, being a Justice of 'the Peace, received scandalous and libellous Articles against the Plain-'tiff, carried them to the Sessions in his Pocket, and, in open Court, in dis-'grace of the Plaintiff, pulled them out and said, You shall see what a lewd 'Fellow this is, and not fit to speak in this Place; and then caused the 'said libellous Articles to be read in the publick Sessions. And the Plaintiff 'then desiring a Copy of them, and to be tried upon them, the Witnes-'ses to prove them being noted in the Margin, the Defendant did not 'suffer him to have a Copy, or to be tried thereupon, nor took any 'Course that he might at the next Sessions, or at any Time after be 'questioned for them, but took the Articles again out of the Sessions and 'carried them away. And after, further to disgrace the Plaintiff in his 'Practice (being an Attorney), sent the said Articles to Mr. Justice Har-'vey, at the Reference of a Cause to him, which Coston attended; and a 'Jury having given a Verdict against the Defendant, he sent for the 'Jurors and questioned them about their Verdict, and told them they 'were a Company of Fools, and that if there had been but one wise Man 'among them, their Verdict had not been so. And for these Offences 'he was committed to the Fleet, and fined 200 l. In this Cause, the 'Defendant would have had Witnesses to prove the Matter of the said 'scandalous Articles to be true, but that was disallowed by the Court. 'Rush. Col. vol. III. p. 36. in Append.' This, I presume, the Barrister, when he is serious, will allow to be in point, though it happened not to fall in the Way of his Reading. He cannot object, surely, that it does not appear to be on an Information preferred by the Attorney-General, since it is a much stronger Case than if it had. For if the Court would not receive such Evidence in a Cause depending on the Complaint of a petty Solicitor for being libelled, and this too preferred against a Justice of Peace, a Knight, and a Serjeant at Law; a fortiori, they would never admit it on an Information exhibited, by his Majesty's Attorney-General, against a private Person, for libelling the Government.

There was also, as I have learned, divers Years before, viz. Mich. 2 Jac. the Case of Peter Brereton, Clerk, for writing a scandalous Letter to Loyd, Register of the Bishop of St. Asaph, and sent to himself, who was therein charged with Bribery and Extortion in his Office; for which libellous Letter the Defendant was sentenc'd, though, as the Book has it, he would have undertaken to prove the Contents of the Letter to be true. Here then are two Precedents of what the Barrister himself had never met with in all his reading; the one in a Case for libelling a practising Attorney, and the other of the Register of a Bishop's Court; but I believe I may defy this Gentleman, if he were to read as many more Years as he has done, to produce a third, where the Offence under Prosecution, being of the highest Degree, and levelled at the Government, like that for which he was so zealous an Advocate, the Counsel for the Defendant dared to offer Evidence of the Truth of it. On the contrary, if he had dipt into the Lord Chief Justice Keeling's Reports, fol. 23. (before he left his Chambers) he would have there found it resolved by the whole Court, that though a Counsellor at Law may plead his Client's Cause against the King, yet, if under Colour of that he takes upon him to vent Sedition he is to be punished.

It is no Wonder, indeed, if our Barrister should be unapprized of Brereton's Case, it not being (at least to my Knowledge) in Print; and you perceive I was under no Necessity of mentioning it, being before provided with an Authority to my Purpose. But it is reported, as above, in Sir Thomas Mallet's MS. Treatise of the Court of Star-Chamber, a Copy whereof has fallen into my Hands by the Favour of a Friend. And since I have named this Work, I shall, with his Leave, take a Paragraph out of it, which, I am persuaded, will not be deemed unsuitable to the present Debate, after hinting that the Book seems to be wrote in the Time of James I. when the Doctrine now revived, and so tenaciously advanced by Mr. Hamilton, is said to have been long before exploded as a gross Error. 'There are (says Sir Thomas) two gross Errors crept into the World 'concerning Libels; the one, that it is no Libel if the Party put his 'Hand unto it, and the other, that it is not a Libel if it be true; both 'which have been long since exploded out of this Court. For the first, 'the Cause why the Law punisheth Libels is, for that they tend to raise 'the Breach of the Peace, which may as well be done, and more easily, 'when the Hand is subscribed, than when it is not. And for the other, 'it hath been ever agreed, that it is not the Matter but the Manner which 'is punishable. For libelling against a common Strumpet is as great an 'Offence as against an honest Woman, and perhaps more dangerous to the 'Breach of the Peace; for, as the Woman said, she should never grieve 'to be told of her red Nose, if she had not one indeed. Neither is it a 'Ground to examine the Truth or Falshood of a Libel, because it is sub 'Judice, whether it be a Libel or not; for that takes away Subjectum 'Quæstionis, and determines it to be no Libel, by admitting the Defen-'dant to prove the Truth; and the Defendant in that Case ought to plead 'a Justification and Demur in Law. But if he plead Not Guilty, the 'Question is gone, whether it be a Libel or not.' Thus, according to this Author's Opinion, who, if I mistake not, was one of the Justices of the Court of King's Bench in his Time, Mr. Hamilton, could he really have persuaded himself that the Matters charged in the Information were not libellous, as he insists they are not, would have discovered more Accuracy in his Profession, as well as Candour in his Practice, by advising his Client to demur to it, whereby he would have admitted no more than what was avowed at the Trial on the general Issue. Then, indeed, it would have fairly come before the Court to be considered whether the Papers were libellous or not, and he, as Counsel for the Defendant, might regularly have been heard to it.

He would then have been at Liberty to exert his uncommon Talents, manifest his extraordinary reading, his superior Genius and great Skill in Language, and in explaining the true Import of Words, without so directly flying in the Face of every Authority, and opposing all the Cases that ever were adjudged concerning Libels, before he was born and since. But alas! that would not have answered the Intention of our eloquent Barrister. He would not then have had it in his Power to use his Arts, and play his Game with a dozen honest Men, of as good natural Understandings, perhaps, though not of equal Experience and Cunning with himself. If he had gone that Way to Work, he would have had no Chance for the Prize. Vain had been his Expedition, and lost, entirely lost, all his Labour. In a Word, if the Learning and Integrity of the Bar only were required, he might as well have staid at Home, where, if I am rightly informed, there are Instances in abundance of the blessed Effects of Mr. Hamilton's well-known Principles.

This sagacious Gentleman begs Leave to observe, that Informations for Libels is a Child, if not born, yet nursed up and brought to full Maturity in the Court of Star-Chamber: But what is particularly to be inferred from this shrewd Observation, he does not at present tell us. If the Star-Chamber was the Court where Crimes of this Nature were generally punished, according to its ordinary and proper Jurisdiction, as it certainly was, how should it be otherwise than that Informations for Libels must be met with there? And considering the Antiquity of that Court, 'tis more than probable the Crime was first prosecuted and punished in it. But what then? Is the Legitimacy of the Child (if I may be allowed to carry on the Metaphor) therefore to be called in question; or its Education the less honourable? I might put our witty Barrister in mind, that what I have mentioned is the very Reason why the spurious Brat he is so fond of, which was never brought to full Maturity, nor ever will, first appeared in the Star-Chamber, though it has not been heard of since in any other Court, 'till very lately, at New-York; I mean that of making Falshood to be essential to a Libel, and claiming a Right to give Evidence of the Truth of it by way of Justification.

He must, however, intend by the foregoing Passage, to impeach the Legality of Informations qua such (which by some Words that drop from him many Pages after, would seem to be what he aims at), or as they relate only to Libels; and in either Case he will again betray the Scantiness of his Reading and Knowledge in the Law. As to Informations in general, it has been incontestibly proved, that this Method of proceeding is no way contrarient to any fundamental Rule of Law, but agreeable to it. That it was the constant Usage, and had the Approbation of the Judges and Lawyers of all Ages, and in all Reigns, Show. Rep. 106, to 125. And in the Case of the Information against Seventy poor Persons for a Riot in pulling down Fences, &c. 2 W. & M. (which probably may be the same) it was said by Lord Chief Justice Holt, that 'the Lord Chief Justice Hales com-'plained of the Abuse of Informations, but not that they were unlaw-'ful;——That he should not come now and impeach the Judgment of 'all his Predecessors;——That the Star-Chamber was not set up by the 'Statute of Hen. VII. but was as Common-Law, and Informations 'were accordingly brought in that Court and others. And the whole 'Court were of Opinion, that Informations lay at Common-Law, '5 Mod. 463, 4.' Now this I take to be as good an Authority as the extrajudicial Opinions of those anonymous Great Men who, Mr. Hamilton says, have boldly asserted that the Mode of Prosecution by

by Information is a national Grievance, and greatly inconſiſtent with the Freedom which the Subjects of England enjoy in moſt other Caſes; nor can one forbear obſerving, en paſſant, that he ſeems much more diſpoſed, where there is no Danger at leaſt, to follow the Example of bold, than of wiſe and judicious Men.

This then being a legal Courſe of proceeding in criminal Caſes, and for all publick Offences, it muſt undeniably be as proper in the Caſe of Libels as in any other. And Sir B. Shower in reckoning up the ſeveral Crimes that were cognizable in the Court of Star-Chamber, includes Libels among the reſt, for which he ſays, There were always Informations in the Star-Chamber and King's-Bench. Show. 119. I am the more free in borrowing what I do from that eminent Practicer, on the Subject of Informations, becauſe he had ſtudied it well, and taken more than uſual Pains therein; and as the Judgment afterwards given by the Court of King's-Bench was purſuant thereto, ſo it ſeems to have put a Period in Weſtminſter-Hall to all Cavils againſt that Mode of Proſecution.

If the Barriſter means notwithſtanding to ſuggeſt moreover, that Informations for Libels are but of modern Date, or little longer ſtanding than about the Time of the Expiration of that Court, where he ſuppoſes they had their Origin, let him be further refuted by the above-mentioned Sir Thomas Mallet, who wrote profeſſedly on the Court of Star-Chamber, and may be ſuppoſed to be pretty well acquainted with his Subject: He tells us, [Treatiſe of the Court of Star-Chamber, ubi ſupra] That 'in all Ages 'Libels have been ſeverely puniſhed in this Court, but moſt ſpecially 'when they began to grow frequent about 42 and 43 Eliz. when Sir Edward Coke was her Attorney General.' And, treating of the Antiquity of that Court, he makes it very probable [Id. 1 Part, 4th Conſid.] that it was the moſt ancient of any Court of Juſtice, and the Mother-Court of the Kingdom; wherein he does not differ from Sir Edward himſelf, in his 4th Inſt. 64, already quoted. Now it was while this conſummate Lawyer, it ſeems, was Attorney-General to the renowned Queen Elizabeth, that Informations for Libels began to be moſt frequent, or, in Mr. Hamilton's elegant Stile, when the Child was brought to full Maturity: And it is readily ſubmitted to all who are verſed in our Hiſtory and Conſtitution, whether that Period will be any Diſparagement to the Offspring.

But if Informations for Libels in particular, were one of the Grievances of that Court, nay the Chief, as the Barriſter would labour to make his Hearers believe, how came they to be practiſed after the Aboliſhment of it? Or what will he ſay to the Caſe of the King againſt Darby, which was an Information exhibited againſt the Defendant, being an Attorney of the Common-Pleas, for defamatory Words only of Sir John Kay, a Juſtice of Peace, concerning the Exerciſe of his Office? The Words were, as they are ſet forth in Comb. 65. Sir John Kay is a Buffle-headed Fellow, (a pretty Thing to be proved in Court!) underſtands not Law, and is not fit to diſcourſe it with me; he hath not done Juſtice to my Client. There it was argued for the Defendant on a Demurrer, (and I chuſe to recite it becauſe of the Conceſſions of his Counſel againſt our Northern Advocate,) 'That an Information would not lie for ſcandalous Words ſpoken only 'of a particular Perſon, becauſe he might have an Action on the Caſe to 'recompenſe him in Damages.------'Tis true, ſuch a Proceeding might 'be warranted for Libels, or for diſperſing defamatory Letters, becauſe 'by ſuch Means the publick Peace might be diſturbed, and Diſcords fomented amongſt Neighbours, which might at laſt be a publick Injury: 'But there is no ſuch Thing alledged in this Caſe, only Words in common Diſcourſe, for which an Action on the Caſe might lie, but no Information. On the other Side it was inſiſted, That this Information 'was founded on ſufficient Matter, becauſe the Proſecution is not only 'as it reſpects the Perſon of Sir John Kay, but it relates to him as he is a 'publick Magiſtrate, and who is ſubordinate to the Government, and 'therefore ſuch defamatory Words are a Reproach to the ſupreme Governor, by whom Magiſtrates are intruſted, and from whom they derive their Authority; and it will not be denied, but that Words re'flecting on the publick Government are puniſhable at the Suit of the 'King by an Information.------And for this Reaſon the Court held that 'an Information would lie, and thereupon gave Judgment againſt the 'Defendant, and fined him an hundred Marks. Carth. 14, 15.'

Mr. Hamilton, who would ſeem to be more knowing than his Neighbours in many Things, affects to be more ignorant than every body, of what conſtitutes a Libel; and therefore, although he pretends freely to acknowledge there are ſuch Things as Libels, yet he inſiſts, at the ſame Time, that what his Client is charged with, is not one; and if it be not, I will as freely acknowledge there can be no ſuch Thing. He deſires the Attorney-General to favour them with ſome ſtandard Definition of a Libel, by which it may be certainly known, whether a Writing be a Libel, yea or not. And what is this for? Why, truly, to ſhorten the Diſpute. But what Diſpute does he ſpeak of? The only Point that could admit of Diſpute had been given up before by his confeſſing the Matters in Iſſue, and the Proſecutor's Witneſſes being thereupon diſcharged. As to what he requires, either there was ſuch a Definition to be met with in the Books, or there was not; if there was, he ought to have known it; if there was not, why ſhould he deſire Mr. Attorney to favour him with one? Yet after he had been indulged beyond Meaſure, and a Definition was produced from a good Author, who beſides refers to ſeveral others that are unqueſtionable, all which conclude againſt his Client; is this loquacious Advocate contented? No; There are two Words to that Bargain, as he had ſaid before. He makes it a Foundation for further Diſputes, and according to his wonted Ingenuity and Candour throughout his Reverie, calls the concurrent Senſe of our Books Mr. Attorney's Rule, and Mr. Attorney's Doctrine.

'But what certain Standard-Rule, quoth he, have the Books laid down, 'by which we can certainly know whether the Words are malicious? 'Whether they are defamatory? Whether they tend to a Breach of the 'Peace? and are a ſufficient Ground to provoke a Man, his Family or 'Friends to Acts of Revenge? &c.' Now theſe Queries methinks do not ſo well become the Mouth of an Advocate, as they might that of his Client, when abandoned to his own Defence in a deſperate Cauſe. But I anſwer, no Rules certainly can be of uſe to thoſe who are determined to act without any, or in Oppoſition to all Rules, in which Claſs our Northern Barriſter muſt be placed, if we are to frame a Judgment of him from the Share he bore in this Trial. The Rule laid down in our Books concerning Libels (I ſpeak of Libels in the ſtrict Senſe, according to the Definition of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, referred to in the Trial, and which alone concerns the preſent Caſe) is founded on the Reaſon of the Thing; and is the ſame which is to be obſerved in other Matters that depend upon the Conſtruction of Words and Writings, which are Signs only, or Images of Ideas intended to be conveyed to the Underſtanding of the Reader. There may, indeed, be divers Rules applied, according to the Circumſtances of the Caſe; and this, among the reſt, that where Words are capable of two Senſes, the one faulty, the other innocent, the latter is to be taken, provided ſuch a Conſtruction may be made without Violence to their natural Import and Meaning. From whence it will follow, that the ſame Caſes may happen that are doubtful, and do not come under any ſtandard Rule, on all which Occaſions honeſt and upright Judges will incline to the favourable Side: There may be others again ſo clear and evident, that a Man muſt reſign his Reaſon, or reſolve to ſacrifice his Conſcience, that does not diſcern, or will not allow them to be libellous. But in none of theſe Caſes can it come properly to be a Queſtion before the Jury, whether a Libel or not, on the Plea of Not Guilty, tho' it might afterwards be ſo, before the Court, in Arreſt of Judgment. By what has been ſaid, there appears to be Latitude enough for a ſkilful Pen (who notwithſtanding muſt do it at his Peril) to laſh publick and private Vices, to caution the People againſt Meaſures that may be hurtful to them, or to remonſtrate againſt the evil Practices even of thoſe in Power, without being always expoſed to the Penalties of the Law. Such a Liberty of Writing and Printing, under due Reſtrictions, I own Engliſhmen ought not, and I hope never will, be deprived of; and where this is dexteroully done, it would be ridiculous for private Perſons to put the Cap on their own Heads, and no leſs impolitick for thoſe in high Stations to apply every Thing to their Adminiſtration. When ſuch a Work is undertaken by able Hands, and with a generous View of ſerving the Publick, it is always laudable, and often very uſeful; but to ſucceed herein, requires a Capacity and Talents not to be diſcovered in Mr. Zenger's News-Papers, or his Counſel's Speech.

I perceive my Letter is unawares run to a great Length, by the Quotations that are interſperſed, and which yet I am ſenſible is the leaſt exceptionable Part of it. I ſhall therefore take Notice but of one Thing more in this matchleſs Harangue, which indeed ought not to be forgot, becauſe it is made the Baſis and Foundation of the Whole; and that is, concerning the Right of Freemen to complain when they are hurt. This our Lawyer often aſſerts in general Terms, with ſome Variation only of the Expreſſion. As to which, I would aſk, whether by it he means a Right to remonſtrate and complain in a legal Way, or a Right in all Caſes to appeal to the People by ſeditious and ſcandalous Libels? If the former, Nobody ever denied it, and what he ſaid was not ad idem; ſo that he was fighting with the Air, and quarrelling without an Adverſary: If the latter, he diſhonoured his Gown, by advancing what is notoriouſly repugnant to all Laws, human and divine. It was ruled in the Court of B. R. Trin. 16 Car. That although a Bill be preferred in the Star-Chamber againſt a Judge for Corruption, or any other for any great Miſdemeanor, yet if the Plaintiff will tell the Effect of his Bill in a Tavern, or any open Place, and by that Means ſcandalize the Defendant, the ſame is puniſhable in another Court. March Rep. 76, 77. So in the Caſe of Hole and Mellers, 28 Eliz. in C. B. it was ſaid by the Court, that although the Queen is the Head and Fountain of Juſtice, and therefore it is lawful for all her Subjects to reſort unto her ad faciendam Querimoniam; yet if a Subject, after the Bill once exhibited, will divulge the Matter therein comprehended, to the Diſgrace and Diſcredit of the Perſon intended, it is good Cauſe of Action, 3 Leon. 138. And to the ſame Purpoſe, in a much later Caſe, viz. that of Lake and King, reported in many of our Books, to which Mr. Serjeant Hawkins refers, it ſeems agreed, as he obſerves, that whoever delivers a Paper full of Reflections on any Perſon, in nature of a Petition to a Committee of Parliament, to any other Perſon except the Members of Parliament, may be puniſhed as the Publiſher of a Libel, in reſpect of ſuch a diſperſing thereof among thoſe who have nothing to do with it. 1 Hawk. Chap. 74. Sect. 12.

But our forward Barriſter, aged and infirm as he repreſents himſelf (which, compared with his Conduct, is the keeneſt Satire that could be ſuggeſted of him), ought to be further inſtructed, that even where Complaints are to the King himſelf, they muſt be made in a proper and regular Manner; a Decency is to be obſerved, and a Regard always had to the Characters and Stations of the Perſons againſt whom ſuch Complaints are made. In 13 R. II. Rot. Parliament. N°. 45, the Commons deſired they might not be troubled for any Matter that ſhould be contained in Petitions to the King; and the King anſwered, Let every Man complain, ſo it be with Law and Reaſon. It is lawful therefore, no Doubt, as it has been reſolved, for any Subject to petition to the King for Redreſs, in an humble and modeſt Manner, where he finds himſelf aggrieved by a Sentence or Judgment; for Acceſs to the Sovereign muſt not be ſhut up, in caſe of the Subjects Diſtreſſes. But, on the other Side, it is not permitted, under Colour of a Petition and Refuge to the King, to rail upon the Judge or his Sentence, and to make himſelf Judge in his own Cauſe, by prejudging it before a Re-hearing. Hob. 220. Yet Sir Rowland Flaxing was committed, and deeply fined, for reporting to the King, that he could have no Indifferency before the Lords of the Council. 7 Feb. 18 Hen. VIII. So likewiſe, in the Time of Hen. VII. Sir Richard Terrets was committed, fined, ſent to the Pillory, and adjudged to loſe both his Ears, for his ſlanderous Complaint exhibited to the King, in a written Book, againſt the Chief-Juſtice Fitz-James. Which Caſes are cited by Chief-Juſtice Montague, in the Caſe of Wraynham (who was ſeverely puniſhed for an Offence of the ſame Nature), as may be ſeen in State Trials, Vol. VII. p. 102. To theſe may be added, Jeffe's Caſe in the King's-Bench, Mich. 5 Car. Jeffe was indicted for exhibiting an infamous Libel, directed to the King, againſt Sir Edward Coke, late Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, and againſt the ſaid Court, for a Judgment given in the ſaid Court, in the Caſe of Magdalen-College, affirming the ſaid Judgment to be Treaſon, and calling him therein Traitor, perjured Judge, and ſcandalizing all the Profeſſors of the Law. He fixed this Libel upon the great Gate at the Entrance of Weſtminſter-Hall, and in divers other Places; and being hereupon arraigned, prayed that Counſel might be aſſigned him, which was granted; and he had them; but would not be ruled to plead as they adviſed, but put in a ſcandalous Plea; and inſiſting upon it, affirmed he would not plead otherwiſe. Whereupon it was adjudged he ſhould be committed to the Marſhal, and that he ſhould ſtand upon the Pillory at Weſtminſter and Cheapſide, with a Paper mentioning the Offence, and with ſuch a Paper be brought to all the Courts of Weſtminſter, and be continued in Priſon until he made his Submiſſion in every Court; and that he ſhould be bound with Sureties to be of good Behaviour during his Life, and pay a thouſand Pounds Fine to the King. Cro. Car. 175, 6.

What now ſhall we ſay, or what muſt be thought of one, who, while he pretends to great Reading, and a thorough Knowledge of theſe Things, could yet, in the Face of a Court, and in Defiance of its Authority, and indeed of all Authority, preſume to juſtify the Publication of the moſt audacious Libels againſt that very Government under which he was breathing the Sedition! A Perſon, who, as a Counſellor at Law, boaſting at the ſame Time of having ſeen the Practice in very great Courts, would dare to call ſuch Publication, addreſſed to the People, the juſt Complaints of a Number of Men who ſuffer under a bad Adminiſtration! Some of the Words charged in the Information, and which Mr. Hamilton offered to prove, are, That the Law was at an End. I can't tell what Proof he had to give of this Fact; but ſurely if his Doctrine were to prevail, it muſt ſoon be the Caſe; and, for my own Part, I will confeſs, I have not hitherto heard of any Thing, in that Province, which looked ſo much like it, as that ſuch a Behaviour ſhould not only go unpuniſhed, but be attended with public Munificence and Applauſe. The Truth is, this Gentleman, tho' ſtiled a Barriſter at Law in the Order of the Common-Council of the City of New-York, and which Title, therefore, I have likewiſe given him, ſeems notwithſtanding, inſtead of maintaining that Character, in the Trial before us, to be rather poſſeſſed with a Fit of Knight Errantry, and to have ſallied out from Philadelphia to the other Province, with a full Reſolution to encounter every Thing that was Law, and to level all to the Ground that ſtood in his Way.—Let the Reader then be Judge, upon the Whole, whether he comes within the Deſcription of that miſchievous Animal I mentioned towards the Beginning of theſe Sheets.

After all, I flatter myſelf it will not be imagined, that I was ſtimulated to theſe haſty Animadverſions by a Principle of Envy to Mr. Hamilton, or any Diſreſpect to thoſe who were pleaſed to patronize his Performance, ſince they are utter Strangers to me, and probably will ever remain ſo. On the contrary, they may believe me, when I declare, that if the one had really merited what the others were of Opinion he did, I ſhould with much more Pleaſure have ſignified my Approbation of the Conduct of both, than I now take in ſhewing my Diſlike. 'Tis on this Score, Sir, that I cannot conclude, without publicly returning my Share of the Thanks that are due from the Fraternity to your Friend, the polite Author of the former Letter, who has done Juſtice to the Bar by his Remarks, which, in my humble Apprehenſion, are worthy of any Gentleman at it, either here or elſewhere.

I am your's, &c.

XXIV. The Trial of JAMES ANNESLEY * and JOSEPH REDDING, at the Seſſions-Houſe, in the Old-Bailey, before the Right Hon. George Heathcote, Eſq. Lord Mayor of the City of London, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Parker, the Hon. Mr. Juſtice Wright, Sir John Strange, Knt. Recorder, Mr. Serjeant Urlin, and others of his Majeſty's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer for the City of London, and Juſtices of Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the ſaid City, and County of Middleſex, on Thurſday, the 15th of July, 1742, for the Murder of Thomas Eggleſtone.

ON Friday, the 4th Day of June, 1742, Mr. Anneſley (being brought up by the Keeper of New Priſon), and Joſeph Redding (having ſurrendered himſelf to take his Trial, purſuant to Notice given to the Proſecutor's Solicitor) were, upon Application to the Court, in reſpect of the Quality claimed by Mr. Anneſley, ſet within the Bar.

Proclamation being made for Silence,

Clerk of the Arraigns. James Anneſley, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.) Joſeph Redding, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.)

You ſtand indicted in the County of Middleſex, by the Names of James Anneſley, late of Staines, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer, and Joſeph Redding, late of the ſame, Labourer: For that you, not having God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, on the firſt Day of May, in the fifteenth Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, with Force and Arms at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in and upon one Thomas Eggleſtone, in the Peace of God, and our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault; and that you the ſaid James Anneſley, with a certain Gun of the Value of five Shillings, then and there, being charged with Powder and Leaden Shot, which Gun you the ſaid James then and there had, and held in both your Hands to and againſt the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, then and there, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did diſcharge and ſhoot off; you the ſaid James Anneſley, then and there, well knowing the ſaid Gun to have been charged as aforeſaid; and you the ſaid James Anneſley, with the Leaden Shot aforeſaid, then and there diſcharged and ſhot out of the ſaid Gun, by Force of the Gunpowder as aforeſaid, him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, in and upon the left Side of the Belly of the ſaid Thomas, then and there, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did ſtrike and penetrate, giving to him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone then and there, with the ſaid Leaden Shot ſo as aforeſaid diſcharged and ſhot, in and upon the left Side of the Belly of the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone one mortal Wound, of the Breadth of one Inch, and of the Depth of four Inches, of which ſaid mortal Wound the aforeſaid Thomas Eggleſtone then and there inſtantly died; and that you the ſaid Joſeph Redding, at the Time of committing of the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, was preſent, aiding, abetting, aſſiſting, comforting, and maintaining the ſaid James Anneſley to kill and murder the aforeſaid Thomas Eggleſtone in Form aforeſaid; and ſo you the ſaid James Anneſley and Joſeph Redding, him the aforeſaid Thomas Eggleſtone in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, James Anneſley, are you guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Mr. Anneſley. My Lord, I obſerve that I am indicted by the Name of James Anneſley, Labourer, the loweſt Addition my Enemies could poſſibly make uſe of; but though I claim to be Earl of Angleſea, and a Peer of this Realm, I ſubmit to plead Not Guilty to this Indictment, and put myſelf immediately upon my Country, conſcious of my own Innocence, and impatient to be acquitted even of the Imputation of a Crime ſo unbecoming the Dignity I claim.

Clerk. How ſay you, Joſeph Redding, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Joſeph Redding. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how will you be tried?

Joſeph Redding. By God and my Country.

Clerk. James Anneſley, Hold up your Hand.

Joſeph Redding, hold up your Hand; you ſtand likewiſe charged, upon the Coroner's Inquiſition, by the Names of James Anneſley, late of the Pariſh of Staines, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. and Joſeph Redding, of the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, Yeoman; for that you on the firſt Day of May, in the Year aforeſaid, God not having before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, with Force and Arms, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, in and upon Thomas Eggleſtone, in the Peace of God, and our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Aſſault; and that you the ſaid James Anneſley, a certain Gun, of the Value of 5*s.* then and there charged with Gunpowder and ſmall Leaden Shot, at and againſt the aforeſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did diſcharge and ſhoot off, and him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone with the ſaid ſmall Leaden Shot out of the ſaid Gun, by Force of the ſaid Gunpowder diſcharged as aforeſaid, in and upon the left Side of the Belly of him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, near the Hip-Bone, then and there felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought did ſtrike, giving unto him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, then and there, with the ſmall Shot aforeſaid, ſo as aforeſaid diſcharged, in and upon the ſaid left Side of the Belly of him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, near the Hip-Bone, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of two Inches, and the Depth of ten Inches, of which ſaid mortal Wound he the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone then and there inſtantly died; and for that you the ſaid Joſeph Redding, at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, in Form aforeſaid done and committed, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, was preſent, aiding, abetting, aſſiſting, comforting, and maintaining the ſaid James Anneſley, him the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, in Form aforeſaid, to kill and murder; and ſo you the ſaid James Anneſley and Joſeph Redding, the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, felonioufly, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did kill and murder, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, James Anneſley, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder, or Not Guilty?---James Anneſley. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how will you be tried?

James Anneſley. By God and my Country.

Clerk. How ſay you, Joſeph Redding, are you Guilty of the ſaid Felony and Murder, or Not Guilty?

Joſeph Redding. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how will you be tried?

Joſeph Redding. By God and my Country.

Clerk. James Anneſley, hold up your Hand. You ſtand alſo indicted in the County of Middleſex, by the Name of James Anneſley, late of the Pariſh of Staines, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer; for that you, not regarding the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, nor the Pains and Penalties therein contained, after the firſt Day of June, 1723, to wit, the firſt Day of May, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, now King of Great-Britain, &c. with Force and Arms at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, with a certain Gun loaded with Gunpowder and Leaden Shot, which you in both your Hands, then and there had and held, wilfully, maliciouſly, and felonioufly, did ſhoot at one Thomas Eggleſtone, againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided, and againſt the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

How ſay you, James Anneſley, are you Guilty of this Felony whereof you ſtand indicted, or Not Guilty.---James Anneſley. Not Guilty.

* This is the Perſon that claimed the Title and Eſtate of the Earl of Angleſea; and had the Trial in Ireland, relating to Part of the latter, in November, 1743, and recovered it.

Clerk.

Clerk. Culprit, how will you be tried?

Anneſley. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend you a good Deliverance.

The Defendants being thus arraigned, the Court thought the Day too far ſpent to proceed to a Trial of ſo much Expectation, and therefore ordered it to come on the next Morning; but the Counſel for the Proſecutor alledging they could not attend the next Day, and deſiring to put off the Trial to this preſent Seſſions, the Court were pleaſed to indulge them, upon their conſenting that the Defendants ſhould be admitted to Bail.

Whereupon Mr. Anneſley was ordered to give four Sureties in 250*l.* each, and Joſeph Redding four in 50*l.* each; and this being done in Court, they were both immediately ſet at Liberty.

On Wedneſday the 14th Day of July, 1742, the Proſecutor's Counſel moved, that the Trial might come on the next Day, which, by Conſent of the Defendant's Solicitor, was ordered accordingly; notwithſtanding which, the next Day, when the two Defendants had ſurrendered themſelves, and were ready with their Witneſſes, the Proſecutor moved to put the Trial off for another Day; but not alledging any ſufficient Reaſon for the Delay, the Court were pleaſed to direct the Trial to go on.

Accordingly the Defendants were again arraigned, and pleaded as at the laſt Seſſions, and there being no Challenges to the Jury,

The following Gentlemen were impannelled and ſworn.

The Names of the Jury.

Walter Lee,	Francis Rawlins,	William Boucher,
John Deſchamps,	John Sandwich,	Edmund Stowell,
John Reynolds,	Robert Harrop,	Thomas Whitehead,
William Lewis,	William Duck,	Francis Tredgold.

Cryer. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, &c.

Clerk. James Anneſley, hold up your Hand.

Joſeph Redding, hold up your Hand.

You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoners, and hearken to their Charge.

They ſtand indicted by the Names of James Anneſley, late of Staines, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer, and Joſeph Redding of the ſame, Labourer; for that they, &c. (as in the Indictments), and upon theſe Indictments they have been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themſelves upon their Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire, &c.

Mr. Brown. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment for Murder. The Indictment ſets forth that James Anneſley and Joſeph Redding did make an Aſſault with a Gun on the Body of one Thomas Eggleſtone; and that the Priſoner Anneſley did diſcharge the ſaid Gun againſt the left Side of the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, and did make a Wound on the left Side of the Belly of the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, of which he inſtantly died; and that the ſaid Joſeph Redding was aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid James Anneſley to murder the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone. Gentlemen, if we prove our Charge, I hope you will find the Priſoners guilty.

Mr. Serjeant Gapper. Gentlemen, the Priſoners ſtand indicted for the Murder of Thomas Eggleſtone; James Anneſley was the Perſon who killed the ſaid Thomas Eggleſtone, and Joſeph Redding he was aiding, abetting, and aſſiſting in the Murder, and ſo they are both guilty of Felony and Murder. And, Gentlemen, there is an Act of Parliament made in the ninth Year of his late Majeſty King George I. that if any Perſon does wilfully ſhoot at another, it is Felony without Benefit of Clergy. Gentlemen, the Caſe is thus: On Saturday the Firſt of May, Thomas Eggleſtone, the Deceaſed, and his Son were going to fiſh, at a Place called the Moor, near Staines; they had a Caſting Net, and there was a String which belongs to the Net, and this String was about the Deceaſed's right Arm: They were fiſhing in a Meadow belonging to one Sylveſter; and as they were fiſhing towards the North of the Encloſure, the Deceaſed, ſeeing the Priſoners, ſtopped, and went back again; and as they were going back again, inſtantly came up the Priſoner, Joſeph Redding, and ſeized the Deceaſed by the Shoulder, and demanded the Net; but the Deceaſed caſt the Net into the River, which was on his Right-hand; then came up the other Priſoner, Anneſley, with a Gun in his Hand, and ſwore at the Deceaſed, and ſaid, Damn you, ſurrender, or you are a dead Man: He pointed the Gun immediately towards his Side, before a Word of Reply, and ſhot him; the Force of the Powder drove the Shot and ſome of the Deceaſed's Coat into his Body; he clapped his Hand to his Side, and ſaid, You Rogue, what have you done? dropped down, and died immediately: Then John Eggleſtone, the Son, took a Knife out of his Pocket to cut the String of the Net; upon which the Priſoner Anneſley turned the Butt End of the Gun, and ſaid to him, You Rogue, I will knock your Head off; to avoid which young Eggleſtone jumped into the Water, Breaſt-high, and cut the String of the Net, and dragged it to the other Side of the Water, and cried out his Father was murdered. There were three Perſons, Fiſher, Betteſworth, and Bowles, who could ſee what was done; they were on the other Side of the River, about an hundred and ſixty Yards from the Place where the Accident happened; they heard a Gun fired, and the young Man cry out that his Father was killed; and when they came to the River-Side, he had dragged the Net out of the River; upon this they croſſed over, and found the Man dead, or ſo bad that he could not live, and thereupon directed the Son to go and fetch Mr. Cole, a Surgeon at Staines: He went accordingly to Mr. Cole, and deſired him to come along with him, for his Father was ſhot, and he believed he was dead. Why, ſays Mr. Cole, if he is dead, it does not ſignify my coming; I can do him no good: So then the young Man went to Mr. Ruſſel, a Conſtable at Staines. But I ſhould tell you, Gentlemen, that as ſoon as the Priſoners ſaw theſe three Perſons, Fiſher, Betteſworth, and Bowles, coming towards the River, they ran away. Afterwards Ruſſel, the Conſtable, and ſome other Perſons coming up, they thought proper to purſue the Murderers: Accordingly they went to a Farm-Houſe, where Anneſley and Redding uſed ſometimes to lodge, and there they found Anneſley, and apprehended him, and ſent him to the Round-Houſe at Staines: Redding could never be found; but he has ſurrendered himſelf ſince, in order to take his Trial. The Priſoner Anneſley was carried before a Juſtice of the Peace, I think Sir Thomas Reynell; he was carried to Heunſlow, and from thence to Laleham; what that Examination was, I cannot tell. They made Application to this young Man to be favourable, and not to carry on the Proſecution: Says he, Gentlemen, I will not ſell my Father's Blood. This, Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Caſe; and if we prove our Charge, that they have been guilty of Murder, Gentlemen, you will find them Guilty.

(John Eggleſtone ſworn.)

Mr. Serj. Gapper. Give an Account of what you know of this Matter, and ſpeak the Truth.

John Eggleſtone. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, on Saturday the Firſt of May——

Mr. Serj. Gap. Speak ſlow and deliberately, that the Court and the Jury may hear you.

John Eggle. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, on Saturday the firſt of May laſt, I and my Father were going up Staines River, to catch a Diſh of Fiſh in Staines Moor, in the Pariſh of Staines, with a Caſting-Net; we fiſhed all the Way up, till we came to this Ground.

Mr. Serj. Gap. In whoſe Poſſeſſion was the Ground?

John Eggle. It was one Mr. Samuel Sylveſter's Meadow; we were turning back again, an't pleaſe you, my Lord, in order to go Home; my Father, he carried the Net upon his Arm, and the String was faſtened to his Arm.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Well, as you were coming back from fiſhing, what happened then?

John Eggle. By that Time we had got half-way in the Meadow, we ſaw Joſeph Redding and Mr. Anneſley running, and Joſeph Redding out-run Mr. Anneſley, and came up to my Father firſt.

Mr. Serj. Gap. When they came up, what was the firſt Thing they did?

John Eggle. Redding took my Father by the Collar, and demanded the Net, and he refuſed to deliver the Net.

Court. Did you ſee him take him by the Collar?

John Eggle. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Gap. What became of the Net afterwards?

John Eggle. My Father threw it into the River.

Mr. Serj. Gap. How far were you from the River then?

John Eggle. I was about two Yards from the River. After the Net was thrown into the River, Anneſley came up with his Gun, and ſwore, God damn your Blood, deliver your Net, or you are a dead Man; and he fired off before he received any Anſwer from my Father.

Mr. Serj. Gap. In what Manner did Anneſley hold his Gun?

John Eggle. In this Manner. [Pointing the Gun ſtraight forward, holding it about Breaſt-high, ſtooping a little.]

Mr. Serj. Gap. How near was the Gun to your Father when he fired it?

John Eggle. It was cloſe to my Father's Side; he put the Gun between Redding and my Father, and ſhot directly into his left Side, here, (holding his Hand to his Hip) he had a Plate Button there, which was bruiſed to Pieces; then my Father ſaid, You Rogue, what have you done? I am a dead Man; and dropped immediately.

Mr. Serj. Gap. What did Anneſley ſay before he fired?

John Eggle. He ſwore, if he did not deliver the Net, he was a dead Man; and then fired immediately.

Mr. Serj. Gap. What did you do after you heard your Father ſay he was a dead Man?

John Eggle. I took a Knife out of my Pocket to cut the String of the Net; and Anneſley ſaid, You Rogue, I will knock out your Brains too; and held up the Butt End of his Gun; upon that I jumped into the Stream, and cut the String, and drew the Net over to the other Side of the River: Then ſays Anneſley, The Rogue has got the Net, let us go on the other Side after him.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Who did you ſee when you came on the other Side of the River?

John Eggle. I ſaw John Betteſworth, John Fiſher, and John Bowles; and when Anneſley and Redding ſaw theſe three Men, they ran away directly.

Mr. Serj. Gap. How near were Betteſworth, Fiſher and Bowles to you, the before Anneſley and Redding ran away?

John Eggle. As ſoon as I got on the other Side of the River, they ſaw theſe three Men coming, and then they ran away; and Betteſworth, Fiſher, and Bowles, came through the River to the Side where my Father lay dead; they came from one Side to the other.

Mr. Serj. Gap. What did you do then?

John Eggle. They bid me get a Surgeon; ſo I went to one Charles Cole, a Surgeon at Staines.

Mr. Serj. Gap. When you came to Staines, did you meet with Cole?

John Eggle. Yes; and I told him my Father was ſhot, and I believed he was dead, or dying; but he never came near my Father: Then I went to Ruſſel the Conſtable, and he took ſome Townſmen with him, and went to old Mr. Redding's Houſe at Yeoveney Farm, to ſearch for the Man that killed my Father; we beſet the Houſe all round, and found James Anneſley hid up in a Corner.

Mr. Serj. Gap. How long were you there before he was found?

John Eggle. I was there about a Quarter of an Hour, or a little more.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Was you preſent then?

John Eggle. Yes, I was there all the Time: Then, an't pleaſe you, my Lord, they pull'd him down.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Where was he hid?

John Eggle. He was hid in a Place which is five or ſix Foot from the Ground, where they put old Iron, and any Sort of Lumber: 'Tis a boarded Place or Room over the Waſh-houſe; a Place where the Woman makes Medicines for ſore Eyes.

Court. Was there a Chimney in it?---John Eggle. I do not know.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Was he ſtanding up or lying down; or how was he, when he was found?

John Eggle. I do not know; for I did not ſee him till he was pulled down: He was carried in a Chair into the Yard, and ſat there about a Quarter of an Hour, and then was put into the Cart that brought up my Father, and was carried to the Round-Houſe at Staines.

Mr. Serj. Gap. This is all you know; is it not?

John Eggle. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, I can tell you a great deal more.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Who pulled him down?

John Eggle. I do not know.

Mr. Serj. Gap. Was this Wound the Occaſion of your Father's Death?

John

John Eggleſtone. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. Go on; you ſay you have other Things to ſay.

John Eg. He lay in the Round-Houſe all Night; the next Day Anneſley, the Priſoner, and I went in a Cart to a Juſtice at Hounſlow; and there was one Mac Kercher there, who ſaid to me——

Court. What Mac Kercher ſaid is no Evidence againſt the Priſoners.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. We will let this alone a little.

Court. Can you prove he was any ways employed as an Agent by the Priſoner?—Mr. Serj. Gapper. I believe we can.

Foreman of the Jury. My Lord, pleaſe to aſk him, whether there was no Quarrel, Buſtle, or Struggling, between Anneſley, Redding, and Eggleſtone, before the Gun went off.

John Eg. There was no Quarrel or Joſtling; my Father never gave him an ill Word.

Court. Did your Father make no Reſiſtance?

John Eg. No, no Reſiſtance at all.

Q. Was there no Joſtling, nor any Thing elſe paſſed?

Court. I thought you ſaid there was ſome Joſtling?

John Eg. No other Joſtling than laying his Hand upon my Father's Collar; but my Father never laid his Hand upon him.

Mr. Brown. How near were you when Redding laid his Hand upon your Father?—John Eg. About a Yard and an half off.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. How came you there?

John Eg. We went to a Juſtice's at Brentford; but he not being at home, we put up at the Red Lion there; and while we were there, Sir Tho. Reynell came in, and ordered us to go to Laleham; accordingly we went to one Mr. Lee's, into a little Room, and there was Jack Lane, Mrs. Cheſter, and the Priſoner: Young John Lane offered me 100 l. a-Year; but the Priſoner ſaid he could not ſettle 100 l. a-Year upon me, for he had more to do for; but he ſaid he would ſettle 50 l. a-Year on me. This was ſaid in the Preſence of the Priſoner.

Mr. Brown. Did he mention what he would give you 50 l. a-Year for?

John Eg. Becauſe I ſhould not come in as an Evidence againſt him.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. What is the Reaſon you did not comply with this Offer?
